

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2013

<http://archive.org/details/christianherald27unse>

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

NEW YORK, JANUARY 6, 1904

VOL. 27—NO. 1. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

Scenes at the Opening of the New East River Bridge, New York

1.—Mayor Low, President Cator and Secretary Moran Leading the Procession. 2.—At the Reviewing Stand, Williamsburg, Brooklyn. 3.—Under the Big Bridge Span. 4.—A Delegation Crossing. 5.—The Crowds Watching the Procession.

SEE PAGE 20

An Instrument that Can Be Played by any Child. No Break Between Verses

Our Great Concert Roller Organ

A REVOLUTION IN HOME MUSIC!

$12 ON INSTALMENTS

ONLY A DOLLAR DOWN AND A DOLLAR A MONTH

Or, TEN DOLLARS SPOT CASH

Five Indestructible Tunes Go with Each Instrument and Others of Your Own Selection May be had, Express Charges Prepaid, at Only 30 Cents Each

.. Special Offer ..

WITH EVERY ORGAN PURCHASED FOR SPOT CASH BEFORE JAN. 15, WE WILL SEND FREE TEN ADDITIONAL TUNES OF YOUR OWN SELECTION (15 IN ALL), CONSTITUTING A FREE GIFT OF $3 WORTH OF MUSIC.  GOOD ONLY TO JAN. 15, 1904.

These Beautiful Instruments are the result of many years' experience in the manufacture of organs, and are confidently offered to the public. These musical wonders use no paper, but music is obtained from a roller furnished with pins. These pins operate upon valve keys, made of hard steel. All the working parts of the instrument are easily accessible, and are made of solid metal, the rollers and keys being mounted on metal castings. Nothing has been omitted to give these grand instruments their crowning qualities of extreme simplicity and durability. There is no limit to either kind or quality of music. They will play Hymns and Popular Airs, with a clearness and accuracy, and degree of execution which but few performers can equal. A mere child can play them. They have the carrying quality of a Large Pipe Organ, and are the only instruments that will render slow and sacred music with a powerful, sustaining organ tone. They will play tunes as long as desired, without any break, instead of stopping to change the piece, as must be done with organettes. They are beautifully finished in solid walnut. The reeds are organ size, and the volume of tone will fill a hall. They are Genuine Musical Instruments, which anyone can play, without teacher or practice, and which good musicians can recommend. The price is nothing compared with their intrinsic value. They are equal in every way to a $50 Music Box, so far as the quality of the music is concerned, and also in point of construction, finish, and decoration. This organ is the most simple, perfect, marvelous, instructive, enjoyable, and amusing musical instrument in the world. FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, it is just what is wanted. It will play all the sacred music, and as many verses as desired, without stopping to replace the music roller. This great advantage no other instrument has. By this means, a result is attained that was never reached before.

Make Your Evenings at Home Cheerful and Musical!

No Other Automatic Instrument in the World Can do it Better than This LIST OF SACRED TUNES

Rollers for the following Sacred Tunes can now be supplied at 30 cents each, delivered:

- | | |
|------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| 1 The Sweet Bye-and-Bye | 32 Hark, the herald angels sing |
| 2 Nearer, my God, to Thee | 33 Harwell |
| 3 I need Thee every hour | 34 Hendon |
| 4 From Greenland's Icy Mountains | 35 Manoah |
| 5 Duke Street | 36 Plevel's Hymn |
| 6 Onward, Christian Soldiers | 37 Zion |
| 7 Ariel | 38 Warwick |
| 8 Sweeping through the Gates | 39 Abide with me |
| 9 I'll stand by until the morning | 40 Dennis |
| 10 The Shining Shore—Nelson | 41 I hear Thy welcome voice |
| 11 Sicilian Hymn | 42 Even me |
| 12 Hold the Fort | 43 Watchman tell us of the night |
| 13 Just as I am | 44 St. Martin's |
| 14 America | 45 Federal Street |
| 15 Antioch | 46 Hursley |
| 16 O to be over yonder | 47 Mozart |
| 17 What hast Thou done for me | 48 Webb |
| 18 He leadeth me | 49 Bowen |
| 19 I love to tell the story | 50 Geneva |
| 20 The home over there | 51 St. Catherine |
| 21 Is my name written there | 52 Luton |
| 22 Almost Persuaded | 53 Brownell |
| 23 Where is my boy to-night | 54 Hummel |
| 24 Bringing in the Sheaves | 55 Paradise |
| 25 Let the lower lights be burning | 56 Wilson |
| 26 Only an armor bearer | 57 Repose |
| 27 I will sing of my Redeemer | 58 In the silent midnight-watches |
| 28 He will hide me | 59 Portuguese Hymn |
| 29 Pull for the Shore | 60 Wellesley |
| 30 Precious Name | 61 Rathbun |
| 31 Christmas | 62 Come ye disconsolate |

- | | |
|------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| 63 Belmont | 609 Carried by the Angels |
| 64 Finnish National Hymn | 610 Move Forward |
| 65 What a friend we have in Jesus | 611 Some sweet day |
| 66 Church | 612 Somewhere to-night |
| 67 Rock of Ages | 613 Wait and murmur not |
| 68 Sweet Hour of Prayer | 614 Come, Spirit, come |
| 69 Beautiful Valley of Eden | 615 Hiding in the Rock |
| 70 Greenville | 616 When my Saviour I shall see |
| 71 Old Hundred | 617 God be with you |
| 72 Pass me not | 618 Anywhere with Jesus |
| 73 Jesus, lover of my Soul | 619 Trust and obey |
| 74 Beulah Land | 620 Draw me closer to Thee |
| 75 I'm a Shepherd of the Valley | 621 Seeking for me |
| 76 Shall we meet beyond the river | 622 Lebanon |
| 77 We shall meet beyond the river | 623 The Garden of the Lord |
| 78 Fisk | 624 Duane Street |
| 79 Mendebars | 625 Saul |
| 80 Aletta | 626 Walk in the light |
| 81 I am praying for you | 627 Sabbath |
| 82 More love to Thee, O Christ | 628 Balerna |
| 83 Go bury thy sorrow | 629 Marlow |
| 84 Whosoever will | 630 The Prodigal Child |
| 85 Softly and tenderly | 631 Autumn |
| 86 All the way my Saviour leads me | 632 Leighton |
| 87 Rescue the perishing | 633 When Jesus comes |
| 88 Follow on | 634 Shall we gather at the River |
| 89 Come, Great Deliverer, come | 635 Happy day |
| 90 Onward go | 636 Coming to-day |
| 91 We're marching to Jesus | 637 Come to me |
| 100 To the work | 638 In the shadow of His Wings |
| 602 Only a step to Jesus | 639 Safe to Land |
| 603 Knocking, Knocking | 640 Will you meet me |
| 604 Thy Servant I will be | 641 The Story Never old |
| 605 From Heaven I am coming | 642 Stand on the Rock |
| 606 Be Joyful O my soul | 643 My Sabbath Home |
| 607 It is now time | 644 At the Door |
| 608 Thank Almighty God | 645 Little children, you may come |

CONCERT ROLLER ORGAN

Length, 18 in., Width, 15 in., Height, 12 in., Weight, Boxed, 30 lbs.

NEW ROLLERS--NOW READY

- | | |
|-----------------------------|----------------------------------|
| 725 Sunshine in the Soul | 732 Hark, 'Tis the Song of Angel |
| 726 More About Jesus | 733 Will There be Light for Me |
| 727 Wonderful Story of Love | 734 Lead, Kindly Light |
| 728 Everlasting Arms | 735 Jerusalem the Golden |
| 731 Blessed Rock | 736 It is God's Way |

The Concert Roller Organ has a fuller volume of tone, and far more sustaining power than any two pianos. At the same time it is so fully under control, by means of a swell attachment, that the softest passages can be rendered with exquisite delicacy. For evening entertainments, etc., it is most admirable, and when otherwise musicians would have to be engaged, it will save its cost in one night; and is, upon the whole, the most perfect mechanical instrument in design, operation and effect, that has yet been produced.

The case is strongly made of solid black walnut, and is elegantly finished, forming a handsome parlor ornament.

By means of new and automatic machinery the manufacturers are enabled to produce music rollers in large numbers so that we can offer them to the public at a price not exceeding the average cost of music paper; and a roller will give a very much better performance, besides outlasting a Thousand Paper Sheets.

There are now ready over Eight Hundred sacred and popular tunes which have been arranged for the Roller Organ. Complete List will be mailed on application.

REMEMBER, ONLY $1.00 DOWN

We send the Instrument by Freight, charges collect at your end. ADDRESS TO-DAY

And One Dollar a Month for Eleven Months or Ten Dollars Spot Cash, purchases this Organ and Five Music Rolls of your own selection from above list. Full list of Sacred, Secular and National Airs accompany each Instrument. Extra Tunes, delivered, only 30 cents each.

See Special Offer Above

The Christian Herald Book Department, Bible House, New York City

THE

NATION OF DWIGHT L. MOODY

AN

By W. R. MOODY

ENTRANCE TO A CUBAN FARMHOUSE

...BY...

Wylie H. Forsythe, M.D.

Winning

PROTESTANT mission work in Cuba is said to have been first regularly organized in Havana, in 1881, by two Cuban women returning from the United States. This work was under the direction of the Baptists and grew rapidly. In 1890 the Southern Presbyterians established a mission in Santa Clara. Other denominations began work at different points on the island, but the unsettled political conditions and the subsequent wars prevented the extension of the work, and much of it was suspended in 1898. In 1899, however, with the return of peace, the interrupted work was renewed with greater zeal than ever, and many new agencies entered the field.

The Cuban people were ready for Protestant missionaries. During the war the Catholic Church had been the strong ally of Spain. Much of the oppression was attributed by the people to the Church. Superstitious rites and various other practices of Catholicism had driven many of the more thoughtful into unbelief, while still more were indifferent to all religion, so that the evangelists from the United States were warmly welcomed by the Cubans wherever they went, and quick results followed. The Cubans destroyed their shrines and images, began to study the Bible, and showed an eager desire to know more of the Way of Life. One woman at Cardenas brought her little gold and silver promesas to the missionaries, and asked that they be sold for curios and the money given for the spread of the Gospel. Great was their joy at having the pure Gospel and an open Bible.

Among the first denominations to enter Cuba after the war was the Southern Methodists. For several years they had maintained a mission among the Cubans of Key West, and in January, 1899, they were reorganized as the Protestant Church in Cuba. At that time some 5,000 or 6,000 were in Matanzas and Mr. Baker, with the Methodist mission, did good work. The work at Matanzas grew rapidly. It was organized, and they soon built a church at a cost of about $10,000. The Protestant Church built in Cuba. The work rapidly spread to Havana, Cienfuegos, and other points. Schools were established at these various points. Their work has grown rapidly. The latest available statistics show fourteen missionaries, including their wives; two native preachers; seven hundred and fifty-one members; nine Sunday Schools; five hundred and twenty-two Sunday School scholars; three Epworth Leagues; eight organized churches; three day schools, with two hundred and eighty-eight pupils, and the total collection for 1902 was $2,884.57; the total value of mission property is $40,000.

YOUNG CUBAN FARMERS DIGGING "BONIATOS" (SWEET POTATOES)

The Southern Presbyterians began work at Santa Clara in 1890. This work was interrupted by the war, and reorganized at Cardenas in 1899, by Rev. Jno. G. Hall and wife, and Miss Janet Houston, of the Presbyterian mission in Mexico. The work grew rapidly; larger quarters were secured, and a strong church is now growing up at that place. An excellent school work is being carried on, in which the Bible is faithfully taught. Eleven workers have been sent to labor in the field. Stations have been opened at Caibarien and Remedios, two flourishing towns east of Cardenas. One of the elders of the Cardenas church works for the American Bible Society as colporteur. In 1902, he circulated more than three thousand four hundred copies and portions of the Word of God, thus preparing the ministry, 17; Sunday Schools, 72; Sunday School pupils, 3,450; church schools, 51; church school pupils, 1,880.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 19

A COUNTRY FAMILY (FARMERS OR PLANTERS)

A CUBAN "CASITA" OR PALM HUT

of the nucleus of the mission, the seed that has abundant harvest. The latest available statistics, Signatory Review of (June), show the number of nominations and the work in the island in g

Societies, 12; churches and preaching stations, 92; pastors and teachers, 137; church buildings, 8; church membership, 2,400; candidates for membership, 551; candidates for ministry, 17; Sunday Schools, 72; Sunday School pupils, 3,450; church schools, 51; church school pupils, 1,880.

TEXT — MATT. 20: 7:

"Go ye also into the vineyard"

come among Christian people, if thus accosted? How many rooms, dedicated by the church for the services of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, or Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, would be empty, or practically empty, if the Christian members of the church would go out in a plain, practical way, and give such a warm-hearted, loving salutation to the young folks, as I have indicated? The reason the young people do not come into church fellowship, is because they are not personally invited to come. This invitation duty rests with the new convert, as well as with the old.

Work for Aged Converts

"But," some aged church member says, "this invitation duty to the young folks may apply to others, but not to me. I am not fitted for work among the young. My hair is gray. My nerves are not steady. I have postponed coming to Christ until I have passed my two score and ten. It needs a young person to work for Christ among the young." No, my aged gray-haired friend, you are wrong. There is only one person more fitted to work among the young than a Christian young man or a young woman; that person is a Christian gray-haired man or woman, who is still blessed with a young heart. Though I may live to be sixty, seventy, or even eighty years of age, I never expect to live long enough to outgrow my rights to be an active member of a Young People's Christian Association. As a pastor, I always expect to be in such close touch with the young folks of my church, that I can sing such a song as did the sweet poet of old:

And when, with envy, Time transported
Shall think to rob us of our joys,
You'll in your girls again be courted,
And I'll go wooing with my boys.

Yes, the young people always ought to be "our boys" and "our girls" in Christ. Aged Christian friend, great opportunities of Gospel usefulness are open to you among the young folks, if you will only go to them in the spirit of loving consecration. They are open, if you will only go to the young folks in a plain, practical way.

Another glorious field of Christian usefulness is to be found in missionary work. What do I mean by that? Christian labor among the cannibals of the South Seas? Among the fur-robed Eskimos, in their igloos of the icy North? Among the tattooed Maoris of New Zealand, and the half-civilized natives of the Orient? Oh, yes. They are all included in that term, "missionary work." The Divine command, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost" has a world-wide significance. One of the first duties of a Christian is to work for the Foreign Missionary Society of his church. By money-donations, by needle-work and by pledges, you should reinforce our Christian missionaries

Laboring in Foreign Fields

You cannot have a world's Saviour, unless you feel that the black man of Borneo, and the yellow man of China, and the Bengali of India are your brothers—brothers in Christ.

But in reference to missionary work, I had in mind also another interpretation. I mean Christian labor among those who are living in your back alleys; Christian labor among the poor and the social outcasts; Christian labor, as a lady sometime ago expressed it to me in a beautiful letter. She wrote, asking me if I knew of any crippled child who had no friends—she wanted to adopt that child. She well knew that the able-bodied children might ultimately be able to take care of themselves, but the crippled child, never. Therefore, she wanted to adopt a crippled child, and care for the boy while she lived, and leave money enough in her will to care for the child after she was dead. Ah, that is the true missionary spirit. To care for the cripples and the helpless—the moral and physical cripples. You can find them in the slums. You can hear them knocking at your door. You can see them pushing past you in the twilight.

How can the Christian work in the slums? By giving at least one evening of each week, if possible, to work in one of the city's rescue missions. You have a good voice. Go to those meetings and sing. They need you. You know, or should know, how to pray. Go there and lead in prayer. If you can do no more, you can at least give out a hymn-book and smile a welcome. Go there and do that. How can you do missionary work in the back alley? Go and visit the poor homes that are only a stone's throw from your door. You will find there people who are silently yet nobly struggling for life. It was well said by a great Christian leader,

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

to the World's Salvation

work is of the most vital importance. Fields open for Gospel labor, I have pur- it first, because I believe it to be the ant of all. No one can fully estimate influence of the children who are now play- about our doors. Themistocles, the great states- in, once placed his hand upon his son's head, and id: "This child is greater than any one in Greece; for the Athenians command the Greeks, I command the Athenians, his mother commands me, and he com- mands his mother." We, in Christ's name, can place our hands upon the children. In Sunday School work we can say: "the children will be greater than all, be- cause the children of to-day will be the men and the women of to-morrow." If you can save the cradles and the nurseries for Christ, you can save the world for Christ. I plead, and beg of you, Christian dis- ciples, to expend a great part of your Gospel energies in working among the children.

Another gate stands wide open for practical Gospel usefulness. This gate leads into a field aglow with ripened human grain, ready to be garnered. It is crowded with young people. But though crowded with the young men and maidens, yet each passenger train coming into our large cities is emptying part of its load into this field, as the freight trains daily disgorge their cattle and horses and sheep, into the Chicago stock-yards, and yet there is always room for more. Young men and maidens, like children, seem to be everywhere; we crowd against them in the electric cars; we bump up against them on street corners; we see them through the swinging doors of saloon and billiard halls. Who will help save them? Church member, is not Christ calling you to go and labor among the stalwart pines of youth, as well as to use the Gospel axe among the gnarled and worm-eaten branches of sinful old age?

Speak to Young Men

How is the Christian to go after the young people? Simply enough. He is to go after them with the same vigor as the agents of evil go after their prey. Here, for instance, is a young man who comes into a large city; he has no friends; through an old acquaintance of his father's he gets a position in your store; he has a small bedroom in a city boarding-house. How is the Christian disciple to greet him? Is he to merely pass a "good morning"? Or, is he to go to that young man and open a conversation something like this: "Good morning! Are you a stranger in the city? Are you from a Christian home? Of course you have no church connections as yet. Will you not come down to our church next Sunday morning? We have our Christian Endeavor social next Thursday night. I wish that I could introduce you to some of our young people. It is very easy to drift among bad associates in a large town like this. I want you to get among the good people. We have some fine young folks up at our church. I know that you will get a warm welcome. Perhaps you do not know the city well enough to find your way? Come with me to supper, and we will go together; or, I will call at your room for you." How many young men, strangers in a large city, are there, who would refuse an invitation to

LIST OF SACRED THINGS

Rollers for the following Secret Tents are as follows if you want to know more, call me. I must have your name.

1 The Sweet Bye-and-Bye
2 Nearest, my God, to Thee.
3 I would, Thine every hour

8 Sweeping through the Gates its an unlimited field 9 I'll stay for you like morning are the children and

...e can labor. President Ro
...ering a vehement protest aga

the upper classes to shirk parental duties among the middle and the lower classes to be everywhere. There are breed-ms of them; flocks of them; great host the multitudes of pattering feet fairly fill ing start on their daily tramp to the public schools to hear them for educational purposes.

No Christian disciple need be afraid of building u another man's foundation when he goes to work Christ among the little children. There is not a co crated Sunday School superintendent in all the world who is not at his wits' end to find the right kind of teachers who will gather the boys and the girls into

"But," the church member says, "how am I to g

Sunday School class? How am I to work among children? When I enter an ordinary Sunday School find all the classes provided with teachers. Shall

Oh no, my friend. No good is ever accomplished

Christ by theft. What you should do is to go out and get your own Sunday School class. There are scores and perhaps hundreds of little children living in and perhaps hundreds, of little children living near who may never have heard the name of Jesus utter prayer. Go after them. Go after them as you

Dwight L. Moody, while still an illiterate youth, went after his Sunday School scholars. Go after the whether they are dressed in rags or in silks. Go after them, even though you must beg shoes for their feet and clothing for their backs. Go after them where they may be in palace or in hut. Go after them, beg them to come. Go after them, even if you have bribe your way into their affections with candy dolls and with social calls.

THE EDUCATION OF DWIGHT L. MOODY

By W. R. MOODY

WE often speak of a man finishing his education on leaving a certain school or college. If an academic training would have "finished" Mr. Moody's education, it is a matter of thankfulness that these advantages were deprived him. As it was, his education was ever progressing, and never was finished while his earthly career lasted. In the generally accepted term of the word, he had few educational advantages, all that he received being in the little neighboring red schoolhouse by the roadside, with the exception of one term in a free academy in the village. There was need in his home of every available assistance to support the family, and at fifteen he left school for the last time, with only a very meagre and superficial fund of information.

It was not, therefore, from schools that he was to acquire an education, but from men, and he fully realized this. From the time of leaving home, at seventeen years of age, he was ever studying men and learning from them. For such an education, a business career afforded the best possible opportunities of meeting all kinds and conditions of men. That he realized this, is clearly indicated by his rapid progress in business, rising rapidly to a position of trust and importance, and commanding, at the age of twenty-four, an unusually large salary for the times.

The demands of business did not allow much time for study, but afforded other opportunities for a man who was not afraid of being thought ignorant for asking questions. This was no fault of Mr. Moody's, for he was too honest to try to appear to know more than he did. He was the greatest questioner I ever knew. In his travels, he met men of affairs and learning, and it was always his delight to learn all he could from them. The general information thus acquired upon all sides was wonderfully retained, and mentally catalogued for further use. His mind was not a mere scrap-basket for everything, but a well-ordered encyclopedia of useful information.

Like most men who have had to fight their own way in life, he had also acquired the inestimable habit of learning from experience. Many men keep on making the same mistake, time after time, under the same conditions. This Mr. Moody never did. His mistakes were always inventoried as so many assets, and where a blunder was made in the past, it saved often from much more serious ones later.

This is equal to saying that Mr. Moody was never afraid to acknowledge a mistake. No one who knew him intimately, ever questioned his perseverance, or his indomitable will; but, once convinced that he was mistaken, no one more readily adjusted himself to new conditions when recognized. A good illustration of this was afforded in the founding of Mount Hermon Boy's School. Originally, the school was intended for boys under fifteen years of age. For the first four years, various expedients were adopted to make the school mission in Great Britain, he bought a little farm in his native town of Northfield, which became his permanent home. Here he would spend several months each year in nominal rest, but in reality in conscientious, systematic study. He collected a good library, specially suited to his needs, and during the months of June, July and August, he would devote many hours a day to the revision of old sermons and the preparation of new material. To these years of persistent study, which were followed later by seasons of more activity in the establishment of the schools and conferences which curtailed the hours of study, are to be traced the continued growth of the man as a preacher.

There were two factors in Mr. Moody's education which we have mentioned last, because most important. First of these was Mrs. Moody. How much he owed to her gentle sympathy and wise counsel can never be known. As he himself said, she "was the light of my earthly pilgrimage." Next to God's grace in his heart, Mrs. Moody was the greatest factor in his life.

The second and last factor was the Bible. Mr. Moody read widely, specially in biography and history, but nevertheless he was pre-eminently a man of one book. Whatever other reading he did was always in relation, directly or indirectly, to the Bible, or to enable him to better illustrate its teachings. He found in the Bible a liberal education in itself, and its influence even upon his method of expression is most marked. Comparing his letters, written within the first decade of his Christian life, with those written later, there is to be found a marked change and improvement in his style of expression. He found it true, as many others have since, that "the entrance of Thy Word giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."

Mr. Moody always felt keenly the loss of educational advantages, and the Northfield Schools are an expression of that deep sense of personal deprivation. What he himself had missed in life's experience, he coveted for other young men in similar circumstances. But the loss of school and college had been amply made up by his own earnest endeavor, and even in his disadvantages he acquired the best that any institution can give—the art of continuing to learn, everywhere and from every source.

THE OLD MOODY HOMESTEAD AT NORTHFIELD

efficient in its mission; but at the end of that time, Mr. Moody became convinced from experience, that the work was not accomplishing the best results. At this time he received several applications from young men who had been deprived of early educational advantages and were now anxious to redeem the opportunities which they lost. After careful consideration the entire character of the school was changed, and for nearly twenty years it has developed in its work for young men, instead of for little boys.

Valuable as Mr. Moody's experiences were as factors in his education, and remarkable as his peculiar gifts of collecting and using the knowledge he acquired, he never relied upon these alone. In 1875, after his first

New Year Opportunities

Sermon by Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

Continued

"the deserving poor are those whom you have to seek, and not those who seek you." Go in Christ's name, and hunt the deserving poor, the halt, the lame, the blind. There is something wrong about that Christian who, when Thanksgiving Day rolls around, does not know at least one family to which he can in Christ's name send a dinner. There is something wrong about that Christian who has never yet been able to hold a cottage prayer-meeting in a poor man's house.

Visit the Sick

Another glorious field for Christian activity is found in hospital work. It is found where Christ spent most of his earthly ministry, namely—among the sick. It is found in going through the wards filled with white coats and leaving here a flower, and there a word of encouragement, and yonder a prayer. It is found in the children's wards, where many little ones are cursed with a futile struggle for physical existence, cursed from the moment that they were born. It is found in the Old People's Homes, where the aged and the physically infirm, sometimes petulantly, sometimes lovingly and longingly, are waiting for the last summons to join the silent majority beyond. "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting." Yes! But I believe it is better to go to the bedside of the sick than to stand by the caskets of the dead. By the white couch of physical pain, the opportunities for doing good are even greater than by the white shrouds of the departed.

But though the hospitals are filled to overflowing, how few of us ever think of going there to carry a Christ's message of good cheer? When we think of genuine Christian work, we are apt to look for that work far beyond the seas. We do not appreciate the opportunities that are at our very doors. We are like the hundreds and thousands of Philadelphians who at home never appreciate the value of Independence Hall on Chestnut street. Some of them had to travel a thousand miles to see "Old Liberty Bell" after it had been dragged from their own depot to the World's Fair at Chicago. Oh Christian man and woman never let a month of your life pass unless you try to carry God's love into some hospital or sick room. You can find there one of the most blessed of all works. As you approach the "shut-ins," the invalids who are compelled to lie upon a bed of sickness, week in and week out, you will see the eye brighten, and the lip smile, and will hear the blessed words of endless gratitude. You will not only hear human commendations, but you will also hear the Divine Saviour say, "I was sick, and ye visited me. Verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

But there is still one more field of Christian activity to which I would direct your attention. That is, to the side rooms where the after-meetings should be held in every Christian church immediately following the benediction of the Sunday night services. That is the place where the Gospel net is drawn. That is the room in which, after a week of prayer, the sinners are given a direct invitation to join the church. There they are brought face to face with Jesus Christ, and are urged to make a decision in reference to their soul's eternal destiny. That is the one place above all others where the Christian should expect to see the direct results of his spiritual labors. It is the one place toward which all his work among the Sunday School scholars and young people should converge, and concentrate, and find its Gospel climax.

Help the Seeker

The busiest and most intense Christian worker should be found in the Sunday night after-meeting. No sinner should be there to whom a church member would be unwilling to extend a Gospel invitation, and with whom he would feel a diffidence in talking about his Saviour, Jesus Christ. But the great stumbling-block in the way of most new church members is this: they think as new members that they should take a back seat. They feel that older Christians, and not the new converts, should move up and down among the people. They feel that a church ought to be run like the United States Senate; that in it no new member has a right to be conspicuously seen or heard, until he has served a silent apprenticeship of at least six or ten years. The inevitable result is, when a Christian is willing to remain silent in the beginning of his religious life, he is very apt to remain dumb all through his earthly Christian career.

Oh, that our new converts in our sacred Sunday night after-meetings would immediately begin to testify for Jesus! Testify, as Paul testified on the day after his conversion. No sooner did the good Ananias open his blinded eyes, than he immediately began to talk about Jesus, and him crucified. He immediately began to work for the conversion of souls, until he was at last driven over the Damascus wall, and he had to flee the town by night. Oh, that our new converts in the sacred after-meetings on Sunday night would as did James Tissot with his brush, immediately after his conversion. This noted French artist was once the idol of Parisian society. He made his first fame as a portrait painter of society women. But one day, while studying the French society woman in an attitude of prayer in a Parisian cathedral, he gave his heart to Christ. Immediately, to his old friends, Tissot became a changed man. He not only turned his back upon his old life, but that he might the more ably portray the scenes in the life of Christ, he lived for many years in the far East. The famous series of Christ's life in Art is the result of Tissot's testimony. Church member, plead at once for Jesus; plead at once wherever you go. Especially plead for him and work for him in the sacred after-meeting.

Testify for Christ

Thus the call to the Christian life is a bugle blast for work. The church pew is not meant for a bed of roses, where indolence and sloth can lie down for perpetual slumber. Consecrated church membership is a sacred affinity for intense missionary activity as well as for "Gospel rest." A famous musician once said, "If I stop practicing upon the piano one day, I will feel my deterioration; if two days, the musical critics will feel it; if three, the world at large in my promiscuous audiences will feel it." If the consecrated church member stops working for Christ one day, he himself will feel his own spiritual deterioration; if two days, his Christian friends will realize it; if three days, the world at large will be the sufferer because of it. Faith's wings are movable. They must be kept working all the time. Now comes the practical determination for the Christian to settle: where are you specially fitted to go to work for Christ? Choose your spiritual occupations. From among the many fields of Gospel opportunities, choose them now.

HEARTS TOUCHED BY MACEDONIA'S CRY

MISS ELLEN M. STONE'S eloquent appeal, made through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in behalf of the Macedonian refugees, has touched many hearts; and, during the past week, letters have poured in upon us from all parts of the Union, with contributions for that unfortunate and persecuted people. These letters come from people in all conditions of life, and all breathe the same spirit of warm Christian sympathy, which is characteristic of the readers of this journal, wherever human suffering is concerned:

MACEDONIAN PEASANT AND WIFE

One of the most touching gifts yet received, reached THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices a few days ago from Wyoming. It was a little pasteboard box, which contained fourteen silver twenty-five-cent pieces. They were all of the coinage of half a century ago; but it was evident, from their perfect condition, that they had been circulated very little, if at all. Indeed, some of them still bore the shine of the mint, as though they had been put into the little box when brand-new and never disturbed. With the box came this letter:

Dear Christian Herald:—Forty-seven years ago to-night, a little life of twelve short summers went on earth, and a blessed eternity was begun in the home over there. I do not remember that parting as I was only a baby boy. I have been told that he sang with a voice angelic just before his little spirit winged its flight to the heavenly home, that hymn which ends—

Oh that will be joyful,
When we meet to part no more.

Among his boyish treasures he left me all his little savings—fourteen bright silver quarters in his little purse, and there they have lain all these long years. I felt they were almost sacred, as his little hands placed them there. I could never spend or bank them.

I have often thought I would give them to some good cause, but until now I have given other money instead; but last night, as I sat at my home fireside and read Miss Stone's letter in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—"Macedonia's Black Christmas"—the thought came to me, if Brother Willie could speak to me, he would say, "Frank, send my little treasure which you have kept so long, to help the poor little children in that far-off land. I am glad you have kept it for them." I will keep the little purse, but the fourteen silver quarters which have lain side by side for nearly fifty years, I will send in Willie's name, for in truth, "There is a cry from Macedonia." Sincerely, FRANK EASTMAN.

Long years have passed since the childish hand that first gave over this little treasure, crumbled to dust, but the influence of that sweet young Christian boy still lives. Willie Eastman's coins will go, with other gifts, to Macedonia, and may be the means of saving some of the poor little children of that unfortunate land from death by cold and starvation. The treasure could not have been consecrated to a nobler purpose.

Many of the letters send gifts "with love and prayers." We give below extracts from a few of the latest received: "A Friend" writes: "I enclose twenty-five cents for the poor Macedonian refugees, hoping it will be some little help. May our dear Lord bless it, for his name's sake."

S. S. L., New York City (24c.), writes: "I wish it were more, but I am an invalid."

Andrew, Cardwell, Idaho ($10), writes: "Enclosed is my gift for Macedonia's relief—In His Name."

E. E. M., South Orange, N. J. ($1), writes: "One of the mites . . . Trusting many mites may come in soon."

Mrs. A. S. H., Portland, Me. ($6), writes: "May the Master take this and multiply it, as the loaves and fishes, and use it to save souls as well as bodies. I feel sure that you will be abundantly blessed for presenting these noble causes, and being the medium whereby your readers can minister to the Master's needy ones. (Matt. 25: 40)."

Mrs. M. M. L., Oak Park, Ill. ($2). "I would that Christian nations might acquire some important influence and power over Turkey. How long—oh, how long! must there be such cruel treatment and suffering?"

Mrs. A. R. L., Westphalia, Ind. ($1). "May it be blessed of God to the preservation of the life of one of Christ's little ones."

Mrs. C. L. C., Cornia, Me. ($1), "It is but little, but I send it with love and a prayer."

J. B. and Rose McM., St. Clairsville, O. ($10), "Have just read in your excellent paper Miss Stone's letter, and we are glad to send you the enclosed draft for those so needy."

M. A. B., Honeybrook, Pa. ($5), "It is a pitiful story you tell about the Macedonian refugees. Find enclosed $2 for their relief."

"In Christ's Name," Temple, Tex., sends $25.

Mrs. S. M. S., Leland, Ill. ($1.50), "I hope this small sum will help some poor sufferer a little."

Mrs. A. D., Coshocton ($1). "I want to send a widow's mite for the starving Macedonians."

M. B., Wellston, Mo. ($1). "God bless Miss Stone! It may be she will yet do a more mighty work for God."

Mrs. Isaac S., Endeavor, Wis. ($1). "I pray God will bless it to some poor sufferer. I think all who can should respond to the urgent needs of those poor Christians—our brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus."

Mrs. Ella K., Orangeville, Ill. ($1). "God grant it may save some body and soul from death. All I regret is that it is not thousands, instead of one dollar."

From McGregor, Ia., comes $15, "A little offering from Hattie, Meza and Abby A."

"May speedy relief come to them," writes Mr. and Mrs. David G., San Jose, Calif. ($5).

"It may help a little," is the sympathetic hope of "A Friend," Durham, Conn. ($2).

"I pray that every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may do likewise," writes C. E. C., Verbena, Ala. ($1.)

"I only wish it were five times as much," writes Mrs. Geo. H. P., East Orange, N. J. ($5).

F. T., Radersburg, Mont. ($1) writes: "When Miss Stone can plead for them, after her experience, it would melt a strong heart."

"How I wish I could relieve every one of them, but mine is only the widow's mite," writes Mrs. P. M., Newport, N. H. ($1).

"Friend," Conn., writes: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Mrs. B. A. M., New Alexandria, Pa., for self and from other friends, sends $9 "to help a little."

Mrs. C. B., Rome, N. Y. ($2) writes: "My funds are small, but I prefer to deny myself little comforts, and send something to help swell the fund for those afflicted people."

"I could not refuse sending my mite," writes E. L. M., Shelbyville, Ind. ($5). "It's the Lord's money, and I intended using it in another direction for his service, but thought this much more important. My prayers go with it."

A reader in Zanesville, O., who simply signs "For Jesus' Sake," sends 50c. "It is only a little, but I send it with love and sympathy."

"My mite ($1), with the prayer that God may cause many to give aid and succor," writes Elizabeth S. B.

"I wish I had great wealth," writes Mrs. W. W. G., Goshen, Ind. ($5), "that I might send what would seem real relief. I send this mite with my prayer."

"May every heart be touched, and a generous spirit be given, so that a large amount may be quickly sent. Then will the glad Christmas-time be more heartily enjoyed," writes Mrs. C., Dover, N. J. ($1).

"May the blessing of God rest on the Macedonians in their efforts to free themselves from Turkish rule," is the prayer of A. C. G., Newark, N. J. ($5).

Mrs. Sarah R., Patchogue, N. Y., sends $3 from a friend and herself, and invokes the Divine blessing upon every dollar that is sent for relief, and also upon the senders themselves.

"May the Lord's blessing go with this ($2). I wish it were a hundredfold larger," writes Mrs. A. S., Little Falls, N. J.

M. M. C., Philadelphia (a dear old Christian of eighty) sends $8 for the sufferers, and adds, "I wish it were hundreds."

"May God add his blessing and permit it to help some poor soul," is the sincere prayer of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. W., Cortland, N. Y. ($5).

"I would give more if I were able; but inasmuch as it is in my heart to do so, I know and feel that the loving Saviour can and will multiply it for me," writes S. M. C. (an incurable invalid).

"I'm a cripple and poor," writes J. R. E., New York ($1), "but I have plenty to eat and coal enough to keep me warm, so I am sending this to the Macedonians with good wishes."

Miss R. H. H., Chalmers, Ind., for the Meadow-Lake Missionary Society, forwards $10.50 for the refugees.

A reader in Afton, Tenn. ($1.50), writes: "May God's blessing rest upon the motherless girl who brought me the fifty cents, just as I had set down the dollar for myself and husband. She said: 'Put this on for me, but don't give my name, please.'"

Rev. L. D. Ewing, Pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Bunceton, Md., writes, inclosing check for $14.70, for the relief work, and adds: "May God bless you in all you do for these poor people." The Ministerial Alliance of Bunceton, is working energetically in behalf of the Macedonian sufferers, and has sent out earnest appeals, with good results."

All the gifts will be duly forwarded to the American missionaries and native pastors in Macedonia proper, and on the Bulgarian border. Last week's remittance of $10,000 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund was apportioned as follows:

Dr. J. F. Clarke, Samokov, for relief work among the refugees on the border, $1,000

Rev. Lewis Bond, Monastir, the centre of greatest distress, 5,000

Rev. Dr. Geo. D. Marsh, Philippopolis, Bulgaria, 2,000

Rev. Dr. H. C. Haskell, Salonica, Macedonia, 2,000

In a letter from Mrs. Z. D. Furnajeff, wife of the native pastor at Kustendil, Bulgaria, just received, the writer says that in Bourgas and 36 nearby villages there are 7,948 refugees, of whom only 2,900 can now be assisted, owing to the insufficiency of means. Mrs. Allen (a relief worker from England) has received quantities of cloth (for underwear for the women), bur-lap (for mattresses), skin shoes, caps and handkerchiefs (for the women). The food supply is lamentably insufficient. In one district 2,206 refugees have no food, 539 have a week's supply, 840 a two weeks' supply and only a few are better provided. Two thousand and seventy-nine blankets are urgently needed, as winter has already set in. In Banya, stoves, beds and quilts are called for by the workers, to supply 400 persons. These are average instances of the needs at this time throughout Macedonia, but more especially among the refugees, who have lost all their worldly possessions.

A letter from Sofia, dated Dec. 7, 1903, states that many refugees from the village of Banya have arrived in that city. They are quartered about a mile out of the city in the camp that was occupied by the Bulgarian army during the summer. The Sofia Y.M.C.A. helped them as far as possible. Mrs. Popava collected cloth from merchants, and Christian ladies sewed it into garments, which now protect some of these poor unfortunates.

Prof. Bertel Tuglsang, of Copenhagen, went personally to Macedonia, where he visited about one hundred of the villages that have suffered, and distributed $2,000 in relief work. On his return he visited the Sofia Y.M.C.A., and left with that Association $800 for further distribution among the sufferers.

Every gift to Macedonia, however small will be welcome, and will be deeply and gratefully appreciated by the workers. If the refugees can be sheltered from the wintry blasts and helped to keep body and soul together meanwhile, a grand work for humanity will have been accomplished.

All contributions should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

Every contribution will be acknowledged in these columns, and forwarded to the missionaries in the field.

A Distinguished Canadian's Idea

Dr. Louis Klopfisch: My Dear Sir:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of the Red Letter Bible. It was so entirely unexpected that the pleasure of receiving it was much enhanced, and it surpassed my highest conceptions of its quality and make-up. It is indeed a marvelously fine production. I value very highly, too, your autograph inscription therein, with its reference to the Hebrew benediction contained in Numbers 6: 24, 25 and 26. This is one of my favorite passages, and I often quote it to my friends as one of the most beautiful things in literature. I thank you sincerely for this handsome gift, which I shall cherish as one of my most valued possessions.

Brighton, Ont.
J. W. GORDON.

MACEDONIANS IN NATIVE DRESS

CALLED TO NEW FIELDS OF SERVICE

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage Becomes Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Los Angeles

READERS of this journal, who for the last two years have enjoyed, from week to week, the eloquent sermons of the Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage, will be interested to learn that Pastor Talmage has accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Los Angeles, Calif. This is one of the leading pulpits on the Pacific Coast, and its occupancy will open up to the well-known preacher a larger and wider spiritual field than he has ever before occupied. In that section of the Union there are peculiar climatic advantages, which attract hundreds and thousands of strangers from different States. There he will preach the Gospel to the New Englander, the Southerner, the native of New York, Pennsylvania, the middle West and the colder North, as well as to the native Californians. In accepting the call, therefore, he has entered upon a ministry which will be in a large sense Continental.

At a recent meeting in the Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago, of which Mr. Talmage has been pastor for six years, he tendered his resignation in these touching words:

My Beloved People:—Some time ago I was notified by telegram that I had been extended a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Los Angeles, Cal. For some days it was a question whether I should accept this invitation or not. After careful and prayerful consideration upon my part, I have decided to sever my connection with this church next Sunday, and preach my first sermon in the Los Angeles pulpit Jan. 3, 1904. I make this important move for two reasons. First, because I consider the First Church pulpit of Los Angeles the greatest opportunity for usefulness west of the Mississippi, and equaled in opportunities for usefulness by but few pulpits in the land. The second reason for like other west side churches situated below Ashland boulevard. Some of our members have gone north, east, south and west. I believe we have absent church members living in almost every State in the Union. But though many have moved, we have also had the Christian joy of welcoming new converts by the hundreds to Christ's altar.

During the pastorate of my six years we have paid off a mortgage of $9,000 and remodeled the church at an additional expense of about $15,000. This church to-day is practically out of debt. That, of course, is a blessing. It is absolutely a unit in reference to the harmony existing between pastor and people; we have a harmonious pew. I beg and plead with you at this crisis in the church's history to stand together, for geographically Jefferson Park is a most difficult field. Call, if possible, another pastor right away. Then in God's name go ahead and do the work he has given you to do.

I shall preach my farewell sermon next Sunday night, Dec. 27. There will be a congregational meeting next Wednesday night to send commissioners to the Chicago presbytery to ask for the dissolution of the pastoral relations now existing between myself and the church.

May God bless us all, is the prayer of one who will never cease to pray for you on account of the kindness you have shown me and mine.

Los Angeles is already recognized as a great religious centre, with many brilliant pulpites, including the Rev. R. R. Meredith (Congregationalist), Rev. Robert McIntyre (Methodist), Rev. Robert Burdette (Baptist), and many others whose names are widely known.

Dr. Talmage's new church has a seating capacity of about 1,300. There is a commodious Sunday School building, entirely separate from the main edifice. The entire structure is in a style of architecture that is both impressive and beautiful. It is complete, with the exception of two towers, which are still in process of construction.

Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, LOS ANGELES

my going: I feel that a change to a warmer climate, for some time at least, will be beneficial to the physical health of my wife and all four of my children.

The snapping of the heartstrings which bind this pulpit to you, my dear people, is not done without great sorrow upon my part. For nearly six long years we have been together in joy and sorrow. We have buried the bodies of some which once were the tenements of the loveliest spirits God ever let live. We have had our emigrations from the church,

WILL MEN SUCCEED IN AERIAL FLIGHT?

WILL the problem of aerial navigation ever be satisfactorily solved? Will man become "master of the air" as of the sea and land?

Recent experiments would seem to indicate that we are treading close upon the border of ultimate success. One flying machine, at least, tried lately on the coast of North Carolina, has demonstrated that such apparatus can be constructed for practical use. The machine in question actually moved through the coast, near Kitty Hawk, N. C., for the last three years. They selected this location because the wind blows there more steadily than inland. On the beach are sand hills, some of them sixty feet in height, and the tops of these hills were used as starting points. The flight began from an inclined platform, built upon the slope of one of these hills. The canvas wings, or sails, were of such size, and placed at such an angle, that, as it was propelled down the incline by the force of gravity, from end to end, with a width of about five feet, and was steered by a rudder made of canvas, shaped somewhat like the tail of a fish. In addition to the weight of the machine, it sustained the man operating it and a gasoline engine.

The Wright apparatus consisted of a simple framework made of light material covered with canvas, not unlike the box kites used by children. It has been called a "glider," from the fact that the first experi-

THREE INSTANTANEOUS PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE WRIGHT FLYING MACHINE, TAKEN WHILE IT WAS IN ACTUAL FLIGHT
These remarkable pictures show the manner in which the machine is sustained, controlled and guided, while in the air air a distance of over two miles before landing. Prior to this time, the longest distance, which any invention has covered (except where a balloon attachment was used), has been less than four hundred feet. The successful attempt was made against a wind blowing at the rate of twenty miles an hour, as recorded by instruments.

Messrs. Wilbur and Orville Wright, of Dayton, Ohio, have been experimenting on the Atlantic it finally left the surface and was launched into the air. The navigator then started an engine operating two propellers; one revolving horizontally, assisted in keeping the little air-ship suspended, while the other, revolving vertically, propelled it forward. The flight was made at a speed which covered two miles in fifteen minutes. At some places, the machine attained a height of from sixty to seventy-five feet above the beach. The machine was thirty-three feet in length ments were made without the use of engine or propellers, the operators endeavoring to see how far they could glide from an elevation. During one trial three hundred and sixty feet were covered before the machine touched the ground. The recent two-mile flight with the aid of machinery was a surprise to all students of aerial navigation. Our photographs show the air-ship in full flight, and show the culminating point of the experiment.

D. A. W

"No Such Premiums in England"

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Your premium to hand to-day, none the worse for its long journey. I am agreeably surprised with it. I think it is about the most useful present I could have had. We never have any such beautiful premiums as the Crown Encyclopedia offered to us in England. Allow me to thank you again for these beautiful volumes, for I am proud of them.
L. R. R. ROSE.
London, England.

"Full of Good Things"

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—With pleasure I acknowledge the receipt of my Red Letter Bible. Am delighted with the clear print and many helps to a better understanding of the "Blessed Word." You have done a great work for us poor people. I also thank you for the beautiful Calendar, which came last evening. Many thanks for all the good things in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
Kensington, N. Y.
MRS. C. A. THATCHER.

A Judge of Butterflies

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—The Butterfly Calendar reached me in due time and good condition. Please accept my thanks for it. It is a very bright and attractive ornament for the wall. I had the pleasure of seeing quite a variety of the tropical and semi-tropical butterflies preserved by a naturalist, who had collected them, and could easily recognize these artistic reproductions in the Calendar.
Madisonville, O.
M. W. CADWELL.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

Should the Bars be Lowered?

MANY Christian people outside the Methodist Episcopal Church, must be as deeply interested, as those within its pale, in the debate that has arisen on the question of removing the existing restrictions against dancing, card-playing, theatre-going, etc. While some people belonging to other communions, have congratulated themselves on the greater liberality of their own churches, there are others who have wished that there were similar penalties in their denomination against those amusements. It is therefore natural, that there should be a wide interest in the result of the proposal now under consideration in the Methodist Episcopal Church, to bring it into line with other churches in the matter.

The question, of course, is not one of extreme indulgence in the amusements named. That there are degrees of conduct in this regard, none will deny. There are many degrees in the habit of drinking intoxicants. It is not a question whether it is fitting for membership in a church to be accorded to a man who staggers about the streets, who is found frequently dancing in promiscuous company all night, or who spends most of his time at the gaming table. The question is whether one who does not go to any of these extremes, but who indulges moderately in these amusements, is fit. The difficulty in all these cases is to fix the line of moderation. It is difficult for the man himself, who, while habitually moderate, is liable occasionally to overstep the line; still more difficult is it for the Church, and therefore its organizers, like the leaders of Temperance, drew the line, where it seems hard, but is clearly safe, at total abstinence. No other place for the line was possible, because in any other place, it would be elastic according to the constitution of the member, and it would give rise to endless debate as to whether he had overstepped the line which represented moderation in his case.

A clearer understanding of the question may be reached by examining the nature of the punishment incurred by a member of the Church, who, in spite of warning, persists in dancing, playing at cards, attending the theatre, etc. He is not fined nor imprisoned, nor does he incur any worldly loss. He is simply informed, in effect, that he no longer belongs to the class of persons for whom the Church was organized. Practically, this is not a condemnation of the man. A club, or any social or political organization might have a rule which will freeze out of its membership an uncongenial member, and yet would not condemn him. The Church, like the club, is composed of persons having certain tastes and principles in common; if, therefore, any one in membership develops tastes and principles which are not in harmony with those of the other members, and which have been the notable characteristics of the association, he is out of place in it, and it is better for him and the other members that he should resign. That is logical; but there may be an exception. The number of the members who may be called variants, may have gradually increased until they have become a majority. In this case, there is the alternative of so changing the rules as to change the character of the association. It has yet to be tested whether this latter possibility has occurred in the Methodist Church.

There is another view of the subject, which is based on the Apostolic conception of the Christian life. It regards the Christian, as one whose affections are set on things above; whose supreme object in life is to attain to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; who is running a race, and is, therefore, laying aside every weight; who is climbing to the highest plane of spiritual life, and casts off everything that is liable to hinder him. Many good and worthy people do not take their religion so strenuously. Believing themselves safe for eternity, they are content to live very much as does the worldling, while avoiding the grosser forms of evil. But the other kind, who are earnestly seeking spiritual attainment, are prepared to sacrifice anything that is of the nature of an obstacle. They are so much in earnest, that they have neither time nor inclination for frivolous pursuits. Now it cannot be denied that dancing, card-playing and theatre-going are diversions. The only merit that can be claimed for them is that they are relaxations, and there is much to be said for the contention that even as relaxations they are detrimental, and are of the nature of the weights which the earnest Christian is advised to lay aside. They cannot help him in the supreme purpose of his life, and they may hinder him. If he finds pleasure in them, it is evident that he is not one of those whose one desire it is to "know Christ and be found in him." He is, therefore, out of place among people who are filled with that desire. Just as a dilettante in music or art would be uncomfortable in a society of musicians or artists who were absorbed in their profession, a Christian of the unstrenuous kind would be a discordant element in a society of earnest Christians. To admit him, or retain him in membership after his character is discovered, is to acknowledge that the society itself is no longer so strenuous as of yore, no longer so devoted to the apostolic ideal which would abandon even things that were lawful, if they were not expedient.

A Colombian on Panama

IN another part of this issue there is printed a contribution from a native of the Republic of Colombia, the brother of one of its military leaders, which is of the greatest interest, and importance at the present time. It is a plain and straightforward statement of the condition of affairs in that republic, and it is the more significant, from the fact that the writer sharply criticizes the treatment to which the people of the Isthmus of Panama have been subjected by Colombia, for many years past. In view of the extraordinary conditions, the writer concludes that it was not surprising that the Panamanians should have continued in a state of chronic revolt.

Mr. Perdomo's article comes with the authority of personal and familiar knowledge of the situation. Whether he is right in justifying Panama's course, under all the circumstances, the reader himself must judge. At all events, his article is an enlightening and valuable contribution to current history.

The Thralldom of Evil Habit

THIS is the season of noble resolutions—when vow and promise and pledge fill the atmosphere, and impart to it a tone of high determination and immovable purpose which it possesses at no other time of the year. Within "one little month," lo! the greater part of these fine resolutions—deemed inflexible and inexorable at the moment—will be shattered into fragments. It was always so. Society is not made moral by legislative enactment, and the individual, by the mere effort of his own will, cannot raise himself from the ground by pulling at his boot-straps. We each have our faults, more or less grievous, which we would give a good deal to be rid of. But our meannesses, our unworthy ways, our besetting sins, have, in most cases, been so long indulged, that they have taken firm root and cannot be shaken off by a sudden determination on our part to be rid of them. We may say to them, "Begone, I'll none of thee!" but they stick, and we are shortly aware of the fact that they are just as strong as ever.

Such is the familiar experience of ninety-nine out of every hundred human beings who indulge in New Year's resolutions. It usually ends in the pitiful confession that our fine resolves, uttered in a moment of enthusiasm, are a waste of breath. Habit is stronger than we are, and bad habits are the strongest of all.

Thus ever, while the world revolves,
I plan the right, I do the wrong;
I make each morning wise resolves
And act but follies all day long.

There is only one sovereign way to remedy our own weakness and to overcome those moral defects against which we make annual proclamation of hostile intention. If we yield ourselves to Christ and accept him as our Saviour, committing our whole life to him, he will "make all things new." The tyranny of evil habit, in whatsoever way it has its hold upon us, will be loosened. Our hearts will be purified, our bodies freed from evil desires, our minds clothed with nobler thoughts, and all our feelings and affections ennobled by the spiritual power of Divine love. The Christian who, by praying and working, keeps in close and constant touch with Christ, finds himself, step by step, emancipated from the domination of his old-time enemy. He becomes a free man in Christ Jesus.

"THE OLD CHURCH OF SINNERS!"

Owen Kildare's Splendid Tribute to the BOWERY MISSION and its Work

IN the current number of Success, is a remarkable article from the pen of Owen Kildare, on the Rescue Missions of New York City, in the course of which he has this to say of the Bowery Mission:

"Scattered throughout the city of Greater New York are many so-called rescue missions. You can find them in the Bronx, in Brooklyn, uptown, crosstown, downtown, and, also, ONE on the Bowery. From time immemorial the Bowery has been, and is still, known as the seat of all wickedness; and yet, from the Brooklyn Bridge, along Park Row, to Cooper Union, a distance of several miles, we only find one rescue mission to counteract all this wickedness. Across the street from Cooper Union are the headquarters of the Volunteers and a meeting place of the Salvation Army, but there the neighborhood is given up to legitimate business and free from flagrant vice. In my time—and it embraces almost thirty years—I have seen many missions begin work on the Bowery, but they were all shortlived. Perhaps the Boweryites were too far gone, or, perhaps, they were not wicked enough; but, whatever the cause, the old Bowery Mission is the only one which has lasted for years. The reason for this is not hard to find. The Bowery Mission, from its very start, offered nothing else to the men flocking there but the Word of God, and opportunity to hear it intelligently interpreted, and has never claimed to be anything else than the Church of Sinners. That is a great institution, however, in the highest humanitarian sense.

"The dear old Bowery Mission, the staunch old Church of Sinners. There they offer you the Word—nothing else—but very intelligently and cheerfully, amid suitable surroundings, with splendid music. (I am not a stickler for ritualism, but only for fitness.) Constantly it is proved there that true righteousness brings its own reward. When the invitation is given there, they come forward and find good, loving friends to pray with them, put their arms around them, and bid them good night when they leave, some for their lodging-house cots, some for the long, nocturnal journeys in the streets. It is different when Mrs. Bird is there. Long ago she was named the 'Mother of the Bowery,' and, as she says, 'I can't let my sons be in want, when I have plenty.' But—bless you!—she gives to all, Christian and sinner alike, and to be in want is the only plea necessary with her.

"I know a man who was saved in the Bowery Mission, and who 'carried the banner'—walked the streets at night—without a murmur, for ten days after his salvation.

"I wanted Christ, not a bed-ticket," was his answer when I asked him about it. Truly he was a Spartan Christian.

"Brother John G. Hallimond, the Bowery Mission can't spare you, but it would be a good thing for the other rescue missions if you could show them how the Word can make converts, irrespective of bed-tickets.

"Good, square, sincere men have been reclaimed in the Bowery Mission through the test of honest work at honest pay, and God does not want the man who will not work."

Among the Workers

—DR. FRANCIS SMILEY and his musical assistant, have just closed with the united churches of Holly, Mich., a most successful evangelistic meeting.

—EVANGELIST ROBERT L. LAYFIELD and wife, of Kansas City, have just closed union meetings at Louisburg, Kansas, which are said to have been most successful.

—THE BILL asking Congress to give United States life-savers, lighthouse keepers and shipwrecked mariners, a system of chaplaincies, framed by R. Ashley Cake, and introduced by Hon. J. J. Gardner, of New Jersey, is now with the Committee on Foreign and Interstate Commerce, and favorable action is hoped for.

—THE FARMERS' CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY will pitch an encampment, with a large auditorium, convenient to St. Louis, in May, and keep it open until the close of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition. Religious, fraternal and other organizations, may arrange to use the auditorium for their conventions and meetings, and camp out with the farming population.

The Beautiful Butterfly Calendar

DEAR DR. KLOPSCH:—I have just received the beautiful Butterfly Calendar, and I think it a perfect beauty. We thought last year's could not be improved upon, but each succeeding year seems, if possible, to outdo the former. It is much admired by all who have seen it.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. C. WALTON.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Lions by a Railroad Track

AMONG the novel sights to be witnessed from the window of a railroad car as it speeds along the track, probably there is none so strange as that which greets the traveler on the newly opened line from the eastern shores of the Victoria Nyanza to Mombasa, in Southern Africa. It is not at all uncommon, says Commander Whitehouse, of the British Navy, in an article in the London Graphic, to see a family of lions devouring a hartbeest or zebra within a short distance of the line, while circling above, or perched on the nearest trees are the vultures waiting their turn to feast on the fragments left by the lions. It is a curious experience, too, for a railroad engineer to be cautioned of a disarrangement of traffic that lions have caused. It happened recently that an engineer was told to proceed slowly at a certain part of the line where there were switches, as four lions had entered the yard where the switch-box stood, and the man whose duty it was to set the switch was afraid to enter. Though there have been instances of lions attacking sportsmen, those lions who prowl along the line are seldom man-eaters. They usually take no notice of the passing train, or else, looking at it with wonder for a minute, take refuge in flight. During the construction of the railroad the natives were in constant dread of being seized by lions. It was necessary to build a high thorn hedge around the section where they were at work and at night they slept in huts of corrugated iron. It is expected that the new railroad will help materially in the development of Uganda. A letter mailed now at Entebbe, in Uganda, reaches the coast in four days. The first part of the journey is across the lake. Two new steamers have been constructed for this service. They cross the lake to Port Florence in thirty hours. Twelve hours later the mail train starts on its journey of about five hundred miles, which it accomplishes in about fifty hours. The passengers on the steamers often have glimpses of animated nature as startling as those on the train. A hippopotamus, rising and falling in the shallow water, and a crocodile sunning himself on the bank, are common objects in view. It seems strange for the traveler by rail and steamboat to see these monsters, that we naturally associate with the wilds of uncivilized lands. Civilization disturbs them, but it cannot change their nature. That will be changed only when civilization reaches its zenith, under the glorious rule of the Prince of Peace, when the whole world shall share in the transformation of the lives of men.

The wolf shall dwell with the lamb; and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain (Isa. 11: 6, 9).

Marriage No Defence

In passing sentence last week, in New York, on a man convicted of picking a pocket, Judge Cowing took occasion to condemn the morbid sympathy with criminals manifested by some women of social standing. After this criminal's arrest, a woman came to New York from Toledo, O., and visited him in prison. She pleaded with Chaplain Monroe to marry her to the man. Knowing the opposition of the authorities to such marriages he declined, but the woman succeeded in getting a civil marriage. When her husband was awaiting sentence, she pleaded with the judge for mercy for him. Inquiry, however, elicited the fact that he had already served three terms in prison for picking pockets, and that the woman who had married him was fully aware that he was a professional thief when she first became enamored with him. The judge expressed the opinion that there was little hope of the reform of a man who had been convicted and punished three times, and he refused to regard the marriage as any reason for clemency. He therefore sentenced him to the full term of five years, and intimated that no prisoner brought before him in future need expect to gain anything by contracting a marriage before being sentenced. We can easily understand a judge being incensed, if he thought a trick had been played, to work on his sympathy. If, however, he believed that a marriage had taken place which indicated a sincere resolve on the part of the husband to reform, he would gladly facilitate it by clemency. How tended to be his heiress. She was his child, the judge said, by love and sentiment, and those ties must be recognized as effectively as the tie of natural birth. How thankful Christians have reason to be that God recognizes this fact! Their adoption into God's family carries with it all the privileges of sonship, and can never be disturbed.

To the end that the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith (Rom. 4: 16).

Making Radium

A radium industry has begun to develop both in France and Germany. Large orders have been received from all parts of the world for specimens of the wonderful substance. Tons of ore are required to produce a single gram of radium, and as the orders call for hundreds of grams, the work of supplying the demand is quite extensive. The quantity required was Rudolph Hirsch Abrabanel, a descendant of the famous Isaac Abrabanel, a rabbi, who, in the fifteenth century, suffered persecution. He was, in early life, a favorite of the Portuguese king; but was compelled to transfer his residence to Castile. Thence, too, with other Jews, he fled to Naples, and ultimately to Venice, where he died. He was highly esteemed there, and the government honored him with a grand public funeral. He was the author of many learned works, in which, having suffered all his life from representatives of Christianity, he bitterly assailed the Christian faith. One of his sons, however, embraced Christianity after his father's death. The erudite rabbi always insisted that he could trace his pedigree to King David, and the honor was warmly cherished by his descendant who died lately in Philadelphia. It is not surprising that a person whose pedigree ran back to so glorious a personage as King David, should be very proud of the fact. Nevertheless, character is a better credential than blood. It would, for example, be a great drawback to the honor, if the line ran through David's ingrate son, Absalom. The true descendants of a great and good man are those that resemble him in character. In that way, as Christ said, the honor of the highest relationship of all, is open to every one.

Whosoever shall do the will of my Father who is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother (Matt. 12: 50).

BRIEF NOTES

There are now 6,838 preaching stations in Africa, and the number of foreign missionaries laboring on the continent is 3,051.

A memorial hospital to Dr. Livingston, the great missionary explorer, has been erected by his daughter, at Zomba in Central Africa.

The recent Mexican Christian Endeavor Convention at the City of Mexico was attended by about 500 delegates from all parts of the Republic. One hundred and thirty-one societies were reported, with 3,403 members.

The British and Foreign Bible Society will complete the century of its existence on March 7 next. It has published the Word of God "without note or comment" in 370 distinct forms of speech, eight of which have been added to its list during the past year, six of the eight being African dialects and two Esquimaux. Last year it sold nearly two million copies.

From a report just issued by the American Board, it appears that the number of Christian communicants in India has nearly doubled during the past ten years. The number now is 358,000 as against 183,000 in 1893.

An effort is being made in Australia to effect a union between Congregationalists, Methodists and Presbyterians. The outlook is reported favorable. Plans are being made by representatives of all three denominations.

A Berlin journal which has been collecting Jewish statistics reports that the number of Jews who have been converted, and are at present occupying pulpits of Protestant churches, is 125. The same journal states that the records of Jewish baptisms during the last century aggregate 204,540.

A conference of missionaries is to be held in Korea, Sept. 18-25, 1904 in commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into that land. Missionaries from China, India and Japan have promised to participate. Visitors are expected also from Europe and America. The committee in charge is composed of representatives of all denominations.

The American Sunday School Union in its latest report, announces that during the year 2,493 Sunday Schools were organized in destitute communities in forty-two States. The enrollment of teachers and pupils at the opening of these schools aggregated 96,500. Through the work of the Union more than 25,000 Bibles and Testaments were put in circulation. The recent conference of the Union at the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, was a representative and stimulating experience.

The Turkish Board of Censors which exercises a supervision over all books published in the Empire, has ordered the excision of the following passages from the Bible: "Envy thou not the oppressor, and choose none of his ways. Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men. Rob not the poor because he is poor, neither oppress the afflicted in the gate; for the Lord will plead his cause, and spoil the soul of those who spoil them." Apparently the Board of Censors thinks that they reflect on Turkish government, and they do seem to apply to it.

PASSENGERS ON THE NEW UGANDA RAILROAD WATCHING A LION FEAST

thankful many a sinner has been to know that God will do so. Where there is true union with Christ, forgiveness of the sinner for his sake is assured.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus (Rom. 8: 1).

A Foundling Heiress

A remarkable suit was on trial in the Supreme Court, of New York, last week. A claim was made by relatives of a wealthy man, who died recently, for his property. It was, however, contested by the friends of a little girl now in a charitable institution in the city. The property had been bequeathed to the child, now eight years old, by the deceased citizen, but he had described her in his will as his daughter. His relatives had discovered that she was not his daughter, but was a foundling whom he and his wife had procured from the foundling home seven years ago, to take the place of their own child, who had died in infancy. He had adopted the little waif, had given her the name of his dead child, and had loved her and cared for her as his daughter. Still, she was not a blood relation, and his relatives disputed her right to inherit. The judge, however, pronounced judgment in her favor, on the ground that she was evidently the child whom the testator indicated in his will, and whom he interpreted to be his heiress. She was his child, the judge said, by love and sentiment, and those ties must be recognized as effectively as the tie of natural birth. How thankful Christians have reason to be that God recognizes this fact! Their adoption into God's family carries with it all the privileges of sonship, and can never be disturbed.

The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord Prov. 20: 27).

Descended from King David

Among the deaths registered recently in Philadelphia, Pa., was that of a lady, who claimed to be a descendant of the great Hebrew poet-king. She bore the name of Lipschuetz, but her grandfather

The Republic of Colombia and its Present Crisis

By J. J. PERDOMO

THE name, "Republic of Colombia," is comparatively new, proceeding as a natural consequence of the ill-fated civil war in 1884-85, when the old-established government was overthrown and superseded by the unprogressive element of the country, the previous name being, "The United States of Colombia." This latter name was adopted at the time of the final organization of the nation, as a Republic, in 1863. At this time a constitution was adopted, patterned after that of the United States of America. It divided the country into nine States, equal in power and privileges as those of the United States of America. The names of the nine States were: Antioquia, Bolivar, Boyaca, Cauca, Cundinamarca, Magdalena, Panama, Santander and Tolima. The government was administrative and executive, with a Congress composed of a Senate and House of Representatives, elected for two years, and a President of the Union, elected also for two years; each State having its own executive and administrative bodies and officers.

The reason for the changing of affairs in 1884, was the ambition and cupidity of what is called the Conservative party, being the party of the priests, monks and friars, together with all their subjects. Following the exact principles of the ancient Spanish Inquisition, everything was undertaken in the name of religion and under the image of a crucifix. The overthrown party was that of the Liberals. It is interesting to note the distinction and principles of the two parties.

The Conservatives are a faithful prototype of their ancestors, the Spaniards; with the same ideas and notions. Their conception of a government is that of an absolute monarchy, controlled by the Church; their religion is an extreme form of Ultramontane Roman Catholicism; according to their conception of things, what was good for their forefathers is good enough for them, and ought to be for their succeeding generations. Inventions of any kind are considered the traps of the Evil One, to allure away the world. They believe in a universal language, feeling sure that "languages" are the invention of the Satanic powers; of course they know not, and seldom care for knowing any languages beyond their own. A Colombian woman, faithful type of the Con-blem of liberty; below, in the coat-of-arms, is also the cap of liberty, horns of plenty and ship of commerce. The flag of the nation is red, blue and yellow, in longitudinal stripes, the yellow being twice the width of the other two. In the war of overthrow (1884-85), the nine States of the Union were changed to departments, under more limited powers; a new constitution was adopted, by which the term of service for President, Vice-President and members of Congress was extended to six years, instead of two, as before.

What we know to-day as Colombia was a colony of Spain from 1718 to 1819; then a portion of the Republic of New Granada, from 1819 to 1830; a separate government from 1830 to 1863; the United States of Colombia from 1863 to 1885, and the Republic of Colombia from 1885 to the present time.

It may well be said that Colombia, as well as most, though not all, of the South American republics, is over a century behind the times. The language is pure Spanish, using what is known as the American orthography; however, a good many idiomatic expressions and corruptions have been introduced into the language, chiefly among the lower classes of society, which are composed mostly of the aboriginal Indians. Society is divided into two main classes: Aristocracy and Democracy; the two being distinguished by the dress. The former adhere strictly to the Parisian fashions, while the latter has a peculiar and uniform attire, that of the men being home-spun trousers, sometimes a vest, the "alpar-gate"—a low shoe made of native hemp, or else sandals—and always the "roana." This is a square piece of cloth, hemmed all around, with an opening or slit at the centre, through which the head is put through, the whole garment thus remaining suspended by the shoulders and hanging loose about the body, below the waist. The hat accompanying the roana is the invariable Panama, or Indian woven straw. A good servative party, once told the writer that, "even the Lord Jesus Christ spoke the Spanish language, since all other languages were those of the heretics." As the name "Conservative" implies, the party bearing it wishes nothing new; this extreme abhorrence of the new, would cause them to oppose and persecute foreigners within their jurisdiction, were it not for the predominant characteristic of the Latin race, well described by the words "courtesy," and "hospitality"; observing this principle, the Conservative party tolerates foreign subjects, though keeping aloof from them. The Conservatives' idea of education is, being well versed in the catechism of their Church, as approved by the Roman Pontiff.

"MARKET DAY" IN A COLOMBIAN COUNTRY TOWN

During the administration of the Liberals, previous to the overthrowing of 1884, they had founded a very fine university for public instruction, patterned after the best European institutions, and known as the Colombian University. As soon as the Conservative party assumed the control of the government, the university was turned into a semi-religious institution, under the jurisdiction of the Jesuits. The Liberal party is composed of the most progressive Roman Catholics as well as members of the Protestant Churches, Free Thinkers, etc. Their main idea is "Progress," hence the introduction of all modern ideas. Absolute freedom is one of their important tenets; also freedom of speech, press, thought, religion, etc.; this freedom being under the supervision of the law, with a view to proper regulation.

Previous to the existence of the United States of Colombia, the country was an incipient republic known as the "Republic of New Granada," the period of its existence being from the year of its independence from Spain, in 1819, to its merging into the United States of Colombia in 1863. Originally, the Republic of New Granada was composed of the territory occupied to-day by the three distinct countries known as Ecuador, Venezuela and Colombia; the separation having taken place in the year 1829. That portion of the New World known as New Granada was a colony of Spain, from ancient times. The name proceeded from the feudal States of Granada in Spain. The name "Granada" is the Spanish for pomegranate, and this is the reason why the coat-of-arms of Colombia has the picture of a pomegranate. Over the pomegranate the eagle stretches its wings, as em-

ENTRANCE TO PRESIDENT'S PALACE, BOGOTA

A BUSINESS STREET IN BOGOTA

FLORIAN STREET, THE PRINCIPAL THOROUGHFARE IN BOGOTÁ

A COLOMBIAN TOWN IN THE "HOT LANDS," NEAR THE ISTHMUS

Panama hat can be bought for half a dollar, guaranteed to last for many years. The women of the lower classes dress in calico and blue flannel, with highly embroidered shirts, without sleeves, over which, for street wear is placed the mantilla, made of inferior blue flannel. The mantilla is the characteristic and renowned Spanish veil, worn by ladies in all ranks of society, differing in the costliness of material, according to the social standing of the wearer. The veil known as mantilla is black, and worn over the head, partly concealing the face, and shawl-like fashion, hanging and enveloping the body below the waist. Only the women of the lower classes are supposed to wear a hat in the streets or public places, except on special occasions, when the ladies of the aristocracy wear Parisian hats fully up to date, for dress purposes. The hat of the women of the lower classes is plain straw, generally of Indian weave, very inferior, and without any trimmings.

Colombia has, for generations, copied after a French civilization; everything French predominates, except in architecture.

Carriages are scarce and little used, the chief means of travel and transportation being by horse, mule, ox and donkey's back; everybody, whether man, woman or child, is supposed to know how to ride on horseback. The streets of the towns and cities are not all well adapted for the traffic of wagons. The peon, a useful individual, generally of Indian origin, and always a member of the lower classes, stands on the corners of the streets with a stout rope, awaiting orders, as the expressman does in the United States. The peon and his rope accomplish great things; they carry merchandise, move household goods, transport trunks, pianos, etc., etc. Through the mountain roads—rather trails—all conveyance is done by peon and mule-back; in this way, hundreds of heavy pianos and organs have been carried to the interior of the country, from the headwaters of the Magdalena River. Along the beautiful roads in the interior, the heavy transportation is accomplished by means of the two-wheeled cart and team of oxen.

Bogotá, the capital of Colombia, has been called "the city of pianos," because of the great number of them—nearly every household of the aristocracy having one or more. The people are very fond of music. The word "Bogotá," is of Indian origin; the accent being marked in the writing, and pronounced over the last syllable. On account of the prevalence of earthquakes, coupled with the rudimentary ideas of the country, nearly all buildings, whether public or private, are built of only one story. On this account, the area of cities and towns is always extensive. The street car system is inferior and also rudimentary. There are no frame buildings in Colombia; everything is brick, stone, clay or concrete; roofs are invariably of either of two kinds, tile or thatch (straw). The cemetery system is after the old Roman plan of vaults; no ground burying is done, except by foreign residents. There are no grocery stores, as in the United States; all such commodities are sold at "The Market." The market of each town is held once a week at the principal square; except at Bogotá, where there is a fine market-place—a public property kept by the city. It is in running order every day of the week, but chiefly on Fridays. At such markets, the eye is delighted by the great profusion of every conceivable product of the country, and by the variety of fruits and vegetables at all times of the year. Fruits of many varieties grow in great profusion, mostly wild; five cents will buy a bushel of choice oranges or a good-sized bunch of bananas; pineapples and cocoanuts can be had for the asking, except tieth century. But the true facts are not well-known, and on the contrary, much speculation and confusion has arisen. Therefore, during the last few years, a great deal has been said by the press of the world about the frequent "insurrections of the insurgents." This sweeping statement has been decidedly unjust, since the facts of the case are that the Liberal party, upholders of the former nation known as The United States of Colombia, and overthrown by treachery in 1885, has been since then, endeavoring to restore the government. The reported insurrections should have been designated by an inverse expression; that is, "The people against the usurping Insurgents." The movement, properly, should have had the support and sympathy of the civilized world.

The overthrow of the government in 1885 was caused, not by bravery or strength of arms, but by the cunning deceit of ambitious and unscrupulous politicians. The movement and its outcome had been feared and clearly foretold by the people. In a letter, still extant, written twenty years ago by a member of the Liberal party, he pictured, as if by prophetic insight, the actual condition of affairs to-day. Among other things, this curious document reads as follows:

The country grows worse and worse, and a monetary crisis is about to overtake us, on account of a growing misgovernment of the nation. There appears to be grave danger that the ill-fated Nunez may come into power, which event would be not only the ruin of the country and of the Liberal party, but even the loss of our existence as a nation; to a certainty he will sell us, like unto a flock of sheep, to which they compare us. We will be sold beginning with Panama, because the selling of slaves seems to be the proper movement in this Christian era. Nevertheless, there are persons of weight and good understanding, who believe the nation will never allow such an ignominy, but that war, that blackest of human calamities, worse than the Asiatic cholera, will restore the fortunes of the country. The nation finds itself in an abnormal and unbearable condition, in which it is impossible long to remain.

These predictions have been literally fulfilled in the accession of Nunez to power; the coming of war, and the dismembering of the Union. As soon as Rafael Nunez gained control of the government of the United States of Colombia, in 1884, he sold himself to the Conservative party, as the highest bidder; subsequently he bought the standing army, and declared himself dictator, ruling under the pseudonym of a republic. This state of affairs continued until his death. Had it not been because of this incident, Panama would never have seceded from the Union; the Canal Treaty would have been ratified long ago; the national debt would not have been the discredit that it is to-day, and the most cordial relations would have existed between Colombia and the United States of America.

The present brave and progressive attitude assumed by Panama, and its eagerness to reconcile the United States, are a true index of the real sentiments of the people of Colombia.

FEDERAL BUILDING OR CITY HALL, FRONTING BOLIVAR SQUARE, BOGOTÁ.

at the city's market-place; but, even there, prices are very low.

There is no snow in Colombia; in fact it is not known. The temperature of Bogotá averages sixty degrees Fahrenheit throughout the year. A peculiar freak of the country is that within the slow traveling of one day by mule-back, every possible climate or degree of heat, from forty degrees upward, can be obtained; the country is thus divided for convenience into "cold lands" and "hot lands." The vegetation changes accordingly, this peculiar susceptibility of change being due to the mountainous nature of the country, together with the proximity to the ocean.

Within the last few years, public parks have been laid out in the capital of Colombia, but previous to that the only thing in existence, answering the purpose, was the well known public or town square, peculiar to all Latin countries.

In most of these public squares is found the public fountain, which is the water supply for the town or city. In the case of Bogotá, there are several of such squares with their respective fountains, and to these fountains the women go with large water jugs over their heads, for the daily family supply; all such service of course being rendered by "the servants." Each family, however poor, is supposed to have servants in abundance, for all purposes, it being considered below the dignity of the members of the higher classes to perform any manual tasks. Owing to this perverted idea of dignity, the commonwealth at large bears the stamp of shiftlessness and poverty. Corresponding to the primitive water system of the water-carrier at the public fountain, is the sewerage system. It consists, on a surface drainage, of constantly running water in every street. These miniature canals are by no means sanitary, and often obnoxious in their contents, nevertheless, on the whole, they give the city a picturesque appearance, with the constant sound of rippling brooks.

On his deathbed, Simon Bolivar, the liberator of South America from Spanish oppression, prophesied that the nations of South America, and chiefly New Granada, would so degenerate and become so contemptible, that even Europe would not deign to conquer them. The prophecy has become true, and is being verified in this dawning of the twen-

THE CATHEDRAL, BOLIVAR SQUARE, BOGOTÁ

A TYPICAL COLOMBIAN CEMETERY

TWO HANDS AND GRANNY

A New Year's Fairy Story

ONCE upon a time a little boy lived in the Thuringer Wald, alone with his grandmother, and she was very old and very poor. They had a little hut, very brown from the weather, and plenty of wood for the fire in a huge stone chimney. This fire was not to warm them only, though Ulrich, the little boy, used to like to lie on a bear-skin before it and thrust his brown, bare feet so near it that they tingled with the heat. The fire was to keep the pot boiling that swung by a hook above the flame. It was a very jolly pot, round and black and shiny, and it did its best to please all the senses of the boy. It always looked kindly at him when he came in cold from gathering fuel in the forest; it tried to sing to him, and succeeded in humming and sputtering and bubbling quite a tune. Sometimes the cover bobbed up and down, and kept time to the tune, which seemed to say:

"Heigh ho! got a good supper! Sup, sup—got a good supper!" And when its song was true, it pleased Ulrich's sense of taste as well as that of sight and smell, and many a savory stew it gave him made of wild rabbit's flesh; and always it bubbled and sputtered and sang:

"Porridge, porridge! there's a little more porridge," even when they had no meat.

But there came a day, it was the last day of the year, when the pot bubbled, and scolded, and fussed, and Ulrich thought as he came in wet and hungry, that it was trying to say:

"Something very good, something very good," when in truth it was sighing, "Nothing very good, nothing very good," all the while. Then Ulrich peeped in, and lo! there was nothing at all in the pot but water.

"Is there no meal in the chest, Granny?"

"Not a handful, Ulrich."

"And is there no money in the bag, Granny?"

"Not a groat, Ulrich. The carpet-weaver did not pay me for the last rug I made."

"I will go down the mountain and ask him," said Ulrich, putting on his sheep-skin coat.

"Not to-night, Ulrich," said Granny. "The storm is too wild; the stream will be a torrent. I should be too anxious about you, and you must wait till the morning."

"But you have no supper, Granny."

"There is left half a loaf, and there is milk from the goat. It is enough, and if the storm continues the fairies will bring us enough to last till it goes by."

Ulrich laughed as he took off his coat and threw himself before the fire. "I should like to see the fairies once, Granny. You have always been telling me about them, but I think the only fairies that ever helped us are three, and I know their names."

"What are they?" asked Granny, pleased to divert him from his hunger.

"Right Hand, left Hand, and Granny. The third fairy is the best of all," and he smiled up into the kind old face, as he went to and fro, laying the cloth as neatly as if they had a feast instead of a bit of bread.

"But the Granny would have been a poor enough fairy if it had not been for your own two young, strong hands. Never mind, boy, some day those two fairies will take care of the old one."

"That they shall," said Ulrich, sipping his goat's milk and leaving most of the bread.

"Eat, boy, eat!" said the old woman, pushing the loaf toward him.

"Not I, Granny. Do I need bread to sleep on? Tomorrow I go down the mountain, and I shall need it then for strength," and he put more logs upon the fire, and lay down on the hearth to watch the flames and the shadow, as he liked to do before he went to bed.

As he lay there Granny went to sleep and began to snore; the fire began to fade, and the room to grow dark, when suddenly Ulrich's attention was drawn to the pot, which gently swung above the dying coals. As he gazed he saw the lid gently lifted, and two shining eyes peered at him from within. Too frightened to speak, he stared while the eyes twinkled kindly, and the pot-lid lifted itself and rose till it rested an inch or two above the rim. When it suddenly looked no longer like a rim, but like a hat, which made a sort of background for a woman's lovely head—the head to which the shining eyes belonged, and which rose higher and higher, bearing the cover with it into the air. After this head came smooth, white arms, not yellow and wrinkled, and scrawny and begrimed with work like Granny's, but beautiful arms and white hands, that took the poker from the corner, and he saw it change under her touch into a silvery wand, with which she pointed to the door of the hut.

So bewildered and delighted was the little mountaineer with the delightful vision that he would not turn his head to see to what she pointed with the wand, but he held his breath and bent his attention to hear what she seemed to be saying, for her rosy lips kept smiling and moving, as if in speech.

At last he drew nearer. The round, black pot was now all hidden by the gray, mist-like drapery that wrapped the lovely figure, while golden slippers shone through the gray ashes on the hearth. As he crept near, he distinctly heard a sweet voice say:

"I am the queen of good fairies, and I like the two fairies that you use to keep you on in life. Right Hand and Left Hand are strong, good fairies, and, both together, they can do wonderful work for me; for all my fairies work to help themselves, and then to help all others who are in trouble or pain. Will you let your two hands work for me?" and Ulrich, who had never dreamed of anything so lovely in his life as this beautiful figure and face, stretched out both his hands as if to offer them to the service of his Queen.

"Remember, then, that the best way to serve me and yourself is never to lose a chance to serve others," and, suddenly lifting her wand and pointing to the door of the hut, she said:

"Open! Open the door!"

Springing forward suddenly to obey her, Ulrich awoke

"I am a rich merchant, Ulrich," he said with his hand upon the latch. He had been dreaming, but again through his head rang that cry:

"Open, for pity's sake, open the door."

He threw it back, and there staggered, fainting, across the threshold, the snow-covered figure of a man. Ulrich helped him to the fire, took off his cloak, brushed the snow from his hair, and hurried to bring him the cup of milk and the last morsel of bread. Soon the traveler was sufficiently recovered to explain that pressing business had taken him over the mountain, but that the bridge was destroyed over the swollen torrent, and he had lost himself in the snow. "In trying to find another place to cross, I saw the light through your window," he said, "and I made my way to your step, where I should have frozen to death if you had not heard me beg you to open the door. I called a great many times."

"I was dreaming," said Ulrich, "and I heard your voice in my dreams."

"And what were you dreaming?" asked the man who was now seated, warmed and comfortable, before the fire.

"Of the fairies," answered Ulrich, blushing, and then, with a little coaxing he told the stranger of his little talk with Granny, and his dream of the Fairy Queen who hid in the empty pot, and before Ulrich finished, the man had guessed the story that he did not tell how often the pot was empty, and how often granny and Ulrich went supperless to bed. The next morning, Ulrich guided the stranger to the ford, and went with him down the snowy mountain path, often supporting the weary man by his two strong young hands. Not a word had either said of breakfast, but Granny had slipped in Ulrich's pocket the last little crust left the night before, and when he found it there he blushed, and offered it to the man.

"No, no, my son!" said the stranger, kindly, "when we get to the village, we will go to the inn and see what the fairies have provided in the way of a smoking breakfast. I should not wonder if they had left a basket of something there for you to take back to your grandmother."

Thus satisfied about Granny, Ulrich went on, his mouth watering at the prospect of something savory and smoking hot.

And while they sat at breakfast, at which the landlord himself waited upon them, as if his guest was a very great man, the stranger said:

"I am a rich merchant, Ulrich, and since my wife and my only boy died, I have lived in the city alone. I should like to have a good boy about me, and I want the attention and care of two kind fairies, Right and Left Hands. Tell Granny that if she will come and keep the house for me, you shall come and help me in my business, and I will teach you how to do all parts of it, as I was going to teach my son. Take these pieces of gold to her for your journey. I know the Queen of the Fairies, too," he added, laughing; as Ulrich gazed at him, and then at the round gold pieces, in wide-eyed wonder; "and she wants your two hands to be used for me."

I have no space to tell you more of Ulrich's life, only you may be pretty sure he went climbing up to his mountain home as glad and happy as ever a boy could be. Of course, they gave the goat to a poor woman in the village, and locked the cabin door, and went to the great town; only there was one thing that Granny would not leave behind, and that was the old porridge pot that had always fed her boy. And Ulrich was very glad to have it go, too, and when he grew up to be a prosperous and happy young man, and had a share in his master's business, he used sometimes to coax his aged grandmother to make him a savory stew in the pot that he always called the pot of the Fairy Queen.

MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

BEAR IN MIND

THE following are the Premium propositions in connection with annual subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for this season.

1. The Red Letter Bible, Authorized Version, in large, clear print, with all the words spoken by our Lord and every reference made by Him to the Old Testament, printed in Red, and every Messianic Prophecy emphasized by a Red Star, with Helps and Maps, bound in American Levant, Overlapping Edges, Lined to Edge, Red under Gold, and patented Movable Book-Mark, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $3.

2. The International Teachers' Bible, in Long Primer type, with Helps and Maps, Leather Lined, Thumb Indexed, Revised or Authorized Version (when ordering state which), with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $3.

3. The International Teachers' Bible, same as No. 2, but without Leather Lining or Index, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $2.

4. The Red Letter New Testament, with all the words spoken by our Lord printed in Red, beautifully bound in Divinity Circuit, Overlapping Edges, Red under Gold, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, for $1.85.

5. The Crown Encyclopedia, five substantial volumes, 3,008 pages, large type, 500 illustrations, 96 Colored Maps—everything up to November, 1903—bound in Vellum de Luxe cloth, with genuine Gold Stamp (will never tarnish), boxed and delivered, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $3.

6. How I Worked My Way Around the World, by Harry Steele Morrison, 408 large pages, when open 9 x 15 inches, Beautifully Illustrated, richly Bound in Cloth, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, at $2.

7. Pilgrim's Progress, by John Bunyan, Red Line Edition, splendid for presentation, Profusely Illustrated, Superbly Bound and exquisitely printed in two colors, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $2.

8. The Speaking Oak, by Dr. F. C. Iglehart, containing 301 Tales of Life, Love and Achievement, same size as Nos. 6 and 7 (30,000 copies already sold), Elegantly Bound, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, $2.

9. Magazine Combinations—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with any one of the following dollar magazines at $2; with any two at $2.50, and with any three at $3. Look over the list and make your choice: Harper's Bazar, Leslie's Popular Monthly, Pearson's, Success, Cosmopolitan, Woman's Home Companion, Little Folks, Watchword and Truth, Record of Christian Work, or Current Anecdotes, for Pastors.

Extra copies of the Red Letter Bible, $2; of the Leather-Lined International Bibles, $2; of the Red Letter New Testament, $1; of Pilgrim's Progress, or How I Worked My Way Around the World, or The Speaking Oak, $1 each. Extra magazines, 50 cents each.

A subscriber may take as many premiums, whether books or magazines, as he pleases.

All premiums are sent all charges prepaid. Our beautiful 15-color Butterfly Calendar for 1904 and 1905 goes free with every subscription. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

Monumental Benevolences of 1903

By GEORGE J. HAGAR

THE benefactions of citizens of the United States, by gift and bequest, during the past year reached the extraordinary aggregate of $90,200,000. These were purely individual gifts, and do not include public appropriations, denominational or missionary contributions, items of less than $5,000 in money or value, or a number of costly buildings of unreported value. Incomplete gifts, bequests not yet available, and pledges payable during 1904, would swell the aggregate to more than $90,000,000; and if denominational, missionary, and other collective benefactions were included, there would be the enormous total of about $95,000,000.

More than $65,660,000 of the aggregate reported was from nineteen persons; more than $87,200,000 represented gifts and bequests of $25,000 each and upward; and more than $1,900,000 was made in sums ranging from $5,000 to $25,000.

Gifts of $25,000 and Upward

The following are the principal gifts and bequests having a value of more than $25,000 each.

Ageley, H. C., Minneapolis, gift to the town of Stowe, Vt., a Soldiers' Memorial Building, cost $50,000.
Aiken, Albert J., New York, bequest for endowment of library at Pawling, N. Y., $100,000.
Ames, Rebecca C., Taunton, Mass., to Harvard University, $50,000; Unity Church, North Easton, $10,000; the Massachusetts General Hospital and Boston Home for Incurables, each $5,000.
Anderson, Mrs. Elizabeth, Milbank, New York, to Barnard College for additional land, $1,000,000; supplementing previous gifts of more than $3,000,000.
Appley, Mrs. Cornelia Day Wilder, St. Paul, Minn., to the city, for the poor, the bulk of her estate of $3,000,000.
Armour, J. Ogden, Chicago, to Armour Institute of Technology, $150,000, and St. Joseph's Hospital, Omaha, for Chair of Orthopedic Surgery, $100,000.
Ayer, Frederic Fanning, New York, to the Lowell (Mass.) Textile College, $100,000; Lowell General Hospital endowment, $105,000.
Ballantyne, Mrs. Hettie F., Pittsburg, to Allegheny College, for scholarships, $30,000.
Banker, Mrs. Ellen Josephine, Larytown, N. Y., to Bloomingdale Asylum, $25,000, and Columbia University, $10,000.
Baylis, Charles S., New York, to educational and benevolent institutions in Brooklyn Borough, $48,500.
Beardsley, Rev. Bronson, Bridgeport, Conn., for a Home for Aged and Indigent Couples, $50,000; other benefactions, $40,000.
Beiger, Martin V., South Bend, Ind., to De Pauw University, $120,000, and Chautauqua Assembly, $50,000.
Bennett, Philo S., New Haven, bequests to William J. Bryan and wife, to be divided by them among educational institutions and deserving students wishing a college education, $50,000; to various local institutions, $24,000; and to his widow in trust, $50,000. The widow was directed by a sealed letter to pay the amount to Mr. Bryan, but the letter was excluded from probate, whereupon Mr. Bryan, executor of the will, appealed to the Superior Court.
Borden, Jacob C., Paterson, N. J., to the Hackensack (N. J.) Hospital, the bulk of his estate of from $50,000 to $100,000; contested.
Bevier, Susan, New York, to the Rochester (N.Y.) Athenaeum and Mechanics' Institute, $50,000; other institutions, $10,000.
Billings, Robert Charles, Boston, paid by estate to the Boston Public Library, $100,000.
Blair, Dewitt Clinton, Blairstown, N. J., gift to Blair Hall, $40,000.
Boston University, gift from friend (name withheld) for purchase of additional ground, $100,000.
Boyd, George W., Portland, Me., to institutions in Boston, Portland, Dorchester, and New York, including $70,000 to All Saints' Church, Dorchester, a total of $250,000.
Brooklyn, N. Y., Rapid Transit Company, gift to its employees, a thoroughly equipped club-house and technical school, cost $40,000.
Brown, George H., Brooklyn, N. Y., to the Methodist Episcopal Church Home for the Aged and Infirm, Brooklyn Eastern District Hospital and Dispensary, and Eastern District Industrial School, each $25,000.
Bruce, Robert M., Greenwich, Conn., to the town, a town hall, cost $200,000.
Campbell, Mrs. Helen T., Brooklyn, N. Y., to Newsboys' and Bootblacks' Home in Buffalo, N.Y., and to Church Charity Foundation of Buffalo, for a memorial to her father, each $50,000.
Carnegie, Andrew, New York, gifts to the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg, $3,250,000; Philadelphia, for branch libraries, $1,500,000; Washington, D. C., for libraries, $700,000; Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, $600,000; Carnegie Museum, Pittsburg, the De Bevet fossils, cost $250,000; various educational institutions, an aggregate of $775,000; and to eighty other cities and towns, for libraries, ranging from $10,000 to $250,000 each, $1,588,500. He gave, $4,000,000 as a perpetual fund in aid of workmen injured in the Carnegie plants. For purposes outside of the United States he gave $5,000,000 for a system of scientific research in Scotland; $1,750,000 for a "Temple of Peace," and an international law library for the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague; $350,000 for a library in Toronto, Canada, and $115,000 for libraries elsewhere. The total of the gifts enumerated is $19,878,500.
Chase, Chas., Manchester, N.H., to the Elliot Hospital, Children's Home, and Woman's Aid Home, each $10,000; other charitable purposes $0,000.
Chittenden, Charles M., New York, to the Presbyterian Hospital and the Home for Incurables, each $35,000.
Clapp, Edwin, East Weymouth, Mass., gift to the local Y. M. C. A., the Davis Clapp Memorial Building, cost $125,000.

Clark, Jonas G., Worcester, Mass. (died in 1900), to Clark University, which he founded, his residuary estate inventoried in 1903 at about $2,000,000.
Clinch, Mrs. Elizabeth L. W., Savannah, to six educational and benevolent institutions in Georgia, the reversion of $50,000 each.
Colgate, James B., New York, gift to Colgate University for its endowment fund, $100,000.
Columbia University, gift from a friend (name withheld), for a university chapel, from $100,000 to $200,000 as needed.
Conant, Hezekiah, Central Falls, R. I., to Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass., $50,000; the Pawtucket Congregational Church, $5,000.
Corbett, Henry W., Portland, Ore., to local art, charitable, and religious organizations, an aggregate of $205,000.
Corbin, Chester C., Webster, Mass., to Methodist institutions, $38,000.
Davis, Alexander H., New York, gift to the city of Louisville, Ky., to aid it to purchase Central Park there for a public resort, $110,000.
Davis, Henry G., Elkins, W. Va., gift to the city, the Elkins Memorial Hospital, cost $80,000.
Dodge, Marcellus Hartley, New York, gift to Columbia University, a dormitory, Hartley Hall, cost $300,000.
Drake, Francis Marion, Des Moines, Ia., gift to Drake University, $25,000, and bequest to the same, $50,000.
Dusey, Mrs. Elizabeth, Washington, D. C., bequest to Union Theological Seminary, $30,000.
Dwight, Edmund Parsons, Philadelphia, bequests to Presbyterian, Protestant Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, Baptist and two non-sectarian institutions, an aggregate of $200,000.
Eddy, Mrs. Mary Baker Glover, Concord, N. H., gift to the Christian Scientists of that city, a church edifice, cost $100,000.
Elkin, Lewis, Philadelphia, bequest to his executors for an annuity fund for disabled women teachers from the public schools, an amount proved in the Orphans' Court at $1,808,402.
Elkins, William L., Philadelphia, bequest for a home for orphaned daughters of Freemasons, ground and $250,000; bequest declared invalid, but will be carried out by his heirs.
Foster, Lafayette Sabine, Norwich, Conn. (died in 1880), bequest made available by the death of his widow, to Yale University, $60,000.
Foster, Richard W., Clinton, Mass., bequests to Harvard University, $25,000; to missionary, hospital, and other institutions, $40,000; and, conditionally, to the town of Clinton for the erection and support of a club-house for the employees of the mills and factories and the other citizens of the town, the residue of his large estate.
Fuller, Robert O., Cambridge, Mass., bequests to the American Baptist Missionary Union and the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, each $10,000; other Baptist institutions, $12,500.
Gerry, Elbridge T., New York, gift to the Church of St. Edward the Martyr, an altar, reredos, and other furnishings, cost $35,000.
Gracie, James King, Mineola, N. Y., bequest to the Orthopedic Dispensary and Hospital of New York, $30,000.
Grennell, George G., New York, bequest to the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, $200,000.
Griffith, Silas L., Danby, Vt., bequest for a public library, $50,000.
Guggenheim, J. R., New York, gift to the Montefiore Home for Chronic Invalids, $50,000.
Gutau, Frederick W., Irvington, N. Y., bequests to Cornell University, $100,000 and his residuary estate, believed to be more than $1,000,000.
Hackley, Mrs. Frances, New York, gift to the Settlement Home of the Friendly Aid Society, for a kindergarten department, $35,000.
Halls, Mrs. William, Jr., Brooklyn, N. Y., gift to the Seney Hospital, $125,000.
Hjalstead, John, New York, bequest to Cooper Union, $175,000.
Hammond, John Hays, New York, gift to the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, for a mining laboratory, $50,000.
Hanna, H. Melville, Cleveland, gift to the Western Reserve University, for a Chair of Anatomy in the Medical School, $100,000.
Harrison, Sarah B., Brattleboro, Vt., bequests to Yale University, $100,000 and the New Haven Hospital, $30,000.
Harvard University, gifts from Class of 1879, for superstructure of the Stadium, $100,000; Athletic Committee, for foundation and ground work of the same, $75,000; Class of '01, for an Infants' Hospital, in connection with the Medical School, $136,000; and from friends (names withheld), for the Emerson Hall of Philosophy, $150,000; for a University Club-House, $200,000; for an Architectural Building, $200,000, and for a new Lecture Hall, $75,000.
Hecht, Jacob H., Boston, bequests to public and Jewish charitable institutions, $146,200.
Holder, Frank T., Yonkers, N. Y., gift to the Clinton (Mass.) Historical Society, a memorial building, cost $50,000.
Howland, Edward, Little Compton, R. I., bequest to the Monthly Meeting of the Society of Friends at Dartmouth, $250,000.
Howe, Jubal, Shrewsbury, Mass. (died in 1872), bequest, made available by the death of his daughter, for a public library, $30,000, and endowment, $25,000.
Hoyt, Ezra P., New York, bequests to religious organizations, $125,000, and for a memorial hospital in British India, $100,000.
Hubbell, Frederick M. and wife, Des Moines, joint gift to trustees and their successors, for the establishment and support of a college in that city, property valued at $5,000,000, which must be left to accumulate for eighty years.
Iselin, Adrian, New York, gift to the Italian Catholics of New Rochelle, N. Y., a church building and furnished rectory, cost $30,000.
Jacob, Elias, Visalia, Cal., bequest to aid graduates of universities and technical schools in the State who settle on his property in Tulare County, $915,000.
James, Dr. Bushrod W., Philadelphia, bequests to the city for a free eye and ear institute, real estate and $55,000, and for a free public library of books for children, the aged and the blind, real estate, books, and $40,000, to Oakland, Cal., land for a public park; to Coronado, Cal., land for erection and support of an institute for young people; and to the American Temperance University, Harriman, Tenn., land and $5,000 for a school of domestic science.

GOOD CAUSES HELPED

Bethesda Home P D Eychenmer 5 00 L M N. Cynthia, O. 5 00	Pundita Ramabai Leon, Ia. 1 00 I H N. Beverly, Mass 2 00
Any Good Cause O C Peterson 50 Mrs D F McLennon 3 00 J M Campbell 50 John Musil 10 H W Meier 2 00 Lyman Hutchinson 2 00 Mrs M g t Scilgore 50 M F Jones 20 Mrs S Utterback 25 Mrs A Deeds 50 P J Amick 1 00 Harriet W Winslow 1 00 Catherine Eberhardt 1 50 Mrs I L Spaulding 50 Chas M Kellogg 50	Famine Cape Verde Isl. C A Hagaman 5 04
Dutch Leper Colony D Matty 10 00 Reader of C H, Ha- zleton, Pa 1 00 L A Holleman 50	Hull House, Chicago Gray's Lake, Ill 3 00 Mrs Geo A Raymond 5 00 James Davis 1 25 B J & A C S. Gable- ton, Pa 2 50 Mrs C J MacDonald 2 50 Bennettsville, S C 2 50
Door of Hope Mr & Mrs G C Har- rington 3 00	The White Door Mrs Gray's Lake, Ill 3 35 Mrs Geo A Raymond 5 00 James Davis 1 25 B J & A C S. Gable- ton, Pa 2 50 Mrs C J MacDonald 2 50 Bennettsville, S C 2 50
E. Hubbard, Cuba S E Hough 50	Steele Orphanage Mrs Geo Raymond 5 00
Foreign Missions Mrs Thos Russell 50 Clara M Burchard 25 Peter Nickles (Bishop Thoburn) 5 00 Miss Emma M Day 1 00	Rev. N. Zamora, P. I. S F Hough 50
Span.-Amer.Gospel Fd. Robert R Fritsch 3 00 Mrs R Varian 25	King's Daughters' Set. Mrs Geo A Raymond 10 00
Miss Keskar Zanesville, O 1 00 Geo F Gamble 10 00 Wm DePre 5 00 Mary Rankin 5 00 C W Johnson 2 00 Chas Phillips 9 00	Mrs. Bird Mrs Fred James 50 Mrs Theo G Emory 5 00
Mayesville Institute I H N. Beverly, Mass. 2 00	E.Olsson's Mission Wk. H Farnsworth 2 00 Jos Bignall 5 00 Mary J White 1 00
Miss Shattuck Cong'l Church, Mass 36 00 Frances B Wells 35 00 Geo E King 60 10	Rev.E.H.Richards, Af'a E B Larkin 5 00 Kate Dorr 15 00 Mrs Jno Dorr 15 00
Soc. of Soul Winners Mrs Geo A Raymond 5 00 Mrs E J Farnsworth 5 00 S E Hough 25 Mrs F H Wilcox 1 00 C F Myrick 5 00	Miss Nason's Work Miss H R Towne 10 00
Volunteers of America C E Myrick 5 00	Jamaica Sufferers Alfred Baer 1 50 N M Sommeville 1 75
Jerry McAuley Mission Mrs E J Farnsworth 1 00 Mrs Jas Grover 1 00 Mrs Frank Heiskell 2 00	A. S. S. Missionary Mrs H M Seiler 50
Society of Anti-Vice Henry S Rutherford 1 00 L Macklin, Jr 10 00 A Friend, Ariel, Pa. 5 00	School for Syrian Girls I H N. Beverly, Mass 2 00
	Beulah Land Co'wealth E Grugan 3 00
	Porto Rican S. Sch. Rudolph Gerber 2 00
	Kurn Hattin Home W H Ramsdell 5 00

The Senate's New Chaplain

THE United States Senate has elected a new chaplain. There were nearly a score of candidates in the field, and a spirited contest was in prospect, when Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, suggested the name of Dr. Edward Everett Hale. All other candidates were immediately withdrawn, and in compliment to his distinguished career, Dr. Hale's nomination was made unanimous. Dr. Hale's election will take effect January 1, 1904. Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, of Washington, who was elected chaplain of the extraordinary session, was not a candidate for the permanent appointment, at his request.
Dr. Edward Everett Hale was born in Boston, Mass., April 3, 1822. He is the son of Nathan Hale and a great-nephew of Captain Nathan Hale, the patriot of the Revolution. Dr. Hale is named after his uncle, Edward Everett, and followed in his mother's steps in the direction of literature and education even in his very early years. His career as a Christian minister began with his licensure in 1842. In 1846, he went to Worcester, and in 1856 he returned to his native city, Boston; and not until 1900 did he give up the pastorate of the South Congregational (Unitarian) Church or cease preaching weekly. Of this church he is still pastor emeritus. He is, however, better known as a writer and orator than as a preacher. In 1863, his masterpiece, A Man Without a Country, appeared, and proved that America had a short story writer of the first rank. Whether as lecturer before lyceums, historical societies, Chautauqua assemblies, or bodies of college students and school pupils, or as formal orator on State occasions, or as after-dinner speaker, Dr. Hale has always been popular. As an antiquarian, versed in the beginnings of history on the American continent, in the settlement and development of Boston and New England, Dr. Hale has had a notable career as investigator and popularizer of historical information.

A Much-Prized Premium

Dear "Christian Herald":—The new Red Letter Bible arrived, and I am well pleased with it. I prize THE CHRISTIAN HERALD next to my Bible. It is looked for every week like a friend to visit. Wishing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and all its workers a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.
MRS. MARY J. APLEGATE.

How Christ's Kingdom Began * Baptism and Temptation of Jesus

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JAN. 17
MATT. 3: 13; 4: 11

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT--MATT. 3: 17: AND LO A VOICE FROM HEAVEN SAYING:
"THIS IS MY BELOVED SON, IN WHOM I AM WELL PLEASED"

THE devil hands in his business card:

Going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it. SATAN.

"Upon what errand have you come here?" He replies: "The Son of God, Jesus Christ, is the shining mark, that I would bring low." Satan has carefully chosen his time. Not on that day when Jesus came to the Jordan to be baptized of John. "No," he says, "but I was there. I saw the Son of God come to John. Certainly no less a devil than myself would ever have thought of making any headway with one whose very face was so benign and true. I had come to where John was baptizing as the especial guard of the Pharisees and Sadducees, for I had some fear that John, by his eloquence, might win them from me. I had been near enough to John to hear him call my special favorites a 'generation of vipers.' I was still at hand, when Jesus came to John and asked to be baptized. I heard John reply, 'I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?' I heard Jesus answer, 'Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness.' 'Clearly this is not my time, for the eyes of the multitude are upon him,' I said to myself. After he had been baptized, I saw the Spirit of God resting upon him. 'Neither is this my time,' said I, 'for the Spirit would give him power to resist me.' I saw him turn and leave the multitude and go away alone. 'I will follow on, for my time is approaching,' I said. He sought the wilderness of Judea, far from the habitations of men. I felt sure the exaltation which he had received at his baptism would be followed by depression of spirit when he should be alone."

Illustration and Application

The baptism and temptation of Jesus seem as unlike as noon and midnight, as sunlit mountain top and shadowed valley; but one great truth underlies both, namely, that by spiritual power, not by empty religious forms or military force, the Kingdom of Christ must be inaugurated. It must begin in individual convictions, though it will at last emerge in Christian institutions. "My Kingdom is not of this world," must be the watchword of its inauguration; although the watchword of its consummation, already developing, will be "The Kingdom of this world is becoming the Kingdom of our Lord" (Rev. 11: 15).

Baptism is the oath of loyalty by which new citizens of Christ's Kingdom enter into it, as the very word sacrament should always remind us—for it comes from the Roman soldier's sacramentum, his oath of loyalty to a world-conquering empire.

The act of baptism is at once a promise and a prayer: a prayer that God will wash from the heart all the sin-marks of our previous allegiance to the devil's kingdom; a promise, on our part, that so far as our power goes, we will put away the devilish, and put on the Christly life. But, most of all, this first Christian baptism emphasizes the fact that baptism must be spiritual. Usually, in baptism, only the water is visible to man, while God alone sees the dove of the spiritual baptism, which the recipient may indeed feel. But, at the Jordan, the spiritual baptism of heavenly light and fire is made visible, that we may all see that a genuine Christian baptism must not be an empty form, but must cleanse the soul as well as the body. There are Protestants, who by their frantic haste to get a dying babe or man baptized, reveal that, to them, the act of baptism is no less a superstitious charm, than those who seek "holy water" from a priest. Let every child be taught that, on our part, baptism is an oath of allegiance to Christ, our King. This conception was in the mind of Emperor William, of Germany, when he thus addressed two of his boys recently, after they had been confirmed in the Lutheran Church:

"To-day, you have, so to speak, come of age in your beliefs. I speak intentionally, in the military sense, because, I assume that you also know the beautiful allegory in which the Christian is to be compared to the warrior. You will, of course, carry out what you have to-day so beautifully promised in your vows to your spiritual Master. With justice, you have emphasized the fact that you intend to be personages, which, in my opinion, is the point which most concerns the Christian in his daily life, for undoubtedly, we can say with comfort of the Saviour, that he was the most personal Personage who ever walked the earth among men." [He uses the word in the sense of manly men]. To be baptized, is to enlist in the army of Christ, with a view to being not only loyal to him, but like him.

On God's side, baptism is a sign of his bestowment of "the Sword of the Spirit," as our weapon for world conquest.

The temptation of Jesus teaches that same thing. It is a "touch of nature that makes the whole world kin," that Satan should have tempted Christ just after his spiritual exaltation in baptism. Christian experience shows that the very hours of greatest darkness are in the reaction that follows great spiritual ecstasies.

The three temptations, like fiery darts, were warded off by Christ with a single page of Deuteronomy. The very book of all the Old Testament that sceptics have most attacked, Christ used as a shield of Damascus steel. These words Christ had stored in his memory. Many have so escaped, by turning the point of temptation with a fitting text or a Bible truth turned into sacred song. A boy, whose Christian mother had reluctantly allowed him to go to sea, had been taught by her never to drink; but one of the sailors made a bet he would soon make him break his pledge. A few days later, he was asked, if he had succeeded. "No," he replied, "he is so chokefull of Bible, I can do nothing with him. Last night was rough, you know, and as we went on watch together, I said: 'This is a hard night, and we will need to hearten up a bit with the grog;' but he answered, finally: 'My mother taught me never to touch it; and the Bible says: Honor thy father and thy mother.' And whatever I said, he had a text to answer me, and so I gave it up."

Christ's three temptations: one to get bread, not by God's way, but by the devil's way; the second, to get popularity by the devil's way; the third, to get worldly goods by the same way, cover about the whole range of temptations, and show us how they may all be conquered. The story suggests that the very purest may be tempted, and that to feel the force of temptation, is not in itself sinful. That the shadow of the raven is thrown over us is not a sin, if we refuse him a rest in our hearts.

One day, after a Moody meeting for young men, one of them came to Mr. Moody, and said: "It's all right what you say, Mr. Moody, about impure thoughts, that they poison the mind. But one cannot keep them out, they come unbidden." "Yes," said Mr. Moody, "the crows come into the corn-field unbidden, but that's no reason why you should fat them and let them breed."

Browning writes of the why of temptation:

Why comes temptation, but for man to meet
And master, and make crouch beneath his feet,
And so be pedestalled in triumph?

THE TRADITIONAL SCENE OF THE BAPTISM OF JESUS

But as Jesus taught us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation," it is clearly our duty to avoid it so far as possible, and to remove needless temptation from the path of others, knowing that all will have more than enough temptation when all preventable moral perils are removed.

Christ's victory, at the same time, assures us that he is "able to succor them that are tempted," and we ought not to walk with anxious, trembling feet, but with the tread of assured conquest.

A man once asked an Eastern king if he could tell him how to avoid temptation. The king told the man to take a jug brimful of oil, and to carry it through the streets of the city without spilling one drop. "If one drop is spilt," said the king, "your head shall be cut off." And he ordered two executioners, with drawn swords, to walk behind the man, and to carry out his orders. There happened to be a fair going on in the town, and the streets were crowded with people. However, the man was very careful, and he returned to the king without having spilled one drop of the oil. Then the king asked: "Did you see any one whilst you were walking through the streets?" "No," said the man, "I was thinking only of the oil; I noticed nothing else." "I was thinking only of my head," he should have said. "Then," said the king, "you notice how to avoid temptation. Fix your mind as firmly on God, as you fixed it on the vessel of oil. You will not, then, be tempted to sin."

The illustration is not a good one. God is not an unreasonable King, but one who is near, not to terrorize but to sympathize, and we need not be so anxious about duty as to miss the wholesome joys about us.

As to temptations to do wrong for money, to which so many eminent and trusted men have yielded of late, the following story is a good one on the saying, "Every man has his price:"

There is a story, well known in naval circles, of an honest old commodore—a man of frank and witty speech—who commanded a blockade squadron in Southern waters during the Civil War. A fine looking, well-mannered man came to him one day, at a time when no vessels had been able to pass the blockade for weeks, and introduced himself as the representative of certain firms abroad, whose commercial need for cotton was desperate. After explaining this point fully, he made an open offer to the commodore of $50,000 if he would manage to let one single ship, laden with cotton, pass the blockade. He even opened his wallet, and spread the crisp bills out upon the table to emphasize the amount.

The commodore listened with an indifferent air, and said nothing until the man was through with his offer. Then he answered, still indifferently: "This thing is absolutely impossible, sir. Good morning," and bowed him out. So little indignation did he show, indeed, that a week later the persevering agent came back with a new offer. "Commodore," he said, "I am authorized to offer you even more than I did. If you will do as I ask, here are $100,000 which I will leave upon the table," and he began to take a roll of bills out of his wallet, as before. This time, however, the old sailor was not indifferent. Taking the briber by the neck, he kicked him out of the cabin without ceremony, saying as he did so: "Get out of here, you scoundrel! You're coming too near my price!"

But the chief underlying lesson of the temptations of Jesus, is that the weapons by which his Kingdom is to be set up must be spiritual. The whole story must be interpreted in the light of the fact that the Jewish people expected a Messiah who would conquer the Romans, not convert them. The one temptation of Christ, in three forms, was a temptation to use his miraculous power for immediate material ends, to create rations, rally followers by startling wonders, and capture the world quickly by conquest, rather than win it slowly by the Cross and by conviction.

Later, Christian law enforcement would have its place, but at the start, Christ would use only love and reason. The kingdoms founded on force, have all died within a thousand years. The Kingdom of Christ is the only one that ever reached its twentieth century. Even to-day, when Christendom, which means Christ's Kingdom, is embodied in governments, love is mightier than law and war for the conquest of the world.

But let us come back again to the personal view. These opening lessons of the life of Christ about his coming from heaven to Palestine, should remind us he comes daily to us in the shop, in the home, or on the street, in baptism, to strengthen us in the hour of temptation.

Here, in my workshop, where I toil
Till heads and hands are well nigh spent;
Out on the road where dust and soil
Fall thick on garments worn and rent;
He comes, his hand of strength I take,
And every homely task grows sweet.

The tempter dares an evil spell
To weave around my wayward mood;
His baleful minions fain would dwell
With me in desert solitude;
But, ere their craft can drag me down,
One strong to save defeats their end.

—MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Questions and Answers

Joseph B., Amherst, Mass. Is it right for ministers to exchange pulpits upon the Sabbath, when there is no necessity for it, and when by so doing, the electric car is patronized in the exchange?

It is right, if for no other reason than to show the fraternal Christian feeling existing between the churches. It need not involve extra Sunday travel. It is neither good taste nor common sense for a congregation to flock after their pastor whenever he fills a strange pulpit. They should stay by their own church, and give welcome and encouragement to whoever preaches there in their pastor's absence.

E. A. C., Mowersville, Pa. 1. Can you give the number of periodicals published in the United States? 2. I noticed an article referring to the "Pan-Germanic doctrine." What does it mean?

1. There are now over 20,000 publications, daily, weekly and monthly, in the United States. 2. It means the unification of Germanic interests throughout the world, especially the commercial interests of the German-speaking peoples.

Emma M. Rogers, 624 Clay street, Sharpsburg, Pa., would be glad to have some reader send her a copy of the poem beginning:

O Christ, thy love is wonderful,
What minds its breadth can measure.
A gem of rich and peerless worth,
A rare and priceless treasure.

Editor "Christian Herald": I became a life subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD thirteen years ago, and since that time have received a good many valuable premiums, but none of them could be classed with the Crown Encyclopedia, which I have just received. It is simply immense. I would advise everybody to get this premium before it is too late.

Walker, Ia. VICTOR G. SPENCER.

R. L. C. Harmony Creek, N. C. Why does Paul describe himself as a wretched man in Rom. 7?

He had been describing the struggle which goes on in the nature of a man who tries to reform in his own strength. The man resolves to be good and to live right and yet commits sin and does the things he had resolved not to do. It was a miserable life of constant disappointment and humiliation. He exclaims, evidently out of his own past experience, "O wretched man that I am." In the following verse there is an outburst of joy and thanks, for he has found out that in Christ there is the power to overcome.

Mrs. J. K., Lidgerwood, N. Dak. What would you do if a man with a threshing-rig was on your place on Sunday, and told you that the machine is for work, not to look at, and is bound to thresh on Sunday? Would you let him thresh?

We have read of occasions when it was necessary to take immediate steps to save a crop from a storm. But assuming that no such emergency existed, labor on Sunday, in field or barn, could in no sense be justified. The thrasher, if he will not observe the Lord's day and insists upon working, ought to be told to go about his business and take his machine with him.

G. C. P., Bearcreek, N. C. What constitutes a call to the Christian ministry?

One of the best evidences of the call is the usefulness of the Christian. If, under his addresses in Sunday School, or at prayer-meetings, or at mission churches, souls have been led to Christ, there is strong reason to believe that it may be his duty to devote all his time to preaching and pastoral work. A man's own strong desire to preach, the opinion of experienced Christians that his work would be useful in the pulpit, a providential opening of the way after submitting the desire to God in prayer, are all indications, but the best test is that first mentioned, of actual conversions occurring under early efforts.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I received the beautiful Butterfly Calendar, also the Crown Encyclopedia, which is so concise and up to date, I value it very highly. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the year 1904, and all these three for $3, the value received is far more than three dollars' worth, for which I heartily thank you.

MRS. E. H. H.

Edgar, Ill.

Reader, — Was not Judas a true disciple up to the time of the betrayal? Why was he chosen to be the traitor?

We should judge from such passages as John 12: 6, in which the cupidity of Judas is hinted, that his life for some time before the betrayal was not right. His culpability cannot be relieved by the theory that he was chosen to be a traitor. He went to the priests of his own free will and made the bargain. God undoubtedly foresaw what he would do, but the unrestrained evil in the heart of Judas was the stimulating cause. His committing suicide afterwards appears to indicate that he did not expect that Christ would be executed. He probably thought that in the last crisis, Jesus would save himself by a miracle.

D. B. R., Tenneytown, Pa. Some among us contend that only those persons are saved who were chosen before the foundation of the world, and that all others are lost, no matter how earnestly they seek salvation. Can that be true?

The controversy is very old, and has been debated without result in many churches since the days of Calvin and Arminius. In spite of the arguments brought in support of the view you mention, we cannot believe that it has a practical bearing on duty. No man could know, even if the statement could be proved, that he was or was not so chosen. Every man is invited and urged to seek salvation, and is assured that if he believes on Christ he will be saved. We cannot believe that God is insincere in making the offer, or that he invites men to come to him, who he knows cannot come. It would destroy human responsibility.

Dear Dr. Klopsch: We received the book How I Worked My Way Around the World, and are very much pleased with it. My father is reading it and is delighted with it, there is so much information in it. We are always pleased with the beautiful premiums which we receive from year to year.

Frankford, Pa.

H. M. FOULDS.

Searcher, Brooklyn, N. Y. Where in the Bible is the phrase, "Cleanliness is next to godliness"? My concordance does not give it.

It is not in the Bible. Its first appearance, so far as has been ascertained, was in the Jewish Mishna or oral law. It

THE TEMPLE OF ISIS AND OSIRIS

On the sacred island of Philae, on the Nile

IN a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, dated at Assouan, Egypt, Nov. 16, Miss Elizabeth Taylor (a lady whose letters of travel have on several occasions appeared in these pages), gives this interesting description of her visit to "The Holy House of our Lady of Isis," as the Egyptians call the temple:

Starting from Assouan by train or camel-back, one passes through ten miles of the most sandy and rocky desert imaginable. Not a blade of grass is visible. No life, but here and there a settlement of Bedrayshins—wild, curly-headed, unkempt creatures, whose black and shiny bodies are ill-concealed by their ragged and fluttering drapery. They come from Nubia, the ancient land of Ethiopia, the "Cush" of the Bible. At last we arrive at Philae, situated at the head of the first cataract, about six miles south of Assouan. Here are piles of fallen pillars, toppled one above another, all marked with inscriptions and parts of sculptured forms. We enter the massive gateway leading to the Court of Isis, four rows of handsome Hathor-headed pillars remain almost intact, side passages lead into mysterious little chambers or sanctuaries, where the sacred rites were performed; every inch of wall space is covered with decorations and mural bas-reliefs, all in a marvelous state of preservation. Here, on the high pylon or side wall above the gateway, we see warlike and haughty kings of long past dynasties offering oblations to the gods. Passing through another court, we pause before a colossal figure of a Pharaoh, wearing an immense crown. In his clenched hand he holds a long cord of hair attached to the heads of Jewish captives whom he was scourging. This is history transmitted to us in these eloquent stones, speaking of a past that long antedated the coming of Christ, for it is assumed that the first temple of any importance was erected on this island in the eighteenth dynasty, 1700 B.C. The worship of Isis and Osiris began to decline in the year 22 B.C. When Candace, Queen of Ethiopia, seized Philae and the surrounding country. In 380, A.D., Theodosius the Great issued an edict prohibiting the worship of Isis on this lovely spot; some of the temples were turned into Christian churches, and others were destroyed, but enough remains to tell the traveler of the days when all the gods of Egypt were adored by a great and powerful people, who knew not the true God and turned aside to worship the fruit of their own imaginations. The words of Holy Writ, as we gaze on these ruins, come back to us, "I will dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel."

is attributed to Phineas ben Yair. He is reported to have said that "abstemiousness is next to cleanliness, and cleanliness is next to godliness." It is also credited to the Beraita, a Hindoo book.

J. G. O., Port Byron, Ill. 1. Suppose Peary, or some other explorer, should reach the North Pole, how would we know just when he got there? In other words, the Pole being a point on the earth's surface whose latitude is 90 degrees, and longitude 0, what methods of determining latitude and longitude can be there employed? 2. If a compass be placed directly at the Pole, in what direction will the needle point? It cannot point north, for there is no north.

1. The so-called North, or Polar, Star revolves once in twenty-four hours in a small circle, about a degree and a quarter in radius, around an imaginary point, which is situated exactly over the northern termination of the earth's axis. On drawing near the Pole, the explorer would find the North Star getting directly over his head, and when his observations indicated that the point around which the star revolves was accurately in the zenith, his latitude would be 90 degrees, and he would be standing on the Pole. All the stars would then appear to travel in horizontal circles instead of rising and setting, and the dome of the heavens would resemble the inside of an open umbrella standing upright on its handle, and spinning around it. Since all the meridians of longitude come together in a mathematical point at the Pole, the explorer's body might be said to occupy all longitudes at once, the whole 360 degrees centering in him. Every direction in which he looked over the earth's surface would be south. But, from a knowledge of the position of the stars at particular times of the year and at particular hours of the day, he could determine the direction in which the recognized meridians of longitude ran away from his feet. Thus he would be able to say: "This way lies Greenwich; this way lies New York; this way lies Chicago," etc. As he turned from a position facing New York to a position facing Chicago, he would know that his body was revolving toward the West, although there would be no west and no east for him in the sense in which we are accustomed to apply those terms with reference to places on the earth. 2. The magnetic poles do not coincide in position with the geographic poles, or the terminations of the earth's axis. The northern magnetic pole is situated in Boothia Felix, near the middle of the upper end of North America, and more than a thousand miles south of the North Pole, so that the so-called north end of a compass needle placed at the North Pole would point south, along a meridian nearly corresponding with that of the northwestern corner of the State of Iowa.

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

Editor Christian Herald: Last Christmas, my wife gave me one of your Red Letter Bibles for a Christmas present, and I can truly say it is the best Bible I ever possessed, although I have had Bibles that cost three or four times more. If any one is about to purchase a Bible, I would say get THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Red Letter Bible, for it is the greatest Bible bargain on the market to-day.

Ottawa, Ill.

JOHN H. STEPHENS.

Mrs. M. P., Newark, O. 1. Where can I get a good Bible history? 2. Why were the people of Nazareth regarded as inferior to other people, and why were its people despised?

1. Write to Whittaker, publisher, New York, for Turner's Hand-book of the Bible. 2. It is not definitely known why Nazareth fell into disrepute. All the inhabitants of Galilee were regarded with contempt by the people of Judea because "they spoke a ruder dialect, were less cultivated and more exposed to contact with the heathen. The supposition is that Nazareth had a bad name on account of either irreligion or some laxity of morals."

Reader, Minnith, Mo. There is a dispute about the boundary-line between two farms. The deed says, "the creek between the farms" is the boundary-line; but since the deed was made, the channel of the creek has changed. Which is the line according to law—the old creek bed or the new?

If the starting-point of measurement is from a standard or fixed boundary-line or landmark, then the change in the bed of the creek should make no difference. The matter would probably be decided in accordance with the terms of the deed, specifying so many feet in any given direction from the fixed boundary. The bed of a creek, which is subject to change any year, could not be regarded as a fixed boundary. Better consult a good lawyer.

Mrs. L., New York City. Supposing I were to send by a neighbor to make a purchase for me, giving more than enough money to cover the expense, and he neglect to return the change, would I be doing wrong to mention it to him?

We think not. You might mention the matter casually, in such a way that no offence could be taken.

Subscriber, Conquerall Bank, N. S. 1. Is it right for an elder to leave his own church to attend funerals, which occur in other denominations? 2. Should any man be appointed on the officery or governing board of a church who is not an out-and-out Christian?

1. There is nothing wrong in such an act. One should pay the last tribute of respect to a friend, no matter to what denomination he belongs. 2. Preferably, a pronounced Christian should be chosen.

Inquirer, N. Y. The verse is from a beautiful poem by the late Bishop Brooks. It is:

"The feet of the humblest may walk in the field
Where the feet of the Holiest have trod;
This, then is the marvel to mortals revealed,
When the silvery trumpets of Christmas have pealed,
That mankind are the children of God."

Miscellaneous Questions

Hannah, C. R., Kittery, Me. Thanks for the verses, which are appreciated.

Any readers who are interested in coins or stamps, should address George E. Marx, Canaan, Four Corners, N. Y., for any information desired.

Mrs. Jessie F., Peoria, Ill. Your sentiments regarding the sins of Turkey are creditable and correct. Our Government, however, cannot interfere with the quarrels of Europe.

Reader, Frensburg, N. Y. We think you did well to consider the comfort of the sick one. It might have been well to hold the reception at the home of some member of the church; but this may not have been practicable. Under all the circumstances, you seem to have taken the right course.

THE NARROW GATE

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "IN HIS STEPS"

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Frank Douglas, having finished his student career, has an inspiration to be of some service in the world. With the aid of President Gray, of Lincoln College, the young graduate secures control of the Beacon, a small weekly paper at Colby, a place "with fifteen churches and ten saloons." At the very outset of his editorial career he encounters the bitter opposition of Mayor Bartlett of Colby, who is in league with the saloon interest. The young editor finds some good friends, among them being Mr. Edwards, a merchant, and his wife, Rev. Mr. Vernon, a local pastor, and others. Mayor Bartlett and his followers attempt to frighten and bulldoze Douglas into selling the Beacon, but he firmly declines. The Mayor thereupon starts a rival paper, the Sentinel. A local campaign is opening, in which the liquor interest resolves to make a bold effort for complete supremacy in the county. Douglas puts the Beacon squarely on record as opposed to the whisky element. His bold policy alienates many readers and advertisers; but he perseveres. His vigorous attacks on the saloons, supplemented by the cordial co-operation of the small but enthusiastic temperance element in Colby arouse attention throughout the county. The saloon party becomes alarmed and resolves to quiet this "disturber." Through the machinations of Mayor Bartlett, Douglas' foreman is persuaded to leave him in the lurch at a critical moment: his office is attacked, and his supply of white paper stopped at the mills. Somehow, he surmounts these difficulties, although the Beacon is driven to the temporary expedient of printing on wrapping paper. Amid all his troubles, Douglas is greatly cheered by the sympathy of Miss Esther Harris, a pretty local school-teacher, who was his former college classmate. "Quits," a poor, homeless, drunken tramp, whom Douglas befriends and rescues, turns out a valuable aid, being a capable compositor and pressman. "Quits" and George, the ubiquitous office-boy, more than once save the edition. "Quits," however, has frequent relapses, and these are a sore trial to the young editor, who, through repeatedly searching for him in the saloons, comes in contact with many sad phases of the infamous drink traffic.

One evening, while he was looking for "Quits" in the saloons, Douglas witnesses a tragedy. Two young men, who have just emerged from a saloon, quarrel near the door of Mr. Vernon's church, and one shoots the other dead. The crime stirs all Colby, but the sensation is short-lived. So potent is the influence of the liquor element that when the case comes to trial, the slayer is acquitted, on the plea of self-defense. When election day comes, the license ticket wins, and the friends of temperance reform are defeated all over the country. They are not discouraged, however, but decide to carry on the campaign with greater vigor than before, and to trust results to a higher Power. A great temperance picnic of 4,000 people, including seven Union Sunday Schools in Payson township, is arranged, and for the purpose of disseminating prohibition ideas, Esther Harris agrees to read the first chapter of a story entitled "His Mother's Prayers," the second and concluding chapter to be read by Douglas. It is a really local experience, with the names only slightly veiled, and the facts easily recognizable. The great audience sits spell-bound, as the story of a ruined family and a broken-hearted mother is graphically told. Over three thousand persons sign the pledge, as the result of the story. An explosion wrecks the Beacon office and press, and injures George. Douglas pluckily continues publication, with the aid of friends. Hopes brighten, and the outlook for the revived Beacon, and the cause it represents, gradually improves. The little temperance group at Colby hears of the approaching wedding of Esther and Douglas, which is shortly afterward celebrated very quietly. The women of Colby begin a vigorous temperance crusade. They encounter much discouragement, but their efforts and those of the friends of temperance in Colby and the surrounding districts, gradually effect a great change in public opinion, and they once more are cheered by hopes of ultimate victory.

CHAPTER X.—Continued.

At the earnest solicitation of friends, Douglas had consented to run for the Legislature on the temperance ticket as representative from Anderson county. On the county ticket was also a Colby man for county attorney, who was heartily with Douglas and the cause of law and order against the saloon.

Those were days all lived at "concert pitch and the limit of boiler pressure, with no one on the safety valve," to quote George. The final result was by no means sure. The two years intervening between the first victory for the amendment might give opportunity for vital changes in the sentiment of the people. Money poured into the State from brewers and distillers all over the country. The prospect of losing a whole State to legalized liquor business made the whisky forces bitter and determined. A hundred thousand dollars now might mean ten times that amount if the State could only be saved from these temperance fanatics. The saloon-keepers in Clinton were defiant, and made loud boasts of staying on, even if the amendment was carried, and among them all no one was more positive and outspoken than Jake Lawson.

"I'd like to see old man Sage or any one else arrest me," he would say to his admiring row of patrons, as they lined up at the bar. "The amendment won't carry nohow, but if it does, boys, I'm at the same old stand with the same old stock."

Mr. Sage was running for sheriff against a whisky man supported by the Sentinel. When Jake's remarks was reported to him Mr. Sage said nothing, but he took off his old felt hat and looked contemplatively at a bullet hole in it, his little reminder of that day when he chased Lawson out of his grove during the picnic.

When the polls closed on that eventful day in the history of the State no one could prophesy the result. Esther, Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, and a group of friends came down to the Beacon office to hear the returns. The ladies made some coffee on the office stove, and served a lunch to the men. Before midnight, the pressroom was crowded with anxious, excited inquirers. Between one and two the returns began to warrant Douglas in turning to George and saying, "Better be dusting off those roosters, George; I think we shall need them." Before dawn the result was no longer in doubt, and the press was turning off an extra edition, to go out over the county that day, proclaiming the news that the State, through its people, had declared for constitutional amendment, forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and classing such acts as criminal offenses on the statute books. Douglas, Sage, and the candidate for county attorney were all elected by good majorities.

Douglas was too busy with the paper to join in the impromptu procession of the jubilant prohibitionists who that forenoon marched down the main street of Colby, singing temperance songs and cheering the newly elected representative, sheriff, and county attorney. Mr. Edwards headed the procession beating time with a small flag, his jolly face beaming, his hat in the air half the time. Behind him marched a number of Colby's best known Christian women, wives and mothers, who had prayed and longed for this day during years of agonizing experience. Is it any wonder that to these who had been through the crucible of sorrows caused by the saloon and its accompanying vices that this day seems the very jubilee of reform, the very dawning of the millennium of peace and righteousness on earth?

The procession increased at every step as it swung down the street and filed by the rows of saloons. People inside rushed out to the front to see what was the cause of all the commotion. Every saloon-keeper in Colby came out, and for the most part looked at the procession in silence. The women started "John Brown's Body." Mr. Edwards waved his flag in triumph, and the chorus had a great swing to it as the crowd was marching past Jake's place. "His truth goes marching on!" The song swept up the street triumphantly from men's and women's voices, and Jake Lawson heard it with a scowl on his dark face, and a sneer and an oath on his cruel lips.

"It may, but I don't. I stay right here, law or no law," he muttered, as the procession went by.

For the next few days Douglas was nearly overwhelmed with messages and letters of congratulation. The Beacon was given credit in Anderson county for a large share in winning the victory. His election to the legislature was also regarded as just cause for rejoicing. In the Beacon office, especially, the pressmen and entire force felt elated that the "old man" (Douglas was now thirty-one) had

There is a right way and a wrong way to wash flannel outing garments. Try this—the right way:

Cut some Ivory Soap into shavings and dissolve; add this to the water and wash quickly by repeatedly immersing in the suds and drawing through the hands. The water for both washing and rinsing should be warm, never hot or cold.

Wring, stretch into shape and hang to dry in a place where there is no exposure to wind, sun, too hot or too cold air. Iron before they are entirely dry.

Shrinking is caused by the interlacing of the wool fibers, that have small, sawlike teeth which catch on each other. In washing, therefore, it is desirable to keep the material well stretched out to prevent the fiber from becoming matted. A washboard should not be used, nor should the soap be rubbed on. Pure soap and an even temperature are essential.

SEND US 25c. to cover cost of packing and postage, and receive this grand "ST-NUINE" collection of Beautiful Flowers, our new catalogue, containing the most liberal offers ever made, and a CASH CHECK for 25c., giving you your money back.

20 PACKETS SEED

1 pkt. Baby Rose (Japanese)	1 pkt. Wild Flower Garden
1 pkt. Sweet Pea (Giant)	1 pkt. Double Carnation
1 pkt. Verbena special mixed	1 pkt. Giant Daisy
1 pkt. Cup and Saucer	1 pkt. Oriental Poppy
1 pkt. Orchid or Princess Flr	1 pkt. Evening Primrose
1 pkt. Flowering Sage	1 pkt. Aster (Double Early)
1 pkt. Hardy Geranium Heliotrope	1 pkt. Sun Plant Portulaca
1 pkt. Blue Bells	2 pkts. Pansy Named

20 Bulbs: 1 Scarlet Freesia, 1 Wind Flower,
1 Spotted Calla, 2 Gladiolus, 1
Ranunculus, 2 Hyacinths, 1 Madia Vine, 1 Sun-rock Flower, 10 assorted bulbs for house or garden.
All the above flowers, cash check and the last catalogue to the United States for the cost of packing and postage, 25 cents.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N.Y.

BABY WARDROBE PATTERNS

FOR 40 DIFFERENT ARTICLES, long and short clothes, with full directions for making, showing necessary material, etc., sent postpaid for 25 CTS.
My booklet "Nurse's Hints to Mothers," also my magazine "True Motherhood," and my large illustrated catalogue, all three sent FREE with every order.
Ten years ago I originated the Baby Wardrobe Catalogue business and have dealt with 150,000 young mothers. I guarantee entire satisfaction or will refund money.
Address MRS. C. U. ATSMAN, Bayonne, New Jersey.

"Standard of Highest Merit."

FISCHER PIANOS.

IN THE NEW SCALE FISCHER the finest Tone-quality is produced. This combined with artistic beauty of case-architecture and durability has won for these pianos

AN ACKNOWLEDGED SUPERIORITY

OUR NEW METHOD of easy payments makes it possible for every home to have the musical delights of this Celebrated Piano. Old Pianos taken as part payment. Pianos delivered to all parts of the United States. Write for catalogue, terms and all particulars.

J. & C. FISCHER,

164 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED—Permanent and profitable employment can be found by reliable men and women willing to devote time and attention to selling our goods to the consumer. Cash commission paid. Established 1880. 600 Agents now at work. Great Eastern Coffee & Tea Co., St. Louis, Mo.

WORSTED
THE FLEISHER'S
BEST
YARNS

are made from selected wools, carefully spun, and have an even, lofty, elastic thread. Dyed in a full line of beautiful shades which can always be matched.

An article knitted or crocheted of Fleisher's Yarns will always hold its shape and yet be soft and elastic. Every skein of the genuine bears the trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted, Germantown Zephyr,
Dresden Saxony, Spanish,
Shetland Floss, Ice Wool, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual mailed for four tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making the above garment and various kinds of sweaters and vests as well as all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. Fleisher, Inc.,
Department "B," Philadelphia, Pa.

The Inside of this Building in Ten Colors

32 Years World's Headquarters for Everything.

showing the clerks at work, the goods, and, in fact, an interior sectional view of every floor of the tallest commercial building in the world. It makes a very attractive and interesting wall-hanger, and is one of the most complex and complicated pieces of lithography ever attempted. If you want it send four two-cent stamps, about what it cost us to print. Ask for our ten-color Wall Hanger. If you want to save your dealer's profits on everything you eat, wear or use, send 15c for our 1128-page Wholesale Catalogue. Millions are saving 25 of their former expenses by trading direct with us. If you want both Wall Hanger and Catalogue enclose 20c.

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.
Michigan Ave. and Madison St., Chicago. 49

DO YOU KNOW
The "HARBOR & SUBURBAN"

New York's Home Company.

Offers to small and large investors its 5 and 6 per cent. guaranteed investments.

It pays these dividends because all its funds are actively employed, and invested wholly in Greater New York.

Assets, $700,000.00
Guarantee Fund and Surplus, $1,000.00

Organized 1888

By corresponding with us we will give facts and methods of doing business. 5 and 6 per cent. per annum PAID SEMI-ANNUALLY, BY CHECK. Under the DIRECT SUPERVISION of the NEW YORK BANKING DEPARTMENT.

HARBOR & SUBURBAN BUILDING & SAVINGS ASSOCIATION
21 E. Fourteenth St., New York.

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

"got there." Quits was deputed to buy a floral horseshoe and put it on Douglas' desk, which he did, making a brief, but hearty little speech to Douglas, which Douglas received with more emotion than he had felt at the letter from the newly elected Governor, thanking him for his share in the campaign.

Esther felt proud of her husband's new honor, but expressed some regret that his duties in the legislature would call him away from home that winter.

"Clinton is not far, I'll be home for Sundays. But I'm not sorry of this opportunity to get better acquainted with the men out over the State. I don't expect to be able to do much as a member, but I can learn something that will help along the cause. It is a great victory, this amendment. The effect of it on other States will, no doubt, be very great."

Esther was thoughtfully silent. When she spoke, it was to her husband's surprise. Years later he recalled her words, and admired her foresight and remarkable self-poise, even on the crest of all that present victory.

"Do you ever think, Frank, that it will not do for the temperance people to fall back on this law and expect it to do all the work? It will not do to expect that the law will enforce itself. And if education and agitation stop, now we have the law, don't you fear that in a few years we may have this fight to make all over again?"

"Why, Esther, we've got what we have been after all this time! What more could we ask? The public sentiment will demand the enforcement of the law, and there will be no trouble about it."

Douglas honestly voiced the convictions of the vast majority of voters over the State. And it was only natural that the great overshadowing feeling should be one of exultation at the enactment of the statute.

The law went into effect three months after election. Before noon of the date fixed, two-thirds of the saloons in Colby closed up and reported that they had shipped out their goods. Jake Lawson continued to run as open as ever. That very same night he made his boast to a room full of men that no one could run him out and no one had better try.

Next morning, passers-by posted in front of Jake's place to read a placard posted up in his front window. By the side of the placard was a bag of silver dollars, with the mouth of it open, so that the money was visible. The placard read:

"$500. This money will be given to the widow of the man who arrests me."

"JAKE LAWSON."

One hour later Sheriff Sage suddenly walked into Jake's place, and pointing his revolver at the saloon-keeper before Jake could reach for his gun, he said quietly, "You will need that five hundred to pay your fines, Jake. There won't be enough left for no widows. You are arrested, and I would advise you to come along without no fuss."

Jake Lawson not only did not attempt to make any fuss, but amid the jeers of his patrons he meekly went along with Sheriff Sage, and in the police court was bound over for trial. He secured bond from the brewers in Clinton. At his trial the following week, he was found guilty on five counts and sentenced to $500 and five months in jail. His lawyer appealed the case to the District Court, and a jury found him guilty, and he had to pay his fine and go to jail for the full time. The whisky forces in Colby felt that the day was lost, and as soon as Jake's case was decided they closed up and moved out. For the first time in its history there was not a drop of intoxicating liquor sold in Colby. The week after it was positively known that the last saloon in Colby had closed up, the temperance people held a praise service in the Methodist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon were present by invitation. There were prayers and songs and many speeches. Women sobbed for joy. Quits told his life story, new to most of his hearers. Mother Vernon sat on the platform, the tears raining over her face. In her prayer that night she remembered Jake Lawson in the county jail close by, and asked God to convert him even there.

When the meeting broke up, and the people went home, it seemed to many and many a weary waiting heart as if the dawning of a new Jerusalem on earth were close at hand.

The next five years of Douglas' history were years of happy home life, of prosperous growth for the paper, and rapidly increasing influence as an editor. His home was blessed with two more children, another boy and a girl. The eldest boy, James Edwards, was now twelve years of age, with his mother's sunny, buoyant character, and his father's resolute, earnest eyes. Douglas had won a good reputation in the Legislature as a speaker and committeeman, and had been sent back to the Senate two years after. During the campaign that followed that session he had declined a renomination, choosing to devote his whole time to the enlargement and influence of the Beacon. George had steadily improved as a journalist and a Christian. He no longer roomed with Douglas, but had moved into quarters with Quits, who still continued with the Beacon as foreman, and whose chief pleasure in life was to spend an evening at Douglas' home cutting out marvelous shadow-graphs for the children, or teaching James Edwards, who had a faculty for inventions, how to put together a toy press the boy was learning to construct.

In this happy passage of time, surrounded by his home loves, with a promising circle of friends over the State, with a prosperous journal that made possible for him an ambition not only to do something for his home and the church, but for the town he had come to love, it came as a shock, like a bomb thrown into all this happiness, to learn through Mr. Edwards that Jake Lawson was back in Colby, and was running a joint in the back end of an old warehouse building belonging to Major Bartlett.

The whirligig of politics is a thing that even politicians never fully reckon with. In the course of five years after the passage of the prohibitory law a new county attorney had been elected who was not so vigilant in prosecutions as his predecessor. Another sheriff had also succeeded Mr. Sage, who had been a vigorous terror to evil-doers, and a new judge sat on the bench in the district court, who in one or two test cases had seemed to lean in sympathy toward the law-breakers. Still, in spite of these changes the sweeping out of saloons from Colby had been so decided and the public feeling was still so strong, that Douglas had not considered it possible that the whisky men could get a foothold in the town again. He had yet to learn that there is no force on the earth so persistent, so tireless, so sleepless, so lawless, so heartless in its complete disregard of human happiness as the liquor business. He had yet to learn, through bitter and painful experience, that while good people have a score of necessary public duties to perform in the republic, the whisky man has only one thing to do, so that he is not distracted as the good citizen often is, by a sense of responsibility, and divided with his means and strength over a multiplicity of philanthropic, religious, educational, and civic affairs. The whisky man has only one thing to do—to sell his poison early and late, by law or in defiance of it, to as many people as will buy, regardless of any results to them.

"Jake is doing a good business. I understand," Mr. Edwards said. "He has been going now for a week. One of my clerks, who belongs to the committee of fifty, gave me the information yesterday."

The committee of fifty was composed of the leading temperance men of Colby, who had organized during the first year the law went into effect.

"How about Mayor Bartlett and his building? He is guilty under the law."

Mr. Edwards shrugged his shoulders.

"The new county attorney is Bartlett's particular friend. I doubt if he will take any action."

"Do you mean to say," Douglas started up, as the whole new situation flashed upon him, "that the law cannot be enforced and brought to bear on the owner of the building?"

"It can, if the county attorney will bring it to bear. It remains to be seen whether he will or not."

TO BE CONTINUED

"THE TASTE TELLS"

Cudahy's Rex Brand Beef Extract

For Soups, Sauces, Savory Sundries and Beef Tea

SECURE A SET OF THE

Famous Cudahy Al Silver Plated Bouillon Spoons

FREE

Do not confuse these splendid spoons with ordinary offers.

The Cudahy Spoons grace the best tables, because they bear no advertising, are made in the latest design, French Gray Finish, and are heavier than triple silver plate.

How to Secure the Spoons

For each spoon desired send a metal cap from a 2 oz. or larger sized jar of Rex Brand Beef Extract, and 10 cents in silver or stamps to cover cost of mailing, and mention this publication.

FREE

MADE BY WM. CUDAHY, THE FAMOUS SALT MEAT

Address
THE CUDAHY PACKING COMPANY
BEUF EXTRACT DEPARTMENT 21
South Omaha, Nebraska.
CUDAHY'S REX BRAND BEEF EXTRACT IS SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND GROCERS

Reduced Prices on Suits and Skirts

Made to Your Order.
Not Ready-Made.

WE GUARANTEE
TO FIT YOU.

Catalogue and Samples Free.

THIS is the last month of our reduced price sale, therefore act quickly if you wish to take advantage of it. Suits and Skirts made to order (nothing ready-made) of brand-new materials, at one-third reduction from our regular catalogue prices. All of these fabrics are suitable for late Winter or early Spring wear. All of our styles and more than 200 of our best materials share in this sale.

Remember,

We make everything to order.
Nothing ready-made.

TAILOR-MADE SUITS, former price $11.25, reduced to $7.50; $15 Suits reduced to $10; $20 Suits reduced to $13.33; $25 Suits reduced to $16.67; $30 Suits reduced to $20; $36 Suits reduced to $24.

WALKING AND DRESS SKIRTS in the newest models, former price $6.50, reduced to $4.33; $9 Skirts reduced to $6; $12 Skirts reduced to $8; $15 Skirts reduced to $10.

Reduced prices on Raincoats, Newmarkets, Visiting Costumes, Traveling Dresses, etc.

We pay express charges on any part of the United States.

You take no risk in dealing with us, as any garment which is not entirely satisfactory may be returned promptly and we will refund your money.

Catalogue and a full assortment of samples will be sent FREE by return mail; be sure to say you wish WINTER CATALOGUE No. 50 and the reduced price samples. If possible state the color of samples you desire, as this will enable us to send you a full assortment of just what you wish.

If you already have our Winter Catalogue, ask for these samples only, being sure to mention you have the Catalogue.

NEW SPRING CATALOGUE.

We are now receiving from abroad the new Spring styles. We have never seen handsomer garments than have been designed for the coming season. Our new Spring Catalogue will be ready January 26th, and it will be the most beautiful fashion book ever issued. It will illustrate Stylish Suits, from $10 to $40; Skirts, from $5 to $20; Spring Jackets, from $10 to $30; Evening Costumes and Skirts, Mohair and Brilliantine Suits and Skirts, Walking Suits, Visiting Costumes, etc. Every woman who wishes to dress well should have one. Write now and we will mail you a copy free, as soon as issued, together with the new Spring samples. Be sure to say you wish new Spring Catalogue No. 50-s and samples.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY

119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.

Established 15 years.

Best Sheet Music 10c

Popular Standard and Classical Sheet Music. Full size, Best Paper, Handsome Printing. Any of the 50c and 10c music named below sent postpaid for 10c. Our large catalog contains over a thousand and others equally good for 10c per copy. Why not buy all your music at 10c a copy? Cut Out This Ad, mark with an X any piece you wish, enclose 10c, and we will send by return mail. You will also receive our free catalog. If you wish the catalog only, send this advertisement without any money.

...Bachelor Girls Three Step.....	regular price	$.50
...Intermezzo, Op. 18, Ruston.....		..75
...Mocking Bird, Variations.....		..75
...Old Black Joe, Variations.....		..75
...Nearer My God to Thee, Var.....		..75
...Merry Sloughing Party.....		..50
...Old Folks at Home, Var.....		..75
...Rock of Ages.....		..50
...Way Down South in Dixie.....		..50
...Happy Coon from Dixie.....		..50
...My Rosary.....	Vocal	..50
...Beside Still Waters (Sacred).....		..50
...Faithful as the Stars Above.....		..50

FREE—To anyone buying one or more of the above pieces, who will send in addition the names and addresses of ten persons who play or sing and would be interested in our catalog, we will send an additional piece without charge. Names of music teachers are particularly requested. Write names plainly.

MCKINLEY MUSIC CO., 381 Wabash Ave. Chicago.

Please send me your free catalog, also pieces marked X in this ad. Enclose 10c for each piece wanted.

Name.....

Town.....State.....

FREE TO LADIES

Send address of three friends who wear corsets, and receive, absolutely free, our Boston Hygienic Dip Pin for lengthening waist and holding skirt.

Boston Hygienic Corset Co., 14 Winter St., Boston, Mass.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS

Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

CALIFORNIA FOR 25c

All about the land of sunshine, fruits and flowers Resources and romance. Illus. Mag. 1 yr. trial, 25c

THE WESTERN EMPIRE, 84 Times Bldg., Los Angeles

Monumental Benevolences of 1903

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 13

Jeanes, Anna T., Philadelphia, gift to the Hick-site Friends, a home for their aged members, costing $200,000, and an endowment of $300,000.

Johnston, Mrs. Harriet Lane, Washington, D. C., bequests to trustees for a school for boys, $300,000; to Johns Hopkins University, for scholarships for poor boys, $60,000; and for a monument to President James Buchanan, her uncle, $100,000.

Laverack, William D., Paterson, N. J., bequests to the Paterson Orphan Asylum, Paterson General Hospital, Catholic Orphan Asylum, and St. Joseph's Hospital, each $25,000.

Lincoln Memorial University, Cumberland Gap, Tenn., gifts from friends in the North, an endowment of $200,000.

Lindsay, William, London, Eng., formerly of Fall River, Mass., gift to the latter city, a textile school and equipment, cost $100,000.

Loubet, Duc de, New York, gift to Columbia University, for a Chair of American Archaeology, $100,000.

McCutcheon, James, New York, gift to Christ Episcopal Church, Greenwich, Conn., ground for a new edifice, appraised at $40,000.

McDermott, Mgr. James, Glens Falls, N. Y., bequests to the Bishop of Albany for the education of young men for the priesthood, $40,000, and to Roman Catholic institutions, $19,500.

McKay, Gordon, Boston, bequest to Harvard University for a School of Applied Sciences, property valued at $4,000,000 and a large reversion from his estate.

Martin, Mrs. Winefriede, Baltimore, bequests for a home for old women of the Roman Catholic faith, $50,000, and for other religious and charitable purposes, $95,000.

Maxwell, J. Rogers, Brooklyn, N. Y., gift to the Long Island College Hospital, for the erection and equipment of the two central sections of the new hospital, an estimate of $500,000.

Mead, Solomon, Greenwich, Conn., bequest for the endowment funds of Fargo (N. D.) and Fairmount (Kan.) colleges, $58,100.

Milbank, Joseph, New York, gift to the First Congregational Church, Jersey City, to promote its institutional work, $100,000.

Mooney, John A., New York, bequests, to St. Joseph's Seminary, Dunwoodie, for a Chair of Sacred Scriptures, $25,000, and for a Scholarship, $6,000; and to other Roman Catholic churches and institutions, $30,000.

Muldoon, Cecilia, New York, bequests to Roman Catholic institutions and societies, $31,000.

Oberlin, (O.) College, gifts from an anonymous friend for the new building and endowment fund, $50,000.

Openhym, Adolphe, New York, bequests to Hebrew charities, $27,000.

Peabody, Henry O., Norwood, Mass., bequest for an industrial school for girls in that town, land and about $350,000; unsuccessfully contested.

Pearsons, Dr. Daniel Kimball, Chicago, gifts to Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla.; Pomona College, Claremont, Cal.; Illinois College, Jacksonville; Fargo (N. D.) College; and the West Virginia Conference Seminary, Buchanan, each $50,000; and Kingfisher (Okla.) College, and Fairmount College, Wichita, Kan., each $25,000.

Phipps, Henry, New York, gifts for an institute in Philadelphia for the study, treatment, and prevention of tuberculosis, $1,300,000; for other purposes, $60,000.

Pizzatti, Salvatore, New Orleans, gift to St. Joseph's (R. C.) Church for a parochial school building, $70,000.

Pulitzer, Joseph, New York, gift to Columbia University for a School of Journalism, $1,000,000, and a conditional pledge of $1,000,000 more.

Reid, Daniel G., New York, gifts to the city of Richmond, Ind., for a public hospital, $50,000, and to the United Presbyterian Church there, for a new edifice, $75,000.

Reid, Peter, Passaic, N. J., gift to the city, a free public library, cost over $150,000.

Reinhard, Moses, Philadelphia, bequest to Jewish charities, chiefly the Jewish Hospital, his estate of $46,000.

Riis, Jacob A., New York, gift from friend (name withheld), for purchase of property for the King's Daughters' Settlement, $50,000.

Rockefeller, John D., New York, gifts for a post-graduate medical college and hospital in Chicago, $7,000,000; for an institute for medical and pathological research in New York, $1,200,000, with a pledge of whatever amount may be needed for its support; to the General Education Board to promote free education in the South, $1,000,000; the University of Chicago, for general and special purposes, $2,693,000; and to other institutions, a total of $1,047,667; aggregate of the foregoing, $13,846,667.

Rogers, Henry H., New York, gift, as a memorial to his mother in Fair Haven, Conn., a church building, a parish house, and a parsonage, total cost about $1,000,000; making his aggregate gifts to his birthplace more than $3,000,000.

Rogers, Jacob S., Paterson, N. J. (died in 1901), bequest to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, real estate valued at $500,000, ordered by the Court in 1903 to be transferred to the Museum. This was in addition to the bequest of his residuary estate, proved at about $5,500,000, also to the Museum.

Ropes, Mary P., Salem, Mass., bequests to public institutions and charities in Massachusetts, Ohio, Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, the reversion of her estate of $1,000,000.

Ryan, Archbishop Patrick John, Philadelphia, gift to St. Vincent's Orphanage, $200,000, the amount of gifts to him on the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination.

Ryan, Thomas F., New York, gift to the Roman Catholic Diocese of Richmond, Va., funds for the new cathedral; contract cost, $500,000.

Ryan, Mrs. Thomas F., New York, gift to the Archdiocese of New York, the Church of the Sacred Heart at Suffern, N. Y., cost $50,000.

Ryle, Mrs. Mary E., Paterson, N. J., gift to the city, the Danforth Free Public Library, cost, $200,000.

Schiiff, Jacob H., New York, gift to Harvard University, the first purely Semitic Museum ever established; cost of building and collections, $100,000.

Schuetter, Dr. Joseph, New York, bequests to the German Hospital, $35,000; Mount Sinai Hospital, $15,000; and the German Hospital the reversion of his estate.

Schwab, Charles M., New York, gift to Weatherly, Pa., in honor of his wife, a public school building, cost, $100,000.

Scott, Charles, Sr. and Jr., Philadelphia, joint gift to Wesleyan University, for a Scott Laboratory of Physics, $100,000.

Sears, Emily E., Boston, bequests to the Boston Art Museum, $25,000, and to four local institutions, each $5,000.

Severance, L. H., Cleveland, gift to endowment fund of Wooster University, $100,000.

Sherrill, Marcia, New York, bequests to Protestant Episcopal institutions, chiefly St. Luke's Home, the bulk of her estate of $100,000.

Smith, William, Geneva, N. Y., gift for a college for women in that city, land and $150,000 for main building, with a pledge of liberal endowment.

Smith, Warren B., Yonkers, N. Y., bequests to St. John's hospital there, $50,000.

Speyer, James, New York, gift to Columbia University for the South Field Fund, $25,000, and with his wife to the same, the Speyer Experimental School, cost withheld.

Stanford, Mrs. Leland, San Francisco, gift to Leland Stanford University, for a new library building, $1,000,000, and Thomas Webster Stanford, Melbourne (brother of the late Senator Stanford), for its endowment, $1,000,000.

Starr, Theodore B. and sons, New York, joint gift as a memorial to Dr. T. G. White, of Columbia University, Gordon House, cost $100,000.

Stetson, Francis Lynde, New York, gifts to Williams College for increase of professors' salaries, $50,000, and for improvement of Griffin Hall, $25,000.

Stillman, James, New York, gift to the Stillman Infirmary of Harvard University (founded by him at a cost of $150,000), for a contagious ward, $50,000.

Studebaker Manufacturing Company, South Bend, Ind., gift to the local Y. M. C. A., for a building in memory of the Studebaker brothers, $200,000.

Swift, Gustavus F., Chicago, bequests to charities a total of $250,000.

Taylor, Mrs. Emma Flower, Watertown, N. Y., gift to the public the Flower Memorial Library, cost $200,000, and for books $21,000.

Thomas, Mrs. Anna A. and children, New York, joint gift to the Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital for a Samuel Thomas Memorial Ward, $50,000.

Thompson, Mrs. Frederick F., New York, gifts to the Teachers College for a School of Physical Education and Hygiene, $350,000; and to Williams College, funds for a memorial chapel to cost $300,000.

Thomson, Mrs. J. Edgar, Philadelphia, bequest, funds necessary to erect and endow an institution for the orphan daughters of Pennsylvania Railroad employees, capable of accommodating 300 girls.

Todd, William C., Atkinson, N. H., bequests to the New England Historico-Genaeological Society, $20,000; New Hampshire Historical Society, $15,000; Colorado College, $1,000; and Mount Holyoke College, his residuary estate.

Tome, Jacob, Port Deposit, Md. (died in 1898), bequest for endowment of the Jacob Tome Institute founded by him in that town, and dedicated in 1903, $3,500,000.

Tuttle, Bronson B., Naugatuck, Conn., bequests to the Congregational Church for a new Church, $50,000; Waterbury Hospital and American Missionary Association, each $10,000; and for the local poor, $5,000.

University, of Wisconsin, gift from friend for a new building, land and $75,000.

Vanderbilt, Mrs. Cornelius, Sr., New York, gifts to the Newport (R. I.) Hospital, the Cornelius Vanderbilt Pavilion, furnished and equipped with surgical appliances, cost about $250,000, and a sufficient endowment.

Vanderbilt, Frederick W., New York, gift to Yale University, a dormitory in memory of his brother Cornelius; cost $1,000,000.

Van Schaick, Alida, New York, bequests to Reformed Church institutions, outright $54,000; in reversion, $15,000; for domestic operations of the church, her residuary estate.

Voorhees, Ralph, Clinton, N. J., gift to Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J., a library building, cost $60,000.

Wallace, John H., New York, bequest to Washington and Jefferson College, for a Chair of Rhetoric and Oratory, $65,000.

Wentworth, Arioch, Boston, bequests to charitable and educational institutions, $610,000, and for an industrial school for boys, nearly all of the residue of his estate of $7,000,000; will contested.

Wharton, Joseph, Philadelphia, gift for a building for the School of Science, University of Pennsylvania, founded by him, $200,000.

Willing, Henry J., Chicago, bequests for religious and educational purposes, a total of $92,000.

Winch, George F., Brookline, Mass., bequests for a scholarship in any institution and for any charity of the Trinitarian Congregational Church, both selections to be made by his executors, each $75,000.

Winthrop, Mrs. Mary J., New York (died in 1902), bequest to the Princeton, N. J., Theological Seminary, her residuary estate, appraised in 1903 at $2,130,391.

Wyman, William, Baltimore, bequest to Johns Hopkins University, the reversion of $500,000.

Young, Kendall, Webster City, Ia., bequest, made available by the death of his widow, for endowment of Kendall Young Library, $200,000.

Young Men's Christian Association, Springfield, Mass., gift from friend for endowment of its Training School, $50,000.

Aid for Jamaica Sufferers

In answer to the appeal published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, these contributions have been received and credited to the Rev. D. A. McKillop, treasurer Mandeville Convention, Jamaica, W. I., to be used in relief work among the sufferers by the late hurricane;

Mrs. Ida M. Knolt, 50 cents; Mrs. Maria Elliott, $5; H. M. Graves, $1; W. F. Wight, $5; Mr. J. M. E. for the Christian Herald Instruction Department, thanksgiving offering for the Dunker branch and friends, Rocky Ford, Colo., $8; Mrs. J. M. Williams, $1; Mrs. M. E. Williams, $3; Wm. H. Burke, $1; W. M. Zimmer, $1; Jas. A. H. Burgess, $1; Mrs. J. Dawson, $5; C. A. Hagaman, $2; J. Y. Bettys, $5; S. F. Melville, $2; Dr. A. B. Estock, $2; A. S. Peet, $1; Mr. and Mrs. John Atha, $1; W. R. Gilson, $5; Mrs. Clara Harmon, $1. Total, $50.50.

90 Days' Trial

We sell more reliable merchandise by mail than any house in the world. Volume of sales regulates prices. No firm can undersell us on reliable goods; we refuse to handle the other kind.

Our Oakland Machine 8²⁵
Our Oakland Machine at $8.25 is warranted for 5 years and is the best machine on the market at the price.

At $12.75 our Amazon is as good as the regular $20 kind; is beyond comparison with other machines at this price.

For 14⁵⁰

our Brunswick Seven Drawer, High Arm, Ball Bearing, Drop Head Machine is a beauty, one that will do all kinds of work and can be depended upon. Price is much lower than any other firm asks for equal quality. Mounted on handsome Automatic Drop Desk Quartered Oak Cabinet like picture, only 16⁹⁵ of Sewing Machines containing our 90 days' free trial offer, sent on request. Write for it today.

Free Catalogue

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.

CHICAGO

Zon-o-Phone Record Free

If you own a DISK talking-machine of any sort, and will tell us the number and make, we'll send you FREE a new Zon-o-Phone record.

Our new records are 'way ahead of anything else. This sample will prove it to you without cost.

Offer good until March 1st; but write today.

UNIVERSAL TALKING-MACHINE MFG. CO.

24 East 22d Street, New York.

— JUST ISSUED! — Devotional Songs

EDITED BY THREE FAMOUS COMPOSERS AND COMPILED

W. H. DOANE, MUS. DOC.

WM. J. KIRKPATRICK AND HUBERT P. MAIN

It contains a larger variety of songs than any other hymn book of its kind ever published.

256 pages. Full Cloth Bound, 276 hymns.

$25 per 100; 30 cts. per copy, postpaid.

A returnable copy for examination will be sent on request.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York—Chicago.

LYMYER BELL'S CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

PRAYERS For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry.

This book of prayers is helpful to all, for home or public use. Cloth, $1.00; Royal Purple, $1.50; Leather, $2.00.

M. E. Munson, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York.

Winning Cuba for Christ

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 3

There is much cause for rejoicing in this progress, but the call is for more workers to occupy new fields. The Church must send a greatly increased force to meet the need. The whole island is open to the Gospel, and the people are wonderfully accessible, as instanced in the following case, cited by Bishop Candler of the Southern Methodist Church: Mr. Sewell, a Methodist missionary, while preaching at Santa Clara one day, observed two strangers in the congregation.

PATRIOTIC ARCH AT MATANZAS

At the close of the service he sought an interview with them, and they proved to be the mayor and the principal of the school at Fomento, a town of about 2,500 people, forty miles from Santa Clara. They urged him to come at once to preach for them. He told them that he was engaged at the time, but would come as soon as he could, and in the meantime gave them some Bibles and tracts to take back to Fomento. They did this, and the result is that more than a score of people have been converted, and the town is calling for a preacher and a church. Bible in hand, the school-teacher has gone from house to house, teaching the people, not only in Fomento but also in the beautiful Fomento Valley. He heard of the Methodist Conference at Santa Clara, rose at midnight, and mounting a mule, rode away to make an appeal for a church and a preacher. In the Conference, with deep emotion, he spoke as follows:

When the public school was established I was put in charge; as the people began to have quiet after the war, they began to reflect on religious things. They had no one to guide them, however, no priest or preacher. They came to me as teacher with their questions. They asked me if there was a God. What was the soul? And what of the future life? I told them that I could not tell them about these things, because I was too ignorant. But they said I was the teacher and ought to know. I replied that I could not know, never having been taught. I told them I hoped, if there was a God, he would send us some light, and that we must wait for the light. A short time afterwards, the mayor and I were walking together in Santa Clara, whither he had come on business. We heard the singing in the chapel, and entered. Then Brother Sewell preached, and when I heard him I said, "God has sent the light we have been longing for!" Brother Sewell gave us the books, and we went back and did the best we could. Then he came and preached to us. Now a number have been converted, and many others are deeply interested. Give us more of the light! Give us a preacher! Give us a church!

Although a poor school-teacher, on a salary of sixty dollars ($60.00) a month, and having a family to support, this same man promised to give $10.00 a month for the support of a church.

This is the call that is coming to the Church from Cuba: The Church has plenty of money, plenty of men to meet the need. What is she going to do about it? It cost the United States the lives of many good men and millions of dollars to give Cuba political freedom, and yet we know that the worst of all bondages is the bondage of sin. How much more important, then, that the Church send the men and the money to give Cuba the Gospel of Christ, which shall make her free indeed.

WYLIE H. FORSYTHE.
Lexington, Ky.

JANET AND EDITH HOUSTON
Two American Missionaries

The Martin Luther Statue
The beautiful new Cathedral at Speyer will be formally dedicated and the Luther statue unveiled, on Sunday, August 14, 1904. Emperor William and the royal family are expected to be present. The Emperor has expressed the hope that many Americans would come to Speyer to participate in the ceremony. Lutherans from all over the civilized world are expected to attend the celebration, which will be a great event in the history of the Lutheran Church. Interested parties can address Hon. C. A. Schieren, at 47 Ferry street, New York, for all particulars. Applications will be received until Feb. 1.

"A Thing of Beauty"
My Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I have just received your beautiful drop Calendar, and truly it is a "thing of beauty and a joy forever"—at least for two years. I wish you a merry Christmas.
HUBERT P. MAIN.
New York.
[The foregoing is from the well-known composer of many popular hymns and other sacred songs.]

In The Home

Four Times the Light at Half the Cost

BLOCK LIGHT

The nearest substitute for daylight is the Block Light for Home Use. It is a wonderful, new white light of intense brilliancy produced by the perfect combustion of air and any kind of gas—artificial gas, natural gas, and gasoline gas. It is guaranteed to produce a light of 300 candle power equal to 10 incandescent electric-light bulbs. It burns 8 parts of air to 1 part of gas. Numerous patents cover new principles found only in the Block Light, making it as far superior to all other lights as the searchlight is to the tallow tip.

No matter what light you are now using—the Block Light will give four times the light at less than half the cost. You are wasting gas every day you are without a Block Light in your home. The leading department stores in the different cities have Block Light Department.

IF YOUR DEALER CANNOT SUPPLY YOU, WE WILL, AS A SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER, SEND A Complete Block House Light for $1.50

EXPRESS PREPAID

Burner, Mantle and Globe, which you can readily attach to any gas jet in your home and test it. Money refunded if you are not thoroughly satisfied. Shade similar to illustration, fifty cents extra. When ordering please state character of gas you are using.

CAUTION—The name "Block" is stamped on every genuine burner and mantle.

BLOCK LIGHT CO., Dept. B2
17 Park Place, New York City 26 East Lake St., Chicago, Ill.
Agents wanted everywhere.

MELLIN'S

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

TRADE MARK

FOOD

Mellin's Food and Milk is an ideal combination and will nourish and strengthen your baby and make him grow.

We should like to send a sample of Mellin's Food free to your baby.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS

10¢

The NEW SYRUP with a NEW Delicious Flavor.

At grocers, 10c, 25c and 50c.

Corn Products Co., New York and Chicago.

Karo

CORN SYRUP

The "Index"

gets the right pencil to the right person

It points the way to pencil satisfaction. A 32-page booklet Address Dept. V., Jos. Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

(TRADE MARK)

Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick rooms. Worn in rubber boots, absorbs perspiration. Made of finest fibers—mixed with soft white wool flannel. Send small sizes by dealers or by mail, 25c pair. Parker pays postage. Catalog free.

J. H. Parker, Dept. K 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

DREER'S

Reliable Seeds, Plants and Bulbs

Supplied 65 years to the most critical horticulturists of the country. Our stock is not on paper—but actually an found growing in our own Greenhouses and Nurseries—the largest in the world.

Our Garden Book for 1904 with illustrations, colored plates, directions and reference tables mailed for 10c. (Enclose stamp and free three pennies.) Select: Aster, Pinks and Poppies.

HENRY A. DREER,
714 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

FERRY'S

SEEDS

MEET ALL NEEDS

Experience has established it as a fact. Sold by all dealers. You sow—they grow. 1904 Seed Annual postpaid free to all applicants.

D. M. FERRY & CO.
DETROIT, MICH.

D. and C. Roses

are the best. Always on their own roots. Plants sent to any point in the United States. Safe arrival guaranteed. 50 years experience. Flower and Vegetable Seeds a specialty. A premium with every order. Write for Guide to Rose Culture for 1904—the leading rose catalogue of America. 118 pages. Mailed free. Over 1,000 varieties. Tells how to grow them and all other desirable flowers. Est. 1850. 70 greenhouses.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., West Grove, Pa.

ARE YOU SATISFIED

with your present position and salary? If not, write us to plan and lead. We have openings for Managers, Secretaries, Advertising Men, Salesmen, Bookkeepers, etc., paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. Technical, Clerical and Executive men of all kinds. High grade exclusively.

HAPGOODS (Inc.),
Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York.

Trees

True to Name

We sell only the best rooted, straight, clean, well branched trees, true to name, at attractive prices.

For Sale at Bargain Prices

New Niagara Peach Trees, 3 to 4 ft. high, at $6.75 per 100. Apple Trees, $6.00 per 100 and up. Standard Pears, $8.00 per 100 and up. Plums, $10.00 per 100 and Cherries, $15.00 per 100 and up. These trees are 4 to 6 feet high and desirable for orchard planting. Send for our new 112-page illustrated catalog. Send us a list of your wants for special prices. We can save you money.

Green's Nursery Co., Rochester, N.Y.

Mention this paper on first copy of East Magazine tree.

CHAIRS FOR INVALIDS

TRICYCLES FOR CRIPPLES

Invalids enjoy the supreme comfort and restfulness of our Street and House Chairs—Simple, strong and thorough in construction. Easily adjusted. Light running, noiseless. Our catalogue shows the most Improved Models in tricycles and chairs especially designed for the comfort and benefit of cripples and invalids however afflicted. Sent free on request. Address THE WORTHINGTON MFG CO., Dept. A Elyria, O. [Successor to Fay Tricycle and Invalid Chair Co.]

SEEDS

Vegetable and Flower. In fact everything in the Nursery and Florist line. We send by mail postpaid Seeds, Plants, Roses, Bulbs, Small Trees, Etc., safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed, larger by express or freight. Send for our elegant 168 page free catalogue and see what values we give for your money. Correspondence solicited. 50 years, 44 greenhouses, 1000 acres.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.

Box 192, PAINESVILLE, OHIO.

MEN AND WOMEN OF MONEY

Write for my FREE BOOK about Money—her wealth, laws, and 5 per cent. Farm Mortgages—printed in colors, profusely illustrated. FREE!

WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 5 Wardell Bldg., MACON, MO.

"In One
Ear and

Out the Other"

Slips of memory often mean the sacrifice of success, happiness—and even life itself.

Master Your Mind: compel it to respond clearly, accurately, instantly

Pelman's System of Memory Training

converts a treacherous memory into a reliable one. Gives mind control and mental poise. An easy, simple, and scientific method of training. Original and of absorbing interest. Requires but a few minutes each day, and richly repays the time invested. No matter what your life work, the Pelman System will make you more successful. Mr. Pelman's pupils range in age from 18 to 85 years. Taught in six languages.

A Good Memory Saves Time and Money

THOUSANDS of testimonials have been received from pupils all over the world stating that they owe their success in life to the course of lessons they have received from the Pelman School of Memory Training. These testimonials are from men and women in every walk in life.

W. T. Stead — Editor of the London Review of Reviews: "The improvement that can be effected is so great that I consider Mr. Pelman one of the benefactors of the human race."

D. F. Urbahns — Ft. Wayne, Ind., endorses the Pelman System, pronouncing it "superior to any other method for training of memory."

FREE Mr. Pelman has published two books:—
"Memory Training: Its Laws and Their Applications to Practical Life," and
"The Natural Way to Learn a Language"
Both books will be sent absolutely free, postpaid. Write at once. A thing done now will not require remembering.

The Pelman School of Memory Training
1670 Masonic Temple, CHICAGO.

LONDON, 4 Bloomsbury St. W. C. PARIS, Ave. de Neuilly 109; MUNICH, Mozartstr. 9; MELBOURNE, G. P. O. Box 402; DURBAN, Natal, Lynn Bldg.

"Held precious in the world's esteem."

For every growing and grown member of every family.

A refreshing food-drink, more beneficial and delicious than tea or coffee.

Pure, rich milk and extract of malted grain in powder form. Instantly prepared by simply stirring in water.

Our Booklet tells of many other valuable uses. Mailed with sample of Horlick's Malted Milk, free upon request.

At all Druggists.

Ask for HORLICK'S; others are imitations.

Horlick's Food Company, Racine, Wis.
#Barrington Road, London, Eng. 25 St. Peter St., Montreal, Canada

FREE We will consign goods free to be sold at Church Fairs, Charities, etc.
Address: RUCKSTUHL MFG. CO., St. Louis, Mo.

Personal Duty in Temperance

The Guilt of Inaction in the Struggle Against the Enemy of Our Race

THAT was a significant curse uttered by Deborah and Barak after their victory. They had fought hard; the victory might at the beginning have seemed doubtful and they were very jubilant over winning it. Their song of praise is interrupted to utter a curse, not on their enemy; not on an ally of their enemy, but on a city which ought to have sent a contingent to help them in their struggle, but did not. Perhaps the city did not feel in danger, perhaps it did not recognize a duty in the matter; in any case, it was not represented in the victorious army on the field of battle. "Curse ye Meroz," said the conquerors, "Curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Their sin was the sin of indifference and inaction. They were safe and comfortable, while their brethren were waging a fierce conflict against the national enemy. The enemies of the Lord are still mighty. Does he find among the cohorts under his banner every man who ought to be there?

There is no enemy more firmly entrenched, or doing more effective mischief to mankind at this day than the drink traffic. Is it assailed by every man who ought to be found among its active foes? How many there are who are conscious of the evil, who deplore its power and influence, but are guilty of the sin of Meroz! It is a common sin. If it were not so prevalent, this enemy of God and man would have been crippled if not destroyed ere now. The temperance army is waging a struggle which often appears hopeless, and yet there are Christian people who are doing nothing to aid in the charge. To come near home, has each one done all that is in his power to do, by example, by appeal and by influence to diminish the number of the supporters of the foe? It is not killing that is required, it is the saving of life, property and reputation. To win away the supporters of the traffic, to turn drinking into sober men; to induce the moderate drinker to abstain; to enlist the child and the youth into the ranks of the army opposed to the traffic—that is the surest of all ways of exterminating it, because in that way it may be starved to death.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Jan. 17. Isa. 24:9-11; Heb. 2:15; 1 Thes. 5:6-8.

OUR GREATEST BRIDGE

(See photographs on first page)

AN event long to be remembered was the opening of the new bridge spanning the East River, between Brooklyn and New York, on Dec. 19. This beautiful bridge was fully described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD three weeks ago. Some of the scenes at the opening are shown in the photographs on the cover of this issue. In the evening there was a brilliant pyrotechnic display. Two days after the formal opening the public were admitted to the use of the roadway, but several weeks must elapse before the rails are completed, and all the facilities for transportation are in full operation.

As a whole, the new bridge is a beautiful and noble structure, the first in America. It is the second of a series of bridges to be built across the rivers on either side of the Metropolis. Two others are now in contemplation, although the work of construction may not be entered upon for many months to come.

A Book of Pluck and Energy

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I received the beautiful Butterfly Calendar, also the book How I Worked My Way Around the World. The calendar is lovely, and the book is one of the best I have ever read—interesting from cover to cover. I like the pluck and energy of the author and his pleasant and straightforward way of telling his story.

Bellaire, O.

MARTHA E. JACKSON.

"The Lord's Tenth"

A reader in Findlay, O., has sent to the Bowers Mission a generous package of underclothing—"The Lord's Tenth for the Poor" at the Bowers Mission. The gift has doubtless brought happiness and comfort to many a hapless one on Christmas Day.

A

256

Page

Book on

Electricity

70c.

By Express
(Prepaid)

Page 7 x 10 in.
On enameled paper
Bound in green linen
Over 100 Illustrations

MANY people believe instruction in Electricity cannot be given outside the class-room. To demonstrate the standard, scope, and methods of our instruction we have bound up four representative text books in our Electrical Engineering course in a handsome linen cover under the title of

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN ELECTRICITY

and will send one copy for seventy cents (the cost of binding and express charges) to every reader of The Christian Herald sending us the names of two friends interested in Electrical, Mechanical, Civil Engineering, Textiles or Architecture. (Address Room 27 G.)

The book is easily worth $3.00, and we make this liberal offer because we know that an inspection of our text books will be convincing evidence of the practical value of our instruction. The subjects embraced are:

Storage Batteries (prepared especially for home study by Prof. F. B. CROCKER, Columbia University): Types; General Principles; Chemical Action; Data Sheets; Edison Storage Battery; Management; Electrolyte; Cadmium Test; Charging; Efficiency; Troubles and Remedies; Testing; Portable Batteries for Automobiles and Boats, etc.

Electric Wiring (prepared by H. C. CUSHING, Jr., author of "Standard Wiring"): Diagrams; Tables; Transformers; Three-Wire Systems; Poles and Pole Setting; Inside Wiring; Arc Light Wiring; Conduit Work; Fixture Wiring; Cut-outs; Switches; Distribution of Light; Arc and Incandescent Systems; Fuses; Inspection; etc.

Electric Current: Volt, Ampere, Ohm; Resistance, Conductivity; Tables; Circuits, Grouping of Cells; Quantity; Energy; Power; Coulomb; Joule; Watt; etc.

Elements of Electricity: Magnets, Experiments with Magnets; Magnetizing Steel; Conductors and Insulation; Electric Machine, Leyden Jar; Voltaic Cell; Types of Cells; Electromagnets; Induction Coil; Electrolysis; Electrotyping and Electro-Plating; The Telephone; The Telegraph; Sounder Alphabet, Key, Battery, Relay, etc.

Illustrated 200 page quarterly Bulletin giving full outlines of 60 different courses in Engineering (including College Preparatory) will be sent free on request.

American School of Correspondence

at Armour Institute of Technology
Chicago, Ill.

TRACK 12
TRAIN LEAVES
6.58
EXPRESS

The Railroads

run on

ELGIN TIME

The Elgin Watch is the watch for those who use railroads as well as for those who run them.

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

Here is the

Split Hickory Special

For 1904

$50

The thousands of well-pleased customers throughout the whole United States to whom we have sold this truly wonderful bargain in the past few years know what we mean when we say "Split Hickory Special." We have taken a great pride in building up a mammoth business on this one particular job, bending every effort in our manufacturing plant to give our customers a buggy for $50 that had every good feature put on a buggy at any price. Our efforts have been rewarded. Our sales last year on this one particular job ran into hundreds every day. With such an immense output, selling direct to the customer, we are enabled to offer many new inducements this year. If you are thinking of buying a buggy you cannot afford to overlook the Split Hickory line. Remember, this Split Hickory Special is made of first grade Split Hickory—split, not sawed—and has 100 points of merit. Space in this advertisement will not permit our giving a description of this vehicle. It is fully described in our new 136-page Split Hickory Catalogue of vehicles and harness, now ready for distribution. It's free. Send for one at once. NOTE—We carry a full line of high grade harness, sold direct at wholesale.

THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO., H. C. Phelps, Pres., 1546 Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Sent anywhere on 30 Days' FREE TRIAL.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable. Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemeteries. Catalogue free.
KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO.,
445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

Mark the Grave of your departed.

Headstones $4 up

Monuments $11 up

Blue or White Marble nicely lettered. Instructions for setting. Save agent's commission. Send for Catalogue.
W. J. MOORE,
348 Third St. Sterling, Ill.

St. Paul Minneapolis Duluth

Four fast trains daily leave Chicago at 9:00 a.m., 6:30 p.m., 10:00 p.m. and 3:00 a. m. via the Chicago and North-Western Railway. These fast trains are equipped with all the conveniences of modern railway travel. One of them, the electric lighted leaving at 6:30 p. m. has Pullman drawing-room and compartment sleeping cars, buffet smoking cars, Book-lovers Library, dining car, free chair cars and day coaches. Other trains are equipped with Pullman drawing room sleeping cars, cafe and parlor cars and free chair cars.

North = Western Limited

Tickets, sleeping car reservations and full particulars on application.

W. B. Kniskern, Pass'r. Traffic Mgr.
Chicago

NW89

RHEUMATISM

Relieved Through the Feet

External remedy so successful that the makers send it FREE ON APPROVAL to anybody.
TRY IT.

If 100,000 men and women, suffering with every kind of rheumatism, acute or chronic, have been relieved by a harmless draft on the foot, isn't it worth a trial?

Send your name to the Magic Foot Draft Co. They have so much confidence in the merit of the drafts that they send them to every sufferer in the world they can hear of—without a cent in advance. You pay One Dollar when satisfied with the benefit you receive—otherwise you pay nothing—you decide.

MAGIC

The Drafts are worn on the soles of the feet because the entire circulatory and nervous systems are most easily reached through the extremely sensitive skin at this point; but they relieve rheumatism in every part of the body, to stay relieved, by drawing the acid poisons out of the blood through the foot pores. Write to-day to the Magic Foot Draft Co., R. A. 9, Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a pair of Drafts free on approval and valuable free booklet on rheumatism.

MONEY EASILY EARNED

Lady agents can obtain valuable information in regard to a rapid selling article by writing to-day for terms and being first to represent us in your locality. Free samples furnished to secure orders with.

WARRIETTA STANLEY CO., 25 Fourth St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R-5, Lebanon, Ohio.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight, Biscuit, Cake and Doughnut Cutter, Apple Corer, and Strainer. 5 articles in one. See on sight. Large Catalog free. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N.Y.

THE TEMPERANCE FIELD

... In 1904 ...

WHEN the million of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shall have carefully considered the following serious facts, the writer thinks they will agree that a call to arms is imperatively necessary. Never in the history of temperance reform have the enemies of God and of man been so aggressive as at the end of the year 1903. The evidence of this aggressiveness is seen in the following:

Fact Number One.—At the eleventh annual meeting of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, held in the city of Pittsburgh, October 13, 14 and 15, it was voted unanimously to raise a fund of $5,000,000 "for defensive purposes," $750,000 to be raised in the State of New York, the rest in the other States.

Fact Number Two.—Ten picked men are to be sent to Washington as lobbyists and workers for the trade, together with the ablest legal counsellors. They are to defeat all restrictive legislation, and to secure the repeal of all laws that are obnoxious to liquor dealers, brewers and saloon-keepers. They are also to defend any liquor dealer who may be arrested for the violation of liquor laws, and to find loopholes in said laws, through which the saloon-keeper may escape punishment. A like committee is to be sent to every State in the Union, and be located at the capital of each State, for the same purpose as that in Washington, watching Congress.

Fact Number Three.—Two bills have already been introduced in Congress to repeal the Anti-Canteen law of 1900, and for months past a subsidized bureau in Washington has been sending out unfounded reports about the increase of drunkenness in the army since the banishing of liquor from the post exchanges, which reports, if true, are a reflection on every officer in the army for being unable to control his men, besides being a libel on the men themselves.

Fact Number Four.—The National Temperance Society, the moment these reports began to appear, appointed committees to investigate, and found in every case that the reports were absolutely unfounded, and gotten up by some rascal in the interest of the brewers. The reports of the committees of investigation have been published in pamphlet form by the National Society, and sent to every Congressman and Senator, and to the President and Cabinet.

Fact Number Five.—Tons of literature are being scattered broadcast by the National Liquor Dealers and Brewers Associations; showing, as they claim, the utter failure of Prohibition to prohibit, and that the passing of the Anti-Canteen Bill in 1900, was an egregious blunder. All this is being done to prepare the way for the restoration of the sale of liquor in the army post exchanges, and the repeal of all restrictive and prohibitory laws.

Fact Number Six.—Bills have been prepared, and are ready to be introduced in Albany, to legalize Sunday opening of the saloons in the city of New York, between 1 P.M. and 11 P.M.

Fact Number Seven.—At least five of the largest department stores have gone into the liquor business, in the Borough of Manhattan, and, in said stores, women buy and drink liquor, and have liquor sent home as "dry goods."

Fact Number Eight.—In addition to the 12,546 saloons and hotels in Greater New York, we have 1,106 licenses under Sec. 11, Sub. 2, and 558 under Sec. 11, Sub. 3. Making a total of 14,210 places where liquor or intoxicants are sold, and in the United States, some 240,000 places, drug stores, groceries, and now Department Stores, have gone into the business. Now, let me state briefly what is being done to counteract and offset the evil.

- To meet the attempt to repeal the Anti-Canteen bill, the National Temperance Society has been busy gathering evidence for use in Congress and throughout the country, showing the falsity of the reports of increased drunkenness. Said evidence is already in print, and can be obtained by sending to the Society's headquarters, 3 East 14 St., N. Y. City.
- The National Temperance Society has now two bills before Congress, one known as the Senate bill No. 1526, introduced by Senator Gallinger, the other calling for a Commission of Inquiry as to the traffic in alcoholic liquors.
- To meet the attempt to legalize Sunday opening, the Society has called a meeting of all the churches and temperance organizations, Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, Baptist Young People's Unions, and all kindred societies. Delegates are to be appointed to go to Albany and defeat the saloon opening on the Lord's Day, as has been done two years successively.
- The Society will have its men on guard in Washington, and at every State capitol. Literature will be scattered for educational and aggressive purposes. The Society appeals to the friends of sobriety everywhere for aid and support. It has confidence in God and the American people, that the sinews of war for the campaign against intemperance will be forthcoming.

HERVEY WOOD,
Field Sec. Nat. Temp. Soc.
3 East 14th St., New York.

Have you a little FAIRY in your home? We mean FAIRY SOAP of course!

There's more than one reason why you should insist on getting Fairy Soap at your grocer's or druggist's. Its purity is indicated by its whiteness; its refreshing odor makes it acceptable to the most delicate skin; its copious lather, its convenient shape—"fits the hand—fit for any hand"—and the dainty wrapping in separate cartons, complete a chain of reasons which justify our claims for supremacy.

FREE! Send us ten Fairy Soap oval box fronts (or if you prefer, 25 cents in stamps) and we will forward you a handsome collection of "10 Little Fairy" subjects. These pictures are artistic reproductions from photographs and will be admired and preserved by all lovers of children. Size 9 3/4 x 12 1/2 inches, FREE FROM ALL ADVERTISING MATTER, ready for framing.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Dept. 162, Chicago

FREE TRIPS

to the St. Louis

WORLD'S FAIR!

All Nations will be Represented

Better than a Trip Around the World

Our Plan is Unique:

We Will Pay Expenses of 3 People—7 Days

$100 in Cash Prizes also to be Divided among 3 People

You can win one of these Free Trips or a Cash Prize by selling OATINE, the wonderful new complexion beautifier. Our agents are earning $10 to $25 per week besides valuable premiums, and we are now going to give them IN ADDITION these unusual prize offers. WE TRUST YOU with an ample stock of Oatine and other toilet preparations. No money sent us till you sell the goods. DON'T MISS YOUR OPPORTUNITY—Write today, enclosing 2c stamp to pay postage on Samples, Catalog of Premiums and Beauty Book.

THE OATINE CO., 2448 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Illinois

30 Day's Free Trial

Standard Washer

We prepay all freight charges and deliver this direct to your door, absolutely free of charge. You try it thirty days; if you don't find it all and more than we claim, ship it back; we will pay return charges. This is different from any other washing machine ever made. Takes dirt out of wristbands, neckbands, collars, etc., thoroughly as it cleans blankets, sheets or pillow cases. Washday is a pleasure instead of a drudge. Don't delay but write at once and we will ship you a washer FREE by the next freight.

Don't Send Us a Cent, but drop a postal card to WIARD MFG. CO., 75 West Ave., East Avon, N. Y.

You pay five times too much for lamp-chimneys.

Buy good ones.
MACBETH.

If you use a wrong chimney, you lose a good deal of both light and comfort, and waste a dollar or two a year a lamp on chimneys.

Do you want the Index? Write me.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

X-RAY Stove Polish

Ask Dealer for it.

Is Guaranteed to go twice as far as paste or liquid polishes. X-RAY gives a quick, brilliant lustre and does not burn off. A 2c. Stamp will bring a Sample from Lamont, Corliss & Co., Agents, 78 Hudson Street, New York City.

The WOODEN HEN

A high-class self-regulating incubator on a small scale. Fifty egg capacity. Heat, moisture and ventilation automatically and perfectly controlled. Price only $6.80. Send for the Wooden Hen Book; mailed free, together with a book containing 14 colored views and telling all about the EXCELSIOR INCUBATOR, if you name this paper.

GEO. H. STAHL, Quincy, Illinois.

INCREASE YOUR INCOME

by learning profitable poultry raising. We successfully teach it in all its branches. Seven distinct courses by correspondence, also a residence course at our 60-acre poultry farm. Our faculty are practical poultrymen, who can and will make you a successful poultry raiser. This fascinating and profitable business is still in its infancy and there are tremendous opportunities for those who begin NOW. Write to-day for illustrated booklet fully describing our various courses of instruction. Columbia School of Poultry Culture, Box 614, Waterville, N. Y.

No Cold Corners

In Iowa Round Incubators

No half warmed eggs. By "round" system every egg gets same heat—bigger per cent of eggs hatched. Special regulator overcomes atmospheric changes. Free catalog tells the whole story.

IOWA INCUBATOR COMPANY, BOX 246, DES MOINES, IOWA

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY BOOK ON

and ALMANAC for 1904, contains 212 pages with fine colored plates true to life. It tells all about chickens, their care, diseases and remedies. All about INCUBATORS and how to operate them. All about poultry houses and how to build them. It is really an encyclopedia of chickendom, and no one can afford to be without it. Price only 15c.

C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 702, FREEPORT, ILL.

INCUBATORS

From $6 up. Best reasonable priced hatcheries on the market.

Brooders, $4 up. None better at any price. Fully warranted. Catalog free.

L. A. BANTA, LIGONIER, IND.

DEATH TO HEAVEN

Guaranteed.

NEWTON'S HEAVE, COUGH, DISTEMPERS AND INDIGESTION REMEDY. A veterinary specific for wind, throat and stomach troubles. Strongly recommended. $1.00 per can. Dealers Mail or Express paid.

Newton Horse Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years

FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly

STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; etc.

TEMPTATION VANQUISHED

Christ an Example to his Followers

MRS. M. BAXTER

HOW often the devil has whispered to us, "If it is possible for you to be tempted as you are, it is proof that the Holy Spirit does not dwell in you." It is just because our Lord himself was filled with the Spirit, that his Father saw him, as man, in a position where he could be trusted with temptation. It was necessary also that the presence of the Holy Spirit in him as the second Adam, the head of a people who should walk in newness of life, should be proved by his conquest over temptation; being "tempted in all points like as we are" (Heb. 4: 15). It is to the everlasting honor of Abraham that God chose him to endure such special tests; it is to the glory of Job that God should have chosen him alone in his generation to go through such unparalleled afflictions, and still not deny God.

Temptation was no sham or semblance to the Lord Jesus. He "suffered, being tempted" (Heb. 2: 18). The temptation lasted forty days (Mark 1: 13; Luke 4: 1, 2). That which is recorded is only the climax. His only preparation for it was his being filled with the Spirit; his only power was weakness, physical weakness; for in those forty days he did eat nothing; spiritual weakness, for he said later on, "The Son can do nothing of himself" (John 5: 19). Moses, the giver of the law, must fast twice forty days and forty nights, but he was each time, although bearing the people on his heart, alone with and upheld by God, in such glory that the children of Israel could not look upon his face when he came down from the mountain. Elijah must fast forty days and forty nights on Mount Horeb (I. Kings 19: 3). He also had the burden of the people on his heart, but he went into his fast with the ministry of an angel, and he came out of it with a special revelation of the Lord. Our blessed Lord was tempted of Satan alone, with the wild beasts, but led of the Spirit; and even then he could say, "He that hath sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone, for I do always those things that please him" (John 8: 2).

The first of the three recorded temptations of the Lord Jesus touched his sonship. "If thou art the Son of God." The voice of God from heaven had declared, "This is my beloved Son. But the enemy would come as he came to Eve, with a doubt as to the goodness of God. Could a Father allow his Son to suffer thus? Was it the leading of a loving Father to let his Son suffer all these forty days, alone with the tempter and the wild beasts? Could the Son of God be subjected to such an experience? Art thou indeed what thou dost claim to be? If thou art, put an end to thy sufferings, and command that these stones be made bread. Thou hast the power, use it. But the vocation of the Lord: "Lo, I come to do thy will," did not admit of doing or saying anything independently of his Father. "He answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Thus he has taught us how to meet such suggestions of the enemy with the Word alone.

Life by the Word of God is little understood in the Church of Christ. Man lives by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. What God says, and what he has caused to be written, has power to vanquish the enemy, and power to maintain the life, physical and spiritual, of the child of God. What he says, in contradistinction to what appears, to what we think, to what men say. There is life-power in every word of God.

"It is not a vain thing for you, for it is your life" (Deut. 32: 47). "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, they are life" (John 6: 63). When God says a thing we have never to count on possibilities and probabilities; it is enough that he who says it is the guarantee of what he asserts. It is his part to make it true to us, to watch over his Word to perform it (Jer. 1: 12). Our Lord knew the life-power which lay in the written Word, and without entering into the specious question raised by the tempter's insinuation against God, and against his own Sonship; instead of accepting his proffered sympathy in the trial he passed through, the Lord vanquished him with "It is written."

"Better Food"

Better Chopped Better Cooked

No. 100. Price $1.50

ENTERPRISE FOOD CHOPPER

Makes better food possible—raises the standard of cooking. Thoroughly chops meats, vegetables, fruits, bread, etc. With this chopper it is a simple matter to convert "leftovers" into dainty dishes. For chopping mince meat, hash, croquettes, fish balls, in fact anything, it will save its cost in short time. The name "Enterprise" on every machine. Write for free catalogue of household helps, and send 4 cents for the "Enterprising Housekeeper" containing 200 receipts.

The Enterprise Mfg. Co. of Pa. Philadelphia, Pa.

Factory Price

Direct to You

We are the only general merchandise house which owns, controls and directly manages a vehicle factory. We build our vehicles from the ground up and know what's under the paint. We add but one small profit to the cost of material and labor, hence our customers are getting a better made job in a finer finish and at a lower price than can possibly be secured elsewhere.

$19.80

"LEADER" Road Wagon—Imitation leather trimmed; carpet, wrench and shafts; just as illustrated. Write for further description.

$25.50

"CHALLENGE" Buggy—24 in. body, cloth trimmed; top, back and side curtains, storm apron, carpet and shafts. Write for details.

We also have better grades up to the very best and most stylish that can possibly be put together.

VEHICLE CATALOGUE FREE. Send for it today. It will give particulars about the above work. It also illustrates and describes the newest and best line of Runabouts, Stanhopes, Buggies, Phaetons, Surreys, Carriages, Carts, Spring Wagons, etc., ever quoted direct to the buyer. It explains the difference between good and unreliable work—between the hand-painted and the dipped buggy—and also explains our Guarantee of Satisfaction and

30 Days' Trial Offer.

Send a postal today for our Vehicle Cat. No. E1.

Montgomery Ward & Co.

Chicago

A special circular quoting our entire line of Sleighs, Sleds, etc., will be sent at the same time, if you request it.

$200. A MONTH

One reliable man or woman in each county as manager, to exhibit, take orders and appoint agents for Harrison's Oil-Gas Stoves for cooking and heating. Wonderful invention. Automatically generates fuel gas from kerosene oil. Miniature Gas Works. Absolutely safe. Enormous demand. Thousands sold weekly. Cheapest, cleanest, safest fuel. Customers delighted. Catalogue FREE. Write today.

World Mfg. Co., 5576 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

The "SUN"

OUT-SHINES THEM ALL

MUSIC LESSONS FREE,

at your home. For a limited time we will give, free, 48 music lessons on either Piano, Organ, Banjo, Guitar, Cornet, Violin or Mandolin (your expense will only be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is hundreds worth). Wish I had known of your school before. Any instrument supplied, cash or credit. For booklet, testimonials and FREE tuition contract, Address, U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, BOX 649, 19 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

"A handful of dirt may be a houseful of shame." Keep your house clean, with

It's FREE

"Kitchen Experience"

By Christine Terhune Herrick

The latest book from the pen of this popular writer is free. Tells the best way to do everything in the kitchen, besides describing the most wonderful of all kitchen ware—

ROYAL Granite Steel Ware

(Patented)

Clean as china. Light, yet Durable. No solder or rust; absolutely safe. Low in price—long in life, therefore most economical. See it at any store. Look for the label.

Dept. J NAT'L ENAMELING & STAMPING CO., 81 Fulton St., New York.

Not a drop can touch you when your buggy is closed up by the

Blizzard Storm Front

Patented in United States and Canada.

Fits any buggy.

Adjusted in 30 seconds without getting out or removing gloves, sides open and close as quickly and easily as a door, large line pocket, guaranteed satisfactory. The large window, 12 x 20 inches, is a pliable transparent material that won't break. Rubber Cloth, $3.00; Heavy Rubber Cloth, $3.50. Trade-mark "Blizzard" stamped under drive pocket inside. If your dealer hasn't it, write us. Illustrated booklet free.

Vehicle Apron & Hood Co., 208 E. Rich St., Columbus, O.

One Hundred Dollars For Your Church

Ten or more ladies can easily earn One Hundred Dollars for their church between now and Feb. 1st, 1904, by doing a little personal work for us. As this offer will be made to only one church in each town, we suggest that you be the first to write for particulars.

THE ANTHONY MFG. CO., Ltd., 25 Jefferson Ave. Battle Creek, Mich.

Corns You don't need to be bothered with corns, or risk the danger of blood-poisoning that comes from cutting them. A-CORN SALVE is a sure relief, and costs but 15c. at your druggist's or by mail.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

Are You Deaf?

We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING. Sent on approval. Write for catalogue.

WM. V. WILLIS & CO., 134 South 11th Street, Philadelphia

SUN Incandescent Gasoline LAMP

Cheaper than any other. 1/4 the cost of kerosene. Brilliant and restful to the eyes. Best for home, hall, church and business.

Makes its own Gas

Conforms to insurance underwriters' rules. Branch supply depots in all larger cities. Write for catalogue. Liberal commission. Agents write.

Sun Vapor Light Co. BOX 700 CANTON, OHIO. (Licensees of the ground patents for Vapor Lamps)

SAPOLIO

HOW TO OVERCOME*

Victory Assured to the Tempted One who Relies on Divine Power

ONE of the most vital forms of knowledge that can come to any man is that of the way by which he may overcome in his conflict with the tempter. That conflict is inevitable. The best of men are tempted. Even our Lord himself did not escape. In four forms, peculiarly adapted to his unparalleled situation, temptation assailed him, but he resisted and conquered. That he should have had to pass through the ordeal, should be a consoling thought to many who are depressed by the idea that they must be very vile, otherwise temptation would not reach them. There is no disgrace, no implication of unusual depravity in being tempted. It is only in yielding that there is evil.

There is no need to yield. In thinking of temptation, that fact should be clearly realized. We are not under compulsion, and therefore if we fall, it is our own fault. Victory is sure to those who resist to the end. Hints are given in the passages associated with the Topic, and in others scattered through the Bible as to the best measures of defence. One of the first is vigilance. Every man should know what is his peculiar weakness. One who is not liable to fall through drink, having no liking for intoxicating liquor, may have reason to fear a temptation to dishonesty, or to the indulgence of lust. Some weak place in the citadel there is sure to be, and there the strongest guard should be placed. When that propensity is known, he approaches to it should be carefully watched. The places to which one man may go, without harm to himself, ought to be avoided by another.

When the temptation comes, the tempted one should have recourse to prayer. He who himself was tempted sympathizes with his follower and will give help. Very often he does not remove the temptation, but he gives the strength necessary to overcome it. Only, it must be remembered that the fight must be kept up. We must do our part. Christ gives the victory, not when we give up and leave the conflict to him, but when relying on his power we resist, and continue the struggle till it ends in victory.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, and Baptist Young People's Union for January 17. Cor. 10: 12, 13; Heb. 4: 14-16.

5% INSTEAD of 3½ or 4 per cent.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.
ASSETS, $1,700,000.
SURPLUS & PROFITS $175,000.
Under New York Banking Dept. Supervision.

YOU can get more complete, reliable information about this Company's standing, resources and reputation, than you are apt to have concerning institutions paying 3½ or 4 per cent. for the use of your funds. Such knowledge is worth having, whether you decide to become an investor or not.

Write Us.

5 per cent. per annum—quarterly dividends. Withdrawal at your pleasure, and full earnings paid to you from the day your funds were received.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
1131 Broadway, New York.

We Carpet Your Floor $3
Write us now for
Bruxelle Art Rugs
Written on both sides, all colors and designs, in imitation of Sanitary, Artistic, Economical
Rugs—squares, rectangles, circles, etc. Made in Belgium. Guaranteed to be the best quality. No other rug in the world. Made in Belgium. Guaranteed to be the best quality. No other rug in the world.

LEARN PROOFREADING

Write us now for Catalogue of Home Correspondence School, Philadelphia.

EVERYTHING for the GARDEN

is the title of Our New Catalogue for 1904—the most superb and instructive horticultural publication of the day—190 pages—700 engravings—8 superb colored plates of vegetables and flowers.

To give this catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope

Counts as Cash

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen and who encloses Ten Cents (in stamps), we will mail the catalogue, and also send free of charge, our famous 50-Cent "Henderson" Collection of seeds, containing one packet each of Sweet Peas, Large Mixed Hybrids; Peas, Giant Fancy Mixed; Asparagus, Early Mixed; Big Boston Lettuce; Early Ruby Tomato and Cardinal Radish in a coupon envelope, which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & CO

35 & 37 Canal Street, New York City.

ANY LADY

Can easily earn our big 62 piece, decorated Dinner Set by selling 60 packages of RUBBER MENDING TISSUE at Ten Cents per package.

Every housekeeper will appreciate it for mending torn clothing, silks, satins, kid gloves, umbrellas, rubber goods, shoes, hemming bottoms of skirts, trousers and other uses too numerous to mention here.

NO MONEY REQUIRED

Simply say you will sell or return the tissue in 4 weeks and we will send you a trial order of twelve packages, postpaid.

Also an illustrated list of many valuable premiums, such as skirts, furs, granite ware, lace curtains, rugs, watches, rings, silver ware, guns, pocket knives, etc., all of which you can obtain without investing one cent of your own money.

We refer by special permission to the Farmers & Traders Nat'l Bank, or you may step into your local bank, ask them to look in their Com'l Agency books and they will tell you we stand high in the business world!

CHAS. T. WALTHALL & CO., B 13, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The Strongest Fence Made

To sell direct to the farmer the strongest fence in the world, we must not only use the best HIGH CARBON SPRING STEEL WIRE, heavily galvanized, but we must build so that the greatest textile strength of material is maintained. Sixteen years, spent in perfecting Coiled Spring Fence, each year showing an added degree of perfection, has brought us to a point where we can proclaim with a confidence born of attainment that

OUR FENCE IS THE CHEAPEST AND BEST

Cheapest because the highest skill of the craft has been utilized to reduce the cost of manufacture, and this achievement, coupled with the largest output of the largest and best equipped plant in the United States devoted to fence manufacture, enables us to name you the VERY LOWEST PRICE AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT. Buy direct. We sell to you as cheap as dealers can buy. Put the dealer's profit in your own pocket. Examination permitted at your station; your money back if not as represented. Completion of sale rests wholly upon your judgment. Write us; we have something more to say to you. After correspondence is opened, you have your judgment to defend your interests at every advance of the deal. Our Catalogue is free, and is full of fence lore.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY,

Winchester, Indiana, U. S. A.

Box 47

32 years ago we occupied one room with two clerks and published a catalogue a quarter the size of a hymn-book.

We Want You to Try Us

and test for yourself our ability to please you. Tell us what kind of goods you are interested in and we will send you without charge any of the following illustrated special catalogues quoting wholesale prices. Merely mention the number or letter of the catalogue you want.

100 Artists' Supplies	170 Kitchen Supplies	235 Stoves	R Fancy Grade Furniture
105 Athletic Goods	175 Laces, Embroideries, Ribbons, Trimmings	240 Toys, Dolls and Games	T Trunks
110 Blacksmiths' and Machinists' Tools	180 Lamps and Lanterns	245 Underwear	U Youth's and Boy's Clothing
115 Builders' Hardware and Supplies	185 Linoleums, Carpets and Curtains	250 Vehicles	V Men's Made-to-order Clothing with samples of fabrics. Suits $10.50 to $16.50
120 Carpenter and Builders' Tools and Materials	190 Men's Hats and Gloves	255 Wagonmakers' Supplies	V2 Same as V1 except suit prices $8.00 to $20.00
125 Crockery and Glassware	195 Men's Shoes	260 Watches and Clocks	VO Made-to-order Overcoats with samples
130 Cutlery	200 Men's Wearing Apparel	265 Women's Shoes	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing
135 Dry Goods	205 Music and Musical Instruments	300 Women's Catalogue (Cloaks, Furs, Suits, Skirts, Waists, Hats, etc.)	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing
140 Fancy and Novelty Goods	210 Notions	B Bicycles	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing
145 Farm Implements	215 Saddles and Saddlebags	C Bicycles	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing
150 Fishing tackle	220 Silverware	D Bicycles	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing
155 Popular-priced Furniture	225 Sporting Goods	G Bicycles	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing
160 Harness	230 Stationery and Office Supplies	H Bicycles	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing
165 Jewelry		J Bicycles	W Men's Ready-Made Clothing

—Cut this slip out and send it TODAY—

Enclosed find 15 cents for partial postage on Catalogue No. 72, four 2c stamps for Wall Hanger or 20c for both.

Name _____ (Be sure and write very plainly.)

Postoffice _____

Route No. _____ County _____ State _____

"Grandfather Traded With Us"

One of the greatest joys of this great business is the many kind letters we receive daily from our customers, expressing their pleasure and satisfaction with our goods and methods. Often the most significant part of the letter is embodied in the few words: "My grandfather traded with you years ago." It is the complete confidence of our customers in our honesty, born of past experience in dealing here, that enables us to hold their continued trade.

One-time special "below cost offerings" to catch an occasional customer, and making up the loss on subsequent orders, would never build a business like ours.

It is the constant saving and steady stream of pleasant business relations which makes our patrons eager to speak a good word for us at every opportunity.

Our prices are 15 to 50 per cent below regular retail figures.

Our Big Catalogue contains over 1100 pages and wholesale prices on Groceries, Dry Goods, Crockery, Hardware, Furniture, Harness, Implements, Vehicles, Clothing (all kinds for Men, Women and Children), Millinery, Musical Instruments, Sewing Machines, Bicycles, Sporting Goods—practically everything that anybody could want.

It also contains freight rates, full instructions for ordering, and tells you everything you might want to know about us.

Ordering is easy from this wonderful book, which costs us almost one dollar apiece to print and send out.

Send for it today and save the profit you pay your dealer. You can get your money back if your purchases are not satisfactory. Fill out this slip, enclosing 15 cents for partial postage as a guarantee of good faith.

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

Michigan Ave., Madison & Washington Sts., Chicago

Complete satisfaction or money refunded without question.

Send four 2-cent stamps for our

10 Color Wall Hanger

showing the inside of this building, with the goods and the clerks at work. One of the most complex and complicated pieces of lithography ever attempted. Very interesting and attractive. You can get it for what it cost us—four 2c stamps.

Today, we occupy more than 200 times as much floor space, employ over 3000 people and our catalogue contains over 1100 large pages.

CLUB EMBLEM

Everybody May Apply
Housewives, Students, Teachers, Farmers, Merchants, Doctors, Clergymen, Stenographers, Nurses—in short every reader of The Christian Herald is invited to answer this announcement.

Do Your Dollars Come Slow And Go Fast?

The Century Life-Insurance Club is pre-eminently an institution of thrift, and helpfulness, and financial success. It solves the problem of easy life-insurance for the people. The Club's wonderful "Neighborhood Plan" produces a better income for YOU. If you are thinking about life-insurance, or think that you ought to be thinking about it, the Century Life-Insurance Club will help you

Or, if you are carrying life-insurance that seems burdensome you need to know the Club's easy instalment method as adapted to the highest-grade policies issued to Club members by one of the strong and reliable old-line insurance companies.

Or, if you want to get more money than you've got now (without letting go of your present position), you can get it through membership in the Century Club. Day by day, week by week, month by month, the dollars will come to you in exact proportion to your activity and loyalty to Club interests.

Men, women and young people of sincerity and health, who are able to save just a few dollars each month, are eligible for membership, no matter where they may live.

The Club's instructive literature—consisting of the finest insurance booklets ever printed—will be mailed free by the Secretary, on request, together with an illustration of a policy for $1,000, suited to your age, a blank application for membership, and full particulars as to how members immediately increase their income in a pleasant and happy way.

Enthusiastic members in every State and Territory attest the fact that the Century Club is the most potential and helpful insurance influence of the hour.

HOW TO JOIN

Write to-day. Please do not fail to answer the two following questions in your first letter, for if you do, the Secretary will have to write back and ask them over again.

1st. WHAT IS YOUR OCCUPATION?

2d. WHAT IS THE EXACT DATE OF YOUR BIRTH?

Prompt action is advised, as the present Series is limited to ONE THOUSAND MEMBERSHIPS, which are pretty well taken.

CENTURY LIFE-INSURANCE CLUB, Section Q., 5, 7 and 9 East 42nd Street, New York.
RICHARD WIGHTMAN, Secretary.

LEATHER CASES AND EMBLEMS.

Each Club policy is beautifully engrossed and enclosed in a seal-leather case with the member's name inscribed in gold-leaf. It is the edition de luxe of life-insurance, and forms altogether the most attractive and interesting financial equipment ever offered. Each member also receives the Club emblem wrought artistically in enamel and gold.

GRATITUDE, CONFIDENCE, REGRET.

"I am grateful for having the opportunity to become a member of the Club. I have been much pleased by the courteous and business like way in which my application has been treated, and with the evident desire on the part of the Club management to be in every way helpful to the members. I now have such confidence in the Club's method that I regret not having taken a policy for a larger amount. Enclosed please find my monthly deposit."
A. M. F., BOSTON.

MEMBERS' ROOM, CENTURY LIFE-INSURANCE CLUB

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, JANUARY 13, 1904

VOL. 27—NO. 2. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

Finding the Key-note of the Anthem

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Theodore S., Bay City, Wis. 1. How many soldiers took part in the Civil War on both sides, and how many were sacrificed or died, directly and indirectly, through wounds or sickness? 2. When was Uncle Tom's Cabin first published?

1. According to the Provost Marshal's report (1866) the number of casualties among United States volunteers and regulars from 1861-65 was: Killed in battle, 61,362; died of wounds, 34,727; of disease, 183,287. Confederate troops who died of wounds or disease (partial statement) 133,821; United States troops who died while prisoners, 29,725; Confederates who died while prisoners, 26,774. 2. It was published in 1852.

Reader, Oreg. What church did our Lord establish? How many denominations were organized by the apostles?

Christ established a kingdom. His reference to a church in his words to Peter (Matt. 16:18) relates to the general body of his followers who owe their allegiance to him. That they are found in different denominations indicates their being allied to one another in details, according to their ideas of doctrine, ritual, church-government, etc., while differing with other Christians on the same subjects. If they have been born again, and are loyally following Christ, they are in the church that Christ established, as are those who are in the same state, in some other denomination. Many regiments but one army. We are not told how many denominations the apostles established; but we may well believe from the Acts and the Epistles that in their time there were differences as radical, if not as numerous as now. The tendency to separation is clearly indicated in I. Cor. 1:12. Other passages imply that Paul's converts would not have been comfortable in a church organized by James.

Inquirer, Brooklyn, N. Y. A lecturer recently declared of a certain lady that she was a Spartan mother. What were the characteristics of the Spartan mothers?

They trained their sons to endurance, loyalty and self-sacrifice. One of them, as she gave her son a shield on the day of his departure on a campaign, said to him, "Return with this shield or on it." That is to die rather than flee. She would prefer to see him carried home dead on his shield than see him return defeated and stripped of his arms. The story of Leonidas and his brave company at Thermopylae is an indication of the result of the training of the Spartan mother.

Mr. Morrison's book, How I Worked My Way Around the World, which you sent me as a premium, is so completely fascinating. I was obliged to hide it for fear a pressure of work would be neglected. I have been a great reader for seventy years, but think this book as interesting and charming in style as any I ever read. A. B. PARMELIE.

Mrs. L. F. R., Deposit, N. Y. Is water standing in a room overnight healthy to drink?

No. Water aids in purifying the atmosphere of a room, but it is not considered fit to drink after standing in a close atmosphere for several hours. Though it may do no harm, pure, fresh water is safer and pleasanter.

A. T. L., Pittsburg, Pa. Is there such a thing as proper dancing? What attitude should a Christian take on the general subject? Should he be tolerant or positive?

In the great discussion which is now agitating our churches, as to "letting down the bars" on the question of amusements, dancing occupies a prominent place. There are, doubtless, many good, well-meaning people, who, never having fully considered the subject, are disposed to be tolerant regarding the dance, and do not sympathize with the strenuous opposition that is displayed toward it by many in and out of the pulpit. We think, however, that the attitude of the earnest Christian toward dancing should be the same as that toward cards—no compromise. A thing is either right, or it is wrong, and even in its least objectionable aspect, dancing is a physical dissipation, a waste of time, an invitation to doubtful promiscuous acquaintanceship, and an association which is difficult to describe as other than immodest. "Dancing," says an authority, "breaks down the bounds of modesty." Late hours, crowded rooms, unnatural excitement, and peril of colds from exposure, are among the other objections which any sensible person might urge. In the Christian, it is enough to know that the ball-room has been the first step to ruin for countless multitudes. It has never helped one soul, and has destroyed many. These considerations should make the earnest inquirer shun such follies and avoid even the appearance of evil. Though he himself might not fall, his example might be the means of leading weaker souls to destruction.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—We received the Calendar, and thank you very much indeed. We call them "our four lovely little girls," and are very proud of them, so much so that we have given each of them a name—Lillie, Rose, Grace and Holly. Toronto, Can. HENRY GOODERHAM.

J. A. D., Beaver Falls, Pa., writes:

In regard to the word "obey," in the marriage ceremony, it makes no difference to the wife whether it is left in or omitted. The relationship

"Bible Songs," or "Songs of the Ages," selections from the Psalms. No true child of God can ever tire of them. BELLE W.

Southwick, Idaho.

Subscriber, Philadelphia, Pa. Is it true that Carlyle was an infidel?

It is not; neither can it be said that he was a Christian. He was brought up in the strict faith of the Church of Scotland, but was never an orthodox believer. To the last, however, he contended that the difference between him and his pious mother was not in essentials. His belief in God, in a future judgment, in the reward of the righteous and the punishment of the wrongdoer, and his profound veneration for Jesus Christ were unflinching. Many passages in his works indicate a conception of God existing in all forms of life, which show a tendency to Pantheism.

F. S. M., Rochester, N. Y. Are evangelists justified in inviting persons who have not repented of their sins to accept Christ and trust in him?

It is the natural order for repentance to precede faith, and it does so in many cases, because consciousness of sin and sorrow for it leads to, or prepares the way for the joyful avalay referred to the vigor and permanence of the Roman Catholic Church. He said that it had been powerful long before the existing civilized governments came into being, and it would remain powerful when some visitor from New Zealand took his seat on a broken arch of London Bridge, to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's. That is, it will be powerful when Great Britain has fallen into decay.

W. M. C., Draketown, N. Y. Were the ten commandments inscribed on the tables of stone by God's own hand, as would appear from Ex. 24:12, or were they inscribed by Moses at God's command, as some people claim.

The tables referred to in the passage you quote were destroyed by Moses in his indignation when he witnessed the idolatry of the people (See Ex. 32:19). Two other tables were afterwards prepared, on which Moses inscribed, at God's command, the same ten commandments (See Ex. 34:27, 28).

G. W. H., Globe, Ariz. 1. Capital punishment, as now practised, is unquestionably a relic of barbarism. The very worst use you can put a man to is to put him to death. We believe there will yet come a time when society will understand this. 2. Our present methods of dealing with criminals are not reformatory, but rather the reverse. They usually result in hardening the offender, and confirming him in evil courses.

A. E. H., Brainerd, Minn. Is there any knowledge of what became of the Ark of the Covenant? Where is the last mention of it? Can there be any truth in the statement that it was taken to Ireland and buried there?

There is no record of it after its being placed in Solomon's Temple (I. Kings 8:6-9, and II. Chron. 5:4). Jeremiah mentions it (3:16, 17), but does not say if it was in existence in his day. It is not in the list of treasures which Nebuzaradan carried to Babylon (II. Kings 25:13-17). If it had been among them, it would naturally have been the first on the list. It is probable that when the city was besieged, the Levites hid it, and the secret of its hiding-place was lost. There is not the slightest ground for the story that it was taken to Ireland.

U. R. Dennison, Minn. Was the choice of Solomon the best he could have made?

It was evidently approved of God as being better than others that he might have made (see I. Chron. 1:11, 12). His subsequent career, however, showed that wisdom alone was not enough. If he had asked and received the power and the will to do the things that his wisdom showed him to be right, he would have been saved from great sin and sorrow.

Miscellaneous Questions

Charles S., Red Oak, Ia. Penologists estimated that fully 70 per cent. of the criminals in our prisons are to be classed as "uneducated." Thirty per cent. cannot read or write.

M. E. R., Medaryville. 1. There is no essential difference between the Presbyterian and Congregational denominations on creed. 2. Ministers do not need to be guarded here or anywhere else in the United States in the way you mention. They have nothing to fear. 3. Mr. Merritt has denied in the public prints that he ever joined the Dowie church.

J. H. H., New Bedford. Your Calendar pleases me exceedingly.

These little souls look coy and shy,
With blooming cheek and sparkling eye,
Right up to date, within a shrine
Of dainty wings, that do entwine
And make them each a Butterfly.

Did You Pay Express Charges?

When THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sends out a premium it prepays all express charges. No express company has the right to collect charges on any premium sent out by us, and we request all subscribers from whom charges have been collected by the express companies on CHRISTIAN HERALD premiums, to send us the name of the premium, the name of the express company, and the receipt for the money paid, and we will see that a proper refund is made.

4,000 BASKETS READY FOR THE SALVATION ARMY'S GREAT CHRISTMAS DINNER

It is estimated that 250,000 poor, living in cities and towns in different parts of the United States, were the beneficiaries of the Salvation Army's generosity at Christmas time. In New York City, at the Grand Central Palace, on Christmas morning, 4,000 baskets, each containing a dinner for five persons, were distributed to the deserving poor. After this distribution, 180 tables were spread with a substantial meal, and over 5,000 persons were fed and made happy. At the close, a spiritual meeting was held, in charge of Commander Booth-Tucker. Another notable event of Christmas week was the dinner to thousands of homeless men and boys at the Bowery Mission, the expense of which was defrayed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers.

of wife puts her in the same relation to her husband that the Church sustains to Christ, Eph. 5:22-24. What this means is explained in Col. 3:18. "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as is fit in the Lord." This is her saving clause; it really makes the Christian, loving wife superior to her husband. She is to judge what is "fit in the Lord" and what is not. Then follows the oft-repeated command, 5:19, "Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them."

Reader, Chicago, Ill. What stand do the churches take about admitting members of the Masonic Order to communion?

We believe the Roman Catholic Church is the only one that excludes Freemasons. Dr. Dowie excludes them from Zion, but, so far as we have heard, they are not rejected by any other church.

Here is an interesting suggestion apropos of the "Sacred Song Reform" discussion:

Why not take the Psalms—God's words? What better can anyone ever expect to get? They are the same as all the rest of God's blessed Word. The more we sing them, the dearer they grow. I do not wonder that one gets tired of the greater part of the common hymns. I would suggest realization of the Saviour's work. It is, however, quite possible for faith to come first, and it will surely lead to repentance. Paul's reply to the jailer (Acts 16:31) made faith the first duty. When the soul trusts in Christ for salvation, loves him and tries to be like him, sin becomes hateful, and there is genuine sorrow for having committed it. There is also a turning from it, which is an essential element of repentance.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I received THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Calendar and Red Letter Bible, and am well pleased with them. Accept my thanks for so fine a premium. I can cheerfully recommend THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as an up-to-date paper, always full of good things for its readers.

Salisbury, Pa. ELIZABETH MENTZER.

L. E. S., Los Angeles, Cal. Can you tell me something about "Macaulay's New Zealander" to whom I find frequent references in editorials and books?

The reference is to a passage in Macaulay's review of Ranke's History of the Popes. Mac-

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

THE MIKADO OF JAPAN

ADMIRAL ALLEXIEFF AND STAFF REVIEWING TROOPS AT PORT ARTHUR

THE CZAR OF RUSSIA

WAR OR PEACE IN THE FAR EAST?

Russia and Japan Preparing for Emergencies — A Conflict Which May Involve Both Europe and the United States

RUSSIA and Japan stripped for battle by land and sea; France, Germany and Great Britain in readiness for complications that may drag them into the conflict, should war actually come; the United States an interested and by no means passive observer of events which may affect our most material interests in the East—such is the situation, stated briefly, which is now giving rise to uneasiness in every civilized capital in the world.

For several months past, diplomatic exchanges have been going on between the Czar's Government and the Mikado's ministers on the two principal questions in dispute between these powers, viz: the Russian occupation of Manchuria (which was to have been terminated long ago), and the rival and sharply conflicting Russian and Japanese interests in Corea. After many futile efforts to reach an understanding with Japan concerning Manchuria, Russia, in her latest official communication to the Tokio government, practically gave notice that no interference with her imperial schemes in Manchuria would be tolerated or considered. Russia had built the Trans-Siberian Railroad, and had extended her military control over Chinese territory, notwithstanding the repeated protests of China and warnings from Japan and other nations. Chinese official resistance had been successfully dealt with, and Russia now hoped, by continuing to follow her policy of "holding on and doing nothing," to overcome the objections from all other quarters as well.

But Japan took a different view of the Manchurian question. If the integrity of China were threatened, and if that great but effete empire were allowed to come under Russian influence, it would be the beginning of its disintegration as a power in the East. Moreover, it would threaten the whole Asiatic fabric of empire; for it is an ancient characteristic of Russia, in accordance with the famous policy of Peter the Great, where once she obtains a foothold in new territory, never to withdraw. China Russianized, even to a limited extent, would mean an ultimate danger to Japan that might well be regarded as menacing her prestige among the powers of the world, and even her national existence.

As to Corea, the situation is even more acute. Ever since the Chino-Japanese war (which was fought out partly on Corean soil), Japan has regarded Corea as a land in which, by her rights as a victor, she had claims to consideration that took precedence of those of any other nation. Japan has steadily enlarged her interests in Corea, in anticipation of the time when Russia would come forward as a claimant in the same quarter. That time has now arrived. Russia has obtained valuable concessions in Corea, and she has endeavored by various diplomatic and other measures, to make these concessions of great strategic value. Japan has built important railroads there, and has a considerable number of her subjects scattered throughout the little empire. Step by step Russia has reached out in Corea, until the climax was reached when the two rival interests came into sharp conflict. Then came the demand from Japan for a free hand in Corea, coupled with the fur-

Government claims to be entitled to the sympathy of the other powers in the present crisis. It is not an exaggeration of the fact to say that she has the sympathy of both England and the United States, both on the ground of international comity and fair-dealing, and also because the two governments named have personal interests that are affected to some extent by Russia's course in Manchuria.

In anticipation of a conflict, both Russia and Japan have made preparations on a most extensive scale. Both governments have placed large orders for meats with the great American packing-houses. Both have hurried naval preparations, and there are powerful Russian and Japanese fleets of warships in readiness at available points, for emergent action. From Tokio, comes the news by cable that an emergency ordinance has been promulgated, which invests the Government with virtually unlimited credit for defence. The despatch says:

Three other ordinances were issued at the same time. The first relates to the Seoul-Fusan railway, which is to be brought under closer official control. The second provides for a revision of the organization of imperial military headquarters in time of war. The third establishes a war council in time of war. These ordinances complete Japan's preparations for any emergency. The authorization thus granted empowers the Government to draw upon 50,000,000 yen of the Chinese war indemnity, and to raise temporary loans by the issue of exchequer bonds or otherwise. The Government will guarantee six per cent. dividends for the Seoul-Fusan railway, which will be transformed into a semi-official corporation, under Government supervision.

The war council will comprise the Field Marshals, the Ministers of War and of Marine, the chiefs of the military and naval staffs, and certain Generals and Admirals.

In St. Petersburg, there is a strong war clamor, in which, according to the cable dispatches, "there is considerable feeling against the English and American peoples owing to their sympathies for Japan." There is no official justification for apprehension, as far as the United States is concerned, for whatever the sentiment of our people may be, our Government has maintained an attitude of absolute neutrality throughout the entire trouble. France, Germany and Austria are believed to be in strong sympathy with Russia, but unless some unforeseen incident arises, it is probable that these powers will remain neutral, as the active

The Russian Fleet

The Japanese Fleet

LEADING WARSHIPS OF THE TWO RIVAL FLEETS IN COREAN WATERS

ther demand that Russia should abandon further encroachments in that quarter.

There are, of course, many other considerations that enter into this dispute between the two nations, but they are chiefly matters of detail. The essentials are those already stated. Japan holds that her war with China in 1894, which was chiefly waged to settle disputes over Corea, fixed Japan's status and influence as paramount in Corean and in Chinese affairs. Further, she points to the fact that Russia has broken her repeated promises to all the powers interested, by her failure to evacuate Manchuria. On this latter ground, the Mikado's

THE Christmas season has been with us again. Once more we have celebrated the birth of the world's Redeemer. We have been carried back in our thoughts to the little town of Bethlehem, and the lowly cot where the Infant lay. And I suppose until the world's end, devout and thankful hearts, especially at Christmas time, will always recall the miracle of the Incarnation.

Connected with the Saviour's birth there are on record three events of a supernatural character. Of course, the supreme miracle was the Incarnation itself; but outside of that, yet coincident with it, there were three other very strange events. There was the announcement to the shepherds of the Saviour's birth. This announcement was made by an angel who appeared in glorious form, and made known the glad tidings.

REV. JOSEPH HAMILTON

Immediately following this, there was a burst of song in the air, by a multitude of the heavenly host. Then there was which guided certain wise men to the very house where the Infant Saviour lay. That peculiar star has given rise to a great deal of speculation throughout the whole Christian era, down to our time. You see, the difficulty arises from the peculiar functions which that star performed. No ordinary star could move on before these wise men to show them the way. Neither could it stop and go on again, as this star did. Still more, no ordinary star is near enough to designate any particular house, which in this case was done. It is no wonder, then, that there has been a good deal of speculation as to what kind of star this might be.

A Peculiar Star

About two years ago there flashed on me a new idea about this star, which I think fully meets all the difficulties in the case. I wrote an article at the time, in which I set forth my views at some length.* I have not time now to give you the various arguments in the case, but I may state the conclusion. My idea was, and is, that this remarkable star was nothing else than an angel. These angels who sang about the Lord's birth, knew the place well, and could point it out. They would surely be glad to show it, as they were glad to sing about it. They could go on and stop as required, and they could come near enough to indicate the very house. Moreover, one of those bright beings, moving on before the men on a dark night, would certainly have the appearance of a star, and would naturally be so described. In fact, these men would never know, and never needed to know, that the angel was anything but a star. Moreover, it is probable that these men were Persian fire worshipers, yet truly seeking after God, if haply they might find him. In that case, they would "follow the gleam" of a star much more readily than they would follow an angel, if they had known him as such. Thus God, as he often does, met these poor men on their own low level, that he might lead them to the Christ. Perhaps he has done the same thing in principle with some of you. At any rate, if you heed the whole argument, I think you would agree that here we have the solution of the mystery of the star.

Contrasted Qualities

But I did not start out to talk about this very remarkable Christmas star. That star has led me to think of others. In these dark nights the stars seem brighter because of the darkness, and we see them longer, because the nights are long. Hence the starry sky is not an inappropriate theme at this season.

It is written here in our text: "He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds. He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names." Now, I think, you must be struck with this—that here are two things brought closely together that would seem naturally to stand widely apart. It is said here that God numbers and names the stars. That is one thing, and certainly, in itself, it is not very surprising. For if the Omnipotent One has thought it worth while to create those myriads of stars that roll in space, it would not be surprising that he knows them all, and names them every one.

But then, look at the other thing that is joined with this. He who numbers and names the stars also "healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds." Now is not that a marvelous combination? What power and pity are here blended! What might and mercy! What strength and gentleness! The hand that is mighty enough to make the worlds is tender enough to wipe away our tears. Such a contemplation of the character of God may well move us to wonder, and love, and praise.

These two qualities of Strength and Gentleness

that balance and complete each other, are in many other Scriptures represented as qualities of the divine character; but they are usually presented separately. The leading idea of the Old Testament is God's power. All through the Prophets and the Psalms we are constantly reminded that God is the Creator. But that glorious truth is not treated as a mere abstraction. It is made a basis for faith. If God made the worlds, he is strong enough to do anything for his own; that is the argument. Take one example from David. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills," he says, "from whence cometh my help. My safety cometh from the Lord, who made heaven and earth." If the Lord made heaven and earth, he can take care of me; what a sure resting place is there. Or, take an example of the same thing from Isaiah. He waxes eloquent in describing the Lord as creating the starry host; as measuring the ocean in his hand; as weighing the mountains in scales; as taking up the islands as a very little thing. Could anything be more sublime? But it is all supremely practical, too. For what is the inference that Isaiah draws from all this magnificence of power? Here it is: "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength." This strong God can strengthen the weak children of men. Surely, whoever builds on that rock shall never be confounded.

But then, there is gentleness, too; ay, and in the Old Testament. Some affect to think that the Old Testament is hard and stern only, fitted for bygone, savage ages, perhaps, but out of date now. Well, listen to this: "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the fruit of her womb? Yea, she may forget; yet I will not forget thee." What do you think of that for tenderness? Is it not a balm for wounded and weary souls? And yet there is something even more tender than that—yes, and in the Old Testament. Listen: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." Was anything more tender ever put into human speech? There we have nothing less than divine motherhood.

Tender Assurances

In this very Psalm where we find our text, we have an amazing instance of the tenderness of God. We read here, "He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry." Is not that wonderful? Think of the Lord God Almighty, who made the worlds, thinking of the young ravens being hungry! It is a marvelous insight into God's heart. When anybody tells you that the Old Testament has no spirit of kindness, just ask him what he thinks of this—"He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry."

As I have said, these two ideas of divine strength and gentleness are scattered all through the Word. But I know of no place where they are combined with so much power and pathos as they are in our text. We find here that the Lord heals the broken hearted, and binds up their wounds; but along with that, he numbers and names the stars. We might think that the Almighty would be very much at home, so to speak, in making the worlds; but he is just as much at home in feeding the ravens, and comforting the poor children of men.

We might take David himself, the writer of this Psalm, as a symbol, in a small way, of this union of strength and gentleness. You remember that David was a great musician. He could play skilfully on the harp. He could bring out its tones with such weird, melting, spiritual tenderness that the evil spirit in Saul had to fly. Yes, but he could also slay a lion and a bear. Those fingers of his were so strong that he could tear a wild beast in pieces, but the same fingers were so sensitive that he could sweep the strings of a harp, and bring out its sweet, tender melodies. Strength and gentleness combined! It is no wonder that such a man could understand something of the Divine strength and gentleness. It was the same man who could say, "Thy right hand hath holden me up"—there was power; but then along with that, "thy gentleness hath made me great." It is the same sentiment that we have here, in another form, when he represents God as healing the broken-hearted, and at the same time numbering the stars.

Where did David get this sublime conception of the Most High? He got it one night as he looked up at the starry sky. Many a night he lay without, watching his flocks, just as those shepherds did, to whom the angel brought the news of the Saviour's birth. And David was a devout philosopher, as well as a sacred poet. But his philosophy did not obscure the sight of God, as some modern philosophers are blinded. On the contrary, he saw God in everything. If he looked at his own bodily frame, he saw God in that. He said, "I am fearfully and wonderfully made." He had no idea that he was formed by chance, or in obedience to some blind law of evolution. No, but he said he was made; he recognized a divine, intelligent Maker. Or, if he looked out on the fertility of the earth, he said, "The earth is full of thy riches." If he looked down into the solemn depths of the sea, he was reminded of God, and said, "Thy judgments are a great deep."

But it was the starry sky, especially, that lifted David to sublime, spiritual heights. So one night, as he surveyed the glory of the stars, he thought of God, and how great he must be, to make those myriads of orbs, and call each one of them by name. Yet the thought was not overpowering, but at once he associates with it the thought of God's gentleness. He conceived of God as thinking of each one of his children, just as he thought of the stars, only with more tenderness, because they so needed his sympathy and care. And so the Psalmist thought of the majesty of God in making the stars, and his mercy in thinking of the weak children of men. It was surely a happy combination.

Nights of Despondency

It must be confessed, however, that David was not always so happy in drawing lessons from the stars. No; there was another night, and I presume at an earlier period, when David surveyed the same starry sky, but got from it no such inspiration. What we bring to a thing determines largely what we get out of it. So, on this particular occasion, David may have been in somewhat of a despondent mood, as we all are at times. At any rate, this was his thought: "When I consider the heavens which thou hast ordained, the moon and the stars the work of thy fingers, then say I, What is man, that thou art mindful of him?"

Well, now, that does not seem far-fetched. If God so interests himself in those mighty and myriad worlds of his creation, will he think of me? Will he at all care for a poor worm of earth, crawling over this dim clod? Will he not be absorbed in those immensities of his glorious creation? And I say, that to a discouraged and despondent soul that does not seem far-fetched? I suppose we all have had just such times; so we can understand David very well.

But it is unbelief, born of limited views, and perhaps special trials. And we have to get over our unbelief, just as David got over his. For he did get over it. He came to a place where he saw things in a different light altogether. In our text to-day, we find him on a higher spiritual altitude, breathing a purer and serener air. He sees farther and clearer now. He has no idea now of being overlooked or forgotten. The glory of the heavens is no discouragement to him. On the contrary, the fact that God numbers and names the stars gives him the assurance that he—a child of God—far superior to a mere mass of matter—will not be overlooked. For the soul of man is greater than all the stars. It is greater, because it can think, can love, can adore!

So David's unbelief is gone. You have seen the shadow of a cloud passing over a landscape on a sunny day. It passed quickly, and was soon gone. Just so, a shadow of unbelief passed over David's heart, as it has passed over yours and mine. May we keep in the sun light; or if the shadow comes, may it soon pass. If we only rise high enough, and get above the clouds, we shall not be troubled with the shadows.

A Stupendous Calculation

Combining these two things in our text, we shall have a great aid to our faith. We have to think of the majesty of God in numbering and naming the stars, and we have to combine with that, his healing of the broken hearted. Let us think, first, of God numbering and naming the stars.

Have you ever tried to number the stars? As for naming them, I presume you would consider that utterly beyond you. But even to count them might seem an impossible task. The whole dome of heaven is so full of them, that they might appear past all counting. So numerous are they, that they have often been taken as a symbol of a vast multitude. When Abraham was promised a numerous seed, he was told they would be as numerous as the stars of heaven. To a simple, Oriental mind, that would surely be a glorious symbol of an uncounted host.

And yet those stars can be counted. If you have keen sight, and a clear night, and a good stock of patience, you can count the stars. I suppose you do not covet such a task. Then we shall have to take the estimate of others who have really performed the task. Some have counted three thousand stars in this hemisphere of the sky that is open to our view. Others, with perhaps keener sight, on a clearer night, have estimated the number at about four thousand. Let us, then, take that estimate of four thousand in this hemisphere that we see. In the hemisphere below that we don't see, of course there will be about four thousand more. Thus we may take eight thousand as the number of the stars in the entire circle of the sky, round and round the world. And those are the stars—or, I should say, some of the stars—that God hath numbered and named.

* The article appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Yes, some of them—a very, very few of them. All the stars you see shining in the firmament are but the outposts of the glorious creation. These eyes of ours are very dim. We can see but a short way into the immensities of the universe. In fact we never saw the heavens till we saw them through the telescope. With the first and rudest telescope, myriads of stars unseen before burst on our astonished sight. And with every new improvement of the telescope new splendors of creation are revealed. Just let me give you a few facts that may help you to realize something of the bewildering number of the starry hosts.

Revelations of the Telescope

In the year 1792, Dr. Herschel was making an observation of the stars. You can imagine what a poor instrument was that of a hundred years ago! Yet that poor instrument opened the way into unimagined glories. Herschel calculated that in forty-one minutes, there passed over the field of view in his telescope no less than 258,000 stars! And these are a few more of the stars that God hath numbered and named.

Yes, only a few more. This is but the beginning. We have barely entered the gateway of the starry worlds. We have seen greater marvels than Herschel's telescope could reveal. Lord Rosse's telescope marked a new era of discovery; and later and far larger instruments have widened our field of vision almost, as we might say, to infinity. Thus new universes of stars are ever coming into view; and these are some more of the stars that God hath numbered and named!

Calculations have been made from time to time as to the number of stars that thus come within the range of the telescope. With the improved instruments of some years ago, the estimate was about eighty millions. Now just compare those eighty millions seen by the telescope with the eight thousand seen by the naked eye. Suppose the eighty millions seen by the telescope were brought near enough to be seen by the naked eye, then for each star you see now, you would see ten thousand. Just ponder that fact. Imagine that for each star you see in the sky to-night, there were ten thousand more. That gives you some idea of those universes of stars. And these are a few more of the stars that God hath numbered and named!

And we have of late gone much farther than that. You see at night that irregular band of whitish-looking cloud stretching across the sky. That is the Milky Way. For a long time it was believed to be a mass of vapor, very far away in space; and some thought it might be the nucleus of new stars continually forming. The more perfect instruments of our time have shown us that the Milky Way is actually composed of stars, stretching so far away into space that their form is almost lost in a dim haze of glory. Thus we have suggestions of other universes of stars stretching farther on into the infinity of space, which mortal man may never hope to explore. This dim haze of stars has been aptly described as being "like a candle shining through a house." We know now that the candle shining through the house, is really the shimmer of countless blazing suns. And thus the conviction grows, that beyond all the splendors of creation seen by man, incomparably greater glories remain behind. What we can see of those infinities of stars, with what we never see, are the stars that God hath numbered and named!

Registered by the Camera

I may notice here a splendid invention of late years, by which we have gained more knowledge of those far-off realms of creation than even the telescope could reveal. The photograph is now united with the telescope, and on a highly sensitive plate takes pictures of stars so lost in the dim infinity of space that the telescope can give no hint of them. Thus myriads of blazing suns appear as the faintest dots on the photographic plate. Anything more suggestive of infinity I suppose we shall never see on this side of time.

I think this is one of the happiest inspirations ever given to man. The photograph, which was but a plaything a few years ago, here attains its divine mission of discovering new worlds. Thus we are ever widening our view of the illimitable creation, and gaining new glimpses of the stars that God hath numbered and named.

One thing more I will add here that may help your comprehension of these amazing glories. I said a while ago that we can see eight thousand stars with the naked eye. I said also that the number of stars seen by the telescope, as estimated some years ago, was about eighty millions. But with the improved instruments of our time, the estimate now is about five hundred millions. Five hundred millions! Can you realize what that means? To gain some clearer idea of it, let us make a supposition such as we made before, when we took a lower estimate. Suppose, then, that all these five hundred millions of stars were brought so near that we could see them with the naked eye. The effect would be that for each star we see now we would see sixty thousand.

Layers of Gold

Try to realize what sixty thousand means. Then place that number of stars in the sky for each star you see now, making each star as large, say, as Venus. Can you imagine the effect? You certainly would not have room in the whole circle of the sky, round and round the world, for all these stars. The entire vault of heaven would be a solid dome of gold. Not only that, but you would have to pack the stars close together, in many solid layers, to find room for them in the sky. If you wanted to scatter them through space, you would find that you could take off a solid layer of stars, and yet have a golden dome behind. Then you might take off another solid layer of stars, and still you would have a golden dome behind. And thus you might take off five hundred solid layers of stars, and still you would have a golden dome behind! Oh, the immensity and glory of the starry hosts! And these are some of the stars that God hath numbered and named.

Yes, only some; perhaps we see after all but a very small part of the whole. It would be most unreasonable to suppose that God's work is limited just by what puny mortals can see. On the far confines of what we do see, beyond what appears as the gold dust of worlds, there is a faint shimmer of light, suggestive of universes of glory stretching farther on. So we may well ask:

Can man conceive beyond what God can do?
He summons us into being with like ease,
A whole creation—or a single grain!
Speaks he the word? A thousand worlds are born!
A thousand worlds! There's room for millions more!

Now, dear friends, from those sublime and bewildering heights, do you think you can come down for a moment to the other thing in our text? He who numbers and names the stars, also heals the broken in heart, and binds up their wounds!

Infinite Love

Is it not astounding? Can he really do it? Or, can he be at all so inclined? Can he think of me? Can he have any care for a poor worm of the dust? Yes, he can do it; he does care; thousands have proved these words true. If you have no experience of this, let me just give you three facts that may set the matter, perhaps, in a more believable way. I can only stay to name these facts, but I ask you to ponder them well.

The first thing is, that God's mind is infinite. Let us not forget that. Now the infinite mind is unlike ours in this way, that it can give itself to an infinite number of concerns at the same time, and with the same solicitude, as though there were but one. Hence we hear the Lord saying, "I have called thee by name." Yes, and he calls you by name. He knows your name, and thinks about you, as though you were his only child. Again he says, "I have girded thee, though thou hast not known me." And we have many expressions like that. So David could say, "I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me." Oh, yes, and he thinks of you just the same. Will you take that word to your heart, and believe it now?

The next thing is, that God's love is personal. Of course it is personal. Could it be love at all if it were not personal? It is the same kind of love as yours, only of infinite degree. Now you don't love your children in the bulk; you love them separately. Well, the Lord does the very same thing. So he can say, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love." Have you realized that that means you? It does mean you. I bring you to-day that joyful message. Will you believe it? Paul could say, "He loved me," and you can just as truly say the same. So I would say—Don't think of your own love just now, but think of God's love to you. Then by and by you may feel inclined to sing:

O for this love let rocks and seas
Their lasting silence break;
And all harmonious human tongues,
The Saviour's praises speak.

And that leads me to the last thing, which is this: God has given us his Son, as a proof of his love; and that divine gift was for you. Yes, you were in the mind and heart of God in this wonderful plan of redemption. Paul said: "He loved me, and gave himself for me." He gave himself for you, just as much as for Paul. Will you believe it? Oh, believe it now. Say to your soul just now: "He loved me, and gave himself for me." It will mean faith in an atoning Redeemer.

WAR OR PEACE IN THE FAR EAST?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27

interference of any one of the three, in opposition to Japan, would in all probability be the signal for Great Britain's participation as Japan's maritime ally.

Japan's navy being already mobilized and her transports available, it is not improbable that her first move would be the occupation of Korea. Color is given to this belief by the fact that the Mikado, only a few days ago, authorized the use of the national Educational and Emergency Reserve Fund of 50,000,000 yen ($25,000,000) for the construction of railroads throughout Korea—a step which would eventually result in Japanizing the entire peninsula.

With respect to the comparative strength of the rival powers, it may be stated briefly, that on the sea, Japan, while numerically the inferior of Russia in the number of her warships, has the compensating advantage of initial position, her fleet being so disposed as to prevent any formidable junction of Russia's entire naval strength in Eastern waters. She has also the immense advantage of being nearer to her base of supplies. Lake Baikal is frozen over and Vladivostok is also closed by ice, so that these points will be unavailable to Russia for transportation purposes. China has already shown her sympathies with Japan, her late conqueror, by stopping the supply of cattle through Chili for the Russian troops.

As to the comparative efficiency of the two navies, all statements would be purely conjectural. On land, Russia, though vast in her resources and in the strength of her battalions, must face the same disadvantage of being a long way off from her base of supplies. Both armies are believed to be trained to the highest point of efficiency, and should war really come, it will be no child's

Let us hope, and pray, that war may even yet be averted, and that mutual concessions may result in dispersing the threatening cloud which now overhangs the far Eastern world.

Was Your Premium Delivered Free?

When THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sends out a premium it prepaies all express charges. No express company has the right to collect charges on any premium sent out by us, and we request all subscribers from whom charges have been collected by the express companies on CHRISTIAN HERALD premiums, to send us the name of the premium, the name of the express company, and the receipt for the money paid, and we will see that a proper refund is made.

GEN. TERAUCHI
Japan's War Minister

ONE OF THE STRONGEST OF THE RUSSIAN FORTS AT PORT ARTHUR

ADMIRAL YAMAMOTO
Minister Japanese Navy

play, but a terrible and sanguinary struggle. Such a war as the East, even with all its frequent outbreaks, has not witnessed in a generation.

But the wise men of Europe assure us, by cable, that "the resources of diplomacy have not yet been exhausted."

ALTHOUGH there are many missions in New York devoted to the moral and spiritual welfare of seafaring folk, most of them are rarely heard of. They do their work in silence. In these missions, almost every maritime nation is represented. One of the most important—the Skandinavia Maritime Mission, of No. 94 Market street, Manhattan, is typical of the working of all.

Usually, the working head of a seamen's mission is one who has come from the ranks of seagoing life, and who is content to spend his remaining years in missionary work, looking to the welfare of his fellows, though the remuneration may be less than he might get afloat.

In charge of the Skandinavia Maritime Mission is Captain N. M. Tornqvist, formerly of the seaport town of Grimstad, Norway. For nearly forty years he waged the battle of life on the seas of the globe. He manages the affairs of the Mission practically unaided. There is no financial provision for help, and the casual visitor dropping in at the Mission in the forenoon, before opening begins, might find the erstwhile captain of transoceanic clippers, scrubbing out the Mission floor, like the veriest able-bodied seaman or deck-hand.

IN THE READING ROOM OF THE SKANDINAVIAN MISSION

The Market street Skandinavia Mission is an outgrowth of the pioneer mission at No. 111 William street, Brooklyn, of which Rev. Tiko Castberg is superintendent; yet this Manhattan work has, in some respects, become the more important of the two. The Mission Room and Library are open every day of the year. There are many callers afternoon and evening, and the Captain's family assist him in attending to the distribution of mail, the receiving of the seamen's savings for banking (so that they may not be tempted by the saloons and worse places), and the answering of all sorts of questions. Miss Sofia Tornqvist, the Captain's daughter, is chief among his aids in the work of the Mission. She is an educated young Skandinavian; and her labors for the toilers of the sea are given wholly without recompense, present or prospective. This "Daughter of the Mission," who works solely for the sake of the poor sailors, is greatly beloved and esteemed by all.

Naturally, a majority of the frequenters of the Mission are Skandinavian sailors, who make Manhattan their port of call, although there are many other "sea-folk" from most every country on earth, who come there when in port. Not a few of these Norsemen locate permanently on Manhattan Isle—or as near to it as practicable—being engaged in the coastwise shipping trade. They are a brawny, hardworking class of men, and their standard for sobriety is higher than that of the average tar.

The work of a seaman's mission consists in maintaining in shape a suitable reading-room and library for the sailors; the furnishing of newspapers and class periodicals free to outgoing ships; receiving, and, if need be, forwarding the sailors' mail-matter; visits to charitable institutions to leave bundles of papers; visits to investigate inquiry for missing friends and relatives; visits to hospitals; receiving and forwarding to destination the sailors' savings; and the thousand and one incidentals which can easily be imagined by every mission worker. Many sailors leave their "kits" and baggage in the Mission's safekeeping. These go into the cellar, and may never be claimed again—mute testimony that the owner has probably taken journey on a ship which has figured on the exchange blackboard as "missing" or "lost." But the property is kept for years, in expectation of a claimant.

Fifteen hundred dollars is annually appropriated for the support of the Market street Sailors' Mission. This comes from the homeland—Norway; and is entirely raised by a Skandinavian Board. A few well-to-do Norwegians contribute their share, and hundreds of poor, benevolent-hearted country people do their part also by smaller contributions. No outside assistance is ever solicited by the Market street Mission. True, there is a collection-box, but the revenue from this source is small, and no attempt is made to place the hardworking sailors under any feeling of obligation to give. Those thrifty and poor Skandinavians at home, who contribute their mites to the support of the Manhattan Mission, have the satisfaction of knowing that much good has been accomplished in the last dozen years with their consecrated gifts. The Market street Mission receives some 25,000 visits from sailors in the course of a year. The expense of the Mission per capita for these visits is only six cents per year per visitor. Almost all visitors use the Missions' facilities many times in the course of a year, and many use them every day.

Two years ago, the Norwegian Sailors' Mission had no American books in its library, and no provision for purchasing any; but on a proper representation of its need to different American publishers, in a few months it was put in possession of a compact and entertaining library, comprising dictionaries and miscellaneous books. Many current publications, and numbers of class, trade and technical periodicals are now regularly received. A whole-souled American woman—Mrs. Tyndale, of Manhattan—donated a piano, on hearing that the place was without music. The sailors have free access to every book, magazine and paper in the library: the principle of trusting to the honesty of its members is the rule, and the result is that rarely anything is missing.

Though called a Skandinavian Seamen's Mission, its use is not barred to seamen of other nationalities. It is free to all to make a proper use of its privileges, and several nationalities do make use of it, although the Skandinavian element preponderates.

L. LODIAN.

THE MISSION DOORWAY

A SKANDINAVIAN TYPE

A MISSION WORKER

A MISSION VETERAN

TRYING TO SAVE THE MACEDONIANS

LETTERS from various points in Macedonia and the Bulgarian border, received during the past week, indicate no abatement of the widespread suffering among the hapless refugees. At Monastir, and in the districts around Salonica and Adrianople, our missionaries are working hard with the scanty resources at their command, to relieve the most needy cases that can be reached; but these, as can readily be understood, constitute only a small fraction of the great multitude of 225,000 sufferers, scattered throughout Macedonia and huddled together helplessly on the Bulgarian frontier. What these great masses of homeless and destitute are to do during the winter, no one knows. Turkey has no sympathy for their sufferings. Local aid, though generously bestowed, is sufficient only to touch the outer fringe of the suffering; it cannot reach the centre, nor relieve one-tenth of the whole. Outside help from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other benevolent sources is just beginning to make itself felt. The workers hope and pray that these gifts may be multiplied quickly, in order that as many of the sufferers may be helped as can be reached, and precious lives saved from death by hunger and exposure.

These sufferers, it must not be forgotten, are Christians, professing the same faith and belief as ourselves. Their present woful plight, due to Turkish infidel persecution, should awaken the sympathies of every Christian in the world, and rally all true believers to their support.

From Dr. J. F. Clarke, at Samokov, Bulgaria, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last week received this message by cable:

"Klopsch, New York:

"SAMOKOV, Dec. 25.

"Refugees throughout Bulgaria greatly need warm clothing. (Signed) CLARKE."

Almost simultaneously with the dispatch of this message, the cable had placed in Dr. Clarke's hands a message from Dr. Klopsch in New York, announcing the sending of One thousand dollars to him at Samokov. Thus the appeal and the answer literally crossed each other—a providential provision anticipating and supplying the missionaries' most urgent needs. That the remittance comes just in time, is evident from a letter (written by Dr. Clarke at Bourgas, two weeks earlier) in which he says: "With Mrs. Allen, and the delegate of the Central Relief Committee of Sofia, I have to-day visited eight villages, where there are refugees in need of all things when the cold settles in. . . . Yesterday Mrs. Allen had a sewing-class of 120 refugee women. The meeting opened with prayer, and some of the sweet songs of Zion were sung and explained by one of our loving sisters here. Next week I go to Solevin and Yambol, then to Sofia and back to Samokov."

In a letter from Rev. Lewis Bond, American Missionary at Monastir, dated Dec. 11, he writes—acknowledging the receipt of $1,000 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, and other monies, and adds: "Now we shall not hesitate to get blankets to cover the shivering peasants, and we can supply more villages with flour. . . . This week we had the joy of dealing out nearly a month's supply of charcoal to some three hundred families. It was hard to say which contained the greater bulk of comfort—the white bags of rye flour, or the black sacks of coal which the men and women, largely the latter, lugged off on their backs."

Letters received by a Macedonian pastor now in this country from Sofia, contain accounts of fresh persecutions of Macedonian Christians by the Turks. In one case a man named Lazar Racheff was tortured to death in a most cruel and unheard-of fashion. A number of Macedonians and Bulgarians belonging to Dobrinishta have been cast into prison. Many families are crossing the border from Razlog, abandoning their homes. The country between Adrianople and the Black Sea, which was burned and ravaged (many of its people being massacred) is in great want, and thousands of sufferers left utterly destitute, will perish unless help comes quickly. In some villages there are only women and a few aged men left. The misery is said to be very great, the people being almost naked and starving.

All contributions should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

A MACEDONIAN FAMILY OF SMILEVO

Smilevo was sacked and burned early in the Macedonian trouble, and its surviving inhabitants were forced to flee. The town, which was prosperous, is now a scene of desolation.

Every contribution to the Relief Fund will be acknowledged in these columns, and forwarded to the missionaries in the field.

CHICAGO A CITY OF MOURNING

Nearly Six Hundred Perish by Fire and Panic at a Holiday Performance in the Iroquois Theatre—Terrible Scenes Described—
The Saddest day in the City's History

ONE of the most appalling disasters ever known in this country, occurred in Chicago, on the afternoon of December 30 last. Nearly two thousand holiday-makers—a large proportion of them women and children—had assembled in the Iroquois Theatre, to witness a matinee performance. It was an audience that bubbled over with mirth, gaiety and enthusiasm, and the sounds of lively chat and laughter, came from the light-hearted groups in boxes, galleries and auditorium. It was a brilliant gathering, and represented many of the best-known families in Chicago society, who had come to be entertained in the city's finest and newest playhouse, for the Iroquois—Chicago's pride, and one of the handsomest and costliest theatres in the West—had only been open a month. Beautifully decorated and luxuriously equipped with every modern artistic convenience, its crowded interior, on that December afternoon, presented a scene of picturesque beauty that could not be surpassed. The stage was framed in a mass of filmy draperies, and hundreds of electric lights, unprotected, made the place seem like a veritable fairy-land.

As the play began—it was a laughter-provoking extravaganza—the eyes of the vast audience were turned toward the stage with fascinated interest. Laughter and chatter continued throughout the first part of the performance, or everybody was in holiday humor.

Suddenly, while a song was being sung by a double act, and when the stage lights had been lowered, a fuse blew out and a single spark darted from one of the unprotected electric bulbs on the stage. It shot across to some of the loose, flimsy draperies that hung from the top of the stage near the proscenium boxes, and set them on fire. One of the singers on the stage screamed and the music stopped. An instant later the scenery burst into flames. As the audience rose in alarm, a calcium tank exploded, sending a broad, white, dazzling sheet of flame outward, above the heads of the people in the orchestra seats. Sparks fell in a blinding shower. The entire audience turned to flee.

At this juncture, a figure rushed from the back of the stage to the footlights. It was the comedian—a man who played a woman's part—and those who sat nearest could see that his face, which was coated with the usual stage make-up of paint and grease, was also streaked with blood. He waved his arms wildly and tried, with a choking voice, to reassure the terrified audience and avert a panic; but it was too late. Somebody shouted "lower the fire curtain" on the stage, but the curtain man had already fled from his post. An attempt was made to pull it down, but the wide asbestos sheet "buckled" midway and stuck fast, making a draft-box of the entire stage, from which dense smoke and flame now began to pour straight out into the auditorium. The audience turned in terror and moved, a struggling, confused, panic-stricken mass, toward the doors. All the stage people had already fled to save themselves, and the fire swept on unchecked. There was only one fireman—an aged man—on guard in the theatre, and he was totally helpless in such an emergency.

Then began a scene which can never be adequately and frantically appealed to others to save them; but even had those who were struggling beside them been willing, they were unable, on account of the frightful crush which pinioned their arms by their sides. Scores leaped from the balcony to the pit below, where their bodies were found afterward. Great sheets of flame continued to sweep inward from the stage, scorching and suffocating wherever they touched.

When the terrified audience surged toward the different exits, it is said they found, to their dismay, that the doors were locked. Frantic men tried to batter them down, but they were stout, and mostly of iron. It seemed an age before the people began to pass freely out by the exits into the open air, although it could not have been more than a few minutes. When the firemen reached the scene, hundreds were already lying dead within the walls. On the balcony stairway was a great heap, which seemed inextricable, as it lay in that terrible death pose. These had been swept by the flame and suffocated by the smoke, which still hung thick around them.

IN FRONT OF THE ILL-FATED IROQUOIS THEATRE

Dead were found near almost all the exits, where they had been either suffocated by smoke or trampled in the mad crush. On the stairway platforms lay scores of bodies of women and children. Charred and disfigured bodies choked the aisles, a few still breathing and moaning pitifully; many were children, some little more than babies. In the balcony, a line of women men, it is said, fighting like tigresses to save their children. In a few instances, children were seized by strong arms and passed over the heads of the wedged-in mass to safety; but these were few indeed. There were places where the little ones lay in ghastly rows—all dead. One sweet little girl had been suffocated by the flame as it swept her face. Her beautiful hair was gone; but her muff, which lay on her lap, was not even singed. Nearby, a mother bent over her wee daughter, and with her back to the fire, had died while vainly trying to shield her child. Her clasped hands and her attitude showed that she had died praying.

There were many brave rescues, where men periled themselves for the sake of others. Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, was in a nearby store when the call came for blankets for the injured. He went immediately to the theatre, and worked amid the smoke and hot embers, assisting in carrying out the victims, until the last of the living were safely removed. "God forbid that I ever again see such a heartrending sight," he said. "I have been in wars and upon the battlefield, but I have never seen anything half so gruesome as the sight that assailed my eyes when, with the aid of a tiny lantern, I was finally able to penetrate the inky blackness of that balcony." Another hero was Bishop Muldoon, of the Catholic Church, who was passing the theatre when the alarm of fire was given. With a prayer on his lips, he entered the building, climbed the gallery, and directed the work of rescue. Heedless of the firemen's warnings, he remained at his work until the smoke and flames were all around him. He was one of the last to leave the burning theatre.

In half an hour from the time of starting, the fire was out. When the firemen began to remove the dead and injured, a great multitude had gathered in front of the theatre. The dead were taken to the various morgues, and the injured to nearby hotels and restaurants, which were converted into temporary hospitals.

It is estimated that 582 perished in this dreadful calamity, by fire and suffocation and by being trampled and mangled in the panic. The list of injured and missing will probably reach 400 more. Unquestionably, the terror of the children, and the mad rush for the doors, was the cause of hundreds of deaths, which might have been averted had order prevailed, and if the proper precautions had been observed by the management. An official investigation has been ordered, with the view of fixing the responsibility for the disaster.

Chicago's visitation has directed public attention to the condition of theatres and other places of assemblage in other cities, and the result will probably be the passage of laws for the better protection of audiences. Eighteen Chicago theatres have been closed by the authorities, pending examination as to their safety. It is significant to note the admission made by leading architects and other authorities, that the Chicago horror might be duplicated any day in almost any theatre in New York or other cities of importance. All are radically defective in safeguards against fire.

The Iroquois theatre was a new building, having been opened as recently as November 23. It was regarded as fireproof, and cost $550,000. Its regular seating ca-

A HOSE-CART USED AS AN AMBULANCE

TAKING THE INJURED FROM THE RUINS

BODIES OUTSIDE, READY FOR THE MORGUE

described. Screams, shouts, curses, unavailing cries for help, mingled with the weeping of children and the shrieking of terror-stricken women. Then death came to scores and hundreds. Soon the stairways leading from the balcony and galleries were a mass of struggling humanity, pushing, fighting, trampling each other under foot, many fainting in the crush, and falling never to rise again. Many prayed aloud in their agony of despair. Women held their little ones up in their arms were found sitting as though still gazing at the play; but there was no life in their terror-stricken gaze. They had perished without having an opportunity to escape. Three women were found hanging over the balcony rail, as though looking at the scene below—all dead.

All the exits were blocked by the mad, surging crowds that rushed down from the upper floors. In one place the dead were piled on each other ten deep. They had crowded and pushed madly but unavailingly—some wo-capacity was 1,600. Its lobbies were wide and spacious, and it was liberally supplied with exits. There were, however, fatal defects in interior arrangements, and these, together with carelessness on the part of the management, made the beautiful theatre a death-trap—an alluring resort, whose fascinations so charmed the frequenters that they were oblivious to the deadly dangers which constantly surrounded them, and which at last brought about a calamity not soon to be forgotten.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

The Chicago Holocaust

SAD beyond expression, are the reports of the tragedy which occurred in Chicago, on Dec. 30. The scene is horrible, even in imagination. The new Iroquois Theatre, crowded to the doors; the spectators amused and delighted; suddenly the cry of fire; the going out of all the lights; darkness, save for the lurid flames consuming the woodwork and hangings; the wild struggle for the exits; the insurmountable wall of dead bodies, and wounded and crushed humanity; and the suffocating fumes of gas and chemicals, which one may hope mercifully produced unconsciousness in many of the victims. It is too ghastly for the mind to dwell upon. It is feared that more than six hundred perished, thus making the fire the most disastrous on record.

The sympathy of the whole world goes out to the mourners thus suddenly bereaved. It is hard to lose loved ones in any way, but to lose them without warning, without a word of farewell, and without being able to comfort them in their death agony—that is doubly hard. It is distressing, too, to know that so large a proportion of the number perished needlessly. Had the rear ranks been content to pass out quietly, the sacrifice of life would have been small; but in rushing and struggling to get ahead of those in front, they threw them down, and so raised a barrier to their own escape. Thus he that strove to save his life, as Jesus said, lost it and caused the loss of others. It is hard to blame people who lose their senses in so awful a panic; but one cannot avoid deploring the fierce anxiety for self-preservation which defeated itself, and proved the cause of so appalling a catastrophe.

It may be hoped, for the sake of the theatre-going public, that the lesson of this catastrophe may not be lost on the managers and architects of those places of amusement. The Iroquois theatre was new and was declared to be fireproof, yet it had its defects, as is now tragically proved. Those defects, doubtless existing in other theatres, ought to be remedied immediately. There are in the sad event lessons, too, for the people. In other public buildings, in churches, in the home, on the railroad and on the streets, there is liability to sudden death. We know not the day nor the hour when the last summons will come. Happy they who, whether it come suddenly by disaster, or by the slow steps of disease, have no reason to dread its approach, being confident that Christ is able to keep that which they have committed unto him.

The Real Man and the Real Home

THE average home is the expression of the average woman, the revelation of the ordinary man. We are apt to put the emphasis of our endeavor in the wrong place. "The trivial round, the common task," with variations, are the same in every condition and rank, circumstances only making a difference. Food and fuel and clothing and the outward appanage of life we must have, whether we dwell in a hut or a mansion, are encompassed with the pride of wealth, or limited by the iron bonds of poverty. Poms and vanities for one, squalor and rags for another, thus the way of the world has been from the beginning. But, independent of externals, the heart of the home is unaffected by the transitory and accidental things that pass with the using.

Love is the heart of the home. A thousand little confidences, nay, ten thousand innumerable small bits of cheer, of inspiration, of hope, make up what the home does for those who belong to it. Here one leans for support on the brother or sister, whose intimate acquaintance with his want is not formulated in speech, but born of kindred blood. Much comes to us in the line of heredity that can never be translated into words. The strength of the family bond is welded of the strength of generations that have gone before, and history repeats itself in the successive experiences of the home people from father to son. The trick of certain gestures, the lifting of an eyebrow, the turn of a wrist, the peculiarity of a step, the sound of a laugh, are tokens of a clan, and all members have them in common. These little things are significant.

Homes have a fund of stories, anecdotes, happenings, allusions, incidents, jests, quips, that are individual, not public possessions. In the guise we wear before our fellows, on the road, in the train, at sea, we are not entirely what we are at home, where every garment that conceals the true self slips away, and we stand revealed as we are. The man and woman who are lovely and lovable at home, who stamp on the home circle a memory of goodness and truth and sweetness, are earth's real saints. What one is in the seclusion of the home, is his real self. If that be noble, sincere, and fine, above pettiness, above grudges, capable of large generosity, then the home wherein he dwells is blessed, and also a blessing.

The Eastern Crisis

SHOULD war break out between Russia and Japan, it may be productive of changes in the map of which the world now little dreams. When we began our campaign against Spain, we doubt if one American in a million had any foreshadowing of the probabilities which afterward became actualities. The territorial changes were vast, and we emerged from that war one of the great colonial powers of the globe.

What are the probabilities in the present case? Should the campaign result favorably to little Japan, it is not beyond the range of probabilities that Corea might become a vassal state or dependency of the island empire. Japan's leading statesmen have even larger views, and it is said that they look forward to a time, as not far distant, when the northern and eastern shores of the Yellow Sea will be under the dominion of the sunburst flag of Nippon. Their forecast of Japan's destiny is that it will become the dominant power under whose progressive leadership the Asiatic peoples will revive their ancient glories, and become a great and united confederation. China, rehabilitated under Japanese influence, would become a world-power in the most modern sense of the word.

On the other hand, what would be the outcome if Russia triumphs in the campaign? Should her powerful armies and immense resources enable her to overcome Japan, not only would Manchuria be added to the Czar's empire, but in all likelihood a large part of China's northern provinces would sooner or later come under the same control. It would be the beginning of the long-threatened disintegration of the Mongolian power. Province after province would be gradually assimilated, until there would remain but a fragment of the once vast Chinese empire—the shadow of its former self. Corea, too, would share the same fate. Russia's success would sound the knell of native Asiatic supremacy, probably forever, and the Muscovite would be the dominant power. Whether the Russianizing of the Eastern world would be an advantage to the rest of mankind is a question that will naturally arise; but it is one which can only be answered by pointing to the history of those independent Oriental States that have already been brought into subjection by that great and aggressive power during the past centuries. Even Japan herself, humbled by defeat, would probably be reduced to the condition of a petty state, through the loss of some of her most valued seaboard possessions.

Thus it will be seen that there are probabilities of great changes on the map, as a result of the war which now seems to be impending in the Far East. How it will affect the other powers, and especially France, Germany and England, can only be conjectured. The United States will be an interested spectator in this great drama of events. Our interests at present are purely commercial, though not small, and they will be protected. Let us hope that no eventuality may arise to involve us in the conflict. Reduced to its simplest construction, it is a great game in which the rival powers are now engaged, to be played on a vast scale, but with this difference: that Japan, besides being stimulated by love of conquest, is fighting for her existence. That she will fight until the last of her resources are exhausted, seems certain. Russia is battling for conquest alone—for a free seaboard and for Asiatic supremacy—consequently she has less at stake; but though she may enter the war reluctantly, she will carry it through vigorously, sparing neither blood nor treasure. There is no righteous principle involved in the impending struggle. Japan has the inspiration of patriotism, it is true; but, like her rival, she is burning for conquest. China is between the upper and nether millstones and is sure to be ground in any event, although, with Japan in the ascendant, she could still look forward to a future that holds promise to the Asiatic mind.

Let us hope that even at the last moment "the resources of diplomacy" may work for peace, and that the gloomy war-clouds that now overhang the troubled East may yet be dispersed.

For Famine Work in India

Cable dispatches from London, dated Dec. 31, make the following announcement:

"King Edward has conferred the Kaiser-Hind medal of the first class upon Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of New York, in recognition of the work he has done in behalf of the famine sufferers in India."

Even You Would be Missed

IT is said that once a great musical conductor was rehearsing a piece in which there were many performers, and hundreds of voices in the chorus. As the mighty chorus rang out with the thunder of the organ, the roll of drums and ringing of horns and clash of cymbals, one man far away in some corner of the stage who played the piccolo said within himself, "In all this din, it matters not what I do," and ceased to play. Suddenly the great conductor stopped, flung up his hands, and all was still. Then he cried, "Where is the piccolo?" His quick ear had missed it, and all was spoiled because it failed to take its part.

Your place in God's great concert of praise may be a lowly one, but you must do your part. Jesus misses your hand, your voice, your presence—even yours—whenever they are withheld anywhere from his service.

He is God

WHO is? Why, Jesus is—"The Mighty God." That is what makes Him Saviour and Redeemer, as well as the "Prince of Peace."

Be not deceived into a belief that He is but man, the highest and best of all the race; you will limit his powers if you do, and the blackest sin of the Israelites was to "limit the Holy One." There is neither limit nor limitation to the central figure of all history. All the prophets, seers, poets, preachers, statesmen, philosophers, philanthropists, priests, and so called sacred men, would not make one Lord, who came up from the grave, and who made others come up too.

All power is his in heaven and earth, and there is nothing too hard for Him.

Littleness of faith has belittled Him. Do not put Him in the best room of your house; put Him over the whole house. Forget Him in the flesh for a while. Leave his clothes alone. He wore our garb that we might talk to Him and touch Him; but his clothes are not himself. Read of Him in the first chapter of Revelations, after you have seen Him in the first chapter of John. Put Him where He belongs in your life—as God, and He will manifest himself that way. Dethrone Him, and you may expect but little, for "according to your faith so be it unto you."

C. H. YATMAN.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST STROUSE has lately held a series of successful meetings at Frankfort, Ky.

—REV. B. M. HARRIS, evangelist, has conducted revival meetings at Memphis in various churches. Many confessed Christ, and a number were added to the churches.

—DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN and Dr. R. A. Walton, are on a tour of the Pacific coast. They are not holding evangelistic meetings, but going from church to church, solemnly urging on Christians the obligation of the religious life.

He Found it Up-to-date

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I received the Crown Encyclopedia yesterday, and I am very much pleased with it. I looked at Panama the first thing, and found that it was surprisingly up-to-date. It is a marvel to me how you can get up so good a book so cheaply. Pilgrim's Progress is a beautiful book, too. You are doing a good work of faith and labor of love.

S. P. LEEDS.
Hanover, N. H.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Colombia's Tactics

NEWS from the Isthmus indicates that Colombia has not yet abandoned hope of recovering her lost State of Panama. While waiting for an answer from our Government to the note of protest presented to it by General Reyes, as the representative of President Marroquin, Colombia has effected a landing on the Isle of Pines, which, it may be presumed, it intends to use as a base for operations against Panama, should that course be chosen. There are indications also that an attempt is being made to stir up an Indian rebellion in Panama. Negotiations have been opened between the Colombian commander and Inanaquina, an Indian chief, who is said to have three thousand followers, and is known to be in sympathy with Colombia, with the object of resisting the new Government of Panama. The United States cruiser Olympia and two gunboats have therefore been sent to Carti, where the negotiations were begun, to suppress them. Our Government is embarrassed in its actions by the opposition in the Senate to the ratification of the new treaty with Panama. If that treaty were ratified, it would give us the right to protect the little republic from the machinations of Colombia, but while we have only the rights conferred by the old treaty, active steps cannot be taken.

The later information which has come to hand since the secession of Panama occurred, tends to show that Panama was fully justified in casting off the Colombian yoke, and that it is entitled to the cordial sympathy of the United States. The able article of Thomas S. Alexander, who probably knows more about Colombia than any other American, proves that President Marroquin reached the Presidential chair by an act of outrageous lawlessness, and that the Congress elected under his administration in no sense represents the people, but is the creation of a gang of priests. It is therefore a chivalrous act on our part to prevent such a mock government fastening its claws again on Panama. Besides this, is the advantage the whole world will gain by the construction of the canal, if Panama is protected—an advantage which would be indefinitely postponed if the tricksters at Bogota were once more in a position to haggle over the booty. Still another consideration has weight, affecting our relations with France. It has been clearly proved that the crafty and unscrupulous legislators at Bogota were scheming to delay their bargain with us until the date would be reached when they might avail themselves of a technical ground for declaring the French concession void, and could confiscate the property and work of the French company. They hoped that they would then be entitled to claim the forty million dollars which we have agreed to pay to the company. That the French Government would permit its citizens to be so swindled is not to be expected. It would naturally send an armed force to the Isthmus to protect their rights, and would, in so doing, come into collision with our government, as the act would violate the Monroe Doctrine. Colombia could then have remained passive, while the United States fought France and abetted a disgraceful swindle. Happily their crafty scheme has been defeated, and their greed has worked out their own loss. They had, perhaps, forgotten how righteous a God he is who rules the world.

He disappointeth the devices of the crafty, so that their hands cannot perform their enterprise (Job 5: 12).

The Queen's Escape

The cable report of the fire in the bed-room occupied by the Queen of England, to which reference was made in a recent number of this journal, is now supplemented by the mail, which brings also a picture of the room, which we reproduce. Miss Charlotte Knollys, the lady who discovered the fire and aroused the Queen from her slumber, has been for many years the intimate friend of her beloved sovereign. She has shared all her Majesty's joys and sorrows, and helped to nurse the Duke of Clarence during his last illness. She always accompanies the Queen on her visits to Denmark. Her prompt action on this occasion probably saved the Queen's life, for not long after quitting the room, the ceiling collapsed. It is well even for a Queen to so live and act, that the people around her have a personal affection for her; then she will always have near her, friends devoted to her.

SOLDIERS OF THE NEW REPUBLIC OF PANAMA AT DRILL.

A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity (Prov. 17: 17).

A Missile from the Sky

Two men in Oregon tell a thrilling story of their escape from an aerolite which fell near them one evening recently. One of them, the owner of a sheep range near Fossil, in Weaver County, had gone there on an inspection visit. He and his herder went to Muleshoe Mountain, and were busy about the homestead until night. As they stood on the hillside talking, they heard a strange, whizzing noise, and looking upward, saw a large brilliant mass just over their heads. Both men flung themselves backward out of its way, only just escaping it. As it struck the frozen ground, they heard the sizzling caused by its heat. It slowly turned from white to red, and then to a dark color, but remained too hot for them to touch it. On the next morning they examined it carefully and dug it up. It was an irregular mass, about eighteen inches in diameter, and weighing twenty-three pounds. It was porous, like pumice-stone, but much heavier in proportion to its size. They carried it to Fossil, and put it in the window of a store for the curious to see. If that stone could speak and tell us from what world it came, and what are the conditions there, how many there would be around it listening eagerly! Yet when God's own Son came from heaven to reveal that world to us, he was silenced, and even now few heed the words he uttered.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA'S BED-ROOM AFTER THE FIRE

See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh . . . from heaven (Heb. 2: 25).

Girls Building a Church

A press dispatch from Greenwich, Conn., says that a church is being built there in a unique way. The girl students at Rosemary Hall have resolved that religious services shall no longer be held in the gymnasium, as they have hitherto, but in a building specially devoted to them. As the funds for the erection of the edifice were not available, they determined to do the work with their own hands. A landowner in the neighborhood hearing of their resolve, offered them all the stone free of cost that they would need. They hired a wagon and team and drove to the quarry, where they loaded the wagon and drove back to college. Fifty girls did the work. They were hatless, and wore sweaters, with the initials of the college worked on the front. They have made the architectural plans and have studied the building art under an expert. They will dig the trench, mix the mortar and lay the stones themselves, without male assistance, and are confident that they can build the walls and put on the roof as well as could be done by an experienced builder. Every one will wish them success in their toilsome work. One may hope, too, that the labor may remind them of the advice of the Apostle which, if they will follow it, will help in the building of that real church which has been going on for centuries.

Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ (I. Peter 2: 5).

Treated with Radium

A man sixty-two years of age came from his country home six weeks ago to consult specialists in New York about a cancer, which was eating away one side of his face. He applied to several experts, but none gave him any hope. Each told him that the only resource was to cut away the cancer, and that its roots had spread so extensively that the operation would be fatal. As death either from the cancer or the operation was inevitable, one of the physicians, Dr. W. H. Van den Burg, proposed to the patient an experiment with radium. It did not commend itself strongly either to the physician or the patient; but as no other remedy would be of any avail, there was nothing to be lost by using the radium. A minute quantity smaller than a pin's head was procured, and enclosed in a glass tube. This the patient held in his mouth twelve minutes at a time, at the end of which period the burning sensation became intolerable. It was then removed until the patient could bear another application. After a few applications the swelling was perceptibly reduced. The treatment has been continued until the face has resumed an appearance almost normal, and the growth in the mouth has wholly disappeared. It has now been suspended for a time to ascertain if the malignant virus has been eradicated. What a boon it will be to the world if it should prove that, in radium, we have a cure for cancer! Every sufferer will eagerly seek it. They will not act as do those afflicted with sin, who know that there is a sure remedy, yet do not avail themselves of it:

Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? (Jer. 8: 22).

BRIEF NOTE

Dr. Joseph Hamilton, whose deeply interesting and instructive sermon on "Numbering the Stars" appears on another page of this journal, is the author of a valuable astronomical work which has just been published. It is well illustrated and thoroughly up-to-date. Its title is Our Own and Other Worlds. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can obtain it for $1.25, by writing him, at his address, Mimico, Toronto, Canada.

ALASKAN LIFE IN WINTER TIME

AN ESKIMO MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

ALL THAT CAN BE SEEN OF SETTLERS' CABINS UNDER THE SNOWS

IN THE COLD-DEFYING ALASKAN DRESS

BY leaps and bounds, our new territory of Alaska is coming to the front in importance among Uncle Sam's possessions. It is now more than merely an attractive field for the fortune-hunter; it is rapidly becoming known as a territory in which many pursuits common to other sections of the Union may be followed agreeably and successfully. The fact that a nugget of gold, weighing one hundred and eighty-two ounces, and valued at $3,276—the largest nugget ever found in the world—was mined in Alaska during the past summer, may explain, in part, why thousands of men and women annually face the dangers and hardships of that arctic region, in an endeavor to attain fortune. Yet all these people do not go to work as miners, for today, Alaska has representatives of many professions and trades, who find employment in their different callings.

Alaskan towns are no longer the wild, riotous communities they were a few years ago. In many of these flourishing settlements, there are now established resident physicians and clergymen to minister to the needs of the people, and the population consists of peaceful and law-abiding citizens.

On the journey to Alaska, there are many interesting sights to be witnessed. Among these, is the Russian Church at Unalaska, one of the Aleutian Islands. This church was founded over a hundred years ago by Russian priests. It contains many beautiful decorations, which the traveler would hardly expect to find in such an out-of-the-way place. There are practically only two seasons in Alaska—winter and summer. During the eight months of winter, whole towns are literally buried in the snow-drifts, which are frequently from sixty to seventy feet high. At such times, entrance to the cabins is only attained by digging deep tunnels through these huge drifts. As the winter advances, it is necessary to lengthen the chimneys, lest they become buried in the drifting snow.

The Eskimo live in huts, built of sod, which are called igloos. These huts are dark, ill-smelling homes, but keep out the bitter cold of winter remarkably well, when covered with the drifting snow. These people are very superstitious regarding death, and fear it so that they destroy the huts in which any members of their tribes pass away. The dead are given but scant attention, the body being placed above ground and simply covered with a few sticks, branches and stones. If a white man dies, the natives come in crowds to the funeral, and seem to enjoy immensely every detail of the sad rite.

In winter, men, women and children wear a comfortable outer garment which they call a parkie. These parkies are made of squirrel or reindeer skins and resemble a jumper, only they are longer and have a hood attached at the neck.

The white people have adopted the parkie for winter use, as it is far more suitable than any garment of our own. Eskimo mothers carry their babies on their backs, in the same manner as all other Indian tribes. These mothers and children appear to be very affectionate and happy in their relations to each other, just like mothers and their little ones in our own more temperate latitudes.

Among the most valued possessions in Alaska are the dogs, and prices vary from fifty to one hundred and fifty dollars apiece. Malamutes, or native dogs, are faithful to a just master; but they lack affection, and seem to understand the whip better than a kind word. These native dogs are sly and wolfish, and no amount of punishment has ever been known to cure them of stealing everything which comes within their reach.

When preparing for the trail, the dogs are harnessed in tandem fashion, the traces being attached to their collars and to a leathern belt, which is fastened around their bodies below the forelegs. Without reins to guide them, but simply at a crack of the whip and a hearty shout of "mush on!" (which means "go!") they are off, and go they do, frequently making thirty or forty miles without a stop.

How these dogs can guide their masters over the snow-covered wastes, to shelter and safety, frequently in the face of a furious blizzard, seems beyond human comprehension.

In no part of the globe is the unerring instinct of the dog as the pathfinder, more strikingly illustrated than in winter journeys over the arctic wastes of Alaska. Many a traveler, both white and native, owes his life and the saving of all his possessions, to the courage, sagacity, endurance and fidelity of his dog team. In the illustrations on these pages, showing various points of interest in Alaska, never before photographed, we are indebted to the courtesy of Mr. Fitz, of the Council City News, who is now in New York, having left Alaska a few weeks ago, before the annual winter "freeze-in" placed an insurmountable ice barrier between Alaska and the outer world—a barrier not to be overcome until June next, when the ice will melt, the rivers will open, and navigation will be resumed. EDITH M. BURTIS.

In the year 1892, through the efforts of Rev. Sheldon Jackson, LL.D., United States Agent of Education in Alaska, reindeer were imported from Siberia, Norway and Lapland, and introduced into Alaska for domestic purposes. The story of this experiment, which proved a remarkable success, has already been told in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and accounts published from time to time in these columns (to which Dr. Jackson has long been a valued contributor), showed that

THE MAIN THOROUGHFARE OF NOME, ALASKA

A NATIVE CABIN OF LOGS AND TURF

LARGEST NUGGET IN THE WORLD ($3,270)

A DOG TEAM READY TO START ON A WINTER JOURNEY

A PROSPECTOR AT WORK

the herds were largely increasing, and giving much satisfaction. With the sudden influx of a new population in Alaska, which began during the great mining rush a few years ago, the reindeer question became an important one, in view of the difficulty of procuring supplies and provisions at the camps and the new settlements in the interior. While dog teams served a useful purpose, it was believed that the domesticated reindeer could be used to excellent advantage for freighting and transportation. A number of reindeer enterprises were started by private parties, but most of these failed for various reasons. Up to the present time, government reindeer herds have been established under Dr. Sheldon Jackson's direction, at Unalaklik, Teller, Cape Prince of Wales, Golovin Bay, Point Hope, Point Barrow, and Circle City. At these places the animals are in charge of Lapps, Finns and Eskimos.

Public opinion concerning Alaska is undergoing a great change. "In the future," writes Bushrod W. James, "there will be many who will prefer Alaska or Dakota to Florida. As far as my own experience led me to observe, it was lovely and healthful." The mines of silver, gold and coal, the mighty forests of cedar and pine, the beautiful furs of seal and otter, the great fisheries of whale, salmon and cod, will yet attract an immense population.

Among the photographs on this page, not the least interesting is that which shows the interior of a Greek chapel. The Greek church was the pioneer religion of Russian America. Under its influence, however, education and enlightenment made slow progress, and it was not until other religious bodies entered the field that any material effort took place in this direction. As a whole, the territory was in dense, indeed almost heathen ignorance. Yet, as early as 1792 there was a Greek Church Mission School at Kadiak, which was followed in 1799 by a Greek Mission, fully organized. In 1869, it was stated by the Russian authorities that the Greek Church had seven mission stations in Alaska, with 12,140 members. In 1877, Dr. Jackson established a Presbyterian Mission at Fort Wrangel. There are now over a dozen Presbyterian mission stations in Alaska, and the number is constantly growing. There are also Episcopal, Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, Moravian, Quaker, Swedish Evangelical, and many others. One of the worst enemies to religious progress among the natives has been the liquor traffic. When a Government officer in 1881, undertook to investigate the workings of the rum traffic in Alaska, he made some strange discoveries. Bushrod W. James writes:

"He found rum one of the chief objects against education. Children were sent to school a while, and then removed, girls particularly being derelict. He soon discovered that the children were being sold, debauched or married for the sake of gain to obtain the liquor. With no delay he abolished the sale of molasses, with which the natives had soon learned to make fire-water—hoo-chinoo, a despicable intoxicant. He would not permit whisky to enter the port however labelled; and he introduced a system of marking, or labelling the houses, having the children of each designated by a corresponding tablet, made of tin, and fastened by a string around the child's neck. At the opening of school each child was registered, the delinquents looked after, and if no good reason for absence was given, there was a small fine collected. He also organized a native police force, marking them in bright letters on their caps and silver stars on their breasts. This discipline gave an impetus to the work so long ago begun by the missionaries, and education started in earnest in Sitka." This momentum was just what was needed.

In recent years education has made gratifying progress. In nearly all the Alaskan schools there is industrial training for the girls and boys, and not a few of the school buildings were erected by the trained young handicraftsmen of the schools. The principal centres of education have been the Sitka Industrial School and the Haines' Training School at Chilkat, also the Government schools at Juneau, Kadiak, Unalaklik, Jackson, St. Paul's and St. George, and the Indian Girls Training School at Wrangel, besides others that have been opened within a recent date.

INTERIOR OF THE OLD RUSSO-GREEK CHURCH, UNALASHKA

A GROUP OF WALRUSES IN WINTER

A MAIL CARRIER ON THE FROZEN ALASKAN WASTES

Christ's Kingdom Full Grown

Jesus Rejected at Nazareth

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JAN. 24
LUKE 4: 16-30

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT—JOHN 1: 11:
HE CAME UNTO HIS OWN, AND HIS OWN RECEIVED HIM NOT

IT is the Sabbath day in Nazareth, and in the sweet springtime, when the surrounding hills are lighted up with the bright tints of flowers. It is a great occasion for Mary, the mother of Jesus, for her Son has returned after a long absence, of a year or more. Her mother-heart is exalted, because of what her Son has already done. She was present when he turned the water into wine at Cana. She has been told how he healed the nobleman's son in Capernaum, by the word of his power, even while he was in Cana. She was in Jerusalem at the Passover when he cleansed the Temple of the dishonest money changers and dealers. And word has reached her of the power of his preaching in Samaria. And now he has come "home" for a brief stay, as she has eagerly told all her neighbors.

The third hour of the Sabbath day, 9 A. M., finds her seated in the synagogue, behind the lattice in the women's gallery. Through the lattice she peers, and seeks out her Son seated among the men. Her eyes fill with tears of joy as he is invited to come to the reading desk in the centre of the synagogue, and the roll of Scripture, answering to our pulpit Bible, is handed to him, with the request that he will read and conduct the service. All of the congregation are interested in the now famous young man who has grown up among them, but they still think of him as "the carpenter's son." The mother has treasured up in her heart the incidents connected with his miraculous birth, and is specially reminded to-day of the scene in the Temple when the aged Simeon held her babe in his arms, and prophesied that he should be "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Israel." Jesus holds the roll of Isaiah in his hands, and Mary notes the directness with which he unrolls it to the very place where he wishes to read. In a clear, mellow voice he reads, standing, Isa. 61: 1, 2. And then he sits down, still in the reading desk, as was the custom of those about to expound the Scripture just read. There is something unusual in his manner, for the eyes of all in the synagogue are fastened upon him. The very first sentences he utters increase the attention of the people. "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." The heart of Mary quickened with expectation. She glances about to see the effect of his words upon others. She sees clouds gathering upon some faces as he proceeds to unfold his mission. He, too, observes the dark looks, and tells them that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, and that they really would not believe in him if he should do his wonderful works in their sight. He recalls to mind the neglect and the opposition which Elijah and Elisha received in their day.

All in the synagogue are filled with wrath when they hear these things. They rush upon him, and endeavor to push him out of the synagogue. Mary's face is pressed close against the lattice. She is powerless to render assistance. She is looking for Joseph. She sees him making his way toward Jesus, and then she sees him rudely jostled by those who say they want none of his interference. Now the tumultuous crowd has passed out of the synagogue, but Mary seemed chained to the spot behind the lattice. She sinks upon her knees to pray to the Divine Father of her Son, that no evil may befall him. The angry cry, "To the hill, to the hill," reaches her ears, and she recognizes their intent to cast Jesus down over the precipice. She prays yet more earnestly for help from above. . . . There is a sudden stillness. What does it mean? Joseph comes seeking her, and tells her that Jesus has escaped his would-be murderers.

Illustration and Application

In this lesson, the spiritual and practical aspects of Christianity are set side by side, which recalls the story of a young housemaid, named Mary Ann, who became a genuine Christian in a revival meeting, under an address on "God's servants." She so caught the spirit of the address, that she would say afterwards, "I'm sweeping this room for my Heavenly King," or "I hate cleaning silver, but I'll make it shine for his sake." One day, six-year-old Percy, of the family she served, said to his mother: "I wish we could change Mary Ann's name to Mary Martha. Mary is just right, for she loves to read her Bible and let Jesus speak to her, as he did to the Mary, who sat at his feet. But she also works hard for Jesus' sake, as Martha used to do. I heard you say she was the best housemaid you ever had." So, in every life, to-day's lesson would teach us to combine the spiritual and the practical—first, a Pentecost; then, a Book of Acts.

I. INDIVIDUAL LIFE SPIRITUALIZED.—The Spirit of the Lord was upon me. That is the beginning of everything good—the Holy Spirit for sonship and the Holy Spirit for service. These words, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me," are not for Jesus alone. Isaiah uttered them first, and they are words we should all be in condition to say. "To you, is the promise, and to your children, and to all that are afar off" (Acts 2: 39). The command is also to all: "Be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5: 18). This is one of "the commandments," of which there are far more ten. This command binds all, as much as the other command in the same sentence: "Be not drunk." One may be "filled with the Spirit" at conversion, as was Cornelius (Acts 10: 44), or very soon after, as was Paul (Acts 9: 17), or long after, as in the case of converts in Samaria (Acts 8: 17), and Ephesus (Acts 19: 1-7). The command to "be filled with the Spirit," is manifestly applicable to every one not consciously "filled," and when God is to pour his Spirit into an earthen vessel, it must manifestly be both cleansed and consecrated for that filling. To be cleansed is to put away all known sin. We shall still need to pray, "Forgive us," for there will remain unconscious sin. Consecration is coronation, making Christ truly Lord of our lives. When we have put sin out of our heart's throne, and set Christ there, we are ready for the command whose passive tense signifies, "Let yourself be filled." "Egypt always has the Nile, but waits every year for its overflow." We may be filled, as Peter was, again and again (Acts 2: 4; 4: 31). John McNeil, in "The Spirit-Filled Life," reminds us that in John III. we have the Indwelling; in John IV. the Infilling; and, in John VII. the Overflowing. The need of the says one of our exchanges, in telling the anecdote. One day he was absent. Upon inquiry, he was found by a missionary in a little attic chamber, barely furnished with cot and stool. "You are lonely here," said the missionary. "Has any one called on you?" "Oh, yes," he replied; "several persons have called. Mr. Gladstone for one. He called and read to me." "Mr. Gladstone called? What did he read?" "He sat on the stool there and read the Bible to me."

No distant Lord have I,
Loving afar to be;
Made flesh for me, he cannot rest
Until he rests in me.

Brother in joy and pain,
Bone of my bone was he,
Now—intimacy closer still,
He dwells himself in me.

—M. D. BABCOCK.

He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives.—Emancipation from slavery, which still exists in some heathen lands, but which was swept out of the whole Christian world in the middle third of the nineteenth century, is a direct fruit of Christ's great doctrine of the sacred individuality of every human soul, as a son or daughter of God, a brother or sister of Christ, for whom he died, and so a brother or sister of every human being, to be loved and helped, not hated or harmed. President Booker T. Washington, in his Heroes in Black, tells of a very intelligent negro carpenter, who, in slavery days, made a contract with his master that he would gradually pay $1,500 for himself. He was so trusted that he was allowed to go to Ohio to erect a building, and while there the Emancipation Proclamation gave him a legal right to his freedom. But when the war was over he walked 300 miles over the mountains to pay what was lacking of the stipulated ransom. But the real ransom by which all slaves in Christendom were set free was paid by him who also "paid it all, all the debt we owe" for spiritual redemption, in the red coin of his own blood at Calvary. It is the Cross that has set free body as well as soul, and saves the whole man and the whole community.

And recovering of sight to the blind.—Somebody has resolved all virtue into the grace of pity, in which there is little in lands that have not learned of Jesus. Professor Henry Van Dyke beautifully pictures the ever-near and ever-sympathetic Christ, in a poem suggested by the discovery of a reputed saying of Christ, with which the poem closes:

Where the many toil together, there am I among my own;
Where the tired workman sleepeth, there am I with him alone;
I, the peace that passeth knowledge, dwell amid the daily strife;
I, the bread of heaven, am broken in the sacrament of life.
Every task, however simple, sets the soul that does it free;
Every deed of love and mercy done to men is done to me.
Thou hast learned the peaceful secret; thou hast come to me for rest;
With thy burden, in thy labor, thou art, Felix, doubly blest.
Nevermore thou needest seek me; I am with thee everywhere;
Raise the stone and thou shalt find me; cleave the wood and I am there.

To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.—Every year is now called "the year of our Lord." That ought to mean that he is really Lord of our years, of our months, of our days, of our hours, of our moments. Is he? Has this new year so far been so used by you, by me, as to be an "acceptable year" to God? This lesson very distinctly teaches us that religious forms will not please him, unless they are combined with spiritual and practical religion. The chameleon looks up to heaven devoutly with one eye, and down to earth thoughtfully with the other, with such an expression that it was once thought to be half-contemplative in its nature, living on air. But closer observation shows that both eyes were patiently watching for insect prey. So, many in the very midst of devotional forms, are neglecting both the spiritual and practical side of religion; making long prayers, and at the same time plotting to devour widows' houses. They may be "acceptable members," as the church certificate runs, but this will not count in the judgment, if they are not "acceptable" to the Lord, through spiritual and practical faithfulness.

The dominant message of this lesson is, that Christians are to be so "anointed" with "the Spirit" individually, that they will unite to Christianize the social life of the whole community; putting justice, liberty, and brotherly-kindness, in place of the oppression the poor and weak have so long suffered from rulers and masters. We know a man may become Christlike. Why not also a thousand people in a village, or ten thousand in a city?

"THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD IS UPON ME"

THE HILL WHEREON THEIR CITY WAS BUILT

baptism for service will come most strongly to us when we stand, as Jesus did, at the portals of some new, great field of work.

II. SOCIAL LIFE CHRISTIANIZED.—Because he anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor. "Good tidings" is the same as "Gospel," and evangel, which last gives us evangelism and evangelical. What then is the Gospel? Surely the answer is here in Luke 4, which is at once the Gospel of Moses, of Isaiah, and of Christ.

"He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives.

"And recovering of sight to the blind.

"To set at liberty them that are bruised.

"To preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

What does that mean? Those who most condemn rationalism have rationalized these great words into a mere allegory of a sinner's conversion, because they have not faith to believe Christ can save a city. The first rule of Bible interpretation is that a passage is to be construed according to its plain meaning, unless that would be absurd. The Gospel goes back historically to the Jubilee Year, when the "poor," who lost land and liberty, had it restored. Isaiah proclaimed that when Christ should come and his spirit should be diffused among men every year would be a jubilee year of blind asylums, prison reform, emancipation and social justice, which together make an "acceptable" "year of our Lord." The seed of the Gospel is individual conversion. "The Spirit upon me"; but the full-grown tree, the fully developed Gospel, is Christianized business and politics and pleasure, Christianized society.

Good tidings to the poor.—What relief the coming of Christ as a poor man and the champion of the poor has brought to the poor and weak! More wonderful far was the condescension of the Son of God, who came to be a brother of the poor.

An old man used to sweep the street crossings for gratuitous pennies near the House of Parliament for many years,

A Well-Regulated Household

A CORRESPONDENT has asked, "What constitutes a well-regulated household?" The question cannot be answered in a single sentence, and the theme admits of no arbitrary treatment. It opens a large field for thought, and admits of many shades of opinion, but is extremely interesting, and always timely. An ill-regulated, ill-assorted household, is a place from which to flee. A well-regulated household is a refuge, a sanctuary, a true home.

To be ideal, a household should consist of congenial inmates. The simplest, and ordinarily the happiest family circle, consists of father, mother, and children. If grandparents are added, the family may be happy and tranquil, and greatly benefited by the presence in it of serene old age. On the other hand, old people who are querulous, hard to please, and in the habit of interfering in the family discipline, bring in an unfortunate influence, a leaven of peevishness and complaint. Outsiders in the home, whether kindred or acquaintances, somewhat complicate the problem.

It may be stated with reasonable certainty, that in any well-regulated household, there is an acknowledged head; without somebody at the helm, the ship veers about at the mercy of wind and weather. Indoors, this head is the wife and mother. She controls the housekeeping, governs the children, and is responsible for the quiet and comfort of the home. Outdoors, the head is the father, who dictates the family attitude to the community; who pays the family bills, and who stands for the family in its relation to the world. If father and mother are united in love and reciprocal confidence, there will be no conflict or clash, and each will complement the other in the decorous and skillful home management, which alone is productive of good results.

In the well-regulated household, the children yield prompt and amiable obedience to the wishes of their elders, and the young people, of an age to do as they deem best, defer from choice and from affection to those around them, not selfishly claiming their own way. Understand that there may be various ways of looking at most things, and that in non-essentials there may be the greatest liberty, but when the occasion calls for action, there must be unanimity in a well-regulated household.

Following out this line, an orderly household must have times and seasons, punctuality as to the home engagements, and, as a rule, method about meals. That is not a well-regulated home in which breakfast remains on the table for hours, because one or two members of the family are bent on prolonging their morning nap, irrespective of the household arrangements and convenience. Nor, is it much better where the man of the house, who might leave his office earlier if he would take the trouble, is habitually from thirty to forty-five minutes late to dinner at night. Punctuality is a corner-stone in a well-regulated household.

Then, too, there must be mutual forbearance. If there is an invalid in the family, who requires special care and consideration, different members of the home should relieve one another in caring for her. Old people should have their privileges, should be considered, should not be treated brusquely or with impatience. A fine courtesy prevails in a well-regulated household. Good manners tide people over a good many rough places.

In the well-regulated home one does not hurt another's feelings. One does not tell a story to the mortification of another. The spirit of the home is embodied in the beautiful text: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and thus fulfil the law of Christ."

Teachers' Troubles

That the children in our household, who are as a rule so easily amenable to home discipline, should be so naughty in the schoolroom, is a matter of constant wonder. Can it be that teachers are over-exacting in their requirement of perfect silence and military rigidity of bearing, from restless small folk who are thrilling to their finger-tips with vitality? Is it not at least possible that order has been exalted to a place too high in the schoolroom ideal, and that some other good things are sacrificed in order to obtain it? A very successful teacher said the other day, and said truly, "Without perfect order, good work in the class-room is simply not to be had." This young lady, gentle, low-voiced, serene,

LITTLE FRIENDS

Little trustful pensioners,
See the lady as she comes;

In her apron corn and crumbs
For she knows you're friends of hers.

always at poise, has no difficulty in controlling large classes of boys, who, unruly with others, are obedient and respectful when with her. She expects goodness and sweetness from her pupils, and they do not disappoint her.

A teacher who "loathes her work and hates children"—one such wrote to a friend in those terms, deploring her inability to break from the bondage of a vocation she found irksome—cannot hope to win the love and confidence of her class. Without these she may indeed impose her will upon them and be a sort of slave-driver, enforcing her wishes by punishment and scolding, but she will never be a teacher in the true and high sense of the term.

Complaints brought home from the schoolroom should be heard and investigated, but in fairness to both child and teacher, the parent should hesitate to uphold the former and condemn the latter, until the case has been thoroughly searched. The home and the school must work in loving union, for the good of the child, who is the important person, because to-day will soon be gone, and to-morrow the child will be grown, and will have to face the tremendous issues that confront maturity.

Heaven—Our Home

HEAVEN is the capital of God's empire—the home of the redeemed of all ages. There is the throne of the eternal, where Christ, the Prince of Peace, reigns, and is the manifestation of the Father. There are the grandest displays of his infinite power and glory. There all the redeemed see the King in his beauty, and enjoy his fellowship, and commune with each other. No sin nor sorrow, no pain nor death is there. The pearly gates are near us and stand ajar, so that sometimes the saint on this side, like Ezekiel at Chebar, or Paul on the heights, or John on Patmos, can gaze right in. There on every side open up avenues for endless progress, for investigation, for development, with fullness of joy evermore. The fountains of truth and joy will never run dry. The capacities and the powers of the redeemed will increase through all the ages of eternity. Where the Archangel now stands, we will stand, then mount higher. New glories will ever be revealed, and new heights attained. The new spiritual eyes, with microscopic and telescopic power, will see clearly; and the new ears, attuned to the harmony of celestial speech and music, will gather in the songs of the angels and the entrancing melodies of heaven. It matters not how long you may have been there, nor to what heights you have attained, there is yet an eternity before you, and an infinity of empire yet to explore, with joy unending and an eternal weight of glory to be revealed. Man redeemed is a coworker with Christ, his elder brother, and stands in the position and relation for which he was created, a little lower than God. His attitude will be that of adoration, service and progress. Love will be supreme, service will be unwearying and perfect, and progress will be illimitable. The play of the atoms in a molecule of matter, and the mighty sweep of Orion and the Seven Stars in their orbits, will then be clearly comprehended. Universal gravitation and the electric force will come under our dominion and do our bidding—yes, all created things will be under our feet. How we may identify those we have known on earth, or may meet in heaven, we know not, as we do not now know the powers of spiritual vision; but one thing is sure, we shall know each other there better than we know each other here, and this knowledge will include the saints of all time and all other intelligences of heaven with whom we will commune. The story of Creation and the wonderful story of Redemption will be unfolded, and the mysteries of time will be made clear. But it doth not yet appear what we shall be, for there hath not yet entered into the human heart a conception of the things prepared and in store for them that love God and keep his commandments.

Newark, Ohio. WRAY BEATTIE, Ph.D.

Consistent Christians

It is a singular fact that worldly people demand great consistency from Christians; that they are quick to see a flaw in the practice of the professed believer in Christ, and that they often excuse their own derelictions by saying, "Although I make no profession, I am sure I live quite as righteously as my neighbor, who does." The thought that the eyes of others are upon the disciple, should make him very careful always to live consistently, so that no discredit may be brought upon the Lord whom he serves, and would honor.

The Christian is not perfect. He or she is still a fallible human being, and will be sure to go astray and do wrong things. The difference between one who is a Christian and one who makes no attempt to follow the Lord is, that when the disciple recognizes his own lapse, he repents and confesses, and with humility, and in faith, tries to begin again.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—VERA. An invitation to an ordinary "At Home" needs nothing beyond your card, by way of regret, if you cannot attend. Mail it on the day of the reception. If other ladies receive with the hostess, send a card for each.

—AUNT PRUDENCE is happy to answer letters, but would like in every case a self-addressed and stamped envelope sent for the reply. Please always give your real name, not for publication, but for the Editor's convenience.

—JOHN. Different colors in paper have no signification. Pure white or cream paper is the best choice. A gentleman asks a lady if he may correspond with her. The person leaving home is the one, as a rule, to write the first letter.

HER LIFE SPENT FOR PEACE

PRINCESS WISZNIEWSKA, one of the founders of the Universal Alliance of Women for Peace through Education, and a notable figure in European Peace Conference for several years past, died in Paris recently of heart disease. She was buried at Pere La Chaise Cemetery. There were many beautiful tributes of flowers, some of them from American friends in Paris, for the Princess was greatly beloved by all who knew her.

Gabrielle Wiszniewska was the descendant of an ancient French family, whose estates were in the Department of the Yonne, and whose fortunes suffered greatly by the wars and disasters that befel France in 1870. Gabrielle, though intensely patriotic, was early impressed with the sad side of warfare, and the conception of a lasting continental peace, with all the blessings it would bring, became her inspiration, and gave character and direction to a noble and amiable career.

The Woman's Universal Peace Alliance, though it came into existence only a few years ago, now numbers, as the President recently announced, "over five million women in Europe and America, all working together." The immediate forerunner of the Alliance was the Woman's League for International Disarmament, which, under the Princess' leadership, took form in 1896. When in 1897 the celebrated pronouncement of the Czar in favor of general disarmament was published, it is said that the first telegram thanking Nicholas II. was that which the Princess sent. Inspired by the action of the Czar, the League redoubled its activities, and the Princess was able to collect and send to the President of the Hague Peace Congress, an enrollment of some 700,000 signatures declaring in favor of peace and arbitration. In 1900, the League, greatly enlarged by addition of individuals and of various bodies of women in different countries, held its first International Congress under the name of the Woman's Universal Peace Alliance, at the Paris Exposition.

THE LATE PRINCESS WISZNIEWSKA

Guided by the Central Council at Paris, groups of women in France, Russia, Great Britain, Spain, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Italy, Portugal, Bulgaria, Roumania, Egypt, Syria, Japan, North and South America, now exchange from country to country acts of friendship and treaties of peace. Thus the influence of the gentle-souled Princess will live after her to benefit humanity.

Many readers of this journal will doubtless remember this noble and sweet-souled woman, whose eloquent letters, in the interest of the world's peace, were published at different times in these pages during the last three years, and greatly appreciated.

SOME WITTY PREACHERS

Anecdotes of Spurgeon, Parker, Wesley, Hall, Wilberforce and Rowland Hill:

THE fact that it is the business of the preacher to find a good deal of fault with his fellow-creatures probably explains why it is that a jest at the expense of "the cloth" is always sure of a welcome. But it must be admitted that the divines themselves have not been without their share of the saving grace of humor.

The example of such preachers as Henry Ward Beecher, Mr. Spurgeon, and Dr. Parker (observes a writer in the Montreal Star) has in these days brought many to feel that even a sermon may, without unseemliness or irreverence, be lighted up with an occasional gleam of humor. This is, indeed, but a reversion to an older state of things.

Noticing one of his congregation nodding during the sermon, a Scottish pastor stopped and admonished the delinquent. "Jeems Robson," he said with becoming severity, "ye are sleepin'; I insist on yer wakin' when God's word is preached to ye." "Weel, sir, ye may look at yer ain seat, and ye'll see a sleeper forbye me," replied the unabashed Jeems, pointing to the minister's wife. "Then, Jeems," said the minister, "when ye see my wife asleep again, haud up your hand." Presently the hand shot up, and the preacher could not shut his eyes to the fact that his wife's were not open. So he called upon her to stand up, and when she had done so he proceeded to admonish her. "Mrs. B.," he gravely said, "a'budy kens that when I got ye for my wife I got nae beauty; yer frien's ken that I got nae siller; and if I dinna get God's grace I hae gotten a pair bargain indeed."

Nothing could have been finer than the grave humor with which John Wesley turned the tables on Beau Nash, when he went to Bath to preach. Mortified at being thrown into the shade by the great evangelist, the vain and pompous Master of the Ceremonies went up to him as soon as service had begun, and impudently told him that his preaching frightened people out of their wits.

"Sir," replied Wesley, "did you ever hear me preach?" "No," was the reply. "How, then, can you judge of what you never heard?" "By common report." "Sir," rejoined Wesley, "is not your name Nash? I have heard what common report has to say of you. But I dare not judge of you by common report."

Much more sharply did Rowland Hill, the witty and eccentric pastor of Surrey Chapel, deal with an affront put upon him in the pulpit. It was his custom to read out any requests for prayer that were sent up to him. One day he commenced thus—"The prayers of the congregation are desired for"—well, I suppose I must finish what I have begun—"for the Rev. Rowland Hill, that he will not go riding about in his carriage on Sundays." "If," he gravely continued, "the writer of this piece of folly and impertinence is present and will go into the vestry after the service, and let me put a saddle on his back, I will ride him home instead of going in my carriage." Then he went on with the service. When, years afterwards, he was reminded of what he had said, he explained, "Well, you know, I couldn't call him a donkey in plain terms."

There was once a preacher who was notorious for his assimilation of the ideas of his predecessors. On one occasion he had scarcely begun to turn his eloquent periods when a grave old gentleman who had shown himself into a seat just under the pulpit was heard to mutter, "That's Sherlock!" The orator frowned, but passed on. Before long, disconcerted by another exclamation, "That's Tillotson!" he paused and bit his lips, but deemed it better to continue his discourse. But when, a few sentences further on, there came a third interruption, "That's Blair!" his vexation got the better of his prudence, and, leaning over the pulpit, he cried out, "Fellow, if you do not hold your tongue you shall be turned out!" "That's his own!" said the old gentleman, glancing around at his neighbors, with a shrug of his shoulders.

To the great Robert Hall, though he was never less than serious in the pulpit, the world is indebted for some flashes of mordant humor. Once he was asked whether it was true that he was going to marry Miss A. "Marry Miss A.!" he burst out; "I would sooner marry Beelzebub's daughter, and go and live with the old folk!" What a forked-lightning flash of humor!

cry out: "Give us Sabbath day, that we may observe it and keep it holy to the Lord, and to give him thanks for the many blessings he has bestowed upon us! Give us one day in the seven, when we may be at home with our loved ones!"

Is it any wonder that a certain class of railroad men is considered "tough," when even the world helps to make them so? Stop the Sunday trains, and give them the Sabbath day, and I will venture to say you will soon note a change, not only in the railroad men but in the whole world.

If Sunday trains could be suppressed, what a wonderful difference would result. The laboring class could then enjoy the day designed by God for all mankind throughout all generations. If Sunday trains could be stopped might that not have a tendency to stop all branches of Sunday employment? Certainly, works of necessity and mercy are allowable on the Sabbath-day; but is it a necessity that

The humor of the great Bishop Wilberforce was of a robust kind. When in his early days his tutor appeared, rod in hand, to execute vengeance for the disorderly pranks the students were playing, he seized a Hebrew schoolfellow and thrust him forward, remarking, "The Jew first and then the Gentile." The Bishop was the author of a most happy jest which has been accredited to other wits. When suddenly asked by a mechanic the way to heaven, he answered, "Turn to the right, my friend, and keep straight forward."

The humor of Dr. Parker leaned rather to the sardonic. It was often employed in covering objectors and interruptors with ridicule, as at the famous conference on preaching in which Mr. Gladstone took part, when a gentleman rose from the back of the church to complain of the doctor's exasperating trick of dropping his voice at the end of a sentence until he became inaudible. "I have often noticed," was the retort, "that when a man is deaf he takes a seat as far away from the preacher as possible!" At the meeting at the Cannon Street Hotel to support his candidature for the City of London, one of the audience refused to remove his hat in spite of the exhortations of those around him. At last Dr. Parker intervened. "Let him alone, gentlemen, and let his hat alone; believe me, there is nothing in it," he said, amid roars of laughter.

Mr. T. W. Medhurst, one of Mr. Spurgeon's students, has placed on record a specimen of Mr. Spurgeon's pungent humor, which he was never backward in exercising when presumption or impertinence had to be rebuked. When Mr. Medhurst and "the Governor" were together in a vestry, a third person had the excellent taste to say to Mr. Spurgeon, "I think, sir, you should train your student not to imitate you when he is preaching." "Do you try to imitate me?" said the master, turning sharply to his disciple. "I do not try to do so," said the latter in his confusion. "More flat you!" was the quick reply. "You couldn't imitate a better man!" "That is the way," said Mr. Spurgeon to the rest of the company, as soon as the mortified objector had taken himself off, "that is the way to answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit."

the laboring men should be deprived of the Sabbath day? The corporations say they must work on the Sabbath to "keep up with their work." Why not enlarge your factories and employ more men on the six days?

The public says, "we cannot get along without Sunday trains." Would to God people would think more seriously about this matter, as it is of great importance. If we should have a snow-blizzard, covering the whole United States, but affecting the railroads only, and this storm should last twenty-four hours, and during that time all railroads should be completely tied up, could we get along without these trains? Yes, we would have to. This is practically how it would be if the railroads shut down their Sunday trains. The people would have to get along without them, and pretty soon we would get accustomed to it and the world would be so much the better.

M. JORGENSEN.

It didn't hurt

First teeth should not fall until new ones are ready to come; then they go without pain if the gums are healthy.

RUBIFOAM

An antiseptic, astringent preparation, hardens the gums, whitens the teeth, arrests and prevents decay; is perfectly harmless, pleasant to use, and the easiest dentifrice for children.

25c. at Druggists.

Sample Vial Free. Address

E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

COLD FEET

are banished Warm feet induce sleep The most comfortable thing you ever put foot into is

McFarlan's Slumber Slipper

Will keep the ankles warm. Worn in bed and out. Made of a handsome fleece-lined knit fabric; tops beautifully embroidered with silk. Dainty colorings. Send size of shoe.

TWO PAIRS FOR 25c.—POSTPAID
Different sizes if desired. For men, women, children
McFARLAN MILLS, 40 Harvey Av. Amsterdam, N.Y.

Learn to Knit

Send for the 104-page Columbia Book of Yarns. Worth a dollar. No other book at any price is so thorough, complete and beautiful. Begins with the simplest stitch and ends with the most elaborate garment, illustrating every stitch.

15 cents—a nominal price—at your dealer's, or send to
Mrs. Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH BELLS

AT $5.35 for 20-inch 165-pound 570-pound, we sell all sizes of bells at one-half the prices usually asked. $1.30 buys best 50-pound farm bell. Fine crystalline metal, quality and volume tone unequalled. Guaranteed against breakage for 5 years. For most astute fishing bell offer. Liberal terms, complete catalogue write for FREE CATALOGUE OF BELLS. Address SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., Chicago

Church Helps

MAGIC LANTERNS, STEREOPTICONS for illustrating sermons, giving entertainments, illustrating hymns. Finest collection of slides. Large catalogue FREE. MFG. OPTICIAN, McALLISTER 49 Nassau St., New York.

A POSITION IS OPEN.
Do you know where it is? We do. We have openings for high-grade men of all kinds—Executive, Technical, Clerical—paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. High grade exclusively. Write for plan and booklet.

HAPGOOD'S (Inc.), Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York.

DON'T SET HENS the same old 200 Egg Natural Hen Incubator Costs But $3, other sizes equally as low. Over 125,000 in use. Indispensable to anyone who keeps a hen. Our Patents protected against infringements. Agents wanted everywhere, either sex, no experience necessary. Catalogue sent at about 25c. like Formula FREE if you write today. NATURAL HEN INCUBATOR CO., B84, Columbus, Nebraska Individual Communion Outfits. Send for FREE catalogue and list of users. SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO. Box 7, Rochester, N.Y.

DISTINCTIVELY a S. S. Book 30c. postpaid. GEMS OF SONG THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

CHURCH FURNITURE. Pews, Assembly Chairs, Pulpits, S. S. Seating, Largest Line, Latest Styles. Free Catalogue. Mfg. at GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE WORKS, Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York.

SINFUL SUNDAY TRAFFIC

A Railroad Man's Views on the Question of Keeping the Lord's Day Holy

ONE of our most prominent evils at the present time is the needless Sunday traffic. It is amazing to think of the many thousands of laboring people who are deprived of their Sabbath day rest and worship. We have something over one hundred railroads in the United States, nearly all of which run Sunday trains. This demands conductors, engineers, firemen, brakemen, train dispatchers, telegraph operators, and various other employees as well as higher officials. Sum up the total of all these men and you will find it to be enormous.

If you could read the hearts of a great many of these men—yes, and I believe the majority—you would find that their desire and hope are for the Sabbath-day's rest. They

Art Shirt Waist

HOW TO PRO- CURE ONE FREE

ART WAISTINGS—in white grounds made of the finest quality cotton with mercerized stripes, checks and figures—are the latest Parisian novelty for the "Season of 1904," and make the ideal shirt waist; light as a feather, glossy as silk, yet durable, and launders easily without shrinking. This fabric retails at from 10 cents to 50 cents the yard. Three yards make a waist. For a two-cent stamp or a self-addressed and stamped envelope the manufacturers will send you forty different samples from which you may select. If your dealer cannot furnish you any of the patterns, we will supply you at the wholesale price and make you a great saving and deliver postpaid.

SPECIAL ADVERTISING OFFER

To the first lady giving the name of her dealer and asking for the samples, answering this advertisement before thirty days, from any town of not less than 2,000 or not more than 10,000 population; to the first five ladies answering from towns of not less than 10,000 or more than 50,000, and the first ten ladies answering from towns over 50,000, we will send free, a 3-yard waist pattern of Art Waistings.

We do this to most quickly get the Art Waistings known. The CHRISTIAN HERALD, publishers, deliver the goods. We speak for ourselves and secure your future patronage through your dealer.

ART FABRIC MILLS (Dress Goods Department)
41 White Street, New York, N. Y.

5% With BEST SECURITY

Your $50 or $100 placed with this Company makes part of some larger loan on improved suburban home property always worth 60 per cent. more than it is mortgaged for. Partial payments on these loans are made monthly, and reinvested. The Company pays you 5 percent. because your money is made to earn it. Testimonials from eminent patrons of 5 to 10 years' standing sent on request. WRITE US.

5 percent per annum—quarterly, by check. Withdrawal at your pleasure and full earnings paid out then from the day your funds were received.

Assets, $1,700,000
Surplus and Profits, $175,000
Under New York Banking Department Supervision
Industrial Savings & Loan Co.,
1131 Broadway, New York.

ZOBO CORNETTO

The Musical Wonder
Solid metal (brass finish)
Sample sent prepaid for 25c.

You Can Play it on Sight Without Being Taught
Entertains Everybody Everywhere

See Zobo Entertainments for Home, Church and Sunday School sent on receipt of name and address.
Gauss Mfg. Co., 138 W. 14th St., Dept. 19, New York

CANADA'S FIGHT FOR THE SABBATH

By REV. J. P. GERRIE

THE decision of the Privy Council, London, England, that the Ontario Lord's Day Act is unconstitutional, turns renewed attention to the question of Sunday observance. For a long time this matter was pending, and the chief difference now is that the province goes back to the law before confederation.

This means that Sunday excursions and the running of electric cars are allowed, until further legislation may be secured, which will be more difficult now that the Dominion authorities must be dealt with. The more composite character of the House of Commons does not betoken the agreement on such a question, which might be expected from a provincial legislature.

Yet the Canadian Sunday is proverbial, and for good reasons. Agriculture, commerce, and almost every form of industry rest on that day. The Sunday newspaper is practically unknown, though in Toronto and Montreal, repeated attempts have been made to secure for it a foothold. It is true, in Toronto a Sunday edition of one of the dailies is issued; but this publication appears on Saturday, and is not on regular sale on Sunday. The street car companies have also had great difficulties in obtaining a Sunday franchise. In Toronto, the question was submitted three times before a vote was secured in favor of Sunday cars. In 1892, the opposing vote gave a majority of 3,936; in 1893, 1,003, and in 1897 a minority of 327. Since that date Sunday cars have been continuous in the city, though on a more limited scale. The result in Toronto has made no appreciable difference elsewhere, as there are yet many cities without a Sunday service. Nor have the evils generally feared from the innovation come upon Toronto, as the city, apart from the street cars, maintains its usually quiet and orderly appearance.

REV. J. G. SHEARER, B.A.

MR. J. C. COPP

PRINCIPAL CAVEN, D.D.

Large sections of Canada have been chiefly settled by the Scotch, who brought with them their ancestral reverence for Sunday. A like attitude has also been maintained by English and Irish settlers, while the influx from other European countries has been too slow and meagre to make any noticeable difference on the land. Happily, too, among the earlier settlers there was no Puritanical observance of the day to cause any rebound on the part of succeeding generations. Credit must also be given to the churches, labor organizations, and other agencies, for their continued efforts for the preservation of Sunday for rest and privilege.

In this connection there may be specially noted the work of the Lord's Day Alliance. This organization is well manned, having as President, Principal Caven of Knox College; Mr. J. C. Copp, treasurer, and Revs. J. G. Shearer and T. Albert Moore, field secretaries. As a result of its efforts, every Province is regularly organized, with hundreds of branches scattered up and down the land. The Alliance is undoubtedly doing a great service in maintaining the present rest and quiet of the Sabbath. Their suits for the violation of the law, have, as a rule, been successful. A good work, too, is being done in circulating literature and in arousing public interest.

Will the present Sunday conditions continue? Many good people are apprehensive that they will not. They see encroachments on every side, and many of these must be acknowledged. The large incoming tide of non-English speaking people adds to the complexity of the situation.

Some of these, as the Doukhobors, are scrupulous in their observance of the day, but many are not. It is unlikely, however, that the latter will be able to introduce to any degree the "Continental Sunday." There is reason to believe that the sturdy morality of the children of the pioneers will prove equal to the need. Though the arguments for the maintenance of the day differ, being based chiefly on either the Divine command or humanitarian claims, yet the exponents of both views see the great need of a well-observed Sunday for this formative and growing land.

May Canada retain her Sunday as one of the great bulwarks in a young nation's growth and prosperity.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

E. C., Maryland. "I wish to acknowledge the answer to a special prayer not long ago. I do this that others may have faith in prayer."

Mrs. H. A. S., Carlton, N.Y. "I thank God who answered my prayers. I wish to acknowledge his loving kindness."

Mr. F. S., New Rochelle, N.Y. "In prayer I make all my wants and wishes known to God, who has answered my prayer. I will praise him as long as I live."

A. H. B., Springfield, N.Y. "God has many times answered my prayers. Very recently a dark cloud hung over me. God has lifted it in answer to prayer."

Subscriber, Huntsville, Canada. "I prayed for something I wanted, very earnestly, and received an answer which I now publicly acknowledge with gratitude."

Mrs. J. T. W., Perryville, R. I. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God to me in answering prayer and in sparing me to my family."

E. S. W., Brays, Wash. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering prayer. He has answered many prayers for me."

Reader, N. C. "I know our Father is a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God. I have tried him and found he does answer. Though he may not answer just at the time we might wish, it surely comes. I have lived to learn that we often ask for things that are not best for us, and he gives it as he gave to the children of Israel a king. It is best to ask 'if it be Thy will and best for us.'"

Reader, Massachusetts. "God has answered my prayers very many times in the past. Recently I promised that if he would grant one request, I would acknowledge it to the world. He heard and is answering. Praise his holy name."

Mrs. C. A. W., Springfield, O. "I wish to acknowledge special answers to prayers many times."

Submission, "I wish to acknowledge answered prayer. The Lord has given me peace and comfort in trouble, and I want to do his will."

Reader, Indianapolis, Ind. "God heard and answered my prayers. Put your trust in God and he will surely answer."

Grateful, Warsaw, Ind. "I am constrained with a grateful heart to acknowledge the Father's love in answering a very special prayer."

L. P. P., Allegheny County, Pa. "My prayers have been answered many times."

L. H. P., Upper Sandusky, O. "I promised God in my heart if he would answer my prayer I would acknowledge it to the world. He is answering even now. Praise his holy name."

Mrs. E. H., Macon, Ga. "I asked the Lord to remove something from my mind that was a great trial to me. He answered my prayer, for which I wish to acknowledge my deep gratitude. Praise his holy name."

Many Beverages

are so vastly improved by the added richness imparted by the use of Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. The Eagle Brand is prepared from the milk of herds of well fed, housed, groomed cows of native breeds. Every can is tested and is therefore reliable.

Cocoa Tea Cakes

CORN STARCH
TALK

By MRS. HELEN ARMSTRONG.

A child's craving for sweets is a very natural one, and should be gratified, but in a rational manner. When a child is allowed free access to the cake box or doughnut jar he is often tempted to eat when he would be much better off without food, so it is well to restrict the use of sweets to a legitimate place, as a dessert to the regular meal. Much meat is not a suitable diet for children, but starch and fats are very needful.

The fat of cream and good butter is easily assimilated and more digestible than the fat of meats. To furnish starch we have many food products to choose from, and sugar in various forms plays an important part. For pure starch we have nothing to compare with Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch, and it may be used in some dish daily without monotony. It is capable of infinite variety in preparation, and is both inexpensive and easy to use.

A simple cake that will please almost any child is one in which cocoa and Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch form a part. The receipt given makes a simple and attractive cake which will give no one a pang of regret for the eating.

COCOA TEA CAKES.

Beat singly three large eggs into a scant cup of sugar creamed with a third of a cup of butter. When smooth and light add half a cup of milk and half a cup each of flour and Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch sifted with three level teaspoons of baking powder and one-fourth cup of cocoa. Beat well, add a little salt and half a teaspoon of vanilla. Place in muffin pans, sprinkle with chopped nuts and bake in moderate oven.

(CORN STARCH TALKS TO BE CONTINUED.)

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "OCULAR SCOPE," the latest invention of the 20th century. SENT FREE, with our beautiful illustrated catalogue of spectacles and eyeglasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Send to-day.

Grand Rapids Wholesale Opticians,
402 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

FREE TO LADIES

Send address of three friends who wear corsets, and receive, absolutely free, our Boston Hygienic Dip P'm for lengthening waist and holding skirt.

Boston Hygienic Corset Co., 14 Winter St., Boston, Mass.

FREE TO AGENTS

Flat thin knife cuts loaves and buns in cakes. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T. HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N. Y.

WELSBACH QUALITY

Imitations are cheap-priced but Genuine WELSBACH mantles cost less because they last. The Shield of Quality is your protection.

FIVE KINDS - 15, 20, 25, 30, 35¢

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain?

Hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting to be disposed of at once. They include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, Sterlings and other well known makes. Many cannot be distinguished from new. A great discount. Uprights as low as $100. Also beautiful New Uprights at $125, $135, $150, $165, $180, $200, $220, $240, $260, $280, $300, $320, $340, $360, $380, $400, $420, $440, $460, $480, $500, $520, $540, $560, $580, $600, $620, $640, $660, $680, $700, $720, $740, $760, $780, $800, $820, $840, $860, $880, $900, $920, $940, $960, $980, $1000. Monthly payments accepted. Freight about $5. Write for list and particulars. To make a great saving. Pianos warranted as represented. Illustrated Piano Book Free.

LYON & HEALY

38 Adams St., CHICAGO.

World's largest music house; sells Everything known in Music

FAY STOCKINGS for Women, Boys and Girls.

Something Good. Protect Health. Prevent sickness, summer or winter. Button at waist. No supporters. Fit fine. Never wrinkle or come down. Fine for dress. Strong for play. The ideal stocking for all. Best yarns, best dyes. Prices low. Satisfaction or money back. Sent, postage paid, where not sold by dealers. Write for circulars to-day, or try a pair.

THE FAY STOCKING COMPANY,
31 T Street, Elyria, Ohio.

BABY WARDROBE PATTERNS

FOR 40 DIFFERENT ARTICLES, long and short clothes, with full directions for making, showing necessary material, etc., sent postpaid for 25 CTS. My booklet "Nurse's Hints to Mothers," also my magazine "True Motherhood," and my large illustrated catalogue, all three sent FREE with every order. Ten years ago I originated the Baby Wardrobe Catalogue business and have dealt with 150,000 young mothers. I guarantee entire satisfaction or will refund money.

Address MRS. C. U. ATSMAN, Bayonne, New Jersey.

The "Best" Light

Is a portable 100 candle power light, costing only 2 cts. per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene, and cheaper than kerosene. No dirt. No grease. No odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted. Agents Wanted Everywhere.

THE "BEST" LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package.

Gluten Grits AND BARLEY CRYSTALS,

Perfect Breakfast and Dietetic Health Cereals. PANSY FLOUR for Biscuits, Cake and Pastry. Unlike all other goods. Ask Grocers. For book or sample, write FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

420 QUILT SOFA AND PIN CUSHION DESIGNS

Many new, quaint, queer and curious; includes lesson on Battenburg lace making and colored embroidery, with all stitches illustrated; also 100 crazy stitches, regular price 25c; to introduce will mail all the above for 10c.

LADIES' ART CO., 404 N. Broadway, R 13, St. Louis.

100 VISITING CARDS Post paid 35c

Correct styles and sizes. Order filled day received. Booklet "Card Style" Free! Also business, professional and fraternal cards. We have cuts of emblems for all societies. E. J. SCHUSTER PTG. & ENG. CO., Dept. 56, ST. LOUIS, MO.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875 for the treatment of Drug and Alcohol Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

MEN AND WOMEN OF MONEY

Write for my FREE BOOK about Missouri—her wealth, laws, and 5 per cent. Farm Mortgages—printed in colors—profusely illustrated. FREE.

WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 5 Wardell Bldg., MACON, MO.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years

FRUIT BOOK free. We PAY CASH! WANT MORE SALESMEN. STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; etc.

THE NARROW GATE

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "IN HIS STEPS"

CHAPTER X.—Continued.

A WEEK after this, information was filed with the county attorney by the committee of fifty to compel him to take action in the case of Lawson's joint, and against Mayor Bartlett, as owner of the building where the joint was operated. Lawson got one of the brewers in Waldo, a city in an adjoining State, to go his bond, and immediately moved his joint into another building, this time in the basement.

When the case came up for trial, the county attorney made a very lame showing. The witnesses summoned could not remember what they had to drink. The very number of the building, by a technical error, not however planned by the committee or the attorney, was incorrect. The district judge, in his charge to the jury, made it clear that his sympathies were not with the law, and the jury, after half an hour's absence, brought back a verdict of not guilty.

Jake Lawson grinned, picked up his hat, and went straight from the court-room to his basement joint, which was crowded that night with boys and young men, among whom were three of the jury that acquitted him, and the temperance people of Colby waked up to the fact that the devil was with them once more, and that he had come back in the guise of perjured public officials, lying witnesses, and the brewers of Waldo.

Douglas and the Beacon awoke to the situation at once. So did every law and order element in the county. At the end of two years, by constant agitation from the Beacon, ably seconded by the churches, a new county attorney was elected, who had pledged himself to the temperance people to enforce the law. Once in office, however, to the disgust and indignation of Douglas, who had helped to elect him, this officer was found to be not much better than his predecessor. Jake Lawson moved his joint every month. Once he was convicted even with the handicap of a friendly court and a lukewarm attorney, but on his release from jail he opened up again and made money. For the next five years Colby waged an incessant war against Lawson and a-half dozen other joints, chasing them from basement to attic and from the rear of old warehouse buildings to shacks down by the river and around the railroad tracks. All through the conflict Douglas maintained in the Beacon, and rightly, that at its worst the joint could not be compared to the saloon, and in reply to the assertion of the brewers of Waldo that there was just as much liquor sold in Anderson county as ever, he quoted a statement that an exchange had made since the saloon had been declared outlaw by the State:

"Just as Much as Ever Sold Under Prohibition"

"Think of a grocer dealer skulking in back alleys with a can of coffee in one boot leg, a pound of cheese in the other, and a herring down the back of his neck; or of a shoe-dealer with his door fastened with iron bars, his windows grated, and half a dozen men on the street corners watching for the officers, and at the least alarm destroying every sign of the business. What man would say that the grocery business was flourishing, or that there were more boots and shoes sold than ever before in the history of the city?" [Cumberland County Deputy in Search Light.] And in addition, Douglas also declared what was emphatically true.

"We have, as a State, put the liquor business where it belongs, in the criminal column. It is outlawed. It is not recognized by us as a legitimate business. We have declared it infamous, on account of its black history through all the ages, and we say it is infinitely better to be having this continual fight with it, than to sit down and be at peace with it through any system of license, or for the purpose of making revenue from it, any more than we would permit the law to allow a certain number of men to burn houses at so much a year, or rob so many people for so much a year, for the revenue."

But as the battle went on during the year that followed Jake Lawson's return to his old haunts, Douglas was more and more impressed by the great odds that the State faced in being surrounded on every side by the whisky license States. He pondered over this, and began to feel a certain degree of helplessness, as he realized throughout the Republic at large, there was a constant pressure to break down the law of his own State, by the neighboring States.

The President's annual message had come out, and Douglas was sitting in his office, reading it. He was one of a comparatively few of the many millions of readers in the Republic who always read the message through carefully. After finishing it, he threw the paper down, and for several minutes seemed absorbed in a new idea. At the end of that time he began to write a letter; he addressed it to "The President, Washington, D. C."

"Mr. President, I have just been reading your annual message, and I am struck by the fact that in it you mention a list of perils that threaten the life of this Republic. You mention anarchy, and the loss of our merchant marine, and the threatening attitude of the Commercial Trust, and the cutting down of our forests, and the wars between labor and capital. But there is nowhere in all your message to the Congress, any word calling attention to what seems to very many people in this country, to be the greatest peril to all, and that is the liquor business. Anarchy kills a President or a King, now and then; but rum kills its thousands every day. The loss of our forests and our merchant marine is serious, but what is that compared with the loss to the working men, and the nation of the round billion of dollars sunk in the saloon, every year? May I venture to say, Mr. President, that because I am living in a State that has a prohibitory law, I am not, on that account, a crank or a fanatic.

"But I am one of a few, but a fast increasing number of citizens, who believe that a peril as great as the liquor business is to this nation, ought to call for some mention, with other perils spoken of in the annual message. I do not of course, expect that a letter like this can receive any answer. I wish to express my appreciation of your ideals, and your efforts to impress, as the head of the Republic, the fact that there are other things besides the tariff and money that are of importance, and I trust that, in some succeeding message to the Congress, some account may be taken in the message of a danger, which, if it were a pestilence or a plague that killed as many citizens, would without doubt, be referred to as an evil, which the nation ought, in some way, to divert.

"One of the citizens out of many who love the Republic.

"FRANK DOUGLAS."

He signed the name of the town and State and sent the letter on its way, with a smile to think how little an individual the editor of the Colby Beacon was, compared with the President of the United States.

Opening his mail about ten days from the writing of this letter, he came to an envelope bearing the words, "White House" on the upper left-hand corner, and opening it, read from the President's Private Secretary that the President had read his letter with interest, and would be particularly glad to see him and talk over the matter suggested by his comment on the message.

Copyright, 1904 by Charles M. Sheldon.

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

MELLIN'S FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

TRADE MARK

FOOD

Mellin's Food and Milk is an ideal combination and will nourish and strengthen your baby and make him grow.

We should like to send a sample of Mellin's Food free to your baby.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Handy Farm Wagons

make the work easier for both the man and team. The tires being wide they do not cut into the ground; the labor of loading is reduced many times, because of the short lift. They are equipped with our famous Electric Steel Wheels, either straight or stagger spokes. Wheels any height from 24 to 60 inches. White hickory axles, steel bounds. Guaranteed to carry 4000 lbs. Why not get started right by putting in one of these wagons. We make our steel wheels to fit any wagon. Write for the catalog. It is free.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., BOX 136, QUINCY, ILL.

"Once Grown Always Grown"

The Maule motto for more than 25 years. My new

SEED BOOK for 1904

Cost over $50,000 to publish. If you have a garden you can have a copy for the asking. Send a postal for it to Wm. Henry Maule, Philadelphia, Pa.

30 DAYS FREE

Why buy a "pigin a poke" when you can get the ROYAL INCUBATOR on 30 Days Free Trial. Absolutely self-regulating. Try it and keep it only if you like it. Send for catalog and free trial plan. With poultry paper one year ten cents.

Royal Incub. Co., Dep. 71, Des Moines, Ia.

You Can Succeed

In the poultry business just as we have, on follow the same plans. We tell a about what we have done and how we did it, in our new year book, "Poultry for Profit." Gives cuts of every variety of fowl, together with prices for singles, pairs, trios and pens and eggs for hatching, in season. Cuts at plans for poultry houses. It cost too much money and time to be given away, but is sent for 10 cents.

THE J. W. MILLER CO., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.

Doesn't Overheat Air

The ventilating and heating system of the Gem Incubator doesn't burn the air and kill chicks in shell. Learn more about this low priced, high per cent hatcher from our free catalogue.

GEM INCUBATOR COMPANY, Darner W. Dayton, OH.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap wood. 32 page Catalog free. Special Prices to Centuries and Churches. Address COILED SPRING FENCE CO. Box D. Winchester, Ia.

HEALTHY TREES Free from disease. Honest in quality. Budded Peaches, 5c; Budded Cherries, 20c; good varieties. Concord Grapes, $2. per 100. 1000 Ash $1.20. B. and Locust, Rus. Mulberry, &c. Low price. We pay freight. Catalog free. Galbraith Nurseries, Box 82 Fairbury, Neb.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE of Standard bred poultry for 1904, printed in color. Fine chromo, suitable for framing, illustrates at descriptive 60 varieties. Gives reasonable prices for stock and eggs, tells all about poultry, their diseases, lice, etc. This book only 10 cents.

B. H. GREIDER, RHEIMS, PA.

Free FLOWER SEED

Send for FREE trial packet (20 seeds) Pansy, Imperial German Mix. My unique illustrated catalogue FREE.

JESSIE R. PRIOR, Seedswoman, Minneapolis, Minn.

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM
PAGE 40

That was all, but the brief, courteous reply smote him into surprise. He took the letter home and showed it to Esther. She simply said—

"It is an opportunity. Go to Washington by all means."

Two days later Douglas was on his way to the Capital. Three days later he found himself in the White House waiting-room waiting to see the President. The room was filled with a miscellaneous collection of politicians, foreigners, visitors and office-seekers.

A door at the end of the room opened suddenly, and a vigorous, alert, incisive figure almost bounded in.

"Mr. Douglas! I want to see him!" The President called out so that everybody heard.

Douglas rose with all the rest, and, as the President, as the latter took three rapid strides into the room.

CHAPTER XI.

DOUGLAS took one step forward to meet the President.

"I am Mr. Douglas, Mr. President."

The President in one stride was close to Douglas, and held out his hand.

"I am glad to see you Mr. Douglas," he said, as he grasped Douglas' hand firmly. "You came to see me about my message. What have you to suggest?"

Douglas was so astonished that at first he did not know what to say. The President spoke up as frankly and openly as if they were alone together in his private room, instead of in the presence and hearing of a dozen people who could not help sharing in the conversation. It was altogether contrary to his expectation of a possible interview with the head of the Republic.

But Douglas possessed a quick, ready mind, and he had sense enough on this occasion to say just what he felt, and say it in the same frank, outspoken way that the President invited by his own manner. So his hesitation was hardly noticeable, before he answered.

"I have nothing to suggest, Mr. President, more than I suggested in my letter to you, that in your next annual message to the Congress, you call attention to the peril that threatens the country on account of the liquor business."

"Do you know what that would mean, young man?" the President asked, looking at Douglas searchingly.

"Yes, Mr. President, I think I do," Douglas answered boldly. "It would mean that, for the first time in the history of this nation, the President of the United States had gone on record in his message, against a business which has the curse of the ages resting on it, and which ought to have no legalized standing in a Christian nation."

"That is not what I meant," the President replied, after a second's pause. He looked thoughtfully at Douglas, but before anything else was said, some one entered the room from the room where the President had been, and, coming up to him, said in a clear, rapid voice: "Pardon me, Mr. President, but Senator Rolfe is ready, and this is the hour you set to meet us."

"In a moment. Mr. Douglas, stay to lunch!" He darted towards the door through which he had come, but stopped on the way to shake hands with a man at that end of the room.

"Come in to lunch with me, Brandon. Glad to see you. We'll have over the old college days. You bring Mr. Douglas." He was gone, and the man named Brandon smiled, and went up to Douglas and introduced himself. The rest of the people in the waiting-room stared at the two men and finally resumed their seats.

Douglas had heard of Brandon, who was a rising author and journalist. To his surprise, Brandon had also heard of him through some freemasonry of newspaperdom, and, in a few minutes, they found themselves rapidly on good terms. Brandon had been to the White House before, and knew the ways of the place as much as any one could who did not know the unexpected ways of its new master. During the time intervening between the hour for lunch and his meeting with the President, Brandon and Douglas, who had been shown by a doorkeeper to one of the parlors, discussed the President's probable action.

Brandon was exceedingly astonished by what he had heard.

"Do you mean to say, Mr. Douglas, that you criticised the President's message, and that he sent for you to talk it over?"

"I don't know that I wrote in a spirit of criticism, but I certainly did express myself very plainly on the subject of the liquor business, and said what I most profoundly believe is true, that it is at least as great a peril as any that the President mentioned in his message. If a trust is a financial peril to the people, and calls for mention by the President, I cannot see why the liquor business is not as great a peril to the people's welfare, and it seems to me it is far greater in its yearly destructive results to the financial, moral and spiritual welfare of all the citizens."

"It may be," Brandon said thoughtfully. "But do you consider, Mr. Douglas, how deeply established in society and civilization generally the entire liquor business is? Do you realize what a tremendous departure it would be for the President to come out in an official document like the annual message, and denounce what is to-day a source of financial revenue to the country, and call upon Congress to recognize it as an evil to be legislated out of existence?"

"It is no more financially established than slavery was," replied Douglas, doggedly. "I think I realize quite fully what it would mean if the President should do as you say. It would no doubt rouse tremendous opposition. But consider, on the other hand, what inspiration it would mean to the increasing hosts of temperance people in this country, to find in the annual message a true statement concerning the nature and extent of the only large business of the whole nation which, deliberately and knowingly year after year, produces poverty, disease, crime, pauperism and vice. If any of the trusts that have sprung up lately had mapped out such a programme as the saloon has been giving us for centuries, I believe the people of the United States would not wait for legislation in the matter, but would simply rub it out of existence."

"It may be," Brandon shook his head doubtfully. "But I think you do not even realize what it would mean to the country at large to find in the President's annual message a distinct arraignment of the liquor business of the country. It is a thing no President has ever done, and I doubt—"

But Brandon was interrupted by a doorkeeper, summoning him and Douglas to lunch. They were met at the door of the dining-room by the President himself, who greeted them both with a hearty "Glad to see you!" and introduced them to three other guests, as they took their seats at the table.

The lunch had been enlivened with college stories told by the President and Brandon, an old classmate, and everything had been pleasantly informal, without any real lack of the dignity that is always worth having, whether it be in a White House or any other, when the President suddenly turned to Douglas, who was seated beside Brandon at the President's right hand, and said:

"Tell us what the prohibitory law has done for your State, Mr. Douglas."

Douglas seemed to understand at once what the President wanted, and gave a concise statement of facts that apparently pleased him.

He nodded his head, as if to say, "Well put. Not too much, not too little." Then: "What, in your opinion, could Congress do with the liquor question from a national standpoint? Is it not a matter for each State to settle by itself?"

"No more than the States by themselves can settle the matter of trusts, each State by itself. The question is too complicated. If Congress can enact national legislation against a national peril like a trust, surely, Mr. President, it can do the same against a national peril like the saloon; and, of course, I do not need to repeat, that between the two perils, the saloon is by far the greater peril, in my opinion."

"How many people believe as you do?" "Several million, Mr. President," Douglas repeated promptly.

TO BE CONTINUED

I Will Make You

A Better Wife,
A Rested Mother,
A More Cheerful, More Wholesome Companion,
A Sweeter Sweetheart,
A True and Well-Balanced Woman.

I WISH I could put sufficient emphasis into these words to make you realize that you do not need to be ill, that you do not need to go on to the operating table, but that you can be a buoyant, cheerful, wholesome woman—full of strength, life, and vivacity—which is the crown of American womanhood.

If you want to Strengthen the Digestive System and the Nerves; to tone the Vital Organs so that your foods will Nourish you; if you want to strengthen the Liver, Kidneys and Intestines so that the Impurities are Thrown Off from the System; if you want to correct a Sluggish Circulation and send the Blood Bounding through your Veins so that the Rheumatic twinges will disappear and you feel warm and comfortable; if you want to strengthen a Weak Heart and Lungs, to relieve yourself of weaknesses, Lame Backs and Headaches, I can do more for you than medicine can do. I can give you a Clear Brain, a Quick Perception and a Nerve Force Vibrant with Life. All you need to bring yourself to this condition is fifteen minutes every day upon definite, scientific exercises, which I will prescribe for you. With this definite work, your health once regained will be retained.

I thoroughly study your case, prescribe the diet and the bathing which your system requires and give you special exercises necessary to bring you out as an individual to perfect health and symmetry. It is to my 12 years' work with women in person before I began my instruction by mail that I attribute my marvellous success with my pupils. I have failed in but one instance to relieve the condition I set out to relieve. My work begins with causes—with the vital organs, the nerve centers, the lungs and the heart, and when I reduce a woman, I reduce her to STAY reduced. When I build her, I build her to stay built.

The following are some extracts from reports of my pupils on my desk:

"I will tell you what I have done so far: I have reduced weight 25 pounds, lost wrinkles, waist 4 inches, hips 7 inches, arm 2 inches." "I will send you the names of my lady pupils upon request."

"The quivering, fluttering sensation in my Heart is gone and the Nervous System greatly decreased."

"My Kidneys are much better."

"This week I have not been troubled with Biliousness. I am beginning to think that the age-old miracle has not passed."

"My stomach does not trouble me at all. I can eat anything."

"Just think of it! to be relieved of constipation! Entirely free after having it thirty years."

"My rheumatism has disappeared and I sleep such a restful sleep."

"I have grown from a nervous wreck into a state of good, quiet nerves."

"My mind is much clearer and my memory is much better."

"My eyes are stronger and I have taken off my glasses."

"The pain in the top and back of my head is entirely gone."

"My bust has increased 2 inches in the past three months."

"I am delighted with the effect of the exercises upon my catarrh."

"The improvement in my figure is very gratifying to me."

"I now feel cheerful, happy and so refreshed each morning."

I could duplicate these every day.

I can take but a limited number of pupils because I give each pupil my personal attention. Write to me. I shall be glad to tell you just what I can do for you. I do not work with a woman unless I am sure I can help her. I know that I can reduce prominent abdomen and hips, build up thin neck, chest and bust, and bring any woman to roundness and symmetry, and give them relief from above diseases. I have done all of these hundreds and hundreds of times. It is no longer an experiment with me. Write to me.

For ten cents I send you an instructive and interesting booklet, showing the correct lines of a woman's figure in poise and movement, and a card of correct poise for your dressing table.

Yours for a body expressing perfect health, perfect grace and perfect womanhood,

SUSANNA COCROFT

Dept. 296

57 Washington Street, Chicago

5% Your Money 5%

WORKS WHILE YOU SLEEP

IF INVESTED WITH THE HARBOR AND SUBURBAN BUILDING
AND SAVINGS ASSOCIATION
(Organized 1888)

21 E. 14th St., N. Y. City.

Dividends 5% Per Annum

Send for descriptive pamphlet giving full information.
Under supervision New York State Banking Department.

"There is only one way to success in the administration of Cod Liver Oil, and that is not by disguising but by excluding the impurities." This is exemplified in which can be relied upon as being pure, sweet, digestible, and free from disagreeable taste or odor.

Peter Moller's
Pure Cod Liver Oil

Sold only in flat, oval bottles, bearing name of Schieffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents

Bound Books at Sheet Price

RIDPATH'S HISTORY OF THE WORLD

Sent on 7 Days' Approval, Only $2.00 Monthly

If you'd like to possess the only world's history that reads like a story-book—yet is recognized by such men as William McKinley, Benjamin Harrison, Dr. Cuyler, Bishop Vincent and thousands more as a standard authority and the greatest historical reference work in existence, SEND FOR FREE SPECIMEN BOOK TODAY. That specimen book will give you all facts and details—why YOU need it—how YOU can secure a slightly "rubbed" set at the value of the unbound sheets—nine royal octavo volumes—4000 illustrations and color plates. Complete set is sent at once.

IN cleaning up our stock we find a few slightly "rubbed" sets about 30, and rather than rebind such a small lot, we will dispose of them at what the sheets are worth to us unbound, and at $2.00 monthly.

Books are 11 inches tall

We guarantee that this is the latest, most complete, up to date and unabridged edition, containing our war with Spain, all about the Philippines, Cuba and our new possessions, etc.

Space here is costly; our free sample book tells everything.

CUT THE COUPON OFF AND SEND IT TO-DAY.

You need not cut off. Send me free RIDPATH'S sample book containing:—
Royal Octavo:—Illustrations, Colored Maps, Photo Engravings, etc., 2000 royal octavo pages, 4000 illustrations and color plates.
Jan. 13, Christian Herald

Name.....
Address.....

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Six Fast Trains

The Chicago & North-Western Railway, the Pioneer Line to the West and Northwest, and the only double-track railway between Chicago and the Missouri river, is famous for its superb service between Chicago and points west and northwest, providing for patrons

The Best of Everything Especially notable for perfection of service are

The Overland Limited
Less than three days to California
Electric Lighted

Chicago-Portland Special
Three days to Oregon and Washington

The Colorado Special
Only one night to Denver

The North-Western Limited
To St. Paul and Minneapolis
Electric Lighted

The Duluth Fast Mail
Fast train to the Head of the Lakes

Copper Country Express
To Marquette and Lake Superior points
For tickets, maps, time tables and full information apply to

W. B. Kniskern, Pass'r Traffic Mgr.
Chicago
NW138

RHEUMATISM

Relieved
Through the Feet

Thousands are relieved at home every month by MAGIC FOOT DRAFTS
Why not YOU?

Try Them—FREE

The Drafts relieved Mrs. W. D. Harriman, wife of Judge Harriman, of Ann Arbor, Mich. They relieved H. C. Van Valkenburg, Providence, R. I., of an intensely painful case of muscular rheumatism.

They relieved severe rheumatism of the arms, neck and back for T. C. Pendleton, Jackson, Mich.

Mrs. Caspar Yahrdsdorfer, Jackson, Michigan, 70 years old, was relieved in a few weeks, after suffering 30 years.

The Drafts relieved James Gilbert, Locomotive Dept., Mich. Cent. R. R., Jackson, Mich., after 27 years of pain.

Dr. Van Vleck, Jackson, Mich., writes that they relieved him and he is now using them in his practice.

They have relieved hundreds of cases probably just like yours. Isn't the chance worth taking? You try them free. Send us your name. We will send you by return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts—prepaid. If you are satisfied with the comfort they give you, send us One Dollar. If not, you send us nothing. You decide. Magic Foot drafts are worn without the least inconvenience, and relieve rheumatism in every part of the body by stimulating expulsion of acid poisons through the great foot pores. Splendid booklet, illustrated in colors, free with the trial Drafts. Don't suffer, but write to-day to the Magic Foot Draft Co., RA 16 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

A NEW BIBLE*

Mr. Ferrar Fenton's Translation of the Scriptures into Modern English

FIFTY years of original study and painstaking labor, have resulted in a work which will be a genuine surprise to Bible readers. It is an entirely new translation of the Bible, direct from the original languages and that not into the English of King James' time, nor into the English of the revisers, but into modern phraseology, such as is used in our new books and newspapers.

The translator is Mr. Ferrar Fenton, who comes of a family distinguished in English history for four centuries. By a curious coincidence, one member of the family was among the learned scholars who prepared the Authorized Version. Another of his ancestors held high office under Cromwell, while a third was martyred under Queen Mary. Mr. Fenton tells us in one of his prefaces, the circumstances which convinced him in his early manhood, that the obsolete style of the Authorized Version operated, especially with young people, prejudicially against the Scriptures and made their study unnecessarily dull. The idea gained possession of him, that an entirely new translation into modern diction would make the book more attractive. He, therefore, made a thorough study of Greek, Hebrew and Chaldee, and so familiar did he become with these languages, during his forty years of preparation, that he actually thought in them, and their idioms were as familiar as those of the daily newspaper. Secular works in Bible languages were also read and studied, so as to obtain the background of the inspired writers, and thus comprehend the allusions to current thought and fact in their works. Eminent Hebrew and Chaldee scholars, sympathizing with his purpose, lent him valuable aid and helped him to trace the philology of the books to its source, and insured his gaining a clear idea of the exact meaning of their utterances. Having attained that comprehension, he set himself to the counterpart of his task of giving the accurate expression in modern English.

The translation is comprised in five volumes. The first consists of the Pentateuch; the second, from Joshua to the end of II. Kings; the third, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and the twelve minor prophets; Vol. IV. consists of Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Canticles, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah and Chronicles; Vol. V. contains the New Testament, the order of the books being the same as in the Authorized Version, except that the Gospel of John and the first epistle of John precede all other books. The arrangement of the text is helped by numerous head-lines. For example, in the first chapter of John, over the first five verses, is the head-line: "The Word and Creation;" over the next eight verses, "The Word and the Light;" over the next five, "The Word and Mankind." All the other books are similarly divided, except the Psalms, each of which is simply separated into numbered stanzas.

The character of the translation will be best appreciated by the following rendering of familiar passages. The first Psalm begins: Blest is the man who has not walked beneath the sinners' groves,

And not stood on the path of vice, nor sat where scoffers sit;

Who in Jehovah's law delights,
And seeks his rules by day and night.

The familiar fifty-third chapter of Isaiah begins thus:

Who will believe our report? Over whom is the Lord's arm revealed?
For he grew before them a weak shoot, like a plant from dry ground, Unadorned, without honor. He was not respected—nor sought or desired.
Despised and neglected by men, a man in his sorrows acquainted with grief;
He was despised like one hiding his presence from us, and we thought not of him.

The Parable of the Prodigal Son, Luke 15: 32, begins:

He then said: "There was a man who had two sons; and the younger of them said to his father, 'Father, let me have the portion of the property to which I am entitled.' And he divided the estate between them. Not many days after, however, the younger son collected the whole, and went off to a distant country; and there he squandered his wealth in a life of debauchery. And when he had spent all, the country was visited by a fearful famine; and he began to starve. So, having wandered away, he hired himself to one of the citizens of that country, who sent him upon his farm as a swineherd. And he longed to fill his stomach with the carob-pods, upon which the swine were feeding; but no one gave him any."

The opening verses of eleventh chapter of Hebrews have a strange sound as thus rendered by Mr. Fenton:

*The Bible in Modern English. Translated direct from the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Greek Texts by Ferrar Fenton, F.R.A.S., M.C.A.A., etc., with an introduction and critical notes; each vol., $1.10; Published by W. M. Langdon, 635 Park Ave., N. Y.

Faith is the standing ground of the hopeful, the conviction of unseen facts; and our ancestors bore witness to this. By faith we comprehend that the periods were arranged by the continuous intention of God, so that from the unseen the visible appeared.

Here and there we notice mistakes in grammar; but these will doubtless be corrected in later editions. They are obvious oversights, which easily occur in so large a work done by one hand.

BOOKS RECEIVED

The published price of Owen Kildare's new book, My Mamie Rose, is $1.50. Baker & Taylor Co., New York, are the publishers.

The Manor School, by L. T. Mead. A capital story for young folks. Pp. 337, cloth covers. The Mershon Co., New York, publishers.

Strange Lands Near Home. A series of short articles on the West Indies, Mexico and many of the nations of South America. Pp. 144. Price, 25 cents. Published by Ginn & Co., Boston, Mass.

A Forest Hearth: a Romance of Indiana in the Thirties, by Charles Major, author of When Knighthood was in Flower, etc. A truly beautiful story and one that will delight the reader. 354 pages, cloth covers; illustrated. Price $1.50. The Macmillan Company, London and New York publishers.

That Printer of Udell's; a Story of the Middle West, by Harold Bell Wright. One of the very best stories of its kind; strong for temperance, and for all the best manly and womanly qualities. An encouraging story, which should help many to new effort. Pp. 468, illustrated, cloth binding. Price $1.50. Book Supply Co., Chicago, publishers.

Monsanto and Languellier's Practical Course in Spanish, revised by Prof. Freeman M. Josselyn, 398 pages. Price $1.25; Grimm's Kinder and Hausmärchen, edited by Prof. B. J. Vos., 121 pages. Price 45 cents; and McMahon's Elementary Plane Geometry, by Prof. Jos. McMahon, of Cornell, 368 pages. Price 90 cents. These three timely and valuable educational works are issued by the American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati and Chicago.

The Wisdom of James the Just. By the Right Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon. The Epistle of James has given rise to so many questions, and is so unique among the books of the New Testament, that we need all the light upon it that is available. Dr. Carpenter gives us in this book a study of the man and his work, which will help to a clearer idea of both than we have yet had. Pp. 253. Price $1.20. Published by Thomas Whitaker, Bible House, New York.

The Sabbath Transferred, by Rev. John D. Parker, Ph.D., with an introduction by Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D.D. This work will be a welcome manual of evidence to people in many sections who have been called to argue with the Seventh Day observers, who, as is usual with persons taking up a novel idea, are better equipped for the discussion than orthodox believers. Pp. 242. Published by J. D. Parker & Company, East Orange, N. J.

Prophetic Ideas and Ideals. By W. G. Jordan, B.A., D.D. A valuable work on the Prophetic literature of the Hebrew people. Dr. Jordan takes up the books of the prophets in chronological order, beginning with Amos, and shows what was the essential message of each. It is an interesting and instructive guide to the development of Jewish thought, and incidentally to the history of the race. Pp. 363. Price $1.25. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago.

Select Notes, a commentary on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1904. By F. N. and M. A. Peloubet. Illustrated. So well known by its marvelous record of thirty years' successive publication, this volume needs no introduction to our readers. It is sufficient to say that it is fully equal to, if it does not surpass, its predecessors in furnishing precisely the information that Sunday School teachers need for their work. No volume comes to our table so thoroughly fitted to aid in the preparation of the lesson. Its suggestions are stimulating and appropriate, and they are arranged with so much skill and good judgment, that the teacher can find at a glance the points that are available for his class. Pp. 353. Price $1.25. Published by W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston and Chicago.

"The Book of the Season"

I received the premiums, and am delighted with them all. The Crown Encyclopedia is very handsome and valuable. The Butterfly Calendar is most tastefully got up, and is a beautiful study in colors. How I Worked My Way Around the World, I call the book of the season. I have read every word of it, and never was so delighted with reading any other book of its kind. From the first, my interest was awakened, and it increased to the end.

GEORGE PENNYCOOK.

All Charges Prepaid

When THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sends out a premium it prepaays all express charges. No express company has the right to collect charges on any premium sent out by us, and we request all subscribers from whom charges have been collected by the express companies on CHRISTIAN HERALD premiums, to send us the name of the premium, the name of the express company, and the receipt for the money paid, and we will see to it that a proper refund is made.

WE PAY THE FREIGHT AND GIVE YOU THIRTY DAYS TRIAL FREE

If at the end of that time you do not find that the merits of the

"1900" BALL-BEARING FAMILY WASHER

are so many and apparent as to induce you to purchase, return it at our expense. It costs you nothing either way. We cannot conceive how we can express stronger faith in our product than by this free trial offer.

Catalogue and booklet free on request.

"1900" WASHER CO.,

33A Henry St., Binghamton, N. Y.
Reference: First National Bank, Binghamton.

Vapo-Cresolene

AN INHALATION FOR

Whooping Cough,
Croup,
Bronchitis,
Coughs,
Grip,
Hay Fever,
Diphtheria,
Scarlet Fever,

Don't fail to use CRESOLENE for the distressing and often fatal affections for which it is recommended. For more than twenty years we have had the most conclusive assurances that there is nothing better. Ask your physician about it.

An interesting descriptive booklet is sent free, which gives the highest testimonials as to its value.

ALL DRUGGISTS.

VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 180 Fulton Street, New York.

THE BLACKSTONE ROTARY WASHING MACHINE

Works both way backwards and forward. Runs easier and washes cleaner than any other. Closes tight, prevents escape of foul steam from soiled clothes. Plenty of room for large size wringer. The washer when used according to directions will each machine, is guaranteed satisfactory, money paid will be returned. It will pay you to write us before buying elsewhere.

THE BLACKSTONE MFG. CO.

Dept. H.

Jamestown, N. Y.

Oldest and Largest Makers of Washing Machines in United States. Estab. 1872.

DON'T SHOUT!

The Morley Ear Drum

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. No case of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E.

19 South 16th St., Philadelphia

A MAN SAVED

BY USING A FOLDING SAWING MACHINE. One man can saw more wood with it than two in any other way and do it easier. 9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS. Saws any wood on any ground. Sawstree down. Catalog free. First order secures agency. Folding Sawing Mach. Co., 55 N. Jefferson St., Chicago, Ill.

CHRIST AT NAZARETH

The Service in the Synagogue

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

CONQUERED temptation leaves us stronger than it found us; less afraid of Satan, more sure in our God. There is nothing exhausting in a conflict in which God in us overcomes Satan, who is outside of us. It was so with our Lord. He returned, not in his own power into Galilee, but in that power of the Spirit by which he had conquered the enemy. Men saw and felt that power; "a fame went out concerning him through all the region round about." He began to be popular; and he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

In the Gospel of Matthew, we find that this was at the time of the imprisonment of John the Baptist (Matt. 4: 12; 14: 1-4), and he tells us how our Lord "left Nazareth" as his dwelling-place, where he had been brought up with Joseph, and his mother Mary, "and came and dwelt in Capernaum." It was like our Lord to preach first to the despised Galileans, and that his longest recorded personal interview was with a despised and sinful Samaritan woman.

But his popularity was not to last; the enemy, whose temptation of Christ had proved powerless, was still "the prince of this world;" and where he could not conquer, he would harass, by stirring up the people against God's Christ. Our Lord came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and he entered, as his custom was, into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up to read. From this we learn that while engaged in the business of a carpenter, he ministered in the synagogue habitually as a reader of the Scriptures. Perhaps no man in Nazareth had so much used the rolls of the Scriptures, which were kept in the synagogue, as he had. There was delivered into him the book (or roll) of the prophet Isaiah, probably by his request. "And he opened the book and found the place." In a long parchment roll, a great many words in length, rolled up at both ends, and not divided into chapters and verses, perhaps not even into words, he must have well known the contents to find the place readily while the congregation was waiting.

He found the place where it was written, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me," etc. He had recognized himself in the Scripture, and he knew the time had come when he who had lived in such privacy and simplicity among the people of Nazareth, should at last tell them who he was. It was not an easy task. Satan's way of casting himself down from the temple, and being visibly sustained by angels, would have been much easier, but it would neither have fulfilled the Scripture nor carried out the great purpose of the salvation of a lost world.

"And he closed the book, and gave it again to the minister, and sat down." Nazareth was to have her offer of God's Messiah, and he was calm. He sat down. None of the nervous excitability of the flesh, at a moment of crisis, was to be found in him. And yet he knew, as one other could know, all that hung on those critical moments when Nazareth had her day of visitation. "And the eyes of all in the synagogue were fastened on him." He was their fellow-townsmen; he had lived and walked and labored as an artisan amongst them, but since he had left his home, they had been hearing strange things of him, how he had been teaching in the synagogues throughout the country, and was everywhere the talk of the place. Why then, did he now sit down in silence, when he was amongst those who had known him? Why should he not exercise the same teaching power here as elsewhere in Galilee? They had had an opportunity to recognize him, which no other people had, but they had not seen below the surface, and they knew him not.

"And he began to say unto them, This day hath this Scripture been fulfilled in our ears." (R.V.). There could be but one conclusion as to his meaning: it was of whom the prophet spoke. Would they receive him or would they reject him? "All bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." Why did they wonder? If he were indeed the anointed one, the Messiah, it was prophesied of him (Ps. 45: 2): "Full of grace are thy lips, because God hath blessed thee for ever." A profound impression was made; a decision lay before them; they must either accept him as their Messiah, or they must reject him as an impostor.

IF CHRIST CAME*

What Would be the Effect on the World and the Church if he Appeared?

WHAT would be the effect on any town of any of our States of such an announcement as that the Samaritan woman carried to her neighbors? It would not fall on our ears unmeaningly, as it did on theirs. To them the woman's statement would convey no impression, but that there was a wonderful man there, who had, like the fortune-tellers of modern times, revealed a strange knowledge of her past life. She thought he might be the Messiah for whom the Jews were looking; but not much weight would probably be attached by the people who heard her, to her opinions. We know better, after so many centuries of Christ's influence on the world. To us, his coming in person to the world would have a profound meaning. To many it would be the most welcome news they could hear; to others, who believe without conforming their lives to their belief, it would bring terror, and a fearful foreboding of coming judgment.

How would he be received? Coming, as we expect he will come, he would be so unmistakable by reason of his glory and his escort of celestial beings, that he would be received by the adoration of his followers, and appeals for mercy by his enemies. But if he came, as he did before, in humble circumstances, how would he be treated? We can imagine that those who call themselves by his name, and, decked out in gaudy vestments, officiate at altars lighted by candles, and give absolution to penitents in the confessional, would refuse to believe in him or to welcome him. His scathing rebuke of such mummery, conducted in his name, would be met by hatred and hostility. How would the fashionable preachers, who utter pleasant things from their pulpits to richly dressed hearers, and proclaim a Gospel that is not his to sinners whose lives of selfishness they never condemn, receive him? An ordinary man in the garb of an artisan, calling them to account, would be summarily treated by such men.

But what would be the reception that we as individuals would accord him? How many of us would be willing to forsake business and home and friends to follow him? True, if we were sure that it was he, hundreds of thousands would count the world well lost, to be in his dear presence. But what a change it would make in our lives! How different would then be our relations to the poor, to our Christian brethren whose needs now have so small a recognition from us. What a cleaning up there would be! How the pleasures and amusements of the world, which now claim so much attention, would shrink into miserable triviality. How ashamed we would be of the long neglect of duties which he enjoined on his followers!

The thought of how we, as individuals, would feel if we knew that Christ was really here, should cause a searching of heart. That he is with us in spirit is a fact that we too often forget. "Lo, I am with you always," was his assurance, and it is fulfilled as surely as if his visible bodily presence was on the earth. He sees and knows how we live as certainly as if he stood by our side in the home and abroad. To realize that fact, to govern our lives by that consciousness, would be the best preparation we could have for his coming. Come he will to vindicate his people, to right the world's wrongs, to rule and reign in righteousness. Blessed are they who can say from their hearts, "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for January 24, John 4: 28-30; 39-42.

Spinal Curvature Corrected in Your Own Home

We offer a certain relief to all who suffer from this terrible affliction. Throw away the cumbersome and expensive leather and plaster Paris jackets and try our Scientific Spinal Appliance.

It does not encase the body like a vise, but allows perfect freedom of movement. It weighs ounces where others weigh pounds. It is 80 per cent cheaper than the old methods and 100 per cent better. It conforms to the shape of the body so that no one would notice it. It can be worn by the smallest child or the oldest adult with perfect ease and comfort. It will give permanent relief in any case of spinal curvature. They are not made up in large quantities, but each one is made to measure, to meet the individual case, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. If you or any of your friends suffer from any form of Spinal Trouble, write us at once and we will give you full particulars as to how your curvature may be corrected, without inconvenience or discomfort, and Without Leaving Your Own Home. Address, PHIL BURT MFG. CO., 30 First St., JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

CONSIDER THE EVIDENCE

WHEN you are called upon to erect a memorial, large or small, consider the fact that marble has proved such a failure that some cemeteries now prohibit its use. Consider the fact that granite is very expensive, gets discolored and moss-grown, cracks, crumbles and decays. It is a sure burden of expense in future years if you try to keep it in repair.

THEN CONSIDER

that White Bronze is positively more enduring than any stone; that it is far more artistic and beautiful, and that it is less expensive.

WE WILL SEND THE EVIDENCE

If you will simply write us stating about what expense you anticipate in case of purchase. Our designs and prices will speak for themselves. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Distance is no obstacle. Write at once. Special inducements on Winter orders.

$100,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years, and everyone delighted. AGENTS WANTED.

Address: THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-90 HOWARD AVE., BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

SEEDS Vegetable and Flower. In fact everything in the Nursery and Florist line. We send by mail postpaid Seeds, Plants, Roses, Bulbs, Small Trees, Etc., safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed, larger by express or freight. Send for our elegant 168 page free catalogue and see what values we give for your money. Correspondence solicited. 50 years, 44 greenhouses, 1000 acres.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO., Box 192, PAINESVILLE, OHIO.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS are perfect in action. Over 50 years' experience guides the manufacture. Get the improved. No tacks required. To avoid imitations, notice script name of STEWART HARTSHORN on label.

BIG MONEY Made at Home

Weaving Rugs and Carpet NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED

$4 a Day Easily Made

We start men and women in a profitable business on a small investment. Write quick for prices and Loom Book.

REED MFG. CO. Box S. Springfield, Ohio

$100. to $300. MONTHLY.

Men and women. Salesmen, Managers and General Agents. Delightful business year round. Hustlers getting rich. Write today for brand-new plan and Special Offer this month. 100 per cent profits. No risk. Goods well advertised. National reputation. Fully guaranteed. Customers delighted. We're an old firm, capital $100,000. Catalogue FREE. Any energetic man or woman can get good position, paying big wages.

WORLD MFG. CO., 81 World Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

I SELL REAL ESTATE NO MATTER WHERE IT IS

Do you want to sell your real estate? Do you want to sell it quickly and with the least possible expense? Do you want to sell it at a reasonable price instead of sacrificing a good portion of its value? Do you want it sold without publicity? If these are your wants, I can fill them. For eight years I have been filling these wants for people in every section of the country. The result is the largest real estate brokerage business in the world. Isn't that proof that I have been fulfilling my claims and isn't it sufficient evidence that I can sell your property? Sit down right now, and send me a description of your property, including your lowest cash price. I will then tell you frankly just what I can do for you and how and why I can do it. It doesn't matter what kind of a property you have, where it is located, or what it is worth. Just send me a description, to-day. If you want to buy any kind of a property in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.

W. M. OSTRANDER.

SUITE 161, NORTH AMERICAN BLDG., PHILADELPHIA.

The "J.B.L. CASCADE"

Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell

Inventor of J. B. L. Cascade
Appearance at the age of 54, after 14 years' experience with the "Cascade" treatment. The circumstances that led to this wonderful invention will give encouragement to all.

Is the only Perfect Appliance for Administering the INTERNAL BATH

Good Health Without the aid of Drugs. Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell, the famous and successful exponent of SCIENTIFIC INTERNAL BATHS treatment of internal ailments will send you a copy of his book that gives indisputable facts showing that a great majority of human ailments arise from disordered stomachs and inactive intestines. The colon, often becomes clogged with impure waste matter, stopping the entire drainage of the system, thereby disease and suffering quickly follow. The only rational way to thoroughly cleanse the human sewer, is by the flushing of the colon and the only logical method of administering is by the J. B. L. CASCADE. The book must be read to appreciate the merits of the J. B. L. CASCADE TREATMENT. The following diseases quickly succumb to this treatment: Constipation, Dyspepsia, Headache, Indigestion, Liver and Stomach Troubles, Typhoid and Malarial diseases. Prevents and Relieves Appendicitis. One J. B. L. Cascade will keep an entire family in good health. Write for our booklet, "THE WHAT, THE WHY, THE WAY."

TYRRELL'S HYGIENIC INSTITUTE, Dept. 10P, 1562 Broadway, N. Y. Incorporated under the Laws of the State of New York

Send Postal request for Sample Copy of "HEALTH" America's Foremost Magazine Devoted to Health, Physical Culture & Hygiene.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

YOU MAY MAKE

$16,000 a Year

THIS AGENT DID

Read His Letter Under Picture

AS THE largest real estate firm in the world we are undertaking the most important step in our history, and one which means the material prosperity of many people throughout the United States. We would therefore ask the careful attention of every man and woman who reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to see if this step does not contain an opportunity for you infinitely broader than any which is afforded in your own community.

Last year we sold more than $4,000,000 worth of New York City lots throughout the United States and the rest of the civilized world. We own and control more Brooklyn house lots than any firm or corporation in New York City, and we now propose to push our enterprises with the greatest energy everywhere. We intend to make our name and our reputation a household word throughout the country, and we desire a representative in every town and city in the United States.

If you are a man of character and energy, we have a plan by which you can partake of our prosperity and receive the direct benefits of our extensive advertising in building up a business

In Your Own Immediate Territory

We desire only representative men. Men who are successful in the work they are now undertaking. Men who can give the best of references. We do not want failures. We believe the man who is a good business man in a small community needs only the opportunity to make relatively greater success where his field is broader. Many of the best successes of the great cities are those men who have made successes in the small towns, and we propose to bring the opportunity of the great city right to your own door. Last year three of our salesmen averaged over $11,000 apiece by their own unaided efforts, and two of them while working in small cities. We have many salesmen making from $3,000 to $5,000 a year, and in nearly every instance they are men who are either conducting their own business in conjunction with our work or, because ours was so much more profitable and attractive, have given up their other occupation entirely. If you are energetic, if your reputation is clean, there is no reason, as Mr. Inge says, why you cannot do as well he. We desire to select our general agents from those who manifest ability, and eventually to give exclusive territory men who are competent to manage and develop it.

The Opportunity is Practically Unlimited in its Possibilities

New York is rapidly becoming the financial center of the world, as well as the center of the largest population. Her real estate constitutes the most conservative of investments, and is owned and being sought for over the wide world. When combined with life insurance and offered in the attractive form in which we place it before the public, our New York City house lots form an investment of most interest and attractiveness. We intend to give all who apply this year the opportunity of securing territory in which we will protect them and in which they can grow with us and share in the magnitude of our future business. We do not care to be bothered with triflers, but to those who are thoroughly in earnest we will give every assistance to establish themselves permanently and partake of the great future our business is destined to enjoy. For full particulars address

Agency Department B 19

WOOD, HARMON & COMPANY,

257 Broadway, New York

RUSSELL SAGE, one of the world's greatest Investors and Financiers, recently said, in an interview in the New York World:

"A man who buys real estate in any of the five boroughs—of course exercising average good judgment—has a fortune before him. BROOKLYN is growing at the rate of 75,000 people a year."

Z. M. P. INGE, Our Mobile Agent

MOBILE, ALA., September 1st, 1908.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that fourteen months ago I accepted a position as Mobile agent for Wood, Harmon & Company's New York properties in connection with an active law practice. I did so only after an investigation extending over six months, convincing myself of the absolute responsibility of the firm and the remarkable character of their properties. My commissions in the past year have amounted to $16,561, and this amount of money has been made without in the least neglecting a general law practice and other institutional work with which I am connected.

While it is possible that all persons who attempt to sell lots for Wood, Harmon & Company might not succeed, yet I cannot conceive how any man who will thoroughly acquaint himself with the facts, and put earnest and intelligent effort into his work can fail to do handsomely for himself, nor can I see why there are not hundreds who are sufficiently well equipped to do at least as well as I. My faith in Wood, Harmon & Company and their properties may have been an important factor in my success, but it is certain the sale of New York real estate has been the easiest kind of work for me.

Yours very truly, Z. M. P. INGE.

Another agent made $9,747; another, $8,649 in the last year.
Many are earning from $3,000 to $5,000 annually

YOU
MAY DO AS WELL -

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, JANUARY 20, 1904

VOL. 27—NO. 3. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

SEE PAGE 49

Proclaiming the New Republic of Panama from the base of the Columbus Statue, Colon

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

W. O., Zion City, Ill. 1. Was it a real tree that Eve was tempted to eat fruit from, or was it only a symbol of some sin of another kind? 2. Is there no hope that people who die impenitent will have another opportunity of turning to God after death?

1. There can be no means of ascertaining the fact, apart from the Bible narrative. Evidently the sin was that of disobedience to an explicit command. It does not signify to us whether the tree was an actual tree or a symbol. The important fact is that Eve did what she was forbidden doing and the result was dire. 2. There is no ground given in the Bible for indulging the hope. It is not for man to limit the mercy of God; but it is the most egregious folly for any one to neglect the offer of salvation now, in the expectation for which there is no warrant, that another offer may be made to him.

Mrs. W. C., Yellville, Ark. Can you tell me the origin of black for mourning for the dead, and black hearse at a funeral?

Black was used for mourning in ancient Greece and Rome, and is used generally in Europe at present. It expresses the darkness of gloom and sorrow. Many nations, however, use different colors. The South Sea Islanders use black-and-white stripes; Ethiopians, gray; Persia, pale brown; Syria, Cappadocia and Armenia, blue; Bokhara, blue; China, white; Egypt and Burmah, yellow, etc.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—We received The Crown Encyclopedia, five volumes, and to say we are well pleased is speaking it tamely. We are (in our appreciation of them, as we go turning through and through them) lost in wonder, that we receive so great value at so small expense. May God abundantly bless you, and all your co-workers, for your grand, noble work for the good of mankind and for the many good causes you are engaged in.

Kingfisher, Okla. MRS. D. B.

P. M. L., Johnson, S. C. Why was the numbering of the people (I. Chron. 21: 1), regarded as so heinous a sin?

There must have been some motive in ordering the census, which is not recorded. In itself it could not have been sinful, as such a census was taken by Moses at God's command (See Numbers 1: 10). The fact of the duty being entrusted to Joab seems to imply that it was for military purposes. Another reason for the same suspicion is that the tribe of Levi, which comprised the priesthood, was omitted from the enumeration. Or it may have been designed as a basis for oppressive taxation, or for compulsory service. Whatever the motive may have been, it must have been in that, rather than in the census itself, that the sin consisted.

George Van D., West Carrollton, O. 1. Was the rejection of the Panama Canal treaty by Colombia due to the Romish or Jesuitical influence? 2. As to St. Paul being delivered out of the mouth of the lion, as in II. Timothy 4: 17, must he have been in the Coliseum, and must the lions have killed each other for possession of their prey?

1. There is no evidence of the kind. Colombia simply tried to make the stiffest bargain possible, and so overreached itself. 2. Paul's language, elsewhere, would seem to imply that he had had an experience of the kind you mention: but here he seems to refer to Satan as "a devouring lion," i. e., deliverance from temptation.

H. L., Milford, Pa. In last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I read your article headed "A Golden Barrier." Your correspondent inquires why all the religious effort in these days is aimed at the "lower classes." The reason is because they are the only ones who will listen to practical Christian teaching. We read in the Bible that Christ often rebuked the rich for their hypocrisy and for oppressing the poor. He could not persuade them to become Christians, as they would have to humble themselves, which they did not care to do, loving the praise of men. Your editorial would impress one with the idea that Christians are expected to become poor. Would not this tend to discourage some from becoming Christians? I think Christians ought to cast in their lot with the middle class.

Christ taught his followers to lay not up for themselves "treasures on earth." He repeatedly warned them against the allurements of wealth. He declared wealth to be a great barrier to many—a hindrance to their eternal welfare. He taught his followers to set their minds on things above, and to take no thought of amassing riches or goods for tomorrow. Usurers, brokers, exchangers, and mere money-getters, he specially denounced. Yet he never spoke, even by implication, a word against the reward of honest industry, but, on the contrary, commended it. Voluntary poverty was assumed by the earliest disciples and fathers in the Christian church. There is no duty of this character specifically enjoined, but we are told to "seek first the Kingdom," and all needful things will be added. "Neither riches nor poverty" is the ideal mean for a contented Christian life.

B. J. B., Chicago, Ill. Why are men spoken of as Christian and Orthodox? Is there any difference? Is not a Christian necessarily orthodox?

Broadly defined, we should say that the word Christian relates to character and disposition, implying one whose faith is in Christ, and who is seeking to follow and obey him. Such an one may not be orthodox, because he may not believe in some doctrine held by the churches. On the other hand, a man perfectly orthodox may not be a Christian. His belief, though sound and correct according to the creed, may not influence his life. James says that the devils believe (2: 19).

were visited by a divine judgment. See Christ's words regarding the disaster at Siloam (Luke 13: 4), which is a rebuke to those who judge others rashly.

Dear Mr. Klopsch: I want to thank you for the fine premium. It is worth more than the price of the paper for a year. The Pilgrim's Progress I received, express all paid. I thank you very much for it; also the pretty Calendar. MRS. C. F. FRENCH.

C. H. L., Byhalia, O. Why did Christ wish the raising of the ruler's daughter kept secret, as mentioned in Mark 5: 43?

It is probable that he feared that the notoriety it would bring might embarrass him in his work. The reports of the raising of Lazarus actually did so, and were the occasion of plots being made against his life (see John 11: 47, and 12: 10, 11.) Besides this, Jesus did not wish to be known as a mere wonder-worker. He wanted the people to regard his miracles as evidence of his Divine commission. They, on the other hand, were intent only on the extraordinary spectacle, as doubt-

THE FROZEN LAKE AT SANDRINGHAM PALACE, ENGLAND

Although Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace, in London, are the official residences of King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra, they still regard Sandringham Hall, in Suffolk, as their home. It was purchased by the nation for them when they were Prince and Princess of Wales, and was their country home for more than thirty years. When in London, the royal couple occupied Marlborough House, which is but a short distance from their present palace. It was, however, always a delight to them to get down into the country and entertain their friends at Sandringham. It was a gay and merry party that assembled there, and the Prince, like a country squire, would take the men out shooting, while the ladies of the party amused themselves indoors or went skating on the lake. Even now, when homes so much statelier and more imposing are at his disposal, the King is fond of rushing down to Sandringham, and escaping the cares of state, with a few old friends for a week's relaxation.

The word Christian belongs to the realm of the spiritual and the moral; the word orthodox to that of the mental.

Church Member, St. Petersburg, Fla., writes:

I live in a tourist town, and I spend my summers at different places, and it is the same all over the country: Old gray-headed men and women who are too nervous to sit in prayer-meeting one hour, will sit three hours at the card tables. The pulpit and press should take up and try to overcome this great evil. Think of the influence over this rising generation.

M. S. B. M., Kingston, N. Y. Why is the Apocrypha left out a greater part of the Bibles that are printed at the present age?

Apocrypha originally meant "concealed," and has now come, later, to mean "doubtful," and "unauthentic." The reason why the apocryphal books were not included by the great councils of the church in the regular canon, was because of their supposed doubtful origin. Some were declared to be unquestionably spurious, others presumptively so. That reason still holds good. There can be no moral profit in the promulgation of such books, hence their continued rejection.

D. H., Gouverneur, N. Y. How does Dr. Klopsch pronounce his name?

All the letters are pronounced as written, except "c," which is silent.

W. S. R., Linwood, N. Y. We do wrong to judge and condemn others, and while we do not approve of theatre going, it would be an inexcusable piece of Pharisaism, to assert that the victims of the recent Chicago fire less would be the case if they were performed now. Probably both reasons led to the command you mention.

Reader, Waretown, N. J. We are not aware that anything has come to light in recent scientific discoveries, that conflicts with the Bible. Indeed, on the other hand, much of our latest science is corroborative of the Bible. We might mention several archaeological discoveries in the East, that are of this character. Radium, x-rays, the wonders of electricity, etc., are simply the unfolding to men of nature's secrets, and furnish further evidence of the wisdom and omnipotence of the Creator.

George B. Hadfield, Cimarron, Kan. I am trying in my way to preach the Gospel in the country schoolhouses. Sometimes I walk forty miles over these prairies, and how these people listen is an inspiration. I need a stereopticon. Now do you know of a church that has a lantern that I could get for my work? I am not able to buy one, as my resources are very limited.

Probably some reader of THE MAIL-BAG may feel disposed to help this frontier missionary. Any interested reader may write him at above address.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I am very much pleased with both the Red Letter Testament and the beautiful Calendar. You certainly give Gospel measure, heaped up and running over. Wishing you a Happy Christmas.

Eastover, S. C. MARY E. LEE.

Charles F., Hamilton, O. 1. It is well to have nothing whatsoever to do with the liquor traffic, even remotely. It is a curse to civilization. You can doubtless market your goods elsewhere. 2. Most employers nowadays decline to hire men who drink. They want sober men, who give due attention to business, and whose brains are not muddled by liquor.

J. A. T., Scenery Hill Pa. I have a milk route, and deliver milk now once a day, except Sundays. Milk keeps in cold weather, so there is no loss in keeping it over the Sabbath. Some of my patrons ask to have it delivered seven days in the week. If I do not deliver on Sunday, there will be loss of milk and patrons. I am in a quandary. Sometimes it appears to be a case of Sabbath labor, at other times a case of necessity against a double loss.

In weather when milk will keep over without spoiling, it does not seem to be absolutely necessary to deliver it Sundays, if you can give an extra supply on Saturdays. Of course patrons will urge you to do otherwise. You must make it a matter of conscience.

Lawyer, Crown Point, Ind. Have you any connection with a publishing concern in the Bible House, New York, which professes to give diamond rings and gold watches in return for the solution of very obvious riddles and puzzles?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has no connection with any other periodical or with any other publication whatsoever.

J. R., Germantown, Pa. I have seen it stated somewhere that a very limited vocabulary—say only a few hundred words—is all that the average man or woman uses. What are the facts? How does the average vocabulary compare with that of the great writers?

It is estimated by language experts who have made a long study of the subject, that the average rural laborer uses about 300 words, to express all his wants, fears and emotions. Persons of good education use 4,000, while those of superior training, such as thinkers and writers, command from 4,000 to 7,500; a few of the greatest reaching 10,000. Shakespeare's vocabulary was 15,000, Milton's, 8,000, and the Bible (Old Testament), 5,642.

The most sensible, pleasing, and useful present one can give to a non-converted or converted friend, is a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, accompanied by its Calendar. MRS. LAVINIA GUILD HOWE, Shingle House, Pa.

"THE LORD'S TENTH"

AS we go to press with this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the following letter comes to us from a reader in Oregon:

VALE, ORE., January 4, 1904.

Dr. Louis Klopsch, New York: DEAR SIR—I enclose draft for $304.50, which please apply as follows: Send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Z. G. W., Vale, Ore.; R. W., Vale, Ore.; Mrs. F. G., Vale, Ore.; Mrs. B. C. R., Vale, Ore.; Mrs. B. M. S., Holiday avenue, Portland, Ore.; Mrs. C. G. C., Dallas, Ore.; A. H. H., Dallas, Ore.

And six months' subscriptions, or the amount of 75 cents each, to forty poor families, wherever you can find them; that is, people who will read the paper and are not able to pay for the same.

Total, first group.....	$ 10.50
Total, second group.....	30.00
To Sherman L. Swift, Bay Spring, Mich., to be used in his charity work.....	75.00
Mont-Lawn (CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home).....	30.00
Bowery Mission, N. Y.....	30.00
Foreign Missions.....	100.00
Volunteers of America.....	29.00

Please write each person you send paper to that it is sent by a friend, and all charges paid. You will please not publish my name.

Yours truly, J. S. S.

The donor's wishes will be carried out at once. The following will be apportioned among foreign missions.

Missionary Fred Weiss, Tangier.....	$ 10.00
Missionary A. R. Stark, Callao, S. A.....	10.00
Missionary Alice Condit, M.D., India.....	10.00
Missionary Sobey, Costa Rica.....	10.00
Missionary W. O. Johnson, M.D., Corea.....	10.00
Missionary R. J. Young, S. Paulo, Brazil.....	10.00
Missionary C. Z. Beals, Wuhu, China.....	10.00
Daniel C. Greene, D.D., Tokyo, Japan.....	10.00
Rev. Thos. Gray, Ponape, Caroline Islands.....	10.00
Dr. Wilter T. Currie, Chisamba, W. C. Africa.....	10.00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

MR. HOLMES, STATISTICIAN

HON. JAMES WILSON, SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

JASPER WILSON, PRIVATE SECRETARY

THE GREATEST OF AGRICULTURAL BUREAUS

It is Uncle Sam's Crop Reporting Branch, with its Staff of 250,000 Volunteer Helpers in all the States of the Union

FEW persons, outside of those immediately connected with the work, have any conception of the vast and far-reaching system of crop reporting which is carried on under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture in Washington. Hundreds of salaried government employees devote their whole time to the task, and the government also has the aid of more than a quarter of a million men and women in all sections of the country who are volunteer co-workers in the great enterprise. This governmental crop reporting service foretells the outcome of a year's planting and cultivating long before harvest-time.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson—a practical farmer—has, by his energy and progressiveness, brought his department well to the front, and the Crop Reporting Bureau is his especial pride. The government first made provision for the collection of agricultural statistics sixty-three years ago, or more than a score of years before the Department of Agriculture was established; but it has only been of late years that the institution has been brought to its present state of perfection. That the facilities now at the disposal of the government crop forecasters are excellent, is evidenced by the marvelous accuracy of every one of their predictions during recent years. In December, 1901, the Department of Agriculture estimated the cotton crop of 1901-2 at 9,674,000 bales, and late in June of the year following, the Census Office reported the exact figures to be 9,582,520 bales, a difference of less than one per cent. The season previous, the forecast was even more remarkable, the Department estimate of 10,100,000 bales being only two one-hundredths of one per cent. out of the way, as compared with actual statistics gathered by the census about ten months later.

Advance information as to the size and character of a maturing crop is found through the co-operation of nearly 250,000 farmers, bankers, merchants, cotton ginneries, agents of transportation lines, mill and elevator proprietors and other persons. All are glad to help the government, for the reason that each is desirous of knowing at the earliest possible moment the extent of the crop in which he is interested. What might be termed the field marshals of the American crop reporting army, comprise thirty-eight State statistical agents, each employed by the government at a salary ranging from $300 to $800 per year. Each of these State officials maintains a corps of assistants or correspondents entirely independent of those reporting directly to Washington. All told, there are nearly ten thousand assistants of this class. Aside from the State corps, there is a double army of crop investigators covering the entire country and reporting direct to Washington. First, there is in every agricultural county a correspondent, who has from two to four assistant correspondents. These county correspondents and sub-correspondents, number in the entire country nearly eleven thousand. Then every township and voting precinct in which farming operations are carried on has a correspondent, this force numbering thirty thousand.

All of Uncle Sam's crop inspectors above enumerated cotton-growers. Likewise, in order to make sure of his figures on cereal production, he utilizes the services of nearly 25,000 millers, elevator men, and other non-farmers. Finally, at the end of the growing season, about 84,000 farmers and planters report on the results of their own farming operations during the year.

Secrecy must be enforced at the Department in Washington, on the part of all the government experts who have to do with footing up the figures received from all parts of the country, and ascertaining the grand totals of probable production. The information as to coming conditions, heralded by the government crop reports, often has a most important influence upon the prices of the necessities of life, and upon the wages of the world's toilers, and it is therefore essential that no man, or group of men, be allowed to have this information in advance of the general public, lest they use the knowledge to further their private ends.

At the Department of Agriculture in Washington, the work of tabulating "the returns" received from the field agents and voluntary correspondents is in the hands of a corps of seventy persons, who receive salaries ranging from $3,000 down to $480 a year. Nearly forty of these men and women are experts in their respective lines of work, and each receive $100 a month or more. During the year, this force of seventy workers handles more than 2,500,000 separate crop reports. For the most part, the monthly reports of the crop investigators are sent to Washington by mail, in sealed envelopes; but State statistical agents residing at distant points, report by telegraph, using cipher or a secret code.

In order to insure secrecy, the reports of the county, township, and other correspondents are tabulated by different groups of clerks, working in separate rooms, while the reports from the State statistical agents, whether received by telegraph or "special delivery" letter, go direct to the Statistician or Chief of the Division, and are locked up, with the seals unbroken, until the day on which the report is issued.

Up to the very day on which an official crop report is given out for publication, the work is so divided among different clerks that no one can make an intelligent interpretation of his fragmentary portion. On the day when the returns are transformed from a seemingly confused jumble of figures into one comprehensive estimate, the clerks to whom are entrusted this work are locked in their offices, until the all-important forecast is completed and made public.

WALDON FAWCETT.

MAKING UP THE CROP REPORTS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

report on conditions as they find them, eleven times a year; but even this large force constitutes but a portion of the legions of volunteer workers engaged in the novel work. In all parts of the country the Department of Agriculture has reliable sources of information, aside from its regular correspondents. For instance, in order to make the information in the cotton reports doubly authentic, the statistician at Washington corresponds, during the growing and picking season, with more than 60,000 public and private ginneries, and upward of 15,000 bankers, merchants, and other persons not actual

THE PROPOSED NEW DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The American Pulpit

:: Sermon by ::

Rev. Frank De Witt Calmage, D.D.

Gospel Fires

TEXT—I. THESS. 5: 19:

"QUENCH NOT THE SPIRIT"

THE mighty phrase-maker, Paul, is a coiner of many superlatives. He is no stupid platitudinarian. Every-day, commonplace, insipid, tasteless comparisons, have for him no attraction.

He never harnesses dull-eyed and spavined axioms to his verbal chariot. His forge is always red hot; his arms are cranes; his hammers pile-drivers; his doors flood-gates; his streams are fathomless, on-rushing rivers of molten iron; his sparks are stars, and his seconds millenniums.

We would, for our present lesson, use one of Paul's impressive, significant words. His "quench" has a superlative meaning. It is one of those sharp-pointed, verbal chisels which can open adamant rock, and in cutting power, out-diamond the diamond. It is one of those intense, lurid words which pictures its thoughts in colors of blood. "To quench" means to smother, as a mother would extinguish the flames consuming the dress of her burning child, by wrapping about the flimsy garments a heavy, wet blanket, jerked from off the clothes-line. "To quench" means to deluge, to submerge, as the Johnstown fires were put out when the Conemaugh dam broke, and houses and stores and factories were floating about in the flood like chips tossed in an eddy. "To quench" means to stifle, to choke, to kill, as a farmer's wife with a snuffer might extinguish a candle flame, or as the tumbling waters of Niagara might drown out the subterranean fires of an erupting Vesuvius. In that word "quench," Paul startlingly warns all believing Christians against the sin of extinguishing the power of the Holy Spirit, which is now burning within them as a living flame. "Quench not the Spirit," is the command to the Thessalonians. Smother not the Divine flames.

Pernicious Influences

Now comes the practical question! How do many believing Christians open the floodgates of sin and drown out their spiritual fires? How do many of our new converts chill their holy enthusiasm and dry their cheeks, wet with penitent tears, and harden again their hearts in sin? First and foremost, by neglecting God's place of public worship. By turning their backs upon the Sunday church services. By claiming that they can pray to God just as well at home as in the week-night prayer-meetings. By asserting that the "Communion of the Saints," in a building which has been dedicated to God as a "House of Prayer," is not essential for true spiritual life. No true convert should ever be guilty of casting a slur upon the public altar of Jesus Christ. As Ponce de Leon, the explorer, crossed the seas, expecting to find a spring of "Perpetual Youth," which was different from all other springs, so when we come to a consecrated public service, filled with Christian people, we should expect to find there a rich blessing, different from all other blessings. It is hard work for a live coal to keep warm and to remain a live coal outside of the grate. It is hard work for a warm-hearted, loving Christian to remain a spiritual "live coal," unless he continually lives in close contact with other loving Christians. It is by the commingling of prayers that the best prayer is produced. It is by the commingling of testimonies that the best testimony springs from our lips. It is by "the foolishness" of preaching that sinners are saved? Yes! And also by the foolishness of preaching that they are brought nearer, week by week, to the personality of Jesus Christ.

Neglect of Church

If public worship is not essential for spiritual life, why did God decree that Moses should build a tabernacle, as soon as the hosts of Pharaoh had found a watery grave in the depths of the Red Sea? At that tabernacle, the Hebrews were compelled to worship. If not essential, why did Christ, during his earthly ministry, again and again go up to Jerusalem to attend the feasts, and again and again go into the synagogues to worship and to pray? If not essential, why did Christ command his disciples to assemble in one place in Jerusalem, and await the coming of the Holy Ghost? If not essential, why did the Puritans and the Pilgrim Fathers place such emphasis upon the attendance of their church members at the house of God? We can laugh at these stern-faced settlers of New England! We can poke fun at their "Blue Laws" and their plain ways! We can say that Cotton Mather, their natural outgrowth, was the instigator of the Salem witchcraft persecutions! But laugh at the New England Puritans as we will, we know they produced the highest type of spiritual men then known. We know that for spiritual truth they were ready to die. We know that in order to get that truth in the public meeting-house, they turned their backs upon the Old World and faced the New. It was in public worship that the Puritan Gospel thrived. It is in public worship that the new convert should catch the glow of the spiritual fires, which will make his heart warm toward God and his fellow-man.

A Captain's Advice

Public worship is absolutely essential for the spiritual life of the average man. Some years ago, a country boy was riding in the cars toward Philadelphia. In the seat sitting next to him was an old man. After a long conversation, in which the young man told his seat-mate that he was going to Philadelphia to find work, the aged man asked him for his letters. "Oh, yes," said the young fellow, "here is one from my old employer. Here is one from my school-teacher. Here is one from my physician." "Is that all? Have you not one from your minister?" asked his seat-mate. "Yes, I have that also." "Well, my young friend," said the old man, "I would advise you to present that letter to some church at once. I am an old sea captain, and I have found out by bitter experience, that it is safer when in harbor to tie my ship up to a wharf, than to anchor it out in midstream, to be floated around in the tides. By bitter experience, I have also found out that no young Christian is safe, unless he is bound up in Christian fellowship with other Christians in Sunday services and in the week-night prayer-meetings." The old sea captain's experience has been mine. I never saw in my life a church member go astray, unless you could first trace his spiritual degeneracy in growing absences from the prayer-meetings and Sunday services. If you want to keep close to God, you must keep close to his praying disciples. Never neglect, unless compelled, a church service. For your spiritual welfare especially, never neglect your week-night prayer-meeting.

How may the new convert, in another way, smother the divine flames burning within him? By throwing away the golden key which unlocks the closet-door of secret prayer? By neglecting to have a trysting-place, where, as a lover, he can meet with God, and talk over his plans and hopes? By thinking that there is any wakeful hour, day or night, when he can afford not to feel that Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,

The Christian's native air;
His watchword at the Gate of Death—
He enters heaven with prayer.

William T. Sherman, in his famous journey from Atlanta to the sea, broke loose from his military base of supplies and fed his army on the surrounding country through which he marched. But a course that may be safe for a military strategist is certainly and inevitably disastrous for a soldier of Jesus Christ. A Christian convert should never get out of prayer touch with the Heavenly City. It is

A Fatal Maneuvre

It will mean the Christian's falling a victim to spiritual ambush, entrapment and overthrow. You have no more reason to expect the flames of a candle to burn in a chemical retort emptied of all oxygen, than you have a right to expect your spiritual fires to burn in your bedroom, which is not charged and surcharged with the holy atmosphere of secret prayer.

It is necessary for true spiritual life to pray in public. Oh, yes! But it is just as necessary to pray in private. "The Lord thy God is a jealous God." That means, in one sense, that there are times when God wants us to be alone with him; alone, as Christ was alone with the Heavenly Father, when Jesus again and again went off alone to pray. He wants us to be alone with him in holy fellowship, as some of us have often been alone with our mothers. Blessed and tender were those hours of sweet communion with our mothers, who have now gone beyond. After the rest of the family were all in bed, we used to sit up towards midnight, telling her what we wanted to do, and asking her if she thought it was best for us to do it. So God, the Heavenly Father, wants us at times to come to him when we are alone. He wants us to tell him all our plans. George Whitefield would never accept any invitation or do anything of any import, unless he had first talked it over with his "Best Friend." In the darkness of the bedroom, and in the solitary walks through the streets, and in the quiet of the office, or in the kitchen, God wants us to frankly and freely and lovingly talk with him. He wants us to come to him, with the abiding faith of a little child. And the Heavenly Father "who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly."

Christian convert, never feel that the hours are wasted which you spend on your knees, talking with Christ in secret prayer. You cannot find one man on earth who has ever attained to a life of eminent Christian usefulness, unless he climbed there by grasping firmly and gladly, rung by rung, the golden ladder of secret prayer. What said Charles H. Spurgeon, in reference to the power of secret prayer? When some one asked him the cause of his marvelous usefulness for Christ, Spurgeon pointed to the floor of his Tabernacle, saying: "In the room beneath, you will find three hundred praying Christians. Every time I preach here, they gather together and uphold my hands by continuous prayer and supplication. There you will find the secret of all the blessings." As Charles H. Spurgeon's "Gideon's Band," by secret prayer swept their pastor on to spiritual victories, so, by the power of secret prayer, we can lift ourselves up towards God and Christian usefulness. As Philip Doddridge, of blessed memory, once said: "The better I pray, the better I study." I say, "The better you pray, the better you will work." The better you pray, the better as a mother you can look after your children. The better you pray, the better you will live, and the better you will preach, and the wider will be your influence for Christ.

A Soldier's Prayer

Prayer in public necessary for spiritual development? Oh, yes! Prayer behind the locked door, prayer in secret, prayer where only God's ear can hear, and God's eye can see, just as important for the spiritual life and hope. During the Revolutionary War, a Highland soldier was caught creeping into camp during the darkness of the night. He was charged with being a spy, and taken before the Commanding General. Being asked why he had left the camp, the soldier replied, "I merely left in order to go out into the darkness of the woods and be alone with God, and have secret prayer." "Then down on your knees," thundered the officer. "Within twenty hours you shall be shot as a spy. You never needed to pray as much as you need to pray now." The soldier dropped on his knees, and offered such a simple, earnest prayer of faith and love, that the tears sprang from the Commander's eyes. He turned to the guard, and said: "Let that soldier go. He is telling the truth. He must have often been on his knees in prayer drill, or else he could not have prayed so well in public review." The great Heavenly Commander judges the sincerity of our public professions, by the earnestness and consecration of our private devotions.

Our public Christian usefulness to a great extent is dependent upon the intensity of our prayers uttered in secret. Christian brother, never allow your prayer-closet to become dust-covered and musty. Never let a time come when you will break the telegraphic communication with the Heavenly Headquarters for prayer. In God's great whispering gallery, may your lips learn to utter the Divine pleadings so softly, that they shall sometimes only be heard by his ear, and answered directly only by his loving voice.

The closed lids of God's Bible are often used to extinguish the Divine flame burning within the Christian's heart. They can become the barred and bolted doors of superstition, barred and bolted by gross ignorance, endungeoning the most monstrous of heresies in the darkest of cells. They may become red-hot irons putting out the calm, deep, blue eyes of faith and love. By an ancient Eastern law, no blind prince is allowed to sit upon the throne of Persia. By a divine law, no Christian can reach that stage of enlightenment fitting him to occupy one of God's spiritual thrones without earnest and prayerful study of the Bible. "Tolle, lege! Tolle, lege!" (Take and read! Take and read!) was the divine command given in vision to young Augustine in reference to the Holy Scriptures. "Take and read! Take and read!" is the divine command given to the young Christians of the present day.

Study the Chart

My friends, how are you going to find out what is the law of God and the will of God unless you read his Holy Word? In Isaiah, he distinctly says: "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways." Are you and I trying to find out, by studying the Scriptures, what are God's thoughts, and to harmonize our lives with his life? Are we trying to find out what is the deeper, richer meaning of the Saviour's name? Are we seeking to understand what is the mission of the Holy Spirit, and how God with the weak things of this world is going to confound the mighty? Or are we going around day after day singing a senseless, silly, siren song, "Jesus will save! Jesus will save! Oh I am so happy, Jesus will save!" when some of us merely look upon the name of Jesus as an amulet because we do not know or care who Jesus is, or take the trouble to read the words which he has spoken for us? Are we going to look upon the closed lids of the Bible in a superstitious way, as did the peasants of Europe during the Dark Ages, as though

DEMONSTRATION OF PANAMA CITIZENS AT THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

REVIEW OF COLOMBIAN TROOPS AT BOGOTA

IN the message sent to Congress on Jan. 4, President Roosevelt gives an exhaustive history of the Panama difficulty. While it does not satisfy the journals and statesmen in opposition to his policy, it is a statement that is welcomed by his friends, and it is a frank statement of the facts. The question between the two, is as to the right of the government to take the course it did, and as to the propriety of giving recognition at so early a date, to the independence of the new State. As to the latter objection, it must be admitted that France, England and other governments, gave their recognition at a later date, so that had President Roosevelt delayed, nothing would have been gained, as he could not reasonably have withheld it after European nations had acted. It was right that a Power so closely and intimately associated with Panama should lead the way in this recognition.

An important feature of the policy of our government was not generally known until the President's message was published. It is that, so far from actively supporting Panama, our forces resisted the appeals of the Panama authorities in at least one instance. The President says that when a body of Colombian troops landed at Colon and proposed to cross the isthmus, Commander Hubbard prevented them, in spite of the urgent request of the leaders of Panama to allow them to come on. The latter were prepared for a conflict, and declared themselves well able to conquer the Colombian force and make all its members prisoners. Our general conceived that his duty in policing the isthmus was to prevent an action and maintain order, and the opposing forces were kept apart, thus, as the President says, preventing great waste of life, great suffering and great destruction of property." The effect of maintaining peace, of course, in the general view, operates to the advantage of Panama, which would be crushed in the end, by the superior might of Colombia, if we did not interfere; but in this particular instance the impartiality of our government was shown by restraining the forces of Panama.

Dispatches to the press state that Colombia continues concentrating troops at Cartagena, within easy reach of the shores of Panama. It is estimated that two thousand men are now there and that more are on the way. Several points on the coast are also reported to be swarming with Colombian troops, and reports are current that at all hazards President Marroquin will make an attack, and will not hesitate to fire on the United States forces if they attempt to prevent his landing on the shores of Panama.

It is little likely, however, that while our government maintains its present attitude, an attempt will be made to invade Panama. Nor is there at present any prospect of change. Mr. Hay has replied to Gen. Reyes, the representative of Colombia at Washington, who made an earnest appeal on behalf of the Bogota authorities. The text has not at the time of writing been disclosed, but its tenor is stated to be an emphatic refusal to recede from the position the United States has taken. Mr. Beaupre, who was our minister at Bogota, has now returned, and expresses his opinion that there is no probability of war, and he does not apprehend that any backward step will be taken which will delay or prevent the consummation of the taking over of the canal franchise and property and the successful prosecution of the work of construction by the United States. This of course is the main factor in the case. It was an unreasonable and almost intolerable outrage, that such a body as the Congress at Bogota should continue to prevent the construction of a work which would be a boon to the whole civilized world. It would have been more satisfactory if they had yielded, and Panama remained in the Union, but as they were obstinate as well as greedy, and were evidently plotting to entangle us in a dispute with France, as explained in this journal last week, it is right that we should avail ourselves of the opportunity afforded by the revolution.

Panama has her own grievances against Colombia, apart from the loss with which it was threatened by the failure of the canal negotiations. A distinguished citizen of the isthmus gives a resume of them, which fully explains the reasons for discontent. They are of no concern to us, save as they evoke sympathy with a misgoverned people; but they are worthy of recognition, as proving that the secession has not taken place, and the new government has not been organized without reasonable cause. He says:

"Notwithstanding all that Colombia has drained us of in the way of revenues, she did not bridge for us a single river, nor make a single roadway, nor erect a single college where our children could be educated, nor do anything at all to advance our industries. . . . Well, when the new generals came we seized them, arrested them, and the town of Panama was in joy. Not a protest was made, except the shots fired from the Colombian gunboat Bogota, which killed one Chinese. We were willing to encounter the Colombian troops at Colon, and fight it out; but the Commander of the United States cruiser Nashville forbade Superintendent Shaler to allow the railroad to transport troops for either party. That is our story."

GOSPEL FIRES

Sermon by REV. FRANK DEWITT TALMAGE D.D. Continued

They were something they had no right to touch? Up to twenty years of age, the great Martin Luther was totally ignorant of God's word. Though studying to be a priest, he had never been allowed to personally touch the Bible, and was not aware that the Gospels and the Epistles comprised more than the few chapters read by the priests in public worship. Shall we continue to be ignorant of God's word as that? Or are you going to look upon the Holy Scriptures as a divine letter written by the Heavenly Father to his children, which letter ought to be carefully studied, and its commands to be strictly followed out?

Supposing that your mother died of consumption when you were a child of four years. Supposing that, when the hectic roses of that fatal disease were blooming in the garden of her pale, sunken cheek, she one day had you, her sleeping baby, placed by her side. When while you slept, she wrote you a long letter. In this letter she gave her maternal advice and parting benediction. Then she folded that letter and gave it to your father, saying—"Husband, give this to my baby boy on the day he graduates from the public school; before he decides upon life's work, I want to give him my advice and tell him what I want him to do." Supposing twelve years had now passed and you at sixteen were now given that letter. What would you do? First you would kiss it. You would say, "Mother wrote it with her dying hand! Mother wrote it with love." Then you would reverently open the yellow leaves and carefully read that letter, line by line. If you were a true son, if possible you would follow out the desires of that paternal letter, word by word. New convert in the Gospel life, and Christian of older standing, the Holy Scriptures are God's letter to us. If we are the Heavenly Father's true children, we will take the letter and study it. We will translate the desires of that letter into our own lives. We will make God's thoughts our thoughts, and his ways our ways.

Paul said to young Timothy, "Preach the Word!" I say to you, "Study the Word." Study it in the church, and in the home. Study it on your knees, and at your desk, and in your bed. Study it as absorbingly and as intensely as John Locke studied it, who gave up his last fourteen years to an earnest search after divine truth, as revealed in the Scriptures. Study God's words as earnestly and as faithfully as Samuel Johnson commended his young friend to study it, when, upon his death-bed, he turned and said, "Young man, attend to the voice of one who has possessed a certain degree of fame in the world, and who is about to appear before his Maker: Read the Bible every day of your life." Yes, new convert, read the Bible and continue to read it, because God commands you to read it. Read it, because your deeper spiritual life depends upon your reading it, or in having it read to you. Study it, and continue to study it, because when you read the Bible, God is talking to you, as when you pray, you are talking to God.

But there is still another way for the Christian to quench the spiritual flame which is now burning within him. That way is to neglect the family altar, which should be raised in every home. That way is for the husband and father to hurriedly arise in the morning and quickly dress, and then off to business, without gathering his children about him for family worship, and without having any blessing asked at the breakfast table. That way is for every father to think that all that he has to do is to say his own prayers and do his own Christian work, and then his children will say their own prayers and fulfil their own Christian tasks.

Every man's home to a certain extent is his own castle. He can lift what standards he pleases over his own fireside. He can emphatically say, as did God's servant of old, "Let others do as they will, but as for me and my house, we shall serve the Lord." Or he can open his own home to shelter and entertain evil temptations of all sorts. But let no man think, if he surrenders his house to evil practices and yields himself and his home to the seductions of the world, that he can at the same time live a spiritual life, nor can he expect that those around him, who are bound to him by ties of blood and love, will lead spiritual lives. He must, if he would live right, not only consecrate his own life every morning to God, but in the presence of his children, he must pray to God for them to consecrate their lives to Christ also.

Thus, no matter which way we may look at the Pauline word "quench," the whole trend of the matter is this: As Christians, we cannot live a true spiritual life unless every moment of every day we are in touch with Christ. We cannot preach to others, unless, by searching God's Word, we hear Christ preaching to us. We cannot pray for others in public review, unless we have had much knee drill in secret prayer. We cannot give ourselves wholly to God's service, unless at the same time, at the family altar, we give our loved ones also to him. Are we ready to come into touch with all these spiritual sources of power? By coming in touch with Christ's life, shall we have the Spirit's flame leap, and glow, and resistlessly move on, and scatter, and consume our sins.

In welcoming the church members to Christ's altar, I have but one more question to ask and to answer. In what, oh struggling friend, does the chief definition of being a Christian consist? Ought you to say, "I want to be a Christian, to escape the evil effects of sin?" "I want to be a Christian, to be happy?" "I want to be a Christian, in order that I may reach heaven?" Oh, no. You should want to be a Christian, not for your own beatification, but in order that God may be glorified. In order to glorify God we should work for him. In order to glorify God we should give to him of our temporal substance. In order to glorify God we should pray to him. May our lives be filled with holy zeal for the glorification of the Saviour on earth.

Gordon House, New York's New West Side Settlement

ON the West Side of New York City a new building has been erected, which is likely to prove a model for philanthropists in our own and other lands. In its design and in its adaptation to the object sought, it appears to be absolutely perfect. It is essentially a Settlement, but the Settlement idea has been adapted to the circumstances of the special class which throngs that section of the city. It is located on Seventeenth street, near Ninth avenue, and was named the Gordon House in honor of "Chinese Gordon," who was not only a great military hero, but distinguished for his love and service, to the poor boys and young men of London.

That such an institution is needed in the section where it stands, there can be no doubt. Men and boys there are there in large numbers, who live in furnished rooms or in flats, in which they can enjoy but little comfort after their hours of toil. Relaxation and amusement they must have, to keep them from degenerating into the proverbial dullness which results from all work and no play. Many there are, too, who are ambitious, and are ardently desirous of working their way up by the acquisition of practical knowledge. The new Settlement holds out a friendly, helping hand to all these. In its spacious rooms and well-arranged departments, they can breathe freely; facilities for recreation or study are at hand, and the members are in contact with men of culture and refinement from our best universities, who are sincerely interested in their welfare. What a boon such an Institution will prove to the neighborhood, is realized by anyone who has had to do with youths who come to a great city from the country, to make their way in the world, as well as to those born and bred in the city, who, newly emancipated from school-life, are at the critical period of their lives, when the temptations of the saloon and of evil resorts are specially powerful. To have a good club to which they have a right to go; to come under the influence of men of education and character, is to have the way to good citizenship opened before them, and the means of mental, moral and material advancement.

An important feature of the new Settlement is its recognition of the spirit of independence, which is characteristic of the American workingman. The members are to pay dues, like the members of a rich man's club. This provision gives them a sense of ownership, and a partnership in the common task of elevating themselves and others. The stigma of charity is thus removed, and a man or youth received into membership feels that he is honored by the association, not that he is humiliated by the acceptance of a gift. He will also have a share in the development of the Institution, in the fact that his suggestions of new courses of study or of fresh departments of recreation are welcome. If there are enough members with like tastes sufficient to form a class, almost any subject that is desired will be taught. The aim of the workers is to encourage initiative among the members, and so to develop the interest of all in the efficiency of the house. There is also a distinct aim in the system of manual training adopted. It is made, as far as possible, play-work. It stimulates the instinct to make things, which is found in nearly every boy, and thus becomes an antidote to the lawless instinct induced by playing on the street.

The membership is divided into three classes, according to age. The annual dues for a boy under sixteen are two dollars; for a young man over sixteen and under twenty-one, three dollars, and for those over twenty-one, five dollars. The privileges are many, and of a kind that are thoroughly appreciated. The club is a home, where they can meet their friends and spend a social evening. Or if they are fond of athletics, they can find a gymnasium devoted to the purpose with modern apparatus. Other rooms for games are also at their service. There is a large library and reading-room. There are also six shops for handicraft-training, where clay-modeling, Venetian iron-work, all sorts of willow-weaving, cabinet-making, wood-carving, and many other crafts will be taught. There is also a music room and an art room. Even the roof is to be turned to account. It is covered with an iron cage eighteen feet high, and will be used for basket-ball and other outdoor games in the summer, and in winter, as a skating rink.

The building itself is an imposing structure. It is of gray brick faced with limestone. The interior is finished in old oak, and while plain and substantial, is very artistic. The house was planned and constructed under the personal supervision of Mr. William A. Clark, who will be the head-worker. His experience as Director of the Lincoln House, in Boston, Mass., gave him an opportunity to put to practical test the theories he had formulated in his eight years of service there. Gordon House, therefore, may be considered a model settlement of the most improved modern type. Mr. Clark will have the help, in the management of the Institution, of six volunteer college men as workers, and as there are already five hundred members, their office in directing the various departments will obviously be no sinecure.

The origin of the Institution is associated with a life of rare beauty and devotion. Among the instructors in Columbia University some few years ago, was Theodore G. White, Ph.D., a young man of boundless energy, and with an ardent love for boys. He belonged to St. Andrew's Brotherhood, and was an earnest Sunday School teacher. His work for his boys was not confined to the Lord's Day, but extended through the week. His home was always open to them for hospitality, or for advice, or help of any kind. No trouble was too great for him to take, if it promised a pleasure or a service to the boys. He would go with them on bicycle trips on their holidays, or take them down the bay or to the beach for a swim. No man was so popular among the boys of the West Side, or had so much influence over them as Dr. White. The need of some such institution as a Settlement House had long been on his mind. Finally, in 1901, a beginning was made. He secured a stable in Seventeenth street; worked with the boys in tearing up the old floor and laying a new one, and helped in putting in the plumbing and the baths. The benefits of the work were soon evident. Dr. White entered into it with enthusiasm. But the service he was doing was abruptly terminated. One Saturday afternoon, during an outing with his boys, he became unconscious, and in a very short time he died. He was only twenty-eight years old, but in that short lifetime he had done a noble work.

When Dr. White's will was opened, it was found that he had left a part of his property to the Gordon House, and the remainder to his cousin Theo. B. Starr, and his sons Louis M. and Howard W. Starr. These legatees determined to devote their share of the property to developing the work that their lamented kinsman had begun. They made a substantial addition to the fund, and have built and equipped Gordon House at a cost of more than a hundred thousand dollars, as a tribute to his memory. It is now nearly finished, and will be formally opened early this year.

THE GORDON HOUSE

A NEW IDEA IN CHURCH MUSIC

ONE of the Episcopal churches, St. Peters, of Philadelphia, has established a novel school for the training of choir boys, the contract being that the boys are to receive an education in music and other branches of study, in return for which they sing in the church without pay, so long as their voices retain their boyish sweetness. The educational course does not end when the voice breaks, but continues until the period of graduation, although the boy's services are of course lost to the church when he loses the soprano or contralto notes.

The school is under the direction of Mr. Ernest Felix Potter, who is assisted by two graduates of Bryn Mawr college. The course includes reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, algebra, geometry, United States history, ancient history, geography, civil government, physiology, zoology, botany, English composition, literature, rhetoric, Latin, German, French and drawing. The programme for each day in this school is as follows:

THE SINGING CLASS AT AN OPEN-AIR MUSIC LESSON

9 A.M. Morning prayer in church. 9:30-11 A.M. School session. Boys go singly to the choir master for voice lessons. 11:30-12 Luncheon and gymnasium. 12:1-3:30. School session—Boys go singly to choirmaster for voice lessons. 1:30-1:50 recess. 2:3-5 daily rehearsal. 3:15-4, gymnasium.

There are eighteen boys in this tiny school. The education they receive is described by the master as a public and high-school course in one, with the musical education added. Singing is thoroughly taught in the interest of the church, the only return the congregation receives for the money expended on the boys' education being the free singing at the services. It is considered a fair bargain on both sides. The experiment is one that may interest churches throughout the country, wherever good choral singing is appreciated.

TO SOLVE THE SERVANT-GIRL PROBLEM

A Novel Experiment in Philadelphia

A CLASS AT WORK IN THE PHILADELPHIA COOKING SCHOOL

Science in the Kitchen Demonstrated

IN one of the busiest streets of Philadelphia, there stands a substantial stone building, where recently a school or "college," bearing the somewhat imposing title of the "Pennsylvania Institute of Domestic Science," has been established. According to the plans of the president of the Institute, Rev. L. Jordon, a brighter day is about to dawn for the overworked housekeeper and homemaker, who has vainly sought for a helper, and only found a hindrance in the everyday routine of household duties.

If this college of training will really train young women in the underlying principles of good housekeeping, it will indeed be a boon, not only to the mistress, but to the maid, who, many times, is well-tentioned enough, but whose ignorance results in her having troubles of her own, only second to those her incapability inflict upon her mistress.

A number of young colored girls from various parts of the country are enrolled as students, and the building, it is said, has already proven too small for the number of women who wish to enroll in the classes. A tour over the different departments of the school disclosed different classes in as many departments of household work, clothing, laundry work, and general housekeeping.

In one class-room, a colored expert in the culinary art was explaining to a class of earnest-looking girls the mysteries of cooking. The lecturer informed the students that it was taken for granted that every girl could scramble eggs or broil a steak to order. But this seems to be only the A B C of the art of cooking, in the estimation of the lecturers at this school. It was explained that graduates from this novel institution would be expected to cook any French dish required by an exacting mistress; to know the names of the various dishes in English and in French; to understand the art of dressing a dish to suit the palate of the fastidious; and last, but by no means least, know how to keep her kitchen domain in apple-pie order. Diplomas are to be given by the college, but no diploma will be forthcoming until the student has thoroughly mastered the mysteries of the culinary art, so that a future employer will have only to give orders for the service of a banquet, and not be forced to superintend and assist in preparing the same. One cannot help thinking that a good, every-day all-around housekeeper, who can make good bread, and is perfectly sound on the despised scrambled eggs and broiled steak question, might be in greater demand by overworked housekeepers than one with the ability to serve a banquet in several foreign languages.

While the lecture was in progress in the cooking-class, another lecturer was teaching the art of laundering. On the floor above, classes were in session in millinery, dress-making, domestic economy and servant-girl etiquette. The last two are additions to the curriculum, which were found necessary because of the inexperience of some who presented themselves for admission to the classes. "Domestic economy" means that the girls are taught just how to shop, so that the employer may leave in the hands of the cook, if she prefers, the ordering of the innumerable things required for the kitchen. "Servant-girl etiquette" is the art of knowing how to behave in the position the girl hopes to fill. How to open a door for a caller, how to receive visiting cards, and what to do with them, how to approach a mistress, how to wait at table, and how to act in any duty that the girl might be called upon to perform.

President Jordon hopes to establish similar schools importance of right conduct, chaste language and pure thinking."

H. D. JONES.

EXTERIOR VIEW OF THE INSTITUTE

REAL REFORM IN SACRED SONG

Why Not a Uniform Hymnal of the Best Tunes for General Use in all Christian Churches?

Editor of "The Christian Herald":—I have read with much interest the articles in reply to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's timely call for "Reform in Sacred Song," and with our consent, as Elihu said to Job: "I also will show mine opinion." For over half a century, it was my lot to have charge of some choir, and have been familiar with the compositions of Thomas Hastings, Lowell Mason, W. B. Bradbury, L. O. Emerson, and others, and also the music prevalent in Continental days. In all their works there was what is known as standard music of famous composers of the long ago, now almost eliminated, to give place to so-called classic music by modern writers.

The best way to create a reform in church music would be for Protestant churches to sacrifice their sectarian prejudices enough to unite in publishing a Hymnal for universal use in all of the said churches, with no indication, on cover or title page, of its design for use in any particular sectarian church. All Christian worshippers would find the same hymnal wherever they attended service. This would be a first step towards a permanent "Reform in Sacred Song." The next one, and perhaps the most difficult, would be the appointing of a competent committee from all Protestant churches, composed of spiritual and devout Christians, to glean from all collections purely devotional music, such as even common people could appreciate, and delight to hear, and to unite in singing. Such a book should not be so large as to demand a price exceeding one dollar, and should not contain over five or six hundred hymns and tunes, which will provide for over three services every Sabbath in the year without repetition. Over half of the music and hymns now published are unused, and in large proportion are worthless as vehicles for song service. Devotional melody should, as far as consistent with correct harmony, enter into each part. It is an incompetent composer who so arranges his harmony as to confine melody to one part only, or to exclude entirely from either. Merely chromatic reveries of organists should not be tolerated in Hymnals as hymn tunes. Harmony alone, void of melody, excites no devotional aspirations; on the contrary, it causes a sigh for relief which the last note will bring.

When all Christian denominations insist that their Hymnal services shall be of a purely devotional character, and every other kind is eliminated from their worship, the charge of deterioration will become obsolete. Music may be devotional, and still be joyous, and not necessarily sedate or solemn. Can any one sing, "Dundee" to that marvelously devout hymn, "God moves in a mysterious way," without being moved to tears, or "When all thy mercies, O my God," to "Mear," without spiritual profit, or "Coronation" to "All hail the power of Jesus name," and not enter into the full ecstasy of ideal praise?

In closing, allow me to mention an instance of glaring non-adaptation of music to words, to which I listened, while attending Sunday morning service in a city of over 200,000 population, in one of its largest churches, a few years ago. The preacher gave out the hymn, "Broad is the road that leads to death," the precursor of the large choir selected "Duke Street" to sing it to. At the close of the service they sang Ken's Doxology to "Windham!" After all, similar idiosyncrasies can be found in nearly all our Hymnals.

LYONS, N. Y.

JAMES B. SYKES.

[Our correspondent's suggestion for a uniform Hymnal for general use is a striking one, and we would be pleased to hear from all lovers of good church music on the subject. At present the number of Hymnals is legion, and the percentage of actually available tunes in each is usually small—not one-half and frequently not one-fourth of the whole. Let us hear what the music lovers and our readers generally think of Mr. Sykes' suggestion. We invite every reader to express an opinion on the suggestion for a Union Hymnal, and at the same time to send us the names of the twelve hymns which he or she thinks should certainly be included in such a Hymnal.]

Like Meeting an Old Friend

Dear Editor:—Many thanks for the Pilgrim's Progress, which I duly received in perfect condition. It was like meeting an old friend in a new dress, which carried me back to the days of my youth, about seventy years ago. I have now grandchildren who will enjoy the reading of it. Its workmanship makes it a "thing of beauty, and a joy forever," enclosing, as it were, "a fountain sealed, and a spring shut up," which is opened by the key of experience in the lives of many Christian pilgrims.

St. Catharines, Ont., Can.

THOS. BOICE.

Chicago Fire Victims Buried

ACCORDING to the burial permits issued by the Chicago Health Department, 556 victims of the fatal Iroquois Theatre fire have been buried. The Coroner's figures show that only nine remained unburied, while all but four were identified. There is a difference between the police and Coroner's records, however. An official count of the dead in the various morgues, made shortly after the fire, by the police, showed that 582 bodies had been found. Others who died from injuries received in the conflagration, were added to this number, bringing the total dead on the police list up to 591. When this last count was announced, there were still four bodies unclaimed. Two persons were missing, no trace whatsoever having been found of them in the ruins of the burned theatre.

Never in its history has Chicago had so sad a New Year's as when 1904 dawned upon the sorrowing city. It was the first day of the funerals, and it seemed as if the last sad offices for the dead were taking place on every block, so numerous were the undertakers' wagons and hearses. Sad processions moved through the snow-covered streets from homes and morgues to the cemeteries. At some of the morgues, the ghastly rows of dead were still being inspected by crowds of persons, who had come in the hope of being able to identify lost friends or relatives.

The funerals of the first few days of 1904 taxed the capacity of the undertakers and liverymen to its utmost, Sunday, January 3, being the heaviest of all.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

Our Mission to Macedonia

FEW causes in recent years have taken a stronger hold upon the hearts of God's people throughout the civilized world than that of the suffering Macedonians. Oppressed by sword and torch, driven by scores of thousands from their peaceful homes to the mountains and forests, their dwellings laid in ashes, their farms and gardens ruined, and their cattle and goods plundered, those Macedonians have appealed to the sympathy of Christians everywhere, for assistance in their sad condition. It is estimated that in Macedonia proper there are at the present time over 150,000 destitute and helpless, facing wintry perils, while on the Bulgarian border a great mass of fugitives is huddled, in a similar desperate condition. Thousands have fallen in the recent massacres by the Turks, and now cold and hunger will claim their victims in still larger numbers, unless the humanity of the Christian world reaches out quickly to the rescue.

Our own circle of loyal CHRISTIAN HERALD workers, who in past years did such splendid service in the great famines in India, China and Armenia, and during the memorable periods of suffering in Cuba, Russia and Finland, are now reaching out hands of help to Macedonia. Devoted American missionaries and native Christian pastors in the field are even now using the gifts contributed through this journal, to save the lives of thousands of the fugitives. With a generous and united effort, we may be the means of accomplishing as grand a work for Christ and humanity in Macedonia as in any land where a similar work has been undertaken. Divine blessing always rests upon such an enterprise. It is the simplest, the most elementary, the most Christ-like form of service, and it is one of the richest in results. Such efforts bring a shower of blessing to all who have a share in them.

In order that our readers may be fully and authoritatively informed of the actual state of affairs in Macedonia, and of the use that is being made of their gifts to that afflicted people, the proprietor of this journal has commissioned the Rev. Marco N. Popoff, a native Evangelical pastor, now in the United States, to go to Macedonia and make the fullest investigation of conditions there, and especially as to the progress of the relief work. Mr. Popoff is a minister of leading position and influence in his own land, and is, besides, thoroughly familiar with all the centres of suffering, and personally acquainted with the missionaries and native Christian pastors and workers, from Monastir to the Bulgarian border. His letters from the field, supplemented by those of the band of workers—American, English and native—with whom he will be officially related, will appear from week to week in these pages, and we believe will be found of absorbing and universal interest.

We bespeak for our Commissioner the prayers of all who are in sympathy with this beautiful work of benevolence, that he may be shielded in peril and enabled to carry comfort and consolation and life-giving cheer and sustenance to multitudes of the suffering. We bespeak for him also, the most cordial and generous support in his task. It is an opportunity for signal service in which we wish all to have a part. Macedonia needs your gifts. Consecrate them with prayer and send them, now, that the harvest of blessing may be abundant.

You can save at least one precious life. If every reader of this journal were to undertake the feeding and sheltering of one Macedonian man, woman or child, and sent his gift quickly, the suffering would be ended in a single month!

That would indeed be a magnificent record of Christian service, and one wholly without a parallel.

Not Mercy Only, But Justice

IN one of the galleries of Paris there is a striking picture, the moral of which is irresistible. The prominent figure is that of Justice; a female form seated on her throne, a radiant star upon her brow, a sword in one hand, and the other holding her symbolic scales, and resting on the head of a huge lion, that, with keenest vigilance, keeps watch at the side of his mistress. Over this portion of the picture is an air of severity and firmness, softened by celestial benignity. In the foreground is a husbandman, in the softest sleep of night; the unharnessed plough at his side. Upon his breast reposes the head of his wife, and in her arms lies their slumbering infant, while one hand of the mother, in unconscious security, rests upon the knee of enthroned Justice.

A great truth is admirably illustrated by the artist—security, peace and happiness, found beneath the protection of law administered with mingled firmness, might and benevolence.

We are prone to associate only stern and unlovely qualities with law and justice. We say, "If you would win men to God, talk of his mercy, not of his justice." But we are wrong. If we would only talk truth, and the whole truth of God's justice, that too, would be seen to be worthy of adoration and praise, and would fill every honest heart with joy. For then it would appear that when Jesus Christ comes to a sinful man, bringing the gift of life in that hand which bears the print of the nail, and proclaims all that is good and gracious with that voice whose death-sign convulsed the earth, his coming thus gives no more satisfaction to the mercy than it does to the justice of God. "If we confess our sins, he is" not only "faithful," but "just, to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

The Servant Question Once More

A READER, writing to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is of the opinion that the names "servant," "hired girl" and "domestic" are alike and equally opprobrious epithets in the ears of women who do housework for wages. It is difficult to understand the pronounced aversion of sensible girls to this rating of their occupation, as if they agree to work anywhere at anything at a weekly stipend, they are hired. So is the pastor of a church; so are the salespeople in a store; so is the cashier of a bank, and the passenger agent of a railroad. There is surely no disgrace in being hired, or working for a salary. Employers, let it be said, do not strenuously insist on these names, and our Marys, Maggies and Annies, if they do our washing, ironing and cooking, are highly-prized members of the family, and may dictate their own terms.

The gist of the matter possibly is that in a free country and among unthinking persons, there is a demand for social equality. The hired girl wishes to eat with the family, and to sit with them when her work is done. In lonely places, where she has no friends near, and can have no company running in to enliven her evenings, this does not seem an altogether unreasonable demand. A mistress who can secure assistance on no other terms, generally concedes this point, and the maid has her place at the table, below the salt, just as in old feudal days all retainers ate at the master's board. A maid quietly seated in the family living-room on a cold night, when the kitchen would seem especially lonesome, would do nobody harm, might herself receive benefit, and would do her work no worse the next day. Town life implies different conditions, and most cooks and housemaids prefer their individual table and their evenings by themselves.

Until we learn to mingle human charity and loving kindness with our intercourse, this servant question will continue to crop up, a hard and vexatious problem. Love, that settles most things, can settle this too, if it be given a fair field.

Our Commissioner's Parting Words

The following letter speaks for itself:

NEW YORK, January 9, 1904.

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Before leaving this country after my brief stay in New York, I wish to thank you personally, as well as on behalf of the 275,000 Macedonian sufferers, for taking up the cause of these unfortunate people.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has always been, more than any other agency, the means of aiding suffering humanity. I trust that by my going among these sufferers, I may be useful in sustaining the interest in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's Macedonian relief work.

Very sincerely yours,

M. N. POPOFF,

"Christian Herald" Special Commissioner to Macedonia.

OUR PREMIUM ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE following are the Premium propositions in connection with annual subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for this season.

1. The Red Letter Bible, Authorized Version, in large clear print, with all the words spoken by our Lord, and every reference made by Him to the Old Testament, printed in Red, and every Messianic Prophecy emphasized by a Red Star, with Helps and Maps, bound in American Levant Overlapping Edges, Lined to Edge, Red under Gold, and patented Movable Book-mark, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $3.

★ ★ ★ ★

2. The International Teachers' Bible, in Long Prime type, with Helps and Maps, Leather Lined, Red under Gold, Thumb Indexed, Revised or Authorized Version (when ordering state which), with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $3.

★ ★ ★ ★

3. The International Teachers' Bible, same as No. 2 but without Leather Lining or Thumb Index, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $2.

★ ★ ★ ★

4. The Red Letter New Testament, with all the words spoken by our Lord printed in Red, beautifully bound in Divinity Circuit, soft and flexible, Overlapping Edges Red under Gold, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, for $1.85.

★ ★ ★ ★

5. The Crown Encyclopedia, five substantial volumes 3,008 pages, large type, 500 illustrations, 96 Colored Maps—everything up to November, 1903—bound in Vellum de Luxe cloth, with genuine Gold Stamp (will never tarnish) boxed and delivered, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $3. For Half Leather Binding, send $1 extra.

★ ★ ★ ★

6. How I Worked My Way Around the World, by Harry Steele Morrison, 408 large pages, when open 9 x 15 inches, Beautifully Illustrated, richly Bound in Cloth with Emblematic Stamp, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD one year, at $2.

★ ★ ★ ★

7. Pilgrim's Progress, by John Bunyan, Red Line Edition, splendid for presentation, Profusely Illustrated, Superbly Bound and exquisitely printed in two colors, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $2.

★ ★ ★ ★

8. The Speaking Oak, by Dr. F. C. Iglehart, containing 301 Tales of Life, Love and Achievement, same size as Nos. 6 and 7 (30,000 copies already sold), Elegantly Bound, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, $2.

★ ★ ★ ★

9. Magazine Combinations—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with any one of the following dollar magazines at $2; with any two at $2.50, and with any three at $3. Look over the list, and make your choice: Harper's Bazar, Leslie's Popular Monthly, Pearson's, Success, Cosmopolitan, Woman's Home Companion, Little Folks, Watchword and Truth, Record of Christian Work, or Current Anecdotes, for Pastors.

★ ★ ★ ★

EXTRA copies of the Red Letter Bible, $2; of the Leather-Lined International Bibles, $2; of the Red Letter New Testament, $1; of Pilgrim's Progress, or How I Worked My Way Around the World, or The Speaking Oak, $1 each. Extra magazines, 50 cents each.

A subscriber may take as many premiums, whether books or magazines, as he pleases.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may be sent to one address, and each premium or magazine to a different address, without extra charge. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and magazines, if sent to a foreign country require extra postage.

★ ★ ★ ★

All premiums are sent all charges prepaid. Our beautiful 15-color Butterfly Calendar for 1904 and 1905 goes free with every subscription. Address today THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Wintry Scenes

ARCTIC weather, of which the whole country has been having an experience, is, it appears, prevalent in other lands. In the ancient Russian city of Moscow, the cold has been so bitter and so long-continued, that wealthy nobles have had fires kindled in the squares of the city and at the corners of the streets, so that pedestrians who have no warm palaces or a refuge, may enjoy a little warmth as they go on their way. In Germany, also, the cold has been very severe. It is not, as our illustration shows, allowed to be any excuse for the relaxation of discipline. On Christmas eve, intense as was the freezing temperature, the usual prayers were offered at the assembling of the guard at the Emperor's palace, and the helmets were duly taken off, according to regulation. In New York, for the first time in nearly thirty years, the thermometer on January 5 registered four degrees below zero. The poor suffered terribly. Motormen, and the drivers of wagons had a painful experience. One man died on his wagon from exposure, and two others perished on the sidewalk. Many others had hands and ears frostbitten. In other parts of New York State there were records unprecedented in the memory of the citizens. At Lyons Falls the mercury fell to fifty-seven below zero, and at one of the lumber camps at Mount Marcy it fell to sixty below. Happily, the duration of the snap was short. After three days a slight relief came and continued. But for a time there were many who felt as did the Psalmist when he wrote:

He casteth forth his ice like morsels: who can stand before His cold? (Psalm 147: 17).

Four Inches of Land Sold

One of the most curious real estate transactions on record in New York City, was made last week. It was the sale of a strip of land, four inches in width, on the West side of Seventh Avenue, near Fiftieth street. The entire block, fifty years ago, formed part of a farm which had been for several generations the property of a well-known Dutch family. When the value of the Longacre district became valuable for building sites, the family cut up the farm into sections, and sold them to various purchasers. As the city grew, the centre moved further uptown, until the old farm occupied a position of vantage of fabulous value. Handsome business edifices and fine residences in the neighborhood rendered the land every year more desirable. In making the surveys for recent operations, it was discovered that a mistake had been made in the original deeds. A small strip of land, having a frontage of four inches on the avenue, and extending westward ninety feet, had not been sold to the purchasers of the lots north and south of it. It has now been sold, and though the price paid for it has not been disclosed, it is said to have realized a sum which would originally have sufficed to buy the entire farm a century ago. Little did the owner of it at that time, imagine what would be the value of that small strip now. Nor, is it likely that it concerns him, even if he knows. Of infinitely greater importance to him, is it if he has an inheritance in the heavenly kingdom, which now is by many so lightly esteemed, but which, too, will be appreciated in eternity.

An inheritance incorruptible, and undecaying, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you (I. Peter 1: 4).

Lost in the Woods

Two men had a painful experience recently in the North Woods, near Utica, N. Y. They had been employed in the Michigan Mills, twelve miles distant. As the trails were covered by heavy snowdrifts, they could not take the usual route, so they obtained snow-shoes to make their way through the woods. It was easier walking there, but the short winter's day closed upon them, while they were still among the trees. They then realized that they must have lost their bearings. They were very tired, but knowing the danger of sitting down to rest, they kept on their dreary tramp. All night long, they plodded on, without emerging from the woods. The sun rose the following morning, and still, no matter which way they looked, nothing was visible but the trees and the snow-covered ground. They tried, what they supposed to be a new path, but again night fell, and found them still in the woods. The weaker of them declared he could walk no longer, and flung himself down on the snow, but his companion aroused him, and by sheer violence, compelled him to trudge on. The morning light showed them curling smoke, and, making their way toward it, they came upon a habitation, where they were sheltered and fed, after being nearly fifty hours lost in the woods. The perseverance of the men is amazing; but they knew the danger of resting and sleeping in their circumstances. Their lives depended on continued exertion and watchfulness. How many professing Christians might be saved from falling if they were similarly vigilant in time of danger! All have need to offer the prayer of the Psalmist, lest deadly temptation come upon them unawares:

PEASANTS AROUND STREET BONFIRES IN MOSCOW

EVENING PRAYER OF THE IMPERIAL GUARD AT BERLIN, ON CHRISTMAS EVE

Lighten my eyes lest I sleep the sleep of death (Psalm 13: 3).

Identified by a Child

A lady in Germantown, Pa., was rescued from an embarrassing position recently by the fortunate presence of one of her children. Her husband, who is a traveling man, before leaving on a journey, gave her a check for household expenses during his absence. As he had before always given her currency, she had not had occasion to go to his bank. Accompanied by her little daughter, she went to the paying teller's window and presented the check. To her astonishment, the teller declined to pay it. He admitted that there were plenty of funds in the account on which it was drawn, but it was a rule of the bank never to cash a check for a stranger. She indignantly told him she was not a stranger but the wife of the drawer of the check. That might be, he said, but he did not know her, and therefore could not pay. She argued with him for some time, but without avail, and was leaving the bank very much crestfallen, when her child made some remark to her, addressing her as "Mamma." The teller looked closely at the child, and then said he would honor the check. Asked why he had changed his mind, he answered, "I have known the signer of the check for many years, and that little lady is so like him, that I am sure her mamma is his wife." So the check was duly honored. What a blessing it would be, if the Christian so clearly bore the likeness of his heavenly Father, that he would at once be recognized by his character and conduct. Such likeness is possible to all.

We all with unveiled face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image (II. Cor. 3:18, R.V.).

Stopping a Runaway Engine

An engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad describes an exciting adventure he has had in West Virginia. He was waiting at Grafton to take the express to Wheeling as usual, when word came that his services were needed for another duty. A locomotive unattached, had been side-tracked at Newburg, ten miles below Grafton, to allow the express to pass, and the engineer and fireman had left it to get their dinner. It was an engine of the high-wheeled kind, and had a high pressure of steam on. In some way not explained, but probably due to some lover of mischief, the throttle was opened and the engine glided out on to the main track. There its speed increased. The superintendent telegraphed to Grafton, where he knew there were engines, to clear the track ahead and head off the runaway. The engineer was ordered to go on before it at high speed and allow it to run into his engine. The duty of slowing down and waiting for the impact of that flying locomotive with no one in control of it made him nervous. Twice the runaway came near, but its speed was so high that a collision would have been disastrous. The engineer shot ahead again until he had accommodated his speed to that of his pursuer. Then he made a slight reduction, and soon with a gentle bump, the runaway struck his tender. Then he shut off steam entirely, and allowed the runaway to push his engine along. The new weight reduced the speed of the runaway until it was safe for the fireman to crawl to the pilot and along the running board to the cab and shut off the steam. The distance covered in that wild flight was more than twenty miles. It was a dangerous task, well performed. Who can tell what mischief that locomotive, being without anyone in control, might have done had it not been stopped? Would that there were some such means of stopping the mischief that is being done in society by men, who do not intend to do harm, but not being under divine control, do mischief heedlessly.

The way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. 10: 23).

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan's services at Norwich, Conn., have been largely attended. There was preaching afternoon and evening, and a decided movement was begun which promises to lead to great results.

Mr. Fred Weiss, writing to this journal from Tangier, Morocco, in acknowledgment of contributions forwarded to him for our readers, says that there are manifest tokens of a shower of blessing falling on that Mohammedan land. He is much encouraged.

It is gratifying to learn that the Young Men's Christian Association of Denver, Colo., has received the gift of a cottage for its health farm. The giver, who desires to be anonymous, is a lady, who was moved to the beneficence by reading an article which appeared in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The New York American on Christmas day, distributed presents among more than 100,000 poor and deserving in the Metropolis. It raised a Christmas Fund of over $11,000 by popular contributions. The distribution was made under the charge of a representative committee of citizens and through a number of societies and benevolent organizations, and every dollar brought joy and comfort to some poor tenement home.

CONGRESS HEARS MACEDONIA'S PLEA

A PROTEST AGAINST TURKISH CRUELTY — HOW THE RELIEF WORK GOES ON IN THE COLD WINTER

THAT the terrible suffering among the Christian people of Macedonia, as the result of Turkish oppression, is at last being understood by the people of this country, is evident from the fact that the case of Macedonia was lately a subject of discussion in a leading committee of the United States Senate. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations listened to an argument favoring the passage of resolutions, introduced by Senator Penrose, requesting the President "to use his good offices toward the reconvening of the representatives of the nations taking part in the Berlin Congress of 1878, in order to take measures to carry out the agreement then signed to protect the lives and property of Christians in the Ottoman Empire."

Though this does not touch the subject of the frightful suffering now prevailing in Macedonia and along the Bulgarian border, it strikes at the cause of that suffering, and puts the American people on record as the friend of the oppressed Macedonians. It is an implied rebuke to the powers of Europe, who have stood tamely by, while Turkey, cruel and arrogant, has violated all its pledges and even ruthlessly slaughtered its Christian subjects. Even if no action by this government should result from the Senate's proceedings, it will still be deserving of note that Macedonia has found powerful friends in this Western land, who sympathize with her misfortunes and will watch her future with intense interest.

Letters received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the week, record the progress of the relief work on the border and in the interior. Rev. James L. Barton, D.D., of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, writes:

"Rev. Mr. Bond (American missionary at Monastir), states that at the lowest estimate, 50,000 people in the Monastir vilayet alone have been rendered homeless, and a large number are without any means of subsistence for the winter. He has written repeatedly of the condition of the refugees coming in from the stricken districts . . . Of considerable numbers without sufficient clothing for the winter and entirely destitute of food. As near as I can estimate, there are probably 100,000 people in the Adrianople and Monastir provinces, who will need help to get through the winter and maintain life. Cattle have been destroyed to such an extent that, if crops are to be sown in the spring, money must be provided for the purchase of cattle with which to till the soil and of seed to plant . . . There is certainly need of a generous relief for these hundred thousand people, some of whom have fled over into Bulgaria, but many of whom remain in the districts where their homes formerly were, and who will be dependent for some months almost entirely upon charity. If THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could send $10,000 a month for the next four months, this, together with the help which will come from other sources, will fairly meet the needs."

Mrs. Z. D. Furnajeff, writing of the great needs of the refugees in and around the city of Samokov, says:

I am earnestly praying that God may bless your efforts, so that the hungry and suffering ones may bless God and home last fall, she feels sure that he also must have been killed like her brother.

I must say that if those who sympathetically contribute for the relief of these people could see what I have seen they would feel highly rewarded. I noticed the happy expression on the faces of the refugees who have received quilts and mattresses, which they needed so much for this cold weather. There is need of more, for a good many families of five, six, seven or eight persons have only one bed cover for all.

With some money received from England, twenty skin coats were made, and are to be given to the oldest men among the refugees. Oh, what a joy it will bring to them at this season!

The refugees are beginning to realize how much they have lost and how hard their lot is. Often you will see an old woman sitting down on the bare ground, despondent and sad almost crying; and when you ask her about the reason, she answers, "Oh, what shall I tell you first, when I have lost all! We had barns of corn and wheat, loads of potatoes—but now nothing!"

And yet the condition of those in Macedonia, whose houses have been burnt, is far worse. Oh, that the Christian people of America could realize at least a hundredth part of the sufferings of the Macedonians, then they will surely open their generous Christian hearts and give as unto the Lord, for these are God's children, his creatures, and whosoever gives to them in their dire distress, lendeth to the Lord.

Rev. Lewis Bond (American Missionary), writes from Monastir:

The records show that we have dealt out and sent off, 211,939 pounds of flour from our depot in Monastir, and 33,000 pounds of grain at Ochrida, Florina, Klissura and Kichevo. The blankets distributed number 2,316. We have given 399 thick padded jackets and 1,741 sets of underwear, and a modest amount of swaddling clothes. These figures embody an immense amount of comfort to the grateful recipients.

I am bound to say that the authorities treat all the relief agents remarkably well. Twice recently, Hilmi Pasha has sent a mounted gendarme for us at night to Ochrida, to carry medicines and money to Mrs. Brailsford.

From a photograph specially procured by Rev. Marco N. Popoff, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

MACEDONIAN REFUGEES CAMPING IN THE OPEN AIR NEAR DUBNITZKA

thank him for the Christian sympathy in these hard and trying times for them. Many of the refugees can do nothing but simply wait for help in some way. They come for their portion of food that is given them daily. There are now not less than 900 refugees in Samokov alone, many having gone in the villages around. The other day I went to see the refugees, and found a young girl crying alone in a corner. I thought she might be sick, but those around told me that she had just heard of her brother's untimely end, and not having heard anything of her father since their flight from

All contributions in aid of the Macedonian refugees should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

All contributions will be acknowledged in these columns and forwarded to the missionary workers in the field.

MANY WRITE OF ANSWERED PRAYERS

L. W. W., Broome County, N. Y. "God has answered so many of my prayers in the past that I will ever put my trust in him."

M. M. Kans. "I was in great trouble. The Lord heard and answered my prayer. Praise his holy name."

Reader, Butte, Mont. "I must praise God for answering many of my prayers in my past life. I have been praying for one object for six years, and my prayers have now been answered."

L. M., New York. "Two things I have been very anxious to overcome, but felt it was impossible to overcome them without God's help. I prayed that he would help me, and he has, and I am so thankful."

Reader, Lexington, Neb. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God. I prayed to him in times of trouble, and he has heard."

Mrs. C. E. P., Howard City, Mich. "I want to acknowledge an answer to prayer, when it seemed that nothing short of the miraculous could bring an answer. I cannot understand it. I only know that all things are possible with God. All glory to his name."

C. M. V., New York. "I want to acknowledge that God is a hearer and answerer of prayer. He has blessed me many times, for which I want to thank him."

Reader, Alexandria, Minn. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me, and his mercy, which has been exceeding great. In my long Christian experience he has answered my prayers times innumerable."

Believer, Belleville, Ill. "I have seen many who have had their prayers answered. I thank God for answering me when I called to him in my agony. He gives me strength to bear many troubles. He truly hears and answers prayer."

Reader, —, N. Y. "I prayed to God to save the life of a dear one, and she was spared. Glory be unto his name."

Reader, Michigantown, Ind. "I have recently received answers to prayer, and I wish to acknowledge it before the world."

M. B. O., Galt, Ontario, Can. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering prayers, especially lately, when in business difficulty. I thank him for his goodness and mercy."

Reader, Westfield, N. Y. "I wish to acknowledge the kindness of God to me. He has often answered my prayers."

A Mother, York, Neb. "I know it to be true, that God hears and answers prayers. During my late illness, I offered many prayers for myself and a dear one. These were answered, and many more before and since that time."

Reader, Montgomery, N. Y. "I wish to acknowledge the great kindness of God in answering prayers many times and in many ways."

Reader, Ohio. "I want to thank the Lord for marvelously answering prayer."

H. L. S., Jamestown, N. Y. "I wish to publicly acknowledge God's wonderful answer to prayer. I was in deep trouble and God has blessed and answered my humble petition."

Mrs. W. A. Y., Illinois. "I thank God for answered prayers. What a heavy load prayer lifts off our shoulders. Bless the Lord, oh my soul."

E. G., Athol, Mass. "I wish to acknowledge how the Lord has answered my prayer. If you are in trouble take it to the Lord in prayer."

W. F. R., Mobile, Ala. "The 'Answered Prayer' column I have great faith in. Reading it has brought me a great deal of help when in trouble. It has changed my views very much."

P. B., Salem, Oreg. "I want to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering prayer. He has answered many prayers for me, and I feel that I can never doubt him again."

Reader, —, N. Y. "My prayer has been answered. Many other prayers of mine have been answered by our loving Father."

Friend, Missouri. "I promised that if a special prayer was answered I would make public acknowledgment. Several times I have had direct answer to prayer, and I can say, 'The Lord is an ever present help in time of need.'"

M. K. H., Mich. "I was in deep trouble, and was helped and strengthened to pray through reading Answered Prayers. God has answered my prayers beyond my expectation. I am praising his holy name."

H. "When I prayed for a certain very dear one in Jesus' name, God heard and answered. He has answered many prayers of mine. I give him all the glory."

Subscriber, Princeton, Ill. "I praise God that he many times has answered my prayers when I have been in trouble. He is a faithful friend, and will always help us if we only trust him. Praise his name."

L. E. C., Hartford. "I want to praise the Lord, for many, many answers to prayers."

Reader, Wampaca, Wis. "I was in trouble and took it to the Lord. He heard and answered."

Jessie L. B., N. Y. "I feel constrained to publicly acknowledge that I called upon the Lord in distress; the Lord answered me, and set me in a large place. He has given wonderful answers to requests made during the year just closed."

Mrs. H. H. D., East Coventry, Vt. "I would acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering prayer when I was in trouble."

Believer, N. C. "I have offered prayers that were answered almost before I uttered the words. Now I am asking for an opportunity to train my children for God."

Z. H. C., Iola, Kans. "I promised the Lord if he would answer my prayer I would acknowledge it to the world. He has done so. Praise his name!"

A. B. U., Staten Island. "I want to praise God publicly for all he has done for us. He answers our prayers continually."

Philip L., Lebanon, Mo. "I desire to express my gratitude to God for answering my prayers. He does not always answer in our way, but always in his way."

C. K. G., Cataula, N. Y. "I have been helped very much by the Prayer Column. I know that God answers every sincere prayer. He has answered mine many times; and often, when sorely oppressed, I have had the assurance before the answer came. Within a few weeks, God has heard and blessed us in every way."

Mrs. L. R. M. "It fills my soul with delight to read the Answered Prayers. God has answered many prayers for me, and made me better reconciled to his will."

Mother, Salem, N. C. "I wish to express my thankfulness to God for answering my prayer."

Constant Reader, Huntersville, N. C. "I want to acknowledge a special answer to prayer. We were in great trouble and I took it to God. He heard and answered in a way little thought of. May we ever take our troubles to the Lord in prayer."

Reader, Illinois. "I have had many answers to prayers, and now I feel my Heavenly Father has again especially blessed me, and I want to praise Him for it."

Subscriber, Mich. "I want to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering many prayers. He will answer if we ask in faith."

More Entertaining than any Novel

How I Worked My Way Around the World came to me by express to-day. It is a delightful book, and I thank you for it. Nothing could suit me better, and it is more entertaining than any novel. I am reading it through, and all are pleased.

ELLA E. PARKER.
Santa Cruz, Calif.

The Old Homestead

HOW the memories gather round it, as the years go slipping by;
How we linger in the gloaming, as the shadows fall apace;
Thinking of the cloudless morning and of life's untroubled sky.

When the world's whole wealth was ours, in our childhood's dwelling-place.

There was mother, stepping briskly, with her face so full of cheer,

And her laugh, like bells of silver, and her look that shone with love;

There was father, strong and stalwart, gone from us this many a year;

Both those dear ones, waiting for us, in the house of God above.

Standing on a windy upland, how its lamp-light glimmered far,

When the home-returning children, sought it in their holidays;

Over in their thought, that home-light, beckoned like a steadfast star,

Guiding them, amid the pitfalls, of the great earth's devious ways.

Gathering around the mother, when the home was childhood's nest,

Were the golden heads of seven. Pattering feet ran o'er the floor;

Love and wisdom to the children freely gave, and they were blest

Who went forth to manhood's struggle, through the homestead's lowly door.

Scattered now, the band who, trooping, stormed the little district school;

East and West, and wide seas over, from the pine land to the palm,

Comes they've reared, that are repeating day by day the old home's rule;

Lifting by each family altar, clear and sweet, the homestead's psalm.

Therefore, praise we God the Father, God the Son, the Holy Ghost;

Three in One, with reverence humble, as befits us, lowly bent.

For the dear old homestead, beacon brave on life's tempestuous coast,

Where we learned life's truest lessons, and were sphered in life's content.

—MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Safety-Valve

"Why do you find fault so vehemently and make such a fuss about trifles?" said Nelly Murray, as she lifted amused eyes to her end, Rose Vincent. Rose had found a spot on the clean tablecloth, and had arraigned the children as severely as if the one who had dropped a tiny little bit of cranberry juice had broken the moral law.

"Why, oh! I don't know. I'm emotional, and scolding is my safety-valve. I should be frantic, if I hid my feelings under a crust of reserve as you do, Nelly."

"Reserve!"

"Well, then, restraint; I never learned it. I am a child of nature."

"I grew up among Friends, Rose, and was taught to think before I spoke; to be very gentle in manner, and keep my tones low. On the whole, I think it was good training. Isn't it better not to need a safety-valve? Your little Dorothy looked so frightened, when you said that she was driving you to your grave; but you never put on a clean tablecloth that somebody did not ruin it on purpose, and that you envied women who had no children to plague them."

"Did I say that?"

"Indeed, you did; and Dorothy and Helen were so sad-looking when they went to school. Such indiscriminate complaint of children, and such crossness; forgive me, dear, for trifles, disturbs their sense of values, and confuses them about right and wrong."

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend," said Rose. "I'll try not to need the escape-valve again, Nelly."

Anger Signals

Nature is not unkind. She faithfully hangs out her danger signals, but we do not always heed them, as we ought to do.

When you find sleepless nights becoming habitual, and awaken constantly unrefreshed in the morning, you are probably overtired, and should call a halt, or you are worried and must find a way out.

When you feel a dull pain in the small of the back or at the base of the brain, when you take cold easily, when you cannot digest your food, when a trifle fatigues you, note the danger signals. Slow up. Very many things that are wrong may be cured by

Timely Rest

We shall rest in our graves bye and bye. Why not stay here a while longer, and rest in our homes among our friends.

Don't Say You Have Not Time

You have all the time there is, and you simply do not know how to use it, what to leave out, what to postpone, what to let somebody else do. Heed nature's warning signals and you will live long in the land.

LEARNING TO KNIT

Some day yet, when little Mabel
Has grown old, and is not able
Any more to read or write;
She will sit in placid age,
Thinking of her life's long page,
Knitting in the candle-light.

This day, by her dear young mother,
Close by her own little brother,
Mabel learns this quiet art.
Days to come, this happy hour
Will be perfumed like a flower,
In sweet Mabel's loving heart.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

GRACE A. You must write more fully and trust me with your full name and address. Your letter is very vague. I will help you if I can.

Q. S. On the death of her elder sister, Miss Julia Brown becomes, socially, Miss Brown, and may thus have her visiting cards engraved.

HENRI. A good deal may be done to improve one's education by reading, and sometimes by associating with bright people. Do not avoid society because you feel unfit for it. Gradually you will become fit.

DOLLY. Young men like to be on a friendly footing in a pleasant home, but it is foolish to construe ordinary civilities into intimations of love. A man is not always ready for marriage, and if he has his way to make, it is hard for him to be shut out from girls' society on that account.

Company Coming

COMPANY coming! so we put the house into the most immaculate order. It will never do to let a bit of dust linger in a corner, or a cobweb hang from the dimmest nook, and as for the table, we must have clean table-cloth and napkins, the nicest food, the most inviting desert, and, of course, the very best glass and china we possess. The children, too, must be washed and scrubbed, especially the boys. Robbie's hands, that he insists are brown-colored by nature, must be inspected by his fastidious sister, and Nelly's curls must be freshly turned around sister's finger.

Company coming! The family squabbles must be hushed. It would never do to let the Browns, and the Jenkins imagine that we have "scraps" in this household; that Alicia is perverse, and Davie unreasonable, and Emily sometimes so depressed that her mood wraps a wet blanket over the whole forlorn group. However people may happen to feel, they must behave with decency when company is in the house.

Blessings on expected guests! They tone up the family; they oblige one to put the best foot forward—always a wholesome thing to do—they not only bring joy with them, but they compel us to take out of cold storage, and put in warm, commonplace use, the joy we are far too apt to forget we ever had. Into the sleepy current of our stream, flowing sluggishly onward, plunges the keel of company, and instantly the ripples wake and break and sparkle, the happy influence of fun darts an electric spark into our chill, and drives away our gloom. Forebodings fly, moping is a thing of the past. The very house knows there is company, and winks with cheery gladness.

Company is coming to-day! Dear people—grandparents who must be made very comfortable; Uncle Tom, whom the children adore; Aunt Sally, who is the pride of the clan; Dr. Wentworth, a former pastor, for whom nothing can be too good; Miss Elentree, a teacher of our youth, whose look will be a benediction. Company is coming! Perhaps, a bride and groom, alighting for a day on their wedding journey, like birds on a bough. Company! Theodore's chum at college; Inez, Mary's dearest girl friend. Whoever the guest may be, welcome him! welcome her! She does not arrive at an inopportune moment. He cannot but make the house gay.

Only—and this is important—when the company comes, it should sound a trumpet before it! Surprise-parties, even in open houses, may appear at an inconvenient hour.

Making a Man

Hurry the baby as fast as you can,
Hurry him, hurry him, make him a man.
Off with his baby clothes, get him in pants,
Feed him on brain foods and make him advance.
Hustle him soon as he is able to walk,
Into a grammar school; cram him with talk.
Fill his poor head full of figures and facts,
Keep on a-jumping them in till it cracks.
Once boys grew up at a rational rate,
Now we develop a man while you wait.
Rush him through college, compel him to grab
Of every known subject a dip and a dab.
Get him in business and after the cash,
All by the time he can grow a mustache.
Let him forget he was ever a boy,
Make gold his god, and its jingle his joy.
Keep him a-hustling and clear out of breath
Until he wins—nervous prostration and death.

The above bit of verse (from the New Orleans Picayune), has in its irony a touch of truth. We are in a terrible hurry to have our children grow up; to rush them into the thick of the world's hard fight; and here, in America, we do often make gold the child's god. Before the boy's eyes we hold the dollar as the sign of success. The one who makes dollars fastest and soonest accumulates a glittering pile, is the one he is taught to admire.

Let us turn back to Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and see how he depicts the man with the muck-rake, diligently gathering straws and rubbish, and with downcast eyes fixed on the dirt, indifferent to a heavenly crown. Some of us are bringing up our children for this.

Well Pleased with the Premiums

Dear "Christian Herald":—Your premium, Pilgrim's Progress, was received; also the Calendar, in good shape; and I am well pleased with them. MRS. W. MCLEAN. Drakestown, N. J.

Christ a Helper in All Callings *

Jesus Calls Four Disciples

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JAN. 31
LUKE 5: 1-11

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT--JOHN 8: 31:
IF YE CONTINUE IN MY WORD, THEN ARE YE MY DISCIPLES INDEED

THE Sea of Galilee is shaped somewhat like a harp, and so, in the picture language of the Hebrews, was called Chinnereth, a harp. Moses so spoke of it, as did Joshua also (Num. 34:11; Joshua 11:2, 12:3). The music of its waves against the sands of the shore, with their constant "chin, chin," is also beautifully embodied in the name. In the gentle wash, one may hear the andante movement; in the quickened action of the rising wind, the allegro; and, when the sea is lashed by the tempest, allegro con fuoco, followed by largo, the quiet after the storm. Ages long are those sonatas. And there have been symphonies as well, when the tones of human voices have blended with the liquid music. These were most sublime when the voice of Jesus Christ was heard across the waves of Chinnereth.

"WE HAVE TOILED ALL NIGHT AND TAKEN NOTHING."

Such a symphony we discover in the happenings of that May day when he appeared upon the shores of Chinnereth, shortly after he had been rejected in Nazareth. There was a chorus of many voices, all in sweet accord, in the crowd of people who gathered there, that they might hear him preach and see his miracles. Jesus entered Peter's and Andrew's small fishing boat, and asked Peter to push out from the land. We seem to see the face of Jesus, as we sometimes see a human face carved upon a harp,

As he sat within the boat,
On the silver wave afloat,
While he taught the waiting people on the land.

The harp-like sea had never before such a frame as the eager multitude made upon the shore. In tender and persuasive tones, Jesus seeks to convince the people that their "Redeemer liveth." And from them in heart throbs, comes back the response, "All we like sheep have gone astray."

And now the second part of the symphony proceeds: "Launch out into the deep," Jesus has said to Peter. The dash of waves against the moving boat is heard. "Let down your nets for a draught," is spoken in the silver tones of Jesus. The answer comes, in minor tones: "Master, we have toiled all night and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word, I will let down the net." Immediately the nets are filled with fish. "Come and help us, for we have caught more fish than we can care for," is the call sent across the waves by Peter and Andrew to James and John, who are on shore washing their nets. "Aye, aye," comes the answer. Again the sound of waves, for James and John are rowing to the assistance of Peter and Andrew. All together they haul in the great draught of fishes, and both boats are filled almost to sinking. The voice of praise is upon the sea harp. It is Peter praising Jesus for his wonderful power in bringing to the nets the fish which they had sought all night in vain. The voice of Jesus responds in assuring, earnest tones: "Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men." And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all and followed him.

The symphony is finished, but the echoes will never die away. They resound to us from the heavenly shore, for multitudes have been gathered there through the fishing of men, to which Jesus began to call disciples on that day.

Illustration and Application

The help of Christ is essential to true success alike in our daily toil and in our religious work—that is the one great message of this lesson. Two other important teachings are: the simplicity of a Christian life's beginning, as shown by the words, "Follow Me"; and the value of consecrated tact in soul-winnings, as suggested by the words, "fishers of men."

Even in their daily toil in catching fish, Peter and Andrew and James and John were more successful when they had the presence and guidance of Christ than before. The miracle is also a parable of what happens daily in the history of business. Gamblers sometimes win large sums, but seldom keep them. Burglars make great hauls, but sooner or later lose both money and liberty. The big houses in our cities are mostly those of honest, and largely of Christian men. Again and again, the first hundred men in wealth have been polled in such cities as Springfield, Mass.; Columbus, Ohio; Cleveland, Chicago, and the like, and seventy per cent. or more have been found to be members of the churches. It is well known that the total abstainer has now the preference when there are several applicants for a job, whether in mechanics or in management. A suspicion of gambling or immorality mars a business man's credit. Membership in the church is not often cited in the commercial agency reports, but the habits that go with a real Christian life are those most desired by employers and creditors alike. The paupers who have toiled a lifetime and have "nothing" to show for it are seldom, if ever, those who have cast their nets under the direction of Christ; but the full nets are given to the obedient as often as it is safe to do it. If goodness were any more generally prosperous, it would be in danger of transformation into selfishness.

There is an important suggestion for the rich and honored, in the fact that the full net did not make Peter the more proud but the more humble. "Depart from me," he exclaimed, "for I am a sinful man." He recognized that his abundance was God's gift and undeserved. But many a soul has been tangled in a full net and lost. Three Chinamen returning from America, each with a small fortune, had gotten as far as the harbor of Yokohama in their homebound voyage. Of course they carried their money, as they always persist in doing, in silver dollars. Now, the rule of the company is that all money and valuables should be put in care of the captain. But these men were so suspicious of that they preferred to carry and hide it themselves. A whole heap of silver must have been in their quarters. In Yokohama harbor their ship caught on fire, and they returned to their cabins, or wherever they were sleeping, to try and save their fortune. It took so long to tie up their money-bags and dispose them safely in their big sleeves and about their waists, that their boat was burned before they could get into it. They flung themselves overboard, and had every chance of escape. But—the silver in their sleeves weighed them down too much. It literally drowned them, for each poor fellow was carrying on his body several pounds' weight in silver coin!

It is a darker tragedy when the love of money sinks the soul, drowns affection and honor, and all that is best and noblest in character, making a wreck for both worlds.

"HE WAS ASTONISHED AT THE DRAUGHT OF FISHES WHICH THEY HAD TAKEN"

But, on the other hand, what success for both worlds has come to those who have received their full nets as from the Lord, and used them in fulfilling the supreme commands that bid us love and serve God and our fellow-men!

We shall be so kind in the afterwhile,
But what have we been to-day?
We shall bring to each lonely life a smile,
But what have we brought to-day?
We shall give to truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungering souls of earth;
But whom have we fed to-day?

NIXON WATERMAN.

Strange that it should be necessary to urge also that Christ's help is essential to success in religious work. The emphasis is on the first three words, "I will make you fishers of men." A full net is not ground for pride, but only for gratitude. It is those who have most of the Spirit of Christ who turn to him for guidance in casting the net, who obey him even against hope, that are the most successful soul-winners. And we must add to piety such tact as the first disciples learned at their fishing. As one author writes:

"The Sea of Tiberias was no mean college for those who should afterwards become well entitled to the degree, Fishes of Men. Peter and John and others of the apostles learned much while engaged with their boats and nets, and may we be called graduates of Galilee College. Patience is inwrought into the nature of the successful fisher; great perseverance and adroit skill must be his. Much self-denial has also to be practised, and he must endure hardships. Are these qualifications any less essential to-day than in the apostolic age, we would fill the gospel net? Assuredly not! No wonder so many ministers like fishing. Fishing is akin to the minister's calling. The taking of fish is a type of his great life work. He might as truthfully say, 'I go a fishing,' when he enters the pulpit or makes a pastoral call, as when, on a time bent, he throws a fly and watches the float. A story often told of an amateur who fished from the banks of a Scottish river. With the finest of paraphernalia he caught no fish. His guide, meanwhile, with an old rod that had neither style nor ornament, and with string and bent pin caught plenty of fish. The secret of the difference being asked, the guide said he always hid behind a tree and kept himself out of sight."

If Christians are "fishers of men," what is the sea? The world. And what is their boat? The Church. And who are the fish? Our fellow-men. On the coast of England the fisherfolks have a phrase for their best fishermen, of whom they say they are "keen for the nets." They watch the buoys, by whose motion the coming of a school of fish is proclaimed, and seize the moment to pull in a full net.

Keen for the nets let us ever be,
For they that are wise shall win.

For those not already disciples of Christ, the most important words in this lesson are: "Follow me." That is a creed in two letters to start with. To be a Christian, is to be Christlike, in spirit, in word, in deed. The Golden Text means: "Ye are my disciples indeed," when you are disciples in deed. First of all, must come the definite decision of the will, the forsaking all that Christ bids us give up, as the first firm step in following him as our Lord and Master.

The Rev. F. W. Murray tells us that Ole Bull, the great violinist, was one day seen standing at the end of a point, looking at the rocks that ran far out into the sea, playing upon his violin. When he was asked what he was doing, his answer was that he was listening to the music of the breaking waves, that he might reproduce it on his violin. To catch the grand bass of the waves, it was necessary for him to listen as they broke upon the rocks. He was then able, through his violin, to make his audience hear the surf beating on the shore, and see through the inner eye the white capped waters.

So let us stand on the shores of Chinnereth and catch the music of the life that Christ lives upon its waves on shores, that we may ourselves repeat its harmonies, its notes of sympathy and of triumph, our own lives. One of the bright stories of Margaret Gatty, tells of a schoolboy who had high reputation as a mimic. It seemed as though he could be just like anyone whom he pleased to imitate. But a wiser friend asked him to show how the handsome boy in the school looked, and how the speaker declaimed. Then, as the young mimic found himself quite incompetent to do this, he realized that his power of imitation lay in the direction of lowering his own standard, and of mimicking defects which had never yet become his own. With the aid of the Holy Spirit we may imitate the best, even the Christ, who calls us to this ideal, the words that commend us, no less than the fishermen of old. "Follow me."

"Continue in my Word," says the Golden Text. The persistency is harder than decision. A small boy sat quietly in a seat of the day coach on a train running between two western cities. It was a hot, dusty, day, very uncomfortable for traveling, and that particular ride is perhaps the most uninteresting day's journey in the whole land. But the little fellow sat patiently, watching the fields and fences hurry by, until an old lady, leaning forward, asked sympathetically, "Aren't you tired of the long ride, dear, and the dust, and the heat?" The lad looked up brightly, and replied with a smile [the application to the Christian's journey is manifest], "Ye ma'am, a little. But I don't mind it much, because my father is going to meet me when I get to the end of it."

Thousands Fed at the Bowery Mission

AN ARMY OF NEEDY ONES MADE HAPPY AT CHRISTMAS TIME

HERE never was such a Christmas at the Bowery Mission as that which has just past. CHRISTIAN HERALD readers responded generously to Dr. Klopsch's appeal, and thousands of homeless men, and thousands of cheerless children of the East Side have been made to feel something of the warmth and glow of this happy and festive time.

The principal difficulty realized was the inadequacy of even the large Mission hall to accommodate the huge crowds that eagerly sought admission. Guided by previous experience, and with a view to distributing the good things provided by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers as widely as possible, it was decided to extend the festival over the whole of the Christmas week, beginning Christmas eve and ending with the Watch-night service on December 31. By this arrangement, it was possible to give over ten thousand meals to destitute men.

The celebrations commenced even sooner than has just been indicated, by the preaching of a sermon by the Superintendent, Mr. Hallimond, on the Sunday morning previous. In the course of that sermon Mr. Hallimond sought to impress upon the large congregation of men, the fact that in the coming Christmas festivities, CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, all over the country, would actively participate. Some of his words will no doubt interest those who subscribed so generously to the Christmas Dinner Funds: "Surely," he said, "there is not a place on the face of the earth where we are more appropriately fitted and qualified for celebrating Christmas than at the Bowery Mission. The Mission is an denominational institution. Christmas seems to me to be the time when all denominational jangles should cease. There is nothing that causes me greater personal delight than to feel that as I get more and more interested in the work down here, I am coming more and more to forget the denomination to which I belong. Indeed, I am coming more and more to believe that the upholding of these denominational lines of demarcation is sin against God and treachery to Jesus Christ. I am so glad, that because our hands are so full of the work of snatching men as they are from the everlasting burning, we have no time to stop to emphasize any such non-essential things as canonicals, or rubrics, or vestments, or baptisteries. Thank God, at Christmas time we all seem to be willing to forget these irritating lines of demarcation, and the Methodist trumpet, and the Baptist horn, and the Episcopalian trombone, and the Salvation Army drum, are all tuned to one key, and are gathered into one great united orchestra, breaking out in one crashing chorus, 'Glory to God in the highest.' In connection with the Bowery Mission, I want to point out to you men the association of this institution with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I want you to observe the significance of that fact. I suppose it is the most widely read undenominational newspaper in the world. The editor and proprietor of that paper is one of our fellow workers. He is president of the Bowery Mission, he is personally responsible for its finances. Dr. Klopsch is universally recognized as the exponent of the Christian humanitarianism which is included in this Christmas message, 'Peace on earth and good-will toward men.' He has personally initiated and superintended some of the greatest international charities the world has ever seen. In the United States, in times of great distress and calamity, the Galveston flood; in Russia, Armenia, India, Cuba, Porto Rico, Norway, Sweden, Poland, China, and in other regions, he has millions of starving human creatures, 'good-will toward men.' At the present time he is supporting and educating on his own personal responsibility, between five and six thousand orphans in India. Because of his philanthropic work he was personally honored with an official appointment by President McKinley in 1898; and he was received in personal audience by the present Emperor and Empress of Russia; by Queen Alexandra of England; by the King of Denmark; by the King and Queen of Sweden; and this same man, Louis Klopsch, is one of our fellow-workers of the Rescue League of the Bowery Mission. A man who will come down into our midst here this Christmas, and sing with us, 'Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good-will toward men.'"

The annual Christmas dinner was given to one thousand men on Christmas eve, and in the course of the evening a splendid sermon was preached by the Rev. J. H. Elliot, D.D. Immediately after the service, willing hands were busily employed decorating the tree for the following day's entertainment. The thirty happy men engaged in this undertaking, had no sooner finished their work than it was time to open the doors for the early Christmas morning breakfast at 3 A.M. It was a terrible night to spend in the streets. A drenching downpour of rain, and a cold, cutting wind, lashed those poor shivering forms. But there they were in a long line, stretching a quarter of a mile away from the Mission doors. How eagerly they stream into the light and warmth of the Mission! How delicious the smell and the taste of hot coffee seemed to them! How some of them tore at the rolls! Between 3 and 8 A.M., 5,000 breakfasts were given.

At nine o'clock came the distribution of baskets of uncooked dinners to poor families. Then, despite the wet and cold, hundreds, then thousands of children began to gather for the Christmas tree entertainment. The crowd became at last so great that a brigade of several police officers, and about twenty mission workers, with the utmost difficulty averted panic and loss of life. When as many children were gathered inside as crowded the hall to suffocation, there were thousands of disappointed little ones left, with tearful eyes, "outside the gate." The fortunate ones had had a long wait, some of them were very tired and hungry, they were all uncomfortably squeezed, but they enjoyed themselves, and each one at the end, received from the capacious tree a bag of candy, an orange, and, according to age, a toy, book, or game—so they went away very grateful and very happy.

Then, as had been arranged, every evening during Christmas week luncheon was given to the men, the hall being crowded to its utmost capacity on each occasion. A short and interesting service preceded the luncheon.

The Watch-night service was one which will be long remembered. It was under the leadership of Mrs. Bird. Just before the old year passed away, the Mission Quartette sang most impressively, "Where will you spend eternity?" In response to the invitation, fifty-two men declared their intention, by God's help, to start out upon the New Year as Christian disciples.

The Dance—the Church's Enemy

Editor of "The Christian Herald":—In the HERALD of Dec. 23, I saw a letter published from Rev. L. D. Ewing, of Bunce-ton, Mo., referring to your article, called "Warfare on the Dance." I should like to submit to you the result of dancing as it has come under my observation. In 1890, a number of young people met at our church parsonage and organized a Y. P. S. C. E. That society was the means of uplifting the religious sentiment of the whole community. In 1898, nearly all of the older members had been replaced by younger ones, but still the influential power was as great as ever. Our church membership was being rapidly advanced; but Satan found a weak point. A Quadrille Club was formed in our community, and gradually the church society members were drawn into the vortex. The society declined and died. The younger ones of the church followed the example set before them. Our church officers are becoming discouraged, and our Sunday School is dying for want of efficient teachers. Many of the society members have sincerely repented, but the broad way of sin is still open, and the rush downward still continues. One of the charter members of the society says that since she has danced, she has never enjoyed the spiritual life which she had when she was wholly devoted to His service. The dance has been the means in our community of immorality, backsliding and indifference to all things Christlike. Must all our young people be sacrificed? What shall our harvest be? A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORER.

Bloomington, N. Y.

Within Reach.

Because of its low price Ivory Soap is within the reach of all. Besides its low cost it has the advantage that it will do the work of half a dozen kinds of soap each intended for a special purpose. Its purity fits it for use where the ordinary soaps are unsafe.

Ivory Soap

99⁴⁴/₁₀₀ Per Cent. Pure.

"To Err is Human"— Not to Err—Elgin.

The man who is always right on time is the man who carries the

ELGIN WATCH

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to that you can add to your income by reading, proof or corresponding for the press? It will pay you to write us for more information on either subject, unless you are satisfied with your present salary.

ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

Do You Know

The opportunities are many and you can succeed, because our instruction is thorough, personal and founded on practical experience.

If you prefer to write advertisements teach you that also, HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Philadelphia, Pa.

One Hundred Dollars For Your Church

Ten or more ladies can easily earn One Hundred Dollars for their church between now and Feb. 1st, 1904, by doing a little personal work for us. As this offer will be made to only one church in each town, we suggest that you be the first to write for particulars.

THE ANTHONY MFG. CO., Ltd., 25 Jefferson Ave. Battle Creek, Mich.

Mail Orders Exclusively. No Branches or Agents.

Spring Suits

$8 TO $50

Made to Order in One Week

We Guarantee to Fit You

Our New Spring Catalogue, now ready, illustrates over 100 of the newest styles for ladies' suits and skirts, suitable for every occasion, and we carry in stock over 400 of the latest materials from which you may select.

Catalogue and Samples FREE

Remember, we keep nothing ready-made, but make every garment TO ORDER.

The coming season will show unusual changes in styles, and never have more attractive fabrics been offered, many of them being entirely new in weave and pattern. The most beautiful garments for church, visiting and traveling have been designed for our customers; our styles, being exclusive, are shown by no other house.

The newest Spring fabrics include beautiful mixture effects quite unlike those worn last season, new Avellan weaves ideal for suits, costumes and skirts, mohairs and brilliantines in entirely new patterns and effects.

We have a splendid line of very light weight fabrics particularly adapted for our Southern patrons, and also a choice assortment of materials suitable for those of our customers residing in cooler climates. We do not carry wash goods.

YOUR MONEY REFUNDED IF WE FAIL TO SATISFY YOU

Our Spring Catalogue illustrates:

Tailored Suits, - - - - -	$ 8 to $50
Handsome Skirts, - - - - -	$ 4 to $20
Etamine Costumes, - - - - -	$10 to $40
Mohair and Brilliantine Suits, - - - - -	$ 8 to $40
Mohair Skirts, - - - - -	$ 4 to $15
Spring Jackets, - - - - -	$ 7 to $30

Walking Suits and Skirts, Rainy-Day Suits, Rain Coats, Traveling Dresses, etc.

We prepare Express Charges to any part of the United States.

Our Catalogue contains explicit directions for taking measurements correctly.

We guarantee to fit and please you. If we do not, return the garment promptly and we will refund your money.

Catalogue and a large assortment of samples will be sent free to any part of the United States. Ask for New Spring Catalogue No. 50 S. In requesting samples mention about the color you desire and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.
Established 15 years.

The long looked for Hymn Book
... JUST ISSUED ...

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

By GEORGE C. STEBBINS

For use in Evangelistic and Church Services, Conventions, Sunday Schools, and all Prayer and Social Meetings of the Church and Home.

It contains a very large number of most useful and singable sacred songs, both new and old, among which are

MANY of the favorite "Gospel Hymns" and "Sacred Songs."

MANY NEW SONGS soon to become FAVORITES.

MANY Church Hymns and Tunes, new and old, from the best American and English composers.

MANY pieces especially useful for Evangelistic and Convention Choirs, Solo, Duet and Quartet purposes.

Substantially Bound in Cloth, $25.00 per 100. 5c. each per copy extra by mail.

Before deciding on the new hymn book for your church you had better see

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

A returnable copy for examination sent free to any earnest inquirer.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
New York - - - - - Chicago

SUN

INCANDESCENT
HYDRO-CARBON LAMP

100 CANDLE POWER

Costs $\frac{1}{8}$ as much as kerosene

Indispensable to surgeons, dentists, oculists, artists, students, physicians, authors—all who require soft, mellow light, strong and restful to the eyes. Makes its own gas. No dirt, grease, odor or bother. Safe as a candle.

The "Sun" outshines them all

Conforms to insurance underwriters' rules. Branch supply depots in all larger cities. Liberal commission. Agents write quick for catalog.

Sun Vapor Light Co.
Box 700 Canton, Ohio.
Licensee of the ground patents for Vapor Lamps

THE NARROW GATE

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "IN HIS STEPS"

CHAPTER XI.—Continued.

"Of course, I do not need to tell you, Mr. Douglas," the President spoke with dignity, "that I understand, perhaps as well as you do, the aggregate loss to the people, due to the drink habit. When you, and others like you, propose, however, that the annual message contain what would practically amount to an indictment of a business sanctioned by the majority of the States, and recognized as one of the large sources of international revenue for the government itself, you propose a step which is not as simple and easy as it appears."

"Mr. President," Douglas said after a pause, during which there was the most undisguised expression of astonishment on every face at the table, over the course this conversation had taken, "May I ask a question?"

"As many as you like. That is what I wanted to see you about."

"Does the annual message reflect the President's own opinion as to what ought to be done by the Congress, or is it the expression of his feeling for the opinions of the people, and the Republic's needs, as he believes the people represent those needs?"

"Both," answered the President, promptly.

"Then you, Mr. President, in your capacity as head of this Republic, would be acting fully within your privilege, if you should suggest in your message to the Congress, measures, which in your opinion, will remove evils that threaten the State, even if those evils are established in the social and financial life of the State."

"Undoubtedly, there are no restrictions on the President's utterances in the message. He is perfectly free to express, what, in his opinion, is good for the Republic."

"Then I do not need to say, Mr. President, that no one better than yourself, could possibly appreciate the unmeasured help it would give to what is called the Temperance Cause, not only here but all over Christendom, if, in a document like your annual message, you voiced the sentiments of millions of Christian people in a Christian land, and declared, even in a few sentences, the necessity of the Congress taking some action, looking toward the extinction of a business, which, after centuries of trial, has proved itself by the consensus of civilization, to be a financial, physical and moral curse to the world. Even if you did not suggest any measures that the Congress might take, the mere fact of your calling attention to this world-evil, would be enough in itself to put enthusiasm and inspiration and good cheer, into the hearts of millions who have been fighting this wrong for ages, and who are waiting now for just such an utterance as you, of all men, are pre-eminently fitted to make."

"I think you exaggerate the effect of such an utterance," the President said, briefly.

"Pardon me, Mr. President," replied Douglas, firmly; "I cannot think I over-estimate the effect such a statement in the message will make on the people at large. And you must know, Mr. President, that the people at large are with you. May I, as one of the people, venture to say it?"

The President smiled. Douglas' enthusiastic and at the same time self-contained rugged frankness evidently pleased him.

"I am glad to hear you say so, Mr. Douglas. I am not one of those men who affect to despise the good will of the people. If you are a sample of the people generally, all the better for them and for me."

He turned as suddenly from Douglas as he had turned towards him, and in a few minutes the talk was going in another direction. When the President rose at the conclusion of lunch, the guests all stood waiting for him to pass out. He nodded pleasantly to them, and said simply "Good day, gentlemen. I have enjoyed the hour with you." He paused by Douglas a moment, and said in his clear, frank manner, entirely removed from any air of secrecy or confidence, "I shall give this matter careful thought, Mr. Douglas."

Douglas hesitated a moment, then said quickly:

"Mr. President, how much of what has been said on the subject am I at liberty to make public?"

"As much as you please," replied the President, briefly, and with a peculiar smile on his face he went out of the room.

Douglas turned to the other guests, and saw reflected in their faces something of the feeling of astonishment in his own. It was significant of the character of the men who had that day tasted the frank hospitality of the Chief Executive that not one of them ever spoke a word in public concerning the conversation at the table. When Douglas reached home he told his wife in detail all his experience. But he did not mention in the Beacon even his hopes of future action by the President. The Washington papers reported what was heard in the waiting-room when the President bounded in and asked to see Douglas, but the reports failed to give more than a burlesque of the facts. One New York paper actually headed its account with the caption, "Prohibition crank among the visitors to the White House. The President flatters him by asking him to lunch. Wholesale brewers need not worry."

Douglas read this as he looked over his exchanges, and smiled grimly as he thought the time might come when the wholesale brewers might worry if the man who sat in the White House ever did that which Douglas now prayed every day of his life he would do, for the sake of the people, for the sake of the Republic.

Coming back to his work after that memorable Washington experience, Douglas faced a new situation in Anderson county. The county-attorney, who was a great lover of outdoor sports, had been suddenly killed while on a hunting trip, by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a companion. The Governor had, according to the State law, appointed an officer to fill out the unexpired term. This newly-appointed attorney was a notorious lawyer, who had been attorney in several liquor cases for the jointists and gamblers. His appointment to the position of county-attorney was an outrage on the people and the amendment, and Douglas vigorously said so in the Beacon. The Sentinel stood up for the Governor's appointment, and rejoiced at the sensible method that the new county-attorney proposed of letting the joints alone, provided they paid a regular fine every month. The jointists themselves perfectly understood their man, and opened up without any pretense at concealment, and Jake Lawson put in a three-hundred dollar bar, with plate-glass mirrors and all the trimmings to match. In less than a month Colby was running with six wide-open joints and an avowed policy, so far as the officers were concerned, of monthly fines, which the jointists cheerfully paid out of a revenue from the drinkers in the town and county, who walked in and out of the joints with the same absence of secrecy they had once practised in their patronage of the licensed saloon.

All this filled Douglas and Mr. Edwards, and every temperance man and woman in Anderson county, with deep indignation.

Douglas held a consultation with the Committee of Fifty. The week following, with three of the best known men in Colby, he visited every joint in town and procured evidence. Under a FLEISHER'S YARNS are made from selected wools, carefully spun, and have an even, lofty, elastic thread. Dyed in a full line of beautiful shades which can always be matched.

An article knitted or crocheted of Fleisher's Yarns will always hold its shape and yet be soft and elastic. Every skein of the genuine bears the trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted, German Zephyr, Dresden Saxony, Spanish, Shetland Floss, Ice Wool, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual mailed for four tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making the above garment and various kinds of sweaters and vests, as well as all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER, Inc.,
Department "B,"
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

5%

ON SUMS OF $50, UPWARD

THIS is not a company of financial "magicians" retaining the lion's share of profits, but one in which small borrowers and small lenders are mutually interested. Let us send you full information with testimonials of patrons—business and professional men, clergymen, etc.—who have invested through the company for the past five to ten years.

5 per cent. per annum—quarterly, by check. Withdrawal at your pleasure, and full earnings paid to them from the day your funds were received.

Assets, $1,700,000
Surplus & Profits $175,000

Under New York Banking Department Supervision.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.,
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Write for Our Book—

"How to Beautify Home Surroundings"

Full of invaluable information on floral culture and Landscape Gardening. On years of experience at your service free. If your home be small and modest make its surroundings charming and attractive; or, if you possess spacious grounds have them tastefully planned, making them artistic and a delight to culture tastes. This book is fully illustrated and is free. Write for it now.

WAGNER PARK CONSERVATORIES
Dept. 31, Sidney, Ohio

The Stillwell INCANDESCENT GAS BURNER

Makes your store or home as light as day—the most perfect artificial light. Powerful, brilliant and white. Steadiest light known, not excepting electricity. Very economical—fewer lights necessary. AGENTS wanted in every gas town. Big Money! Every burner so sells many more. Write at once for territory.

THE STILLWELL LIGHT CO., Inc.,
328-325 S. Lawrence St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM
PAGE 58

When legislative enactment it was not required to purchase any liquor to secure evidence to convict. The fact of liquor being drunk on the premises, of saloon apparatus, beer pumps, and so forth, was sufficient.

When Douglas and his three companions entered Jake's place it was full of men. At first Lawson did not notice them. In a few moments, however, he saw Douglas, who was standing near one of the bar, and he came over and spoke to him.

"What'll you have, gents?" he said, addressing Douglas's friends.

Douglas looked at Lawson, but did not say a word. The three other men were so silent, and all four men continued to take notes, using pencils and note-books freely.

"It's the first time you've been into my place since the good old days," Jake said, speaking directly to Douglas. "It's an unexpected pleasure, won't you and your friends take something?"

Still neither Douglas nor the others uttered a word. Jake Lawson grew furious. He changed his sneer to a threat.

"Clear out, unless you want something! Get out of my premises!"

Douglas and his friends slowly went away in silence. Jake was uneasy, but boasted that night that no one could get him out. "Precious lot of good their evidence will do. We're solid with the county-attorney. He'll see that we're not disturbed."

But neither Jake Lawson nor any of the other jointists, who were all visited by Douglas and his delegation, were prepared for the next move of the Colby temperance people. The delegation, after securing all the evidence necessary to convict, brought an overwhelming quantity to the county-attorney. He received the committee with promises to act, but did nothing. At the end of a week, Douglas went to see him again. This time he flew into a passion, and called Douglas names for interfering with his business.

But we have simply brought you the evidence in these cases, as the law distinctly allows. If you refuse to act on the information, Mr. county-attorney, you are liable to impeachment for not keeping your oath of office."

The attorney started up, and with an ordered Douglas out of his office. Douglas, who was accompanied by the men who had secured the evidence, and the infuriated officer calmly.

"I give you warning," he said, "if you do not take action on the information I'll with your office against the joints in MS. Boy, we shall take steps to have you reached."

MS. Boy, the attorney retorted with another remark, telling Douglas again to mind his business. Douglas at once reported to the Committee of Fifty, and proceedings were begun in the Supreme Court against the county-attorney of Anderson county for cause.

That officer waked up when it was too late and used every influence he possessed to escape conviction. But the Supreme Court happened to be made up of a majority of temperance men, and the case against the attorney was formidable. The witnesses were unimpeachable, the evidence was plain, and could not be denied. All the guilty officer could do to do was to delay the decision indefinitely or else escape on some technical error.

Meanwhile, pending a hearing before the court, the whirligig of politics was again bringing new factors into the play of forces around Colby. Another State election made possible the nomination of a new county-attorney. This time all the temperance forces had united on a man, without any question, was heart and soul for the enforcement of the law. And this with a great degree of satisfaction, in the same issue of the Beacon which announced the opening of the case in the Supreme Court against the officer who had been arraigned, Douglas also penned his editorial endorsing the new candidate for county-attorney "who, if elected, as every man in Anderson county knows, will do justice to the fullest degree, so far as the enforcement of this law is concerned."

Two months later, after all the delays of an ingenious criminal lawyer could procure, the Supreme Court found the county-attorney guilty, and he was ousted from the office and compelled to pay a fine of five hundred dollars. The decision created a sensation all over the State. According to the law, the deposed officer was debarred from holding office in the State thereafter. Temperance people in other counties where the law was being defied, took courage, and in several instances took steps to bring their faithless, perjured officials to justice.

Two months after this important decision, the election gave to Anderson county a county-attorney who enforced the law from the first day of his entrance into office. Most of the Colby jointists packed up their bars and moved out. Jake Lawson defiantly stayed on. He was arrested, and his fine bar destroyed. When he had served out his jail sentence, he opened up a joint again in one of Mayor Bartlett's buildings. The Committee of Fifty brought action against the Mayor, and, after an exciting trial, the Mayor was found guilty, and obliged to pay a fine of two hundred dollars. He escaped a jail sentence through the leniency of the district judge.

Douglas had been very active in this case. It was not a matter where he could keep still, and he had spoken out in the Beacon very plainly, urging that the law take its course with the Mayor, in spite of his social standing, his wealth, and so forth. There was no petty feeling of revenge or malice in all this. Douglas knew he was not acting from any such motive, and knew he would have done exactly the same, no matter who the offender might have been. Everybody else in Anderson county also gave the editor of the Beacon credit for absolutely sincere and patriotic motives.

The day after the Mayor had been convicted, Douglas was in the office going over some advertising contracts. He had been consulting with Quits about some details, and Quits had just stepped into the pressroom to get an old advertising card that Douglas wanted. Douglas had turned around in his office chair to get a paper from a file holder near the desk, when he heard a hasty step come into the office. He wheeled around in his chair to face Mayor Bartlett, who confronted him with a look of fury.

"I'll teach you to interfere with my business, you miserable sneak!" yelled the Mayor. "I'll give you the whipping of your life."

He had a short, heavy, black-snape whip in his hand, and as Douglas made no movement to get out of his chair, the Mayor yelled at him, "Get up, you coward, and take your punishment!" He stepped back and threw up the whip. But before Douglas could make any movement and before the whip descended, the Mayor was dragged backwards by Quits, who the next moment stepped around between him and the editor of the Beacon.

TO BE CONTINUED

Mellin's Food and Milk is an ideal combination and will nourish and strengthen your baby and make him grow.

We should like to send a sample of Mellin's Food free to your baby.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS

$100.00 IN PRIZES

While open to old and young, but especially with a view to interest those attending school, the Pittsburgh Bank for Savings, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has prepared a Pictorial Rebus, and offers One Hundred Dollars in prizes for its correct solution. Write the bank for a copy and try your skill. Some people will share in the $100.00—why not you?

The King of Entertainers The Entertainer of Kings is used by the King and Queen of England for their social entertainments and at home. It is also used for the royal pleasure of the Emperor and Empress of Germany. It is used and endorsed by artists like Jean de Reszke, Sara Bernhardt, Adelina Patti, and Coquelin, and the world's greatest singers have sung into it—for you to hear at your pleasure.

The Victor

The Victor is the world's greatest musical instrument because it includes all instruments, and all other sound, especially the human voice. The time when it was a mere experiment and novelty has long passed by.

Send 6 cents for new handsome Catalogue of Red Seal Records, with translation of the songs sung by Caruso, Tamarino, Calce, Plumeau, etc., etc.

For sale by 25,000 dealers.

The Victor is the Gram-O-phone—to which name we have exclusive right.

Victor Talking Machine Co. Philadelphia

The Inside of this Building in Ten Colors

32 Years' World's Headquarters for Everything.

showing the clerks at work, the goods, and, in fact, an interior sectional view of every floor of the tallest commercial building in the world. It makes a very attractive and interesting wall hanger, and is one of the most complex and complicated pieces of lithography ever attempted. If you want it send four two-cent stamps, about what it cost us to print. Ask for our ten-color Wall Hanger. If you want to save your dealer's profits on everything you eat, wear or use, send 15c for our 1128-page Wholesale Catalogue. Millions are saving 1/3 of their former expenses by trading direct with us. If you want both Wall Hanger and Catalogue enclose 20c.

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.
Michigan Ave. and Madison St., Chicago. 49

OIL-GAS—WONDERFUL NEW FUEL. $125 to $250 a Month and Expenses

Men and women, Salesmen, managers, general agents for wonderful new invention—Harrison's Blue Flame Wickless Oil-Gas Stoves, for cooking, baking, heating. Wonderful seller. Big profits. Generates oil-gas fuel from kerosene oil. Hottest blue flame gas fire. No wick. Cheapest fuel. Absolutely safe. Gasoline is dangerous. Catalogue FREE. Write for special offer and new plan.

WORLD MFG. CO.,
6577 WORLD BLDG., CINCINNATI, O.

AGENTS WANTED—Permanent and profitable employment can be found by reliable men and women willing to devote time and attention to selling our goods to the consumer. Cash commission paid. Established 1880. 600 Agents now at work. Great Eastern Coffee & Tea Co., St. Louis, Mo.

63 YEARS Uninterrupted Dividends Paid

On New York City Bank Stocks which I have for sale. Shrewd and conservative investors should put their money in securities of this kind rather than invest in new enterprises which experience has taught are shortlived.

The above stocks have paid dividends since 1840.

Send for Circular.

CLINTON GILBERT,
2 Wall St., N. Y.

20,000 Acres Land

in Marinette Co., Wis., the home of the Red Clover, Timothy, Potatoes and Dairying—every acre fit for farming. Adjacent lands are selling at $8 to $15 an acre for farms.

$100,000 Standing Timber

Fit for cordwood, posts and lumber—big market! A splendid opportunity for young men with capital to make $200,000 quickly.

Price 20,000 acres, $100,000. Long time on half at 4 per cent.

SALZER LUMBER CO. La Crosse, Wis.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

(TRADE MARK.) Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick room. Worn in rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of wool fabric, lined with soft white wool flannel. Sued in all sizes by dealers or by mail. Parker pays postage. Cash order.

H. Parker, Dept. K 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

90 Days' Trial

We sell more reliable merchandise by mail than any house in the world. Volume of sales regulates prices. No firm can undersell us on reliable goods; we refuse to handle the other kind.

Our Oakland Machine 8.25

Our Oakland Machine at $8.25 is warranted for 5 years and is the best machine on the market at the price.

At $12.75 our Amazon is as good as the regular $20 kind; is beyond comparison with other machines at this price.

12.75

For 14.50

our Brunswick Seven Drawer, High Arm, Ball Bearing, Drop Head Machine is a beauty, one that will do all kinds of work and can be depended upon. Price is much lower than any other firm asks for equal quality. Mounted on handsome Automatic Drop Desk Quartered Oak Cabinet like picture, only 16.95 of Sewing Machines containing our 90 days' free trial offer, sent on request. Write for it today.

Free Catalogue

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.

CHICAGO

X-RAY Stove Polish

Ask Dealer for it.

Is Guaranteed to go twice as far as paste or liquid polishes. X-RAY gives a quick, brilliant luster and does not burn off. Ask Stamp will bring a Sample from Lamont, Corliss & Co., Agents, 78 Hudson Street, New York City.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable. — Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemetery. Catalogue free.

KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO.,
445 North St.,
Kokomo, Indiana.

A GOOD POSITION

is always open for a competent man. His difficulty is to find it. We have openings for high-grade men in all capacities—Executive, Technical and Clerical paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. Write for plan and booklet.

HAPGOODS (Inc.),
Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York.

LYMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

MEN AND WOMEN OF MONEY

Write for my FREE BOOK about Missouri—her wealth, laws, and 5 per cent. Farm Mortgages—printed in colors—profusely illustrated. FREE.

WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 5 Wardell Bldg., MACON, MO.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years Largest Nursery.

FRUIT BOOK free. We PAY CASH WANT MORE SALESMEN STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; etc.

Are You Deaf?

We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING Sent on approval. Write for catalogue.

WM. V. WELLS & CO., 134 South 11th Street, Philadelphia

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS

Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Rm. Strainer, fits any pan. Agents make $8 to $5 dollars per day. Large catalogue new goods free.

RICHARDSON MFG. CO. DEPT. 6, BATH, N. Y.

TRAINING AN APOSTLE

How Peter Learned the Lesson of Christ

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

IT was after he had commenced his ministry of preaching the nearness of the expected Kingdom that, walking by the Sea of Galilee, Jesus saw the two brethren, whom he had previously known, "Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea; for they were fishers. And he saith unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left the nets and followed him" (Matt. 4: 18-20). Peter and Andrew were engaged washing their nets, but they had received the call to follow Jesus, and boats and nets and fishermen were at his disposal.

God was going to use Peter as a very special instrument. Apparently there were three renewals in his call. First by Andrew, who was soon outstripped by his zealous brother; then personally by the Lord Jesus (Matt. 4), when he and Andrew left their nets, and followed him; and a third time on this occasion, when he left all and followed Jesus. Has it not been so with many of us? Without any heart backsliding, has there not been a stopping where we were, a lack of going forward continually into a fuller death to self and a fuller life of God in us?

The Lord used Simon's boat before he used Simon himself; "He sat down and taught the people," and taught Simon too, and it was a joy to Simon that his boat might be used by such a person as he, whom he knew and acknowledged as the Messiah. But when he had finished speaking, the Lord turned round to Simon and said, "Launch out into the deep, and let down your net for a draught. And Simon, answering said, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing." Peter was a very energetic man. He was no doubt a good fisherman, and it must have been a matter of no small surprise when he found that, under the same conditions as previously, using the same means as before he became acquainted with Jesus of Nazareth, the energy and knowledge, the practice and experience, which had so long answered and so long distinguished him, now brought forth nothing but failure. Peter was despondent, humbled, and troubled. "We have toiled all night and taken nothing." O how many who have found the Messiah, who know his pardoning love, and are sure that their sins are pardoned, go through a similar experience! In their own hearts, in their family life, in their business, since they have known the Lord, all seems to go wrong. Have they, after all, made a mistake?

Peter continued: "Nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." Not so much with the hope of success, but because it was due from a disciple to his Master, and therefore the right thing. "When they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes, and their net brake." What could no longer be done by any power or wisdom of Peter's, was done by him under the power of the word of the Master. Far from toiling uselessly now, the net itself could not hold the multitude of fishes, and broke with the weight. Unable to cope with the unexpected haul, they beckoned to their partners which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink. The nets could not hold the fish, the boats could not carry it; and all was due to the word spoken by the Lord Jesus, and obeyed by his disciples!

A new light dawned on Peter. When I fail, my Lord succeeds. I am nothing; He is all. Peter did not always live in the light of this new revelation, but it was the foundation of his after confession: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. 16: 16). Have we learned this lesson? Have we found out that all we are, and very specially our strong points, our talents, and the natural advantages we have, are nothing but failure excepting they are under the control, and completely at the disposal of God, the Holy Spirit dwelling in us?

This lesson is not learned all at once; and Peter never fully learned it until he was filled with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost.

Christian Stewardship*

The Duty of Giving, as a Test of Character, to Which a Reward is Assured

WHEN a man is converted, the change that has taken place ought to reach his pocket. It is not so much the fact that money is needed for the Lord's work, although that is an important consideration, but that gifts, under ordinary circumstances, are an indication of the disposition. If the conversion is genuine, the convert will have an impulse to give. It is a way of showing his gratitude for the blessing he has received. It is all the better test, because it is made voluntary, under the Christian dispensation. The Jew was required to give one-tenth of his substance or of his income, and he must not give less. The Christian has far more reason for consecration than the Jew, and therefore he might well be expected to give more. It is not, however, by the amount given, that God estimates the gift. The millionaire's check for a thousand dollars may be of less value in God's sight, than one dollar given by a man who has to economize in order to give it. In all our conduct, motive counts. Christ's praise of the poor widow, who cast her two mites into the treasury, is an indication of the way in which all our gifts are regarded. No gift has value in God's sight when it is made to gain applause, or from any unworthy motive. Even when the gift is made, the spirit of the act is observed. "God loveth a cheerful giver." When it is made grudgingly, or as a painful or disagreeable duty, its value is impaired. It is character and character only that is considered.

It is remarkable how the promises to the liberal giver are fulfilled. He that distributes, increases. But he who distributes in order that he may increase, does not increase. Here, again, character enters into the question. God is not to be bribed to give prosperity. It is the giver who has no expectation of being rewarded, who gives out of the fulness of his heart, who is approved. Such a man proves that he is fit to be trusted with wealth, and God gives it to him. When riches increase, there is no fear of his setting his heart upon them. He regards himself as a steward, intrusted with money for the purpose of advancing Christ's Kingdom and relieving the needs of Christ's brethren and is blessed when he performs the duties of his stewardship.

Called Higher

Mrs. R. A. Strouse, of Upton, Wyo., passed away recently, in her seventy-third year. She was a consistent Christian since early girlhood, and has been a reader of this journal for many years.

Mrs. E. G. Shields, who passed away on June 16th last at Oakland, Cal., was born in Hamilton, Ohio, 1826, of godly parents. She was a mature Christian, and exemplified her Christianity by her daily walk and conversation. The beautiful Christian life which she lived is the richest inheritance a parent can leave her children. She loved to read her Bible and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mr. Gottlieb Wiedler, a leading German citizen of Chillicothe, O., and for many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, passed away recently. He was born in Thuringa, Switzerland, in 1833, and came to this country in 1852. After a time he embarked in business under the firm name of Wiedler & Klaus, in Chillicothe. He was a merchant of the "old school," and had a host of friends. In 1855 he was married to Katharine Neuffer, who survives him. Three children also survive. The deceased was an earnest church worker in the cause, and allied himself early with the German M. E. Church of Chillicothe, being superintendent of the Sunday School there for many years.

Aiding the Guiana Lepers

In a letter from Dutch Guiana, South America, Dr. H. T. Weiss writes, acknowledging receipt from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a check of $57.60, contributed by its readers for the benefit of the lepers at Dutch Guiana. He adds: "Every cent given for these poorest ones will bring a blessing back to you and to your readers."

"Held precious in the world's esteem"

For every growing and grown member of every family.

A refreshing food-drink more beneficial and delicious than tea or coffee.

Pure, rich milk and extract of malt grain in powder form. Instantly prepared by simply stirring in water.

Our Booklet tells of many other valuable uses. Mailed with sample Horlick's Malted Milk, free upon request.

At all Druggists. Ask for HORLICK'S; others are imitations. Horlick's Food Company, Racine, Wis. 34 Farrington Road, London Eng. 25 St. Peter St., Montreal, Can.

A Good Memory Saves Time and Money. Pelman's System of Memory Training

converts a treacherous memory into a reliable one. Gives mind control and mental poise. An easy, simple and scientific method of training. Original and of absorbing interest. Requires but a few minutes each day, and richly repays the time invested. No matter what your life work, the Pelman System will make you more successful. Mr. Pelman's pupils range in age from 18 to 85 years. Taught in six languages. FREE Mr. Pelman has published two books—"Memory Training: Its Laws and their Applications to Practical Life," and "The Natural Way to Learn a Language." Both books sent absolutely free, post paid. Write at once.

THE PELMAN SCHOOL OF MEMORY TRAINING, 1670 Masonic Temple, Chicago. LONDON, 4 Bloomsbury Street, W. C.; PARIS, Avenue de Neuilly 109; MUNICH, Mozartstr. 9; MELBOURNE, G. P. O. Box 402; DURBAN, Natal, Lynn Building to quickly introduce our New Easy-to-thread, Gold Eye Needles. Send us your name and address. We will send you 2 doz. packages of Needles and 1 doz. Silver Aluminum Thimbles, postpaid, with large premium list. You sell the Needles at 50c. each and to each person that buys 2 pkgs. you give a THIMBLE FREE. Your success is certain. Needles are sold, send us the $1.20 and we will send Premium you select and are entitled to. If you at once, we will give extra Present FREE. Add GLOBE NOVELTY CO., Box 561, Greenville,

We give 110 Premiums

FREE TO LADIES

Send address of three friends who wear corsets, a receive, absolutely free, our Boston Hygienic Lin for lengthening waist and holding skirt.

Boston Hygienic Corset Co., 14 Winter St., Boston, Ma

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed

NEWTON'S HEAVE COUGH TEMPER AND INDIGESTION EDY. A veterinary specific for throat and stomach troubles. 80c. BOTTLES 1.00 per doz. Des. Mail or Express paid. Newton Horse Remedy Co. Toledo, Ohio.

HEALTHY TREES

Free from disease. Honest in quality. Grafted Apples, Budded Peaches, 5c; Budded Cherries, 20c; good varieties. Concord Grapes, $3. per 100. 1000 Ash $1.20. B. and Locust, Rus. Mulberry, &c. Low price. We pay freight, C. alog free. Calbraith Nurseries, Box 82 Fairbury, N.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT? If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed. HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED. We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R-5, Lebanon, O.

Lamp-chimneys that break are not MACBETH'S.

If you use a wrong chimney, you lose a good deal of both light and comfort, and waste a dollar or two a year a lamp on chimneys.

Do you want the Index? Write me.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

Factory Price

Direct to You

We are the only general merchandise house which owns, controls and directly manages a vehicle factory. We build our vehicles from the ground up and know what's under the paint. We add but one small profit to the cost of material and labor, hence our customers are getting a better made job in a finer finish and at a lower price than can possibly be secured elsewhere.

$19.80

"LEADER" Road Wagon—Imitation leather trimmed; carpet, wrench and shafts; just as illustrated. Write for further description.

$25.50

"CHALLENGE" Buggy—24 in. body, cloth trimmed; top, back and side curtains, storm apron, carpet and shafts. Write for details.

We also have better grades up to the very best and most stylish that can possibly be put together.

VEHICLE CATALOGUE FREE. Send for it today. It will give particulars about the above work. It also illustrates and describes the newest and best line of Runabouts, Stanhopes, Buggies, Phaetons, Surreys, Carriages, Carts, Spring Wagons, etc., ever quoted direct to the buyer. It explains the difference between good and unreliable work—between the hand-painted and the dipped buggy—and also explains our Guarantee of Satisfaction and

30 Days' Trial Offer.

Send a postal today for our Vehicle Cat. No. E1.

Montgomery Ward & Co.

Chicago

A special circular quoting our entire line of Sleighs, Sleds, etc., will be sent at the same time, if you request it.

SPLIT HICKORY SPECIAL BUGGY

Built to your order and shipped right away on 30 Days' Free Trial with a two years' guarantee. Good as others ask $75.00 for.

Send for our FREE 136-page catalog of Split Hickory Vehicles and Harness. NOTE—We carry a full line of high grade Harness, sold direct to the user at wholesale prices. THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO., H. C. Phelps, President. 1626 Sixth Street, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Tricycles for Cripples

"Enable those helpless in lower limbs to go about with absolute ease and comfort. PROCEDED ENTIRELY BY HAND. Noiseless, light running. Strong, simple, safe. Our Illustrated Catalogue Free.

Shows many tricycles and invalid chairs specially designed for the comfort of cripples and invalids however afflicted. Address THE WORTHINGTON MFG. CO., Dept. A, Elyria, O. (Successors to Fay Tricycle and Invalid Chair Co.)

An X-Ray Machine for India.

MISS ALICE BYRAM CONDUCT, M.D., a medical missionary in India, has sent to the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the following letter:

JUBBULPORE, INDIA, }
M. E. MISSION, Dec. 4. }

Dear Dr. Klopsch:

We greatly need an X-ray machine for our medical mission work here. There is only one in all India, and it is in the hands of private parties in Calcutta. Our Medical School in Ludhiana, under the care of Dr. Edith Brown, has wanted to try what can be done for the sad cases of the lepers in India, by using the X-rays for that dread disease. My thought would be to use the machine one-half the year in the centre of India, and the other half in the north, at Ludhiana. Dr. William Morton, the greatest electrician in New York, I am sure will be most happy to tell you all about the machine he uses, which is the best. The cost he said to me was about $500.

Will not some of your readers see in this a wonderful opportunity to reach all the classes who stand in such dire need? The cases of cancer, of course, would come in for cure as well. The English surgeon here at Jubbulpore—who has charge of the English troops, as well as the population—recently told me that he would be glad to send me all cases that require the X-rays, and would work with me in the treatment.

A prime reason for having such a machine will be to call attention to the Gospel, and to reach many who have never heard of Christ. Hoping you will find it possible to add this to the many good works you are doing for this great land, I close. Americans are now supposed to be able to do for the world what no other people do, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made this impression more widely than any other society or humane company of workers in the Lord's great world.

Yours most truly for the Master,

ALICE B. CONDUCT.

Such a machine is unquestionably much needed in India, and, under divine blessing, might be made instrumental of great good in many cases of sickness, and of relieving much suffering. We commend Miss Conduct's suggestion to our benevolent readers, and invite them to co-operate with us in procuring an X-Ray machine. Here is a work of humanity and love, by which, without any great effort or sacrifice, much good may be accomplished. If there is no machine in all India available for the use of our American medical missionaries, let us unite for the purpose of sending them a machine forthwith.

Dr. Conduct's appeal should not go unanswered. She adds:

There is no X-Ray here as yet, and I believe it will cure leprosy, and Dr. Brown also thinks so, and if we had a machine we could use it for part of the year. It would be a most wonderful boom to our work, and bring the heathen to us in crowds.

Contributions will be received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the India X-Ray machine and duly acknowledged. Let us make haste and place this new means of usefulness in the missionaries' hands as quickly as possible.

The Octogenarian

Written on the eightieth birthday of Rev. Robert Collyer

I AM eighty years to-day—

So do men and tablets say—
But my soul cries in its strength,
Years are counted not by length,
But are numbered by the deeds
I've translated from my creeds;
By the thoughts I've tried to grasp
And give life to, in my clasp;
By the dreams I've realized,
By my words that men have prized;
By the visions I have seen,
Of the Holy and Unseen;
By the truths I preached of God,
To lift men above the sod;
By the hopes my heart have held,
So their fears would be dispelled;
By the light that I did shed,
So that they were comforted;
By the lips I've made to smile,
So the eyes were dried awhile;
By assurance I have given,
That on earth men may see heaven;
By my vows, that highest good
Lies in human brotherhood!
In these things alone I sav
Lies the measure of my day.

New York.

ANNETTE KOHN.

Delighted With It

I am delighted with the Butterfly Calendar and the book, How I Worked My Way Around the World. How can you afford such beautiful premiums? The book alone is worth double the amount paid.

MRS. M. F. WILLIAMS.

10 cents lets you in to the Banking references will be sent with pattern.

"Cravenette" RAIN COAT CLUB.

The Coat will cost you only $7.50. Made of genuine Cravenette goods with the Cravenette stamp on every yard.

We have organized a Cravenette Rain Coat Club, the sole purpose of which is to enable women all over the United States to secure for $7.50 the material for such a rain coat as the reliable stores sell ready made for $20.

By the Club plan we cut out all the middlemen and their profits. You deal direct with the manufacturers and get the cloth at the mill price.

The ten cents (in stamps) which you will send us is your initiation fee and something more, for, on its receipt, we will send you samples of this high-grade Cravenette (rainproof) cloth in different shades and a pattern for making the garment.

This pattern is designed by one of the most skillful garment designers in New York, with reference to its style and finish, as well as to its simplicity, so that any woman of ordinary intelligence in sewing will have no difficulty in making her coat at home. Such a pattern would cost from fifty cents to $1 if bought elsewhere.

When this pattern and the samples reach you and you have selected the shade you desire, remit to us $7.40 (the ten cents is a part of the final purchase price of $7.50). We will then forward to you 4 1/4 yards of the shade selected, sufficient to make the garment shown above, with the necessary buttons. Be sure and send your bust measure when writing.

This offer must be accepted within thirty days of the date of this paper, so that the output of the mill may be regulated to the demand for the goods. Write at once, enclosing ten cents and giving your bust measure.

The CRAVENETTE Rain Coat Club, 335 Broadway, New York.

FREE TRIPS

to the St. Louis

WORLD'S FAIR!

All Nations will be Represented

Better than a Trip Around the World

Our Plan is Unique:

We Will Pay Expenses of 3 People—7 Days

$100 in Cash Prizes also to be Divided among 3 People

You can win one of these Free Trips or a Cash Prize by selling OATINE, the wonderful new complexion beautifier. Our agents are earning $10 to $25 per week besides valuable premiums, and we are now going to give them IN ADDITION these unusual prize offers. WE TRUST YOU with an ample stock of Oatine and other toilet preparations. No money sent us till you sell the goods.

DON'T MISS YOUR OPPORTUNITY—Write today, enclosing 2c stamp to pay postage on Samples, Catalog of Premiums and Beauty Book.

THE OATINE CO., 2448 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Illinois

Try a Royal 30 Days Free.

We believe and claim that it's the best incubator ever made.

Try it 30 days, if you don't like it you needn't keep it. Absolutely self regulating. Send for trial order blank.

Incubator and Poultry Catalog free, with poultry paper one year ten cents.

Royal Incub. Co.,

Dept. 71, Des Moines, Ia.

NO GAS TO KILL

Very little lamp gas in an incubator egg chamber often kills every germ. No gas can possibly creep into the

SURE HATCH INCUBATOR

because it's heated by our rustless, heavy copper, hot water circulator. Don't waste money and lose good eggs experimenting with poor incubators. Send for free catalogue, B 14, and learn why the Sure Hatch hatches sure. Sure Hatch Incubator Co., Clay Center, Neb. and Indianapolis, Ind.

VIGOROUS CHICKS

are the results of Petaluma Incubators.

They maintain Nature's conditions. They have no accidents, make no failures. Catalogue free.

PETALUMA INCUBATOR COMPANY,

Box 64, Petaluma, Cal. Box 64, Indianapolis, Ind.

DON'T SET HENS

the same old way while a 200 Egg Natural Hen Incubator Costs But $4, other sizes equally as low. Over 125,000 in use. Indispensable to anyone who keeps a hen. Our latest perfected against infirmities. Agents wanted everywhere, either sex, no experience necessary. Catalogue to mail about and 25c Life Formula FREE if you write today.

NATURAL HEN INCUBATOR CO., E 84, Columbus, Nebraska

THE ORMAS

has become famous by its bathing qualities. Send for our new catalog and learn more reasons why.

Barber & Bros., Southern Agents, 216 20th St., Birmingham, Ala.

L. A. BANTA, Maker, Ligonier, Indiana

FREE We will consign goods free to be sold at Church Fairs, Charities, etc.

Address: RUCKSTUHL MFG. CO., St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATISM

Relieved

Through the Feet

The success of Magic Foot Drafts has been so great that the makers have decided to send them

FREE—On Approval

We want everyone who has rheumatism to send us his or her name. We will send by return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, the wonderful external relief which has brought more comfort into the United States than any internal remedy ever made. If they give relief, send us One Dollar; if not, send nothing.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn on the soles of the feet and relieve by absorbing all the poisonous acids in the blood through the large pores. They relieve rheumatism in every part of the body. It must be evident to you that we couldn't afford to send the drafts on approval if they didn't relieve. Write to-day to the Magic Foot Draft Co., R.A. 23 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair of drafts on approval. We send also a valuable illustrated book on Rheumatism.

Christians as Missionaries

The Duty of Every Saved Soul to Bear Testimony to Christ's Power

EARLY Christians were called to be witnesses. In parting with his followers, Jesus told them that his sufferings, and death, and resurrection were not accidents, but events that had been foreseen and predicted long before, and that he had undergone them for a definite purpose. It was that remission of sins on repentance should be preached among all nations. It was that they should see that the purpose was not defeated. If they remained silent, it had done would be vain. They were to make the proclamation, so that everywhere men might avail themselves of the boon won at so stupendous a cost. Since, necessarily, could not preach. In the land and time, no woman could do so many of the company were women. Perhaps Christ had that fact in mind when he characterized the kind of service to be rendered. He wanted witnesses to the truth of the facts. All could be witnesses and give testimony.

Probably among the first converts won by the company who heard the commission, and witnessed the ascension, there were many who were convinced by this testimony. These witnesses could declare that they had seen Jesus, had witnessed his miracles and heard his teaching, and that they personally knew that the facts were as the preachers stated. Most useful testimony that must have been. No one can give such testimony in these days, but the days of witnessing have not passed. It is possible now, for men and women to declare that they have personally experienced the saving power of Christ. If all who have felt it would do so, how many might be won.

This is true missionary work. There are heathen all around us; and there are still larger number who know the facts, but do not know the value of them. It is to Christ, that every one whom he has saved should give testimony to the peace and peace they have gained. They may be witnesses, howsoever obscure and unlettered they may be. The simple, unadorned evidence given on the witness-stand often has more weight with a jury than the speech of an eloquent counsel.

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and Baptist Young People's Union, for Jan. 31. Luke 24:49

EVERYTHING for the GARDEN

is the title of Our New Catalogue for 1904—the most superb and instructive horticultural publication of the day—190 pages—700 engravings—8 superb colored plates of vegetables and flowers.

To give this catalogue the largest possible distribution, we make the following liberal offer:

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash

To every one who will state where this advertisement was seen and who encloses Ten Cents (in stamps), we will mail the catalogue, and also send free of charge, our famous 50-Cent "Henderson" Collection of seeds, containing one packet each of Sweet Peas, Large Mixed Hybrids; Pansies, Giant Fancy Mixed; Asteri, Giant Victoria Mixed; Big Boston Lettuce; Early Ruby Tomato and Cardinal Radish in a coupon envelope, which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order of goods selected from catalogue to the amount of $1.00 and upward.

PETER HENDERSON & CO 35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK CITY.

10,000 Plants for 16c

More gardens and farms are planted to Salzer's Seeds than any other in America. There is reason for this. We own and operate over 300 acres for the production of our warranted seeds. In order to induce you to try them, we make you the following unprecedented offer:

For 16 Cents Postpaid

1000 Early, Medium and Late Cabbages, 2000 Delicious, Carrots, 2000 Blanching Celery, 2000 Rich Nutty Lettuce, 1000 Splendid Onions, 1000 Rare Lucious Radishes, 1000 Gloriously Brilliant Flowers.

Above seven packages contain sufficient seed to grow 10,000 plants, furnishing bushels of brilliant flowers and lots and lots of choice vegetables, together with our great catalogue, telling all about Flowers, Roses, Small Fruits, etc., all for 16c in stamps and this notice. Mammoth 140-page catalogue alone, 4c. JOHN A. SALZER SEED CO., La Crosse, Wis.

I SELL REAL ESTATE NO MATTER WHERE IT IS

Do you want to sell your real estate? Do you want to sell it quickly and with the least possible expense? Do you want to sell it at a reasonable price instead of each one a good portion of its value? Do you want to sell without publicity? If these are your wants, I can fill them. For eight years I have been filling these wants for people in every section of the country. The result is the largest real estate brokerage business in the world. I don't think that I have been fulfilling my claims and I don't think I can sell your property? Sit down right now, and send me a description of your property, including your lowest cash price. I will then tell you frankly just what I can do for you and how and why I can do it. It doesn't matter what kind of a property you have, where it is located, or what it is worth. Just send me a description, today. If you want to buy any kind of a property in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.

W. M. OSTRANDER,

SUITE 161, NORTH AMERICAN BLDG., PHILADELPHIA.

OUR SEEDS

Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Etc., have been the standard of excellence for half a century. We mail postpaid, Seeds, Plants, Roses, Bulbs, Vines, Small Trees, Etc., and guarantee safe arrival and satisfaction, larger by express or freight. Direct deal insures you the best and saves you money. Try us. Your address on a postal will bring you our elegant 168 page catalogue free. Correspondence solicited. 50 years, 44 greenhouses, 1000 acres.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO., Box 193, PAINESVILLE, OHIO.

The Strongest Fence Made

To sell direct to the farmer the strongest fence in the world, we must not only use the best HIGH CARBON SPRING STEEL WIRE, heavily galvanized, but we must build so that the greatest textile strength of material is maintained. Sixteen years, spent in perfecting Coiled Spring Fence, each year showing an added degree of perfection, has brought us to a point where we can proclaim with a confidence born of attainment that

OUR FENCE IS THE CHEAPEST AND BEST

Cheapest because the highest skill of the craft has been utilized to reduce the cost of manufacture, and this achievement, coupled with the largest output of the largest and best equipped plant in the United States devoted to fence manufacture, enables us to name you the VERY LOWEST PRICE AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT. Buy direct. We sell to you as cheap as dealers can buy. Put the dealer's profit in your own pocket. Examination permitted at your station; your money back if not as represented. Completion of sale rests wholly upon your judgment. Write us; we have something more to say to you. After correspondence is opened, you have your judgment to defend your interests at every advance of the deal. Our Catalogue is free, and is full of fence lore.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY, Winchester, Indiana, U. S. A.

Box 47

32 years ago we occupied one room with two clerks and published a catalogue a quarter the size of a hymn-book.

We Want You to Try Us

and test for yourself our ability to please you. Tell us what kind of goods you are interested in and we will send you without charge any of the following illustrated special catalogues quoting wholesale prices. Merely mention the number or letter of the catalogue you want.

- | | | | |
|---|---|---|--|
| 100 Artists' Supplies | 170 Kitchen Supplies | 235 Stoves | R Fancy Grade Furniture |
| 105 Athletic Goods | 175 Laces, Embroideries, Ribbons, Trimmings | 240 Toys, Dolls and Games | T Trunks |
| 110 Blacksmiths' and Machinists' Tools | 180 Lamps and Lanterns | 245 Underwear | U Youths' and Boy's Clothing |
| 115 Builders' Hardware and Supplies | 185 Linoleums, Carpets and Curtains | 250 Vehicles | V Men's Made-to-order Clothing with samples of fabrics. Suits $10.50 to $16.50 |
| 120 Carpenter and Builders' Tools and Materials | 190 Men's Hats and Gloves | 255 Wagonmakers' Supplies | V2 Same as V1 except suit prices $15.00 to $20.00 |
| 125 Crockery and Glassware | 195 Men's Shoes | 260 Watches and Clocks | VO Made-to-order Overcoats with samples |
| 130 Cutlery | 200 Men's Wearing Apparel | 265 Women's Shoes | W Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 135 Dry Goods | 205 Music and Musical Instruments | 300 Women's Catalogue (Cloaks, Furs, Suits, Skirts, Waists, Hats, etc.) | Maekintosh Catalogue |
| 140 Fancy and Novelty Goods | 210 Notions | B Bicycles | Butterick Fashion Catalogue |
| 145 Farm Implements | 215 Saddles and Saddle | C Baby Carriages | GL Grocery List (published every 60 days) |
| 150 Fishing tackle | 220 Silverware | D Dairy Supplies | |
| 155 Popular-priced Furniture | 225 Sporting Goods | G Drugs and Patent Medicines | |
| 160 Harness | 230 Stationary and Office Supplies | J Telephones and Electrical Goods | |
| 165 Jewelry | | K Cameras and Photo Supplies | |
| | | M Books | |

Cut this slip out and send it TODAY

Enclosed find 15 cents for partial postage on Catalogue No. 72, four 2c stamps for Wall Hanger or 20c for both.

Name _____ (Be sure and write very plainly.)
Postoffice _____
Route No. _____ County _____ State _____

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

Michigan Ave., Madison & Washington Sts., Chicago

Complete satisfaction or money refunded without question.

"Grandfather Traded With Us"

One of the greatest joys of this great business is the many kind letters we receive daily from our customers, expressing their pleasure and satisfaction with our goods and methods.

Often the most significant part of the letter is embodied in the few words: "My grandfather traded with you years ago." It is the complete confidence of our customers in our honesty, born of past experience in dealing here, that enables us to hold their continued trade.

One-time special "below cost offerings" to catch an occasional customer, and making up the loss on subsequent orders, would never build a business like ours.

It is the constant saving and steady stream of pleasant business relations which makes our patrons eager to speak a good word for us at every opportunity.

Our prices are 15 to 50 per cent below regular retail figures.

Our Big Catalogue contains over 1100 pages and wholesale prices on Groceries, Dry Goods, Crockery, Hardware, Furniture, Harness, Implements, Vehicles, Clothing (all kinds for Men, Women and Children), Millinery, Musical Instruments, Sewing Machines, Bicycles, Sporting Goods—practically everything that anybody could want.

It also contains freight rates, full instructions for ordering, and tells you everything you might want to know about us.

Ordering is easy from this wonderful book, which costs us almost one dollar apiece to print and send out.

Send for it today and save the profit you pay your dealer. You can get your money back if your purchases are not satisfactory. Fill out this slip, enclosing 15 cents for partial postage as a guarantee of good faith.

Send four 2-cent stamps for our

10 Color Wall Hanger

showing the inside of this building, with the goods and the clerks at work. One of the most complex and complicated pieces of lithography ever attempted. Very interesting and attractive. You can get it for what it cost us—four 2c stamps.

Today, we occupy more than 200 times as much floor space, employ over 3000 people and our catalogue contains over 1100 large pages.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

"Where Purity is Paramount"

The Packing Room—Here the Checkerboard labels are wrapped around the packages and sealed, to keep the foods fresh and pure.

Says the Miller:

"I have made about Twelve Million Checkerboard Packages of foods the past year and on New Year's Day I make just one resolve—the same each year: To make each package as good as the last;—I can't make it any better. Suppose you try delicious Ralston Breakfast Food to-morrow morning The folk who eat Ralston every day know that I keep my resolution."

Ralston Breakfast Food
12 1/2-lb. package enough for five people, seven mornings.

Purina Whole Wheat Flour in 5-lb. pkgs., and 12-lb. sacks, makes the best bread and rolls.

FREE! For Parlor, Study or Sunday School;—Printed on fine Art Paper, bearing no advertisement, suitable for hanging over your desk in study, parlor or office. It's just a bit of the Miller's fine, quaint philosophy, handsomely printed. Send either 2c. in stamps or the top of any Checkerboard package to the Ralston Purina Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Ralston

PURINA FOODS

MAGAZINE CHRISTIAN HERALD NUMBER

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, JANUARY 27, 1904

VOL. 27—NO. 4. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

From a photo furnished to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by Dr. W. O. Johnson, Korea

SEE PAGE 74

A Korean Lady of Rank making Calls in Seoul, the Capital

CLUB EMBLEM

Twenty Years from Now the living members of the Century Life-Insurance Club will be counting the dollars comprising the snug little fortune which they built gradually and easily through membership in the CENTURY CLUB. There should be several of these memberships in each home. Enthusiastic members in every state and territory express their delight and gratitude.

IF YOU ONLY KNEW

IF YOU ONLY KNEW just what the Century Club really is:

IF YOU ONLY KNEW the easy way in which members secure the best life-insurance from one of the strong and dependable old-line Companies, on small monthly instalments, with all the worry of burdensome premiums left out:

IF YOU ONLY KNEW how many, dollars the CLUB'S wonderful NEIGHBORHOOD PLAN puts into the pocket of every loyal member:

IF YOU ONLY KNEW all this (and some other things about the CLUB which every reader of the Christian Herald ought to know) the Secretary guesses you would clap your hands, or toss your hat to the ceiling, or do what is even more joyous.—JOIN THE CLUB AND COMMENCE TO SEE BETTER TIMES.

The CLUB is out for thrift and helpfulness and financial success for all who are eligible to membership.

Send for further particulars and see if it isn't so. The Secretary will mail you a formal invitation and a blank application for membership which, if your judgment approves, you can fill right out and soon be in "good and regular standing" with a weekly or monthly income through the NEIGHBORHOOD PLAN. Thus you may KNOW; and as to know will only cost you one or two cents, and not to know may cost you thousands of dollars, why.—don't you think you'd better KNOW?

HOW TO JOIN

Write at once for particulars, which will be promptly mailed you. In order that you may receive complete and personal information concerning the exceptional advantages afforded by the CLUB plan, please do not fail to answer the two following questions in your first letter.

1st. WHAT IS YOUR OCCUPATION!

2d. WHAT IS THE EXACT DATE OF YOUR BIRTH?

This will enable the CLUB to make you a very definite proposition. Otherwise it can't.

Address

CENTURY LIFE-INSURANCE CLUB, Section C. H., 5, 7 and 9 East 42d Street, New York.
RICHARD WIGHTMAN, Secretary.

Every Member a Partner.

All readers of the Christian Herald, men, women and young people of every trade and calling, are invited to promptly answer this announcement, become not only members, but actual partners in the Century Club, and begin to share immediately in the cash profits of the enterprise.

MEMBERS' ROOM, CENTURY LIFE-INSURANCE CLUB

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

The Pyrotechnics of Mrs. Cooke

By OWEN KILDARE, Author of "My Mamie Rose," etc.

PRESENT-DAY heroes consider the spectacular effects of lime-light and red fire one of their prerogatives. This would almost tempt me to put Mrs. Cooke into the class of heroes. However, I feel that she would not have approved of it. Besides, the entire Fourth Ward—although she left him in a blaze of fireworks—would not care to have its feeling of love for her changed to one of unsympathetic admiration.

Another drawback is that Mrs Cooke was not of heroic mold. Instead of being of Amazon shape and having the daring that goes with it, she was a little bit of a woman, weighing between ninety and a hundred pounds; and as to queenly beauty—I hate to tell it, but must, this being a true story—it was conspicuous by its absence.

Many, many years ago, a short time after she had landed, a big, husky fellow by the name of Peter Cooke, had taken his self-same Cordelia Ryan unto himself for better and for worse. Everybody thought it was for worse, for it was known that manner of man Peter Cooke had been. He was a longshoreman, and in those days—before strikes and overcrowding of their ranks had lowered the scale of wages—the men along the docks had by no means trifling incomes. Yet this great and bulky six-footer had always put his prosperity to the worst uses, and was known throughout the ward as "Pete, the lush," on account of his liking for the stuff. The first year of married life brought no change in Peter, and many of the neighbors, who had predicted all sorts of misfortunes, could not deny themselves the pleasure of whispering to Mrs. Cooke, "I told you so." Then, an addition—a little Miss Cooke—came, and the matrimonial venture seemed to be turning for the better. Whatever happened between man and wife in the sanctity of their home was not known, but Pete, without any public swearing-off, "quit the stuff." This sudden reformation was not left unnoticed, and much blunt comment and heavy banter was the consequence. Pete did not mind it. Once, when pressed and eased beyond the limit of endurance, he stated his case plump and plain.

"I ain't touching nothing no more because Delia don't like it, and I think more of that little woman than I do o' the whole lot o' ye put together."

He was not laughed at for saying it, because two big fists and plenty of muscle were behind his statement. After that he was left alone.

Mrs. Cooke's faith in her husband never wavered and her days were happy, from their early breakfast until evening, when Pete's hobnailed brogans, clattering up the stairs, sounded like sweet music to her.

Then the baby died, without having satisfied Mrs. Cooke's dearest longing.

"Sure, the little darlint had never no chance to call me 'mother,'" she grieved Mrs. Shandley. The death of the little one drew husband and wife still closer, and Delia's life hereafter was centered in Pete. No other little stranger ever came in the after years; but the couple did not trade their sorrow.

Perhaps in only one thing was a change noticeable. Mrs. Cooke had always liked the young brood in and the streets. Now her love for the children increased, and she never passed one of the youngsters without a hand pat on the head, or an apple for the "good lad." Of course the "good lads" returned her good with evil, and before she would have reached her own doorway, they would shout: "Wart face, wart face," which was as cruel. Mrs. Cooke only smiled, and would not be discouraged. The "kid" who had thrown the core of an apple at her yesterday, would be petted to-morrow, and admonished to be a "good boy."

Among the four householders on the "floor above" was a family of foreigners. Their name, Da Bucci, classed them among the "dagoes." This did not stop their son from mingling with the other boys, and Beppo, by promiscuous "scrapping," made his nick-name, "the greaser," feared, and himself the leader of the gang.

With his leadership came many changes in the block. Most of the tramp dogs, the playmates of the smaller children, disappeared mysteriously, and the cats, possessing greater occult powers, voluntarily deserted the street.

The animal kingdom was soon routed, and the now properly organized gang of young desperadoes turned their minds to other deeds. A reign of terror ensued. Baby carriages, with or without contents, were upset; the "ice-cream parlor" was boldly invaded and ransacked; little girls on their way to the grocery-store were way-

Mrs. Cooke only judged by facts. Beppo was constantly at her knees seeking solace—and a few pennies for candy—and the good-souled little woman thought him a very much abused boy. She became his partisan and guardian, and, ere long, Beppo spent more time in the Cooke apartment than in his own home. Had not the "Annual Excursion of the Thomas Hawley Association" happened at this time, this arrangement would have lasted for a long time.

The excursion was the district leader's "treat" to the families of his constituents. The only thing necessary to have the sail up the river, and to partake of the refreshments, was to have a full-fledged voter in your family.

Peter Cooke, a full-fledged voter, had almost determined to stay at home this year, because his wife refused to accompany him.

"Don't you remember last year's?" she asked.

"Ah, cushla, don't you mind that," he cajoled in return. "It was only them drunken loafers and they—why, they don't count."

But Delia Cooke did mind, and had not forgotten how those fellows had taken up the refrain of "wart-face," started by a few young hoodlums. Sure, her Pete had sailed into them with might and main, but her pleasure had been spoiled, because she felt mortified for both herself and Pete.

"No, Pete, man, I won't go and be a shame and disgrace to you. God knows you need that bit o' fun bad enough without me making a laughing stock o' you."

No persuasion could move her, and she would not permit her husband to stay at home. Pete was far from being in a holiday mood, when he at last joined the excursionists.

Even before the barges, with their jolly cargo, pulled out from their moorings, the big tenement in Catharine street was deserted. Only Delia Cooke and the Da Bucci family, which had no voter among them, were left. Mrs. Cooke watched the gay craft from the window, and then stepped to her looking-glass.

"Ah, sure, wouldn't I look fine gallivanting about beside my Pete, the finest-looking man among the whole o' them!"

Her finger-tip went slowly to her cheeks, and—no, delusion was impossible, and, though it hurt and made the eyelids quiver—she whispered to herself: "Sure it was best. And I'm getting plenty o' fresh air up on the roof and in the street, and my Pete, he needs it more than me."

If a faint sigh escaped her as she went to her housework, who could blame her?

Her duties done, Mrs. Cooke meant to enjoy a siesta; putting the rocking chair on the threshold of her apartments, to catch the breeze from the hall—it was a stifling day—she slumbered into dreams of her Pete. Good little woman, God's blessing to you! (I knew her.)

The Da Bucci having received no invitation to the excursion, Beppo smarted under the insult. He was driven to madness by the taunts of his followers, and took to bragging. "You fellows wait and see if I don't go on it."

This was a bluff, and having made it Beppo was compelled to "make good." That was easy. Like a cat he crept behind the mountain of ice-cream pails and soda-water boxes, and would have been safe had not his henchmen gloried too loudly in his smartness. One of the fathers chanced to overhear, and complained to the excursion committee. Beppo had reached that point in wickedness where his very presence portended immediate complications, and this was emphasized in the complaint.

"If that kid goes along with us no child will be safe. Some o' them will be shoved overboard and maybe drowned. He ought to be put ashore." The suggestion was enthusiastically received, and just as the barges were put in motion, a swarthy bundle came through laid and robbed of their pennies, and many other depredations were engineered.

"PETE STEPPED OUT EAGERLY . . . HE COULD SEE THE WINDOWS"

"Well, why you no hit da kid?" was the only rejoinder of the senior Da Bucci, when asked to stop the strenuousness of his son. Beppo was enthusiastically and energetically cuffed and mauled by offended victims, but it did not affect his course of conduct.

Children do not cry for the pleasure of it, but to solicit the sympathy of witnesses. At Beppo's painful moments of physical culture the sympathy of the bystanders was wofully meagre, and he determined to provide himself with a permanent comforter. As a matter of course, he elected Mrs. Cooke to this honorary office of port in the storm. It was no empty honor. At the end of the consolation always came the usual lecture and admonition to be a "good boy," but Beppo accepted it resignedly as the drop of bitterness that comes with most of the sweet things in life.

The American Pulpit

THE STRUGGLE FOR A BLESSING

A Sermon by REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

of Topeka, Kans.

TEXT—Genesis 32: 24, 26, 29: "And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day... And Jacob said, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me," "And he blessed him there"

IN the entire realm of literature there is perhaps no more strange, exciting, dramatic picture than the one given in this chapter of Genesis. Jacob had just left his father-in-law, Laban. He had been with him twenty years. In that time, by his industry and shrewdness, he had become a rich man in the wealth of those days, which was counted by flocks and herds, more than by cash money. There had grown up a feeling of jealousy on the part of Laban at the sight of Jacob's success. When Jacob noticed it, he made his plans to leave the country of Padan Aram, where Laban lived, and go back to his old home in Canaan. He was afraid to let Laban know of his plan, and went away by stealth. On the third day, Laban found out his departure, and in anger because Rachel, Jacob's wife, had stolen the idols out of her father's tent, he pursued after Jacob, and finally overtook him. Then followed a scene between these two rugged herdsmen, a scene which at one time almost promised to be a conflict of blows as well as of words. Finally Laban agreed to a treaty or a covenant of peace, which was signed, after the manner of those days, by the erection of a heap of stones and the swearing of the oath, "The Lord watch between thee and me, while we are absent one from another." After this had been done, Jacob offered a sacrifice, and there was a feast of reconciliation. Early next morning Laban and his people took peaceful leave of Jacob and went back home. So far, all had gone well with Jacob, in spite of the fact that he had been not always the man of high and noble principle. The age in which he lived accounts for some of the transactions of those times, transactions which now, in the light of Christian teaching, would be characterized as decidedly tricky and shrewd to the average of business dishonesty; and no doubt there are plenty of shrewd, cunning Jacobs to-day. However, the now wealthy herdsman had escaped from his father-in-law, who had certainly made Jacob work for his wages, and Jacob had avoided battle with him. But lay before him. Years before, Jacob had wronged his brother Esau. In plain English, he had, by a trick in which his mother had assisted him, cheated Esau out of his rights as the first-born son. When Esau realized what had been done, he had made his plans to kill his brother. So Jacob was obliged to run away from home in fear of his life. For twenty years he had been an exile in Syria. During all that time he had not dared go home for fear of Esau. Now, then, as he turned his face southward and drew nearer the scenes of his boyhood, and the recollection of the great wrong he had done Esau came upon him with greater vividness, he was terribly afraid. He remembered Esau's wild, lawless character. He thought what a revenge Esau would have in capturing, after the fashion of those times, all the hard-earned cattle and the property so painfully acquired during those twenty years of labor, and even Jacob's wives and children, after killing him and his followers. With this fear in his heart, he sent messengers on ahead to meet Esau, who, Jacob had ascertained, was only a few miles distant. The messengers returned with the alarming news that Esau was coming on to meet Jacob with four hundred men with him.

REV. CHAS. M. SHELDON

A Great Danger

"Then Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed." What could he expect from this wild Arab Bedouin of the desert, with his company of four hundred lawless followers, except an onslaught that would result in certain death for him and his small body of servants? But he was not so terrified that he did not do what he believed would pacify his brother. Like a prudent general, he divided his little company. Then he prayed to Jehovah for protection. Then he picked out a large number of cattle and camels, bunched them in droves and sent them on ahead as a present to Esau. After that, he took his wives and his servants and sons and sent them across the ford or the ravine, which probably had a stream of water running through it at the time. But Jacob himself remained on the bank of the ravine. The night was already partly spent. The narrator of this romance of the early life of the human family gives us no glimpse of the outward features of that remarkable scene. Whether it was starlight or cloudy, whether it was a night of profound stillness, or hoarse with chilling winds that swept through the ravine, the writer does not stop to tell us. The narrative goes on simply to say, "And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day."

Around this verse and the account which follows learned men have written much to explain what the story means. Some think Jacob fell asleep, and dreamed that he wrestled with a man. Others think that his fear of Esau caused him to imagine that one of Esau's men stole upon him in the night and attacked him, and hence the story. Still others, while accepting the spiritual teaching of the narrative, deny that Jacob actually wrestled with a real being. Others again stick to the literal statements, and believe that in some way not explained Jacob actually had a struggle that night with a real person, and that this person was the Divine Being, called in our text, "a man," in verses 28 and 30, "God," and in Hosea 12: 34, "The Angel." My own opinion is as follows:

Who was the Wrestler?

First of all we must remember this was a great crisis in the life of Jacob. It makes little difference that he had been a bad man in some ways, at present he was in sore distress and fear, and he had repented him of the evil done his brother, and asked the Divine Being for help. In the second place, we must remember it was the age of the childhood of the race, when God was still teaching men certain great truths through outward physical object lessons.

In the third place, we need to remember that the divine power may adapt itself to any form of expression to make an impression on the heart and mind of a man, and that because it is unusual is no evidence that it could not occur.

In the fourth place, we must remember the end which God had in view in subjecting Jacob to this test. The means employed are not the subject of discussion so much as the end attained. As long as we are finite we shall always wonder at God's use of means. The end in view in this case, it seems to me, is so plain, so necessary, so far reaching, that the mind which stops to criticize the means, loses the very kernel of the entire truth, misses the whole teaching of this remarkable story of the wrestling Jacob.

So then, it is my opinion, that on that night, by the ford Jabbok, back in the early annals of human history, the man Jacob really did wrestle with a real Being, who was in a real sense the Divine Person, known in the Old Testament language as a man, or the Angel of the Lord, and even God himself. It was, I believe, the Divine Being, who afterwards was manifested to the world as Jesus Christ, the incarnate God, who wrestled with the man Jacob that night. And the whole object of that struggle which went on until day began to break over the hills of Moab, was to teach not only Jacob, but the entire human race for all time, that divine blessing always comes out of persistent, long continued, faithful, courageous struggle with the divine power. And Jacob said, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me. And he blessed him there."

In passing on therefore to an application of this great truth of "blessing the result of wrestling with God," let us bow our hearts in thanksgiving to him who thus early in the history of mankind left us so great a witness to the fact of the power which man has to prevail with the Almighty.

The Test of Endurance

First of all let us notice the fact that God tests men to find if they are worthy to endure and struggle. He lets them get into trouble and perplexity, and when the crisis comes he sometimes seems to fight against the man instead of for him. The Christian is not miraculously delivered out of sorrow and trouble and anxiety. The test comes to him when, at the crisis of his life, he seizes on the Divine and wrestles with him for victory, just as in Jacob's case. He was alone on the bank of the rugged ravine. The great night was about him. The whole of his past career was vivid to him. His deception to gain the birthright, his flight from home to escape the wrath of Esau, his vision of God's angels at Bethel, his long stay at Laban's, where he had been in such severe service that he himself said to Laban once, "In the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night, and my sleep departed from mine eyes; thus have I been twenty years in thy house. I served thee fourteen years for thy two daughters and six years for thy cattle. And thou has changed my wages ten times" (Gen. 31: 40). His recent peaceful separation from Laban, who had it in his power to do him harm, and now the expectation of a danger near at hand in the probable revenge of his wronged brother—all this was, no doubt, like a vision of his life, and he cried out to God for help, and in the very moment of despair and fear he felt suddenly a presence; he was in the embrace of one who wrestled with him, and as the two struggled together there in the dark, there came to Jacob after a while a feeling that the Being with whom he was contending was not altogether a human being, and with that knowledge also grew, as the struggle went on and the faint morning light appeared, the knowledge that this power with whom he had been maintaining this surprising contest was able to grant him deliverance from Esau and bless him mightily. And as the Being in his condescension cried to be let go (again, no doubt to test the faith and persistence of Jacob), he cried, "I will not let thee go until thou bless me!" and before the sun rose, the mysterious wrestler had blessed there, and Jacob knew that his meeting with E would be peaceful.

So, often, men have come up to difficulties, or they have faced doubts, and the dark waters have seemed to go over their souls. When in the dark, they are aware of one who is testing their strength and courage and persistence. Will they hold on until the blessing comes? Ah! That is the test supreme! The divine power has seized on them. Will they grapple with it, prevail, to claim the blessing, to demand it and so the struggle? I say it is the man who has come out of this wrestling with the divine, where just they two have been alone, who goes to meet the enemy of his heart when day springs, with peace and courage in his heart. As a prince such a man has power with God and he will prevail. The test, the test of a man that God sometimes uses! He knows best. Purest gold comes out of the fire. Strongest hearts come out of struggle for blessing, not content until the blessing is bestowed.

Victory for the Persistent

There is a lesson here also for men who are fighting for victory, over tremendous sins and evils in their lives. If they will only keep at it they will prevail. Men give up too easily. They do not claim the blessing long enough and hard enough. They do not wrestle till the break of day. They give up in despair and go down in defeat in the darkness. If there is any one who is in the clutches of some great fear or trouble or evil, let him remember that the divine power is mightier than a trouble. Do not let him go until the blessing is given. O how easily men give up! How lazily they fight the besetting sins! How quickly excuses are made for wrong doing! How shamefully men fall back on the sins of their grandparents, and even go back as far as Adam, and blame him for their own weakness and error. Shame on us that we do not use the power we have with God! Is it not true that no matter what our weaknesses and imperfections, we can overcome with the help of the Almighty?

How far have we a right to blame our tendencies at our sins on our ancestors or on our surroundings? is a question whether too much of that has not been done. Take our criminal population. It has been the teaching and training of men for years, that the hereditary impulse to crime and sin was so great that very little if any blame could be attached to the lawbreaker. And so he was in many cases almost entirely let out of responsibility for his actions. There is, at the present time, I am happy to believe, a swing of the pendulum away from this teaching. A recent notable contribution to medical and criminal science by Dr. Wines, who has made a life-long study of criminality, flatly contradicts much of the sentimental weak teaching along the line of transmitted tendency. He says that by far the larger proportion of all criminals have a definite fixed purpose and method in their crime, and could, by the exercise of the will, which has been their to use, rise above their environment and become useful and honest citizens. That is, in other words, as Bishop Vincent says in his lecture on "Tom and His Teachers," the human being can seize on a divine power outside of himself and outside of his environment, and by dint of struggle compel for himself a blessing from the divine in the world. How much better it is for us to teach this doctrine to the world, than the old depressing hopeless doctrine of survival of the fittest, that left men largely at the mercy of their ancestors and their local surroundings, and coolly and heartlessly left God all out of the account.

Divine Power Available

Here is a young man just beginning to drink, or smoke cigarettes, and indulge in some small vice that will ruin his health. Don't say to him, "Poor fellow, you can't help it! You must sow these wild oats and get over it in time, perhaps." Appeal to the power that lies all outside his weakness, the divine power, that will test the wrestling powers of the young man's manhood, but will also give the blessing of victory. If a boy is thrown into bad company he can be better than his bad company. If he is exposed to great temptations, he must be taught that there is a way of escape provided. If his surroundings are peculiar, he must remember that so are his advantages. If the night is dark, he must feel the presence of the strength of God, and wrestle until the break of day. O, friends, we don't claim the blessing that might be ours. With all heaven on our side, we let hell march in and spike our guns, and take our fortress, and make us prisoners, and we never call

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

A REVIVAL BEGUN IN A CHAPEL CAR

AMONG the agencies adopted for reaching outlying spheres with the Gospel, the chapel car has proved highly successful. One illustration of the fact is furnished by a revival which has taken place at Lemoore, a town in the San Joaquin Valley of California. We learn from a letter recently received from Rev. E. R. Hermiston, the missionary in charge of the chapel car "Emmanuel," that the whole neighborhood has been deeply stirred by the services commenced in this rolling church.

The car, which is operated under the auspices of the Baptist Publication Society, was run out on a siding as usual, and the people of Lemoore were invited to attend a service. The response was very gratifying. The attendance far exceeded the capacity of the car, which was built to accommodate 120 persons. It was necessary to obtain more commodious quarters, and eventually the largest building in the town was hired for the meetings. Many persons came who were formerly church connection in the East, but had their new surroundings become cold and indifferent. The Gospel call stirred old memories, and Mr. Hermiston soon found anxious hearers. Drs. Black and Cowan, and Prof. Long, came gladly from local churches to his help. A number of ladies formed a praying-circle, and a choir of fifty voices was organized. The change resulting from the meetings was very marked. Not only were there many persons publicly confessing their backsliding, and many more earnestly inquiring the way of Salvation, but the character of the town has improved. It was formerly notorious for its desecration of the Lord's Day, but now large numbers may be seen wending their way to the Gospel services; and there is everywhere an earnest spirit of devotion, which is spreading to surrounding districts. "The outlook," says Mr. Hermiston, "is now bright for a revival coming through the State." It will be long before the arrival of the Chapel Car is forgotten in that section.

THE BAPTIST CHAPEL CAR "EMMANUEL"

Superior to all Others

Dear Sir:—I received the beautiful Red Letter Testament and Butterfly Calendar, for which accept my warmest thanks. The Calendar is superior to anything I have seen for the new year, and deserves a conspicuous place in every Christian household.

Jersey City, N. J. WM. WALLMANN.

The Struggle for a Blessing

Sermon by Rev. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Continued

on the reserve troops. Shame on the world for slinking behind its weakness, and its inherited vices, and its sily besetting sins, when, if it had wrestled mightily with God, it had before this have prevailed and gone on over the ravine as the sun rose.

There is a lesson here for the Christian disciple. It is a lesson of hope. God wants us to keep at it. There are certain things which nothing but time can accomplish, nothing but persistency can bring about. Society is a fickle thing, and indulges in what are called "fads." Sometimes it is the tenement-house fad. Sometimes it is the charity-ball fad, when more money is spent for dresses and flowers and programmes than is raised for the poor (and this is "charity" forsooth)! Sometimes it is the patronizing of this or that popular movement for the bettering of mankind. All these fads have their day. They very rapidly pass on to give place for something else. It is like a boy's potato popgun, small potato, some wind and a little noise; but no one hurt, or deed anything in the way of result. Society cannot do anything in the way of a fad long enough to amount to anything. And, truly, if anything is going to be treated as a plaything of a day or a year, it will pass away for the next new thing. God does not bless fads. He blesses wrestlings that keep at it all through the night and will not have no for an answer.

Patience Demanded

It is always so in all Christian work. It takes time to see results. It takes time to grow. "We must not grow weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." There is not a single promise in the Bible for the lazy Christian, or the Christian who takes a Sunday School class for two or three months, and then gets discouraged and gives it up, or the church member who has spasms of good resolutions about the first of the year, and then loses his temper the first time he is asked to do something hard for some one in need, or the Christian disciple who is all the time finding fault because everything is not all right at present. But there are plenty of promises for the patient, the long-suffering, the persistent, the faithful, the every-day in the year Christians. God has always blessed effort that had a definite end and aim. Your nervous, irritable, changeable, fickle, never-do-anything-long-at-a-time Christian, always misses the blessing. He has not turned to say: "I will not let thee go unless thou wilt bless me."

There is also another phase of this same truth which demands a word of emphasis right here. Our demands on the Almighty are not strong enough as well as long enough. We do not wrestle with all our might as if we had the Almighty for our antagonist and had to put forth all our strength. There is something very fascinating in the thought in the picture of that wrestling in the ark. Jacob's life of exposure and hardship on the ruins of Syria those twenty years had given him, no doubt, a splendid physique. He was in the prime of his powers. Muscular, firm, well proportioned, perhaps with a little of the desperate feeling to temper his sometimes mild and almost timid disposition, when roused he must have been capable of powerful effort. And even when he discovered dawning upon him in awe and astonishment that he was wrestling with a superhuman being, when then he did not cease his efforts. What a thrill must have passed through him when first he became conscious that the person whose arms were flung about him was of more than mortal clay! Yet there alone in the darkness he wrestled on mightily.

Oh the lesson it taught the Church of Christ! Are we in earnest? Do we want to prevail? Are we putting out our greatest strength? No. The Church is not in earnest yet. Christianity has not yet braced itself with persistent not-to-be-denied struggle with the Divine for the blessing. We do not claim the full stretch of the promises. We do not ask God for great enough things. We do not mean it when we pray. How many members of the churches have been as eager this past week to save some lost soul or relieve some despairing creature as they have been to make money, or avoid the loss of it? What is it that most of us are eager for? What is it that we will give most time to? Where are we willing to sacrifice the most in order to accomplish the most? Do we want the blessing? Do we want it enough to fling our whole strength into it? And can we expect God to bless us until we do?

In this struggle with the Infinite we get what we ask for if we are in earnest, and we don't get it unless we are. Oh for the Church of Christ to rise to her opportunity of privilege! There never was so great a need of prevailing with God. I believe he never stood so ready to grant great desires as now. The little, insignificant, trivial remedies which we are proposing for the relief of the world's want, and trouble, and despair, and unrest would be laughable if the whole situation was not so terrible. We prescribe remedies for indigestion when what ails us is heart disease. The trouble with this old world is its awful selfishness. The remedy for it does not lie in a few legislative enactments, but in the regeneration of human nature, the complete union of the human with the divine in sympathy and purpose to build up the Kingdom of God on earth. And this regeneration cannot be brought about except through the Spirit of God, as men are willing to have him work in them. And the Spirit is Given to those who Ask

"Ask, and it shall be given you." But we don't ask. It is not yet supreme with us. What do you think could resist the pressure we could bring to bear if, as churches, we united to say to God, "We will not be content until our son, our daughter, our neighbor, our friend, our companion is saved. We will not cease our importunity until our desire is granted. We will not let thee go except thou bless us!" Yes, there is the test. Do we want the blessing enough to wrestle for it with all our might? Are we ready to endure? Do we care to sacrifice ease and physical pleasure and indulgence in order that souls may be saved? If we do, the blessing is ours. If we don't, it will be contrary to all God's dealings with men since the beginning of the world if we get any blessing. In the kingdom of God men get what they go after. The laws of the spiritual kingdom are just as exact as those of the physical. "If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." There is only one thing to do; to ask. And in order to ask, we have got to want to ask. For if we don't want the Spirit of God, we will not ask for him. If we do want him, we will ask, and if we ask we will get.

The prevailing power of man with God is the most hopeful fact in the world to-day. The church that wants a blessing can get it. The man who wants a blessing can get it. The world is waiting again, as it waited in the times of the Reformation, for the holy arm of the Most High to be made bare in the sight of the nations. Still now, as then, he works through men to save men. He is testing and sifting, and in the process of his wonderful designs he is longing to have the church fling itself with eager fury of desire into the wrestling that prevails like a prince. Is she ready to do that? Are the churches prepared to wrestle with the Angel of Jehovah and prevail?

The Enemies of the Church

Across the ravine, for every man and every church there is an Esau. He is coming up with his wild followers, threatening to destroy everything we hold sacred and dear. The Esau of the church is the love of money, which threatens to swamp the love of souls. Look at the annual bills of this country paid for the things that destroy, or the things that simply represent physical adornment and gratification, compared with the bills paid for supporting both home and foreign Christian institutions. Last year the United States paid over $1,000,000,000 for intoxicating drink, $600,000,000 for tobacco, $25,000,000 for kid gloves, $5,000,000 for ostrich feathers, and only $12,000,000, all told, for foreign missions. Yet we call ourselves a Christian nation. This is the Esau of the church.

And here are some of his followers: Denominational rivalry, sectarianism, class distinctions, indifference and hostility to spiritual life, gambling, and lotteries, and spoils in politics, and race prejudice, and foreign lawlessness, and Sabbath desecration, and contempt of the marriage relation. All these are coming up fast. Who shall defend us against their brutal revenge and malice? We have reared against the coming evils of the next century the church, the home, the school, the religious press. There is nothing we can do now except to wrestle with the angel until we are assured that these institutions will bring us the needed blessings, and destroy the evil intents of our enemies. We cannot prevail by our own strength. We must have the divine blessing. It will be in vain that this nation seeks the peace, and prosperity, and happiness it needs through revision of tariff laws, or monetary laws, or changes in the system of government unless in all things it cries out for wisdom and blessing from the Lord Jesus Christ, and will not let him go until the blessing comes. The nations that forget God shall perish. The church that does not do its work in his might will fail.

Again, I would place the picture of the wrestling Jacob before you. Do we want the blessing? Do we feel the awful need of it? Are we willing to wrestle all night for it? Do we really mean it when we pray for the salvation of men? Will we sacrifice time and money and pleasure to get it? Are we ready to struggle through the darkness alone? Then, if we are, the time will come when the East shall begin to pale with the coming sun, and the Angel, who has tested our strength with infinite condescension for our weakness but with mysterious reverence for our humanity, will say, "Let me go, for the day breaketh." Then he will reply with him who cried out, far back in the early years of history, even after feeling the greater power of God, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." And, as then, for he is the same forever, the Lord will bless us there, and as we pass over to meet our enemy the sun shall rise upon us and we shall go our way in peace.

Are We Doing Our Best for the Indians?

BY E. R. JOHNSTONE

INDIAN GIRL

bison, and the increase of the white population, the danger of long, bloody and expensive wars with the aborigines has disappeared.

That we have improved the condition of the Indians generally, and this especially within the last twenty years, no one can rightfully dispute. That the improvement in morals has kept pace with that in manners is open to question. More and more men and women who know the Indians by contact, rather than by conception growing out of reading and tradition, are convinced that the younger element of the Reds should be educated and then assimilated—absorbed as it were in the great mass of civilized whites, both North and South.

Within a very few years the idea was universally prevalent, in fact, it obtains in many otherwise well-informed quarters to-day, that the Indians as a race are disappearing. This is not true, and while figures are dry reading, a few in this place may be illuminating. The census of 1890 gave the total number of Indians at 273,607. The census of 1900 enumerated only 266,760, an apparent falling off of nearly 7,000. It is well known, however, that each census is far more accurate than its predecessor, and that in many cases prior to the last census, totals were much exaggerated. It is to the interest of the reservation Indian to deceive enumerators, because the more there are of them the greater amount of rations and annuities are issued. Deception is also to the advantage of contractors and such Indian employees as benefit directly from the government gifts to our red pensioners.

More interesting figures are those which show that while in 1890 there were 145,282 on reservations, in 1900 that number had been decreased to 125,048. This meant the breaking up of more than 20,000 into individual or family allotments, and the decrease by that much of the patriarchal or tribal relation, which made and still makes for hostility, laziness, and savagery.

In 1890 the Indians not taxed numbered 189,447, and those who paid something to the support of the State numbered 84,160. In 1900 there was a gratifying increase, so that those taxed amounted to 137,242, and the untaxed to about 129,518. Of course, the erection of Oklahoma into a territory had much to do with this.

At a recent congress of ethnologists in New York, several members from the United States contended that there are now more Indians in the United States (exclusive of Alaska) than there were in the same territory when the Pilgrim Fathers landed on Plymouth rock, or when the town of Jamestown was finally established in Virginia. This may or may not be true, and the data brought forward in support of the contention were not fully convincing. It goes to show, however, that the United States has not been as cruel a parent to the aborigines as writers of a generation ago were wont to insist.

More than forty years ago Roman Catholic missionaries, priests and sisters, commenced in a small way the practice of educating Indian children, taken from such households as would permit any intimacy with the whites. The plainly expressed purpose was to make of these little ones evangelists or missionaries for the spread of the Roman Catholic propaganda in primal place, and for the inculcation of civilized manners and trends of thought as well. Protestant denominations adopted or followed the same practice, although not to so great a degree, in the earlier days when we had a frontier, and theoretically the plan is not open to severe criticism.

The fundamental difficulty lies in a fact not recognized by the whites generally. The plains Indian believes himself to be a better man than the white. He accepts the food, the garments, and particularly the weapons of the conquering race because of his appetites, which are of the greedy variety; but he does not ascribe the possession of the good things he likes to a higher order of intelligence. If he thinks about it at all, he is apt to believe the whites are granted their knowledge and the fruits thereof as much for the benefit of the superior Red as for anything else. In other words, the Indian very much doubts whether his present state is in any way better than it was in the days of his forefathers, when game was plentiful and his most formidable weapon was the bow and arrow or the spear. He had, at least, plentiful quarry for his hunting.

However, the idea of educating young Indians that they in turn might educate or influence their forbears has taken deep root, and according to the last report at hand of the Indian Commissioner, there are nearly 10,000 reservation Indians enrolled in the schools established by the government in the Eastern as well as in the Western States. The school at Carlisle, Pa., is the largest, having 1,040 pupils. The Haskell School at Lawrence, Kan., has 746, and the one at Phoenix, Ariz., 743. Such, at least, was the enrolment given for 1901, and it has been increased, although not materially, since. At these schools, particularly at Carlisle, boys and girls of comparatively tender years are given many terms of admirable instruction. The curriculum is varied and intelligent, and embraces very largely practical instruction in the manual arts. When graduated, the pupils are returned to their homes, having been told it is their duty, and should be their pleasure, to instruct their fellows, including their elders and (from the Indian viewpoint), their betters. That is, a few school terms and a few years in civilization are to provide by study, example and environment that which shall convince aboriginal nomads of the error of their ways; shall subjugate race hatred; ameliorate, if not eliminate, barbaric instincts; shall make of thistles fig-trees, and of sage brush, sturdy oaks.

INDIANS AT A TRIBAL FESTIVAL

Have the results been satisfactory? It is very much to be doubted. The young man or maiden educated at Carlisle, goes back to his home or tepee, to be received how? As a superior being, one to be looked up to, listened to, admired? Hard facts prove the contrary. He or she returns to meet contempt, if not abuse, and, worse than all, that isolation by kind and kin, that tells most sorely upon the youthful mind. The Indian girl finds that one who has spent a life in learning the savage arts, is preferred to her by the buck whose teachings have been those of his fathers. The educated Indian youth, who played football mayhap with splendid gallantry, can fashion iron or forge steel, has the arts of the husbandman at his finger ends, and is capable of becoming a valuable citizen in any community, east or west, discovers that the Indian girl whom he would love, will have none of him, preferring the lordly young savage, whose idea of marital happiness includes the subjugation of the wife as absolute.

It is little more than a decade since the religious craze, following the teachings of one Porcupine of the coming of a White Christ, who should redeem the Reds from bondage and restore their primitive supremacy, was followed by hostilities in which hundreds of lives among United States troops and the Indians, were sacrificed. It is not open to dispute that some of the most bloodthirsty warriors among the Indians (At Wounded Knee), had received due meed of instruction in the Indian schools. The last state of these men was worse than the first, and while we may condemn them in our ethics, let us not condemn them in our hearts, for we know not the full measure of their temptation. They had been taunted as apostates by those whose good opinion was all the world to them—they must prove the contrary.

In 1877, Nellie, the eldest daughter of Matoh-Nopah (Two-Bears), hereditary chief of the powerful tribe of Lower Yanktonais (Sioux), was returned from the convent school at St. Joseph, Mo., to her father's camp, near Standing Rock, Dakota. She was then eighteen years old, and for eleven years had been under the tutelage of the good sisters. She spoke English correctly and fluently, and French as well. She was versed in all good housewifely duties and had more than one graceful accomplishment, including embroidery, painting, and some skill in music. When sent to her father's camp, she pleaded with tears to be allowed to remain with some half-breed relatives who had adopted, in large measure, the customs of the whites. Abbot, afterwards Bishop Marty, as good a man as ever blessed a congregation, told her frankly that he could not comply with her request, because she had been educated by the Church that she might carry the teachings of that church to her people, and be an example to them of the blessings of civilization.

One would think that, taken at the tender age of seven, and reared to womanhood among the whites, Princess Nellie, no matter what the temptation, would have retained at least a semblance of civilization. Yet in less than six weeks after the return to her father's tepee, she was seen in the middle of a beef corral after the fortnightly slaughter, squabbling with sister squaw over unapportioned entrails of the animals, smeared with blood and paint, dressed as a squaw, without a vestige of civilization apparent, and absolutely unwilling to use any language but that of the Lacotans. A week or two later she married a half-breed of unsavory reputation, and until lost sight of a few years ago was apparently as much the Indian squaw as she had never seen a book, heard of a need or listened to a white teacher.

The story proves nothing absolutely, but could be paralleled by hundreds upon hundreds of cases, not equally prominent perhaps, but equally indicative of results.

What is the duty of the whites if educating the children does not bring good results with the elders, and if sending back the finished product of the schools is more likely to spread the product than leaven the barbaric lump? Assimilation among the whites of the educated children is beyond question our duty. The Indian pupils know what is in store for them, or many of them do, and it is a matter of regret that some of the best and brightest of the lot when called upon to leave Carlisle plead with all the earnestness of their nature to be allowed to settle in Pennsylvania. The good farmers of the Cumberland Valley an east and west of there would be only too well pleased to have them. These things are true of other schools. What right or reason is there in the retention of identity by the Indians as a race?

There are 76,000,000 of whites; there are less than 300,000 Reds. Why should not the aborigines be absorbed in the mass, and this not only to the benefit of the smaller fraction but to the advantage of the larger?

It is interesting to know that in the States of Iowa, North and South Dakota and Minnesota, many of the white residents are seeking servants among the Indian women, preferring, of course, those who have been taught at the agency schools. They are found to be faithful, conscientious, apt, and in a measure, diligent. They resemble Japanese in their power of imitation. Had all the graduates of Carlisle or Hampden been absorbed in the middle or upper northern States, the number of reservation Indians would have been smaller than it is now, the tribal relation would have been weakened, the measure of individual allotment of land would have been increased.

The subject is an interesting one and opens many fascinating lines of thought. It may be strange, but it is none the less true, that against the Indian there is none of the prejudice felt by the whites that is so patent against negroes. Marriages between Indians and whites are well known on the frontier, and the progeny of such marriages find no stigma against their names, other than that which attaches through individual character or personal attributes.

A BUCK IN WAR DRESS

Sincere Thanks!

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The Butterfly Calendar received. It exceeds all other premiums you have given in the past. The colors are beautiful, and the design of the bright, sweet little faces set in the butterflies is indeed charming. Please accept my thanks for the gift.

Springfield, Mass. ARIANA P. JOSLYN.

Instructive and Entertaining

Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of the premiums: Crown Encyclopedia, with Pilgrim's Progress and How I Worked My Way Around the World. They are all beautifully gotten up, and both instructive and entertaining; the Calendar, too, is beautiful.

Phelps, N. Y.

An Inspiring Book

I thank you for the book, How I Worked My Way Around the World. It shows what boys may become who are brought up by a Christian mother to trust in God, and who, by integrity and perseverance, will overcome all difficulties. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has come to stay in my home. JAMES SCOTT.

The Jamaica Storm Sufferers

Additional contributions received by the Bank of Nova Scotia, Boston, for Rev. D. A. McKillop, treasurer of the Mandeville Convention, Jamaica, W. I., in behalf of the sufferers by the recent hurricane: G. M. Walker, $2; Margaret J. Peebles, $10; Mary E. Peebles, $10; J. D. McGregor, $3; Daisy M. Lee, $1; Harriet R. Hungerford, $10; Friend, per J. M. Elliott, $1.

OUR COMMISSIONER EN ROUTE TO MACEDONIA

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Despatches Rev. Marco N. Popoff to Organize Relief Work There

WHEN this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of its readers, the Rev. Marco Nicholas Popoff, one of the leading native evangelical pastors of Macedonia, who sailed from New York on the ocean liner St. Paul on January 9th, will already have arrived on the frontier of Macedonia. Pastor Popoff, who has been in the United States for some time past, in the interest of the relief movement, returns as the Special Commissioner of this journal, for the express purpose of organizing the relief work in the field. He will associate with himself the American missionaries in Macedonia and on the frontiers of Serbia and Bulgaria, as well as the native Christian pastors, the Young Men's Christian Associations, and a number of active workers of both sexes, English, American and native. An Interdenominational Committee, of an influential and representative character, will be formed, to which all the practical details of the work will be entrusted, including in its membership our missionaries in Monastir, Adrianople, Salonika, Samokov and elsewhere. Pastor Popoff's letters will appear regularly in these pages, and will give the fullest and most accurate information concerning the widespread suffering.

In the latter part of September, 1903, Macedonian refugees began to pour across the border, into free Bulgaria, by the hundreds. They were mostly from Razlog district, just across the Rilo Mountain. Many hundreds came also from the Adrianople vilayet. These frontier fugitives now number about 25,000. The cause of their flight was the attacks of the Turks upon many villages, which they destroyed by fire, killing many of their inhabitants. In some towns—as in Krushovo and Smilevo—entire Christian families were exterminated.

These refugees presented a pitiful procession as they came down the mountains on the Bulgarian side. Those who had had more time to prepare for their flight, had taken with them some clothing and food, or some of the cooking kettles. Others escaped merely with what they had on their backs. The spirit of benevolence toward the sufferers was stirred, and aid began to come from many quarters. Especially this seemed necessary when the refugees related the awful story that here were not less than 250,000 others in Macedonia, who, like themselves, had lost everything.

Pastor Popoff's Appeal

"It was this condition of 275,000 fellow Macedonians," writes Pastor Popoff, "that moved my heart at this season of the year to leave my church and come to this country to plead for aid in behalf of suffering humanity. I felt that it was an imperative duty to leave my work and even to become a beggar on behalf of my unfortunate countrymen. It is with deep gratitude that I return, after spending two months in New York. I owe gratitude to the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for consenting, the very next day after my arrival, to take up the cause of the afflicted Macedonians.

"It is with pleasure that I accept the invitation of Dr. Klopsch, in the interest of the effort to aid the sufferers, to return immediately to the field of suffering. It is proposed that I organize this relief work on the other side, so that the needs in different points will be thoroughly ascertained and fully set forth before your benevolent readers. I go to act as a medium for your readers, through which they can see the actual situation.

"Will not all those who remain home and enjoy the many home comforts with which God has blessed them, be ready to send their mite to relieve the suffering of the unfortunate 275,000 Macedonians, who, shelterless, naked and hungry, are praying for help. These unfortunate people need to be cared for during the winter and helped in the spring to begin life anew. If given only a loaf of bread each day, $10,000 would be needed daily. One dollar will supply a family of five with bread for a week, and keep them from starving. Seven dollars will buy shoes for thirty-five persons to keep their feet from the ice and snow. Ten dollars will buy enough wool to clothe a whole family in homespun, and fifty dollars will put up a comfortable shelter for a large family. Will not the Christian people of America, who enjoy so many of the blessings of a Christian civilization, respond? Prayers and tears will not avail, unless material assistance be rendered as well, and that at once. 'The King's business requireth haste,' and swift kindnesses are the best.

"And so, fellow Christians of America, sharing your own, be it much or little, with those others who are perishing for need of the absolute necessities of life, you too will be blessed, having done what you could. As much as ye have done: it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

A Notable Career

The Rev. Mario Nicholas Popoff was born, June 10, 1862, at Banseo, Macedonia, in the immediate vicinity of the recent massacres. He is the second of a family of eight children—five boys and three girls.

Rev. Lewis Bond, American Missionary, Appeals for the Macedonians:

[BY CABLE]

MONASTIR, TURKEY, Jan. 16.

DR. KLOPSCH, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

We need Five Thousand Dollars immediately for helpless children. Cold weather and much sickness prevail.

(Signed) BOND.

At the age of seventeen, together with other boys of the town, he began to attend the Protestant place of worship. The Gospel truth caught his ear, and he became an attentive listener and doer of the Word of God. As a Christian worker he has begun first at his own home, by explaining, each Sunday afternoon, the sermon heard at the Protestant place of worship. As a result, at first the oldest brother and afterwards the father, the mother, and the rest of the brothers and sisters, were brought into the fold of Christ. The father, now at the age of seventy-two, has ever since been one of the most saintly men of the large and prosperous Protestant

THE REV. MARCO N. POPOFF
Our Special Commissioner to Macedonia church at Banseo, which has given to the Protestant cause in Bulgaria and Macedonia six pastors now in the work, and a number of consecrated Bible women.

After his conversion, Mr. Popoff devoted himself to Christian work among his people.

Soon afterward, disturbances similar to the present, occurred in Razlog, and he, with thousands of others, became a refugee in the city of Dubnitza, which had just been liberated from the Turks. It was as a refugee from Macedonia, the same winter that the Missionaries admitted him into their school at Samokov.

He left the Mission School in 1882, penniless, and worked eight months as a proof-reader. Thus he secured means to cross the ocean twenty-two years ago, landing in New York with only sixteen dollars, and a very scanty knowledge of the language. The following autumn he had saved about eighty dollars through hard work, and through the kindness of the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Ripley, N. Y., he was enabled to attend the State Normal School, graduating in 1886, as the valedictorian of his class. From Fredonia, he went to Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., where he was offered a scholarship by Mr. T. S. Hubbard, of Fredonia, N. Y. He graduated from Hamilton College in the class of 1890, with high honors. Along with his college course he studied as extras, Hebrew and Church History, preparing himself so that in two years more he completed the regular course of study in Auburn Theological Seminary, graduating from that institution in 1892. He was then called to take up the pastorate of the Sofia Congregational Church, which he has held ever since, and still holds it.

Mr. Popoff has been very active in Sofia in many other ways. He has written and translated a number of pamphlets and books, and has been a constant contributor to the Protestant weeklies and monthlies, on religious themes. He is at present a representative at Sofia, of all the Bulgarian Protestant communities, having had much to do with the government in the way of settling troubles between Protestants and the Orthodox native churches. He is also president of the Bulgarian Temperance Union, and secretary of the Bulgarian Evangelical Society. His wife is also a native of Banseo, and was educated in this country. She has been, in the full sense of the word, a helpmate to Mr. Popoff in all his pastoral work.

Latest Letters from the Field

Writing from Monastir, under date of Dec. 29 last,

Missionary Lewis Bond says:

A $1,000 check from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has arrived, with a characteristically sympathetic letter from Dr. Klopsch. The letter is worth all of another $1,000.

The other day, one of the most pitiable families we have yet seen, came to my house—a widow and five small children—all scantily arrayed in tatters, and barefoot. Mrs. Bond gave them bread and warmed them up with coffee. Subsequently, they received some relief clothing and footwear. It appears that a week ago, two men were out among the villages on a begging mission, and on a mountain path both men were shot by a soldier and two bashi-bazouks. One man, the father of the above-mentioned family, was instantly killed, and the other man was left for dead. The second man revived, however, and was brought to Monastir, and there is a bare chance that he may be restored to his wife and two children.

Mr. Bond also writes that in his district (Monastir vilayet)—

Nine relief centres are cared for by six English, four French and two American people, and, assisted by a score of natives, are engaged in active relief work; 52,542 persons are destitute. One-third of an English pound would provide food for an adult person for a month. Perhaps one-tenth of the number can support themselves, or will be supported by their friends during the winter. This will leave 45,000 thrown upon the relief fund. It has been decided to put these people upon half-rations of cheap flour. The main use for relief money now is for food.

From Samokov, Dr. J. F. Clarke, American Missionary, writes:

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Your telegram, informing me of $1,000 sent for my order to Mr. Peet, reached me about 9.30 A. M. to-day. In two hours I had told our Evangelical Relief Committee, that $400 (about 100 Napoleons), were available for what work they thought best, and had telegraphed to Dubuitsen—a most needy place—that 50 Napoleons ($200) were to be sent by post to-day; and to Luzhen, near Turkish boundary, that $80 were going to them. The prompt telegraphing will save very much suffering. Work will be at once commenced here for twenty-three places outside of this city.

Since the sending of the remittance of $10,000 by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the field, the relief workers have been filled with courage and hope in dealing with the difficult situation. They had been praying that America's great heart would be touched with compassion, and that our people would respond to the cry of Macedonia's perishing people. Every reader of this journal, and especially those who love to serve the Master, and to follow his example in succoring the helpless, feeding the hungry, and clothing the naked, should have a share in this work of rescue in Macedonia.

All contributions should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A MACEDONIAN FAMILY OF RUINED SMILEVO

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

To Tone Up Social Morality

AN attempt is being made in Roman Catholic circles, to stem the tide of divorce and immorality by social influence. Finding that not even the ban of the church, unequivocal as it is, suffices to prevent divorces and the subsequent marriage of divorced persons, a society of ladies, styling themselves "Daughters of the Faith," has been organized, to apply social ostracism to the offenders. They pledge themselves not to recognize the guilty partner in a divorce case, and not to accept invitations from, nor extend hospitality to, such persons. There are other rules of the society, relating to dress and conduct, which pledge the members to abjure certain customs prevalent among women of wealth and station, which, in the opinion of these ladies, tend to immorality. It will be interesting to watch the result of this new movement. It will show whether the social wrong-doers belong to the class who do not fear God, neither regard man.

There can be no doubt that to many people the penalty will be one of the most severe that could be inflicted. It will affix a stigma to them as persons unfit for decent society. Many of them could survive the exclusion from the ordinances of the church; but to deprive them of the pleasures of social intercourse, will be to shut them out from their chief enjoyment. It does not, however, appear to be too severe a punishment. The disclosures that have been made recently in the Courts, show a moral laxity which is a menace to the home, and a disgrace to us as a people. If by any means the decadence can be stayed, it will be well for the nation.

There is no reason why Protestant Ladies should not adopt a similar course. Although, in Protestant churches, the stringency of the ban on divorce is not so conspicuous as in the Roman Catholic Church, there is the same interest in maintaining the permanence of the marriage relation and the purity of society. Any course that will tend to these conditions will be welcome. There will, doubtless, be some who will pronounce the movement Pharisaical; but it is time that epithets should be disregarded in this matter. It is an outrage that persons who have openly set the law of God at defiance and show no contrition for their wrongdoing, should be received in society as cordially as if their offense was trivial. For the penitent there should always be forgiveness and restoration, but for those who glory in their shame, there ought to be reprobation and ostracism.

A New Indian Problem

IN another part of this issue there is printed a contribution which presents a new and somewhat startling aspect of the "Indian question." Mr. E. R. Johnstone, the writer, is one who speaks with the authority derived from a long and intimate personal acquaintance with the subject. He avers, substantially, that our present methods of "civilizing" the red man, by educating the Indian youth of both sexes, and then, at the close of their school or college career, returning them to their tribes and their old associates, is a failure; that the majority of those so returned, instead of exerting an uplifting and civilizing influence upon their fellows, sink back to the old level of savage life, and soon become as though they had never entered the white man's school or sat at the feet of competent instructors.

If Mr. Johnstone's contention be substantially sound, it will naturally cause thoughtful people to ask: "What then, is to be done with the Indians, if we are wrong in sending back the educated young men and women to their tribes?" The same hand which has pointed out the evil, now indicates the remedy. "There are 76,000,000 whites," he writes, "and less than 300,000 reds. Why should not the aboriginals be absorbed in the mass?" If the graduates from Carlisle and the other Indian schools, were assigned to various suitable occupations in the Northern or Middle States, within a few generations the "Indian question" would disappear.

Our Indian wards are not less in number than they were a decade ago, notwithstanding oft-repeated assertions to the contrary. Our "Indian Problem" pursued on wrong lines, threatens to be an interminable one. If the absorption plan is the true remedy, it should be inaugurated by the proper authorities without delay.

We commend to our readers generally, a thoughtful consideration of Mr. Johnstone's suggestions; after which we should be pleased to hear from any who may be able to shed further light on this important question.

A Land of Antiquity

KOREA is a very ancient country, whose history reaches away back almost to the "beginnings of things." Although it was not known to Europe until the sixteenth century, it has a vaguely-defined chronology, covering a period of over three thousand years. Previous to 1122 B.C., when Ki-Tsze, a famous scholar, author and statesman, migrated thither with five thousand followers from China, to escape the rule of a tyrannical monarch, Korea's history is mainly of a legendary character. Ki-Tsze found the aborigines ignorant but docile, and he introduced among them many of the arts, including laws, letters, medicine, and a feudal political system.

This great civilizer—whom the Koreans universally revere—gave to the new domain the picturesque title of Cho-sen, or, "The Land of the Morning Calm." His descendants ruled the country, then much more extensive than now, for nearly eleven hundred years—a long line of forty-one illustrious generations, all before the Christian era, whose deeds are long since forgotten, and whose very names are now undiscoverable to the world.

In his remarkable work on Korea, Prof. William Elliot Griffis, of the Imperial Tokio University, points out that, assuming the early history of the discovery and civilizing of that country by Ki-Tsze to be true, its history is almost as old as that of China, and it must have been, at the climax of its greatness, contemporaneous with Egypt and Chaldea, when these nations were leaders in the world's affairs. To-day, the educated native Korean is proud of his antiquity. As he traces his long descent, he feels that he who can look down from "the lofty height of thirty centuries" upon the rest of the world, save China alone, and has the right to regard the later and younger nations as "barbarians." When John Rodgers, the American admiral, sailed up the Han River, forty-four years ago, to propose a treaty, he was greeted with the dignified assurance by high officials that "Korea is satisfied with its civilization of 4,000 years, and wants no other."

Modern Korea still clings tenaciously to ancient custom and lives upon its traditions. But this land, which dawned so long ago, "in the morning of the ages," is apparently destined soon to undergo great changes, which will transform its people, and make no longer appropriate its title of the "Hermit Kingdom." In the oncoming rush of our latter-day civilization, it will quickly be forgotten that the ancestors of the grave-faced, high-hatted men of Seoul were ruling a kingdom while Joseph was Pharaoh's premier in Egypt, and long ere Moses led Israel through the Wilderness. What wars, what successions of triumphs and reverses, what religions and what philosophies, what heroes and what tyrants marked the long centuries of the Hermit Nation's existence; what dark heathenism enveloped the land even after the light of Christianity had begun to shine in many parts of Asia—may never now be told. Well has the nation kept its secret. But the future is not without hope. Christianity is lighting up the dark places of Korea, and that "silent land" may yet become one of the most zealous Gospel agencies in the Far East. Events will "open the doors" in the little kingdom, and, in God's own good time, the nation which has lain so long in darkness, will be brought into the light.

The Power of Little Things

A CURIOUS experiment was witnessed in a gun factory. A great bar of steel, weighing five hundred pounds and eight feet in length, was suspended vertically by a very delicate chain. Nearby was also suspended a common bottle-cork by a silk thread. The purpose was to show that the cork could set the steel bar in motion. It seemed impossible. The cork was swung gently against the steel bar and the steel bar remained motionless. But it was done again and again and again for ten minutes, and lo! at the end of that time the bar gave evidence of feeling uncomfortable; a sort of nervous chill ran over it. Ten minutes later, and the chill was followed by vibrations. At the end of half-an-hour the great bar was swinging like the pendulum of a clock.

No man is mighty enough in his own energy of will to feel secure, if he is exposed to a constantly repeated influence for evil. The constant beating of a raindrop has often worn a hole in a stone; and the constant hearing of low views of honesty, of virtue, of spirituality, though at first offensive and opposed, has in the end taken away many a man's vigor and sapped the strength of many a Christian.

The Will Accepted for the Deed

JAPAN is at the present moment a centre of world-wide interest. Some forty years ago, the Edwin Forrest sailed from New York with four missionaries aboard, two of them appointed to China, and two to Japan. It is related of one of them, Mr. Rohrer, who with his wife was going to Japan, that when objection was made to his going so far away while many of his own kindred were still unsaved, he answered sadly, "The Japanese have no Moses, no prophets, no Jesus, whom they may hear." His whole being was consecrated to the work. And his heroic wife, on the eve of departure, said to her weeping mother standing by her side on the deck of the ship, "Mother, but for the parting with you, this is the happiest day of my life. If we are lost at sea, death will find us in the path of duty."

They sailed away with their fellow-servants in Christ, and the vessel has never been heard of to this day. Whether she was burnt at sea, or foundered and went slowly down into the depths, while those young servants of the Lord, locked in each other's arms, looked up and saw heaven open, and Jesus standing to receive them, man will never know. But here is the blessed truth—if they had toiled and labored till this day among the heathen in the complete fulfilment of the purpose of their hearts, their service would have been no greater, no richer in the eyes of the Lord.

It is not what you give, but what you would give if you had it; not what you do, but what you would do if you could (not, perhaps, what you think you would, but what you really would) that constitutes the basis of God's judgment, and the measure of the award, whether of joy or sorrow, that will meet us when the Master comes.

Rembrandt said, "A picture is finished when the painter has expressed his intention." So an act is done when the will has done all it can; and when the whole intention of the life has been expressed, God says of that life, "It is finished." Then nothing remains but the judgment.

A Sunny Outlook

HAPPY and enviable is the temperament that maintains ever a sunny outlook, anticipating something better farther on. There are fortunate men and women who are always sure just around the next corner, some very pleasant surprise awaits them; sure that to-morrow will repair the wastes of to-day, and that next year will be immensely prosperous, even though this one has had its share of adversity. On the whole, these sunny-tempered people are right.

Never yet was a springtime,
When the buds forgot to blow.

There is always blue sky somewhere. A man, giving his bride a watch as a wedding gift, had engraved within the case the familiar couplet:

Taking the year together, my dear
There isn't more night than day.

And there is not! We may reckon as confidently on good times as on the rising of another sun. We may look forward and not back, and forebode no ill, and anticipate all good, and we shall not be disappointed.

Among the Workers

—REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN has just concluded a series of evangelistic meetings in the Presbyterian churches of New York City, during the Week of Prayer.

—DR. W. A. MCKAY, of Canada (an account of whose work recently appeared in these columns), is quite ill. During thirty-four years of active work in the ministry, he had taken no rest whatever. He is now away for a month at a sanitarium.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Russia's Attitude

IN spite of the Czar's personal assurance that he is anxious for peace, the sky in the far East grows daily more lurid. The concessions to Japan are of a nature that would be humiliating to that Power, and which she declares she cannot accept. They reduce her influence in Korea to an infinitesimal degree, and require the delimitation of a neutral zone. It is little enough that Japan gained by her war with China, and it is not likely that she would consent to abandon any portion of that gain. As Russia has raised the trouble by her greed in Korea, Japan has revived her objections to the Russian occupation of Manchuria, which is still maintained, in spite of the solemn promises Russia made to the great Powers. New reinforcements are being hurried from Russia into that Province, thus dispelling all hope of evacuation. Russia has attempted to alienate sympathy from Japan, by assuring foreign Governments, including our own, that all treaty rights with China, relating to Manchuria, will be respected. She has, however, so persistently broken the most solemn promises in the past, that very little reliance is now placed on her word in any capital. That both Powers expect war, seems clear. Japan is purchasing ships and military supplies. Russia has demanded permission from Turkey for the whole of her Black Sea fleet to pass through the Dardanelles, presumably on the way to Japanese waters. Such use of the Strait is strictly forbidden by treaty, but Turkey is too weak to enforce treaty rights, if Russia insists. There is a rumor that Great Britain has lodged a protest with the Sultan against such infringement of the treaty, but a protest will not avail unless it is backed by force, and that step is considered improbable. While the military and naval forces on both sides are thus concentrating, the diplomats are exchanging notes, ostensibly to avoid a conflict, but evidently with little hope of success. The one hope for peace is that Russia is notoriously poor, and that she finds it difficult to raise a loan, as she has alienated the Jewish financiers throughout Europe, who could have helped her. In persecuting the Jews within her own borders, she has thus deprived herself of aid which would now be invaluable to her. Nations, like individuals, frequently learn in a time of difficulty that the Psalmist's warning applies to them.

His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate (Psalm 7: 16).

Liquid Sunshine

An extraordinary discovery, that promises to be of inestimable value in the cure of diseases, was announced last week at the Technology Club of New York, by Dr. William J. Morton, Professor of Electro-Therapeutics in the Post-Graduate Medical School. He said that one of the most important properties of radium was that of imparting part of its own radio-activity to other substances. Possessing that clue, physicians had experimented with various chemicals. It had been found that a solution of quinine, when exposed to radio-activity, gives off the ultra-violet rays of the solar spectrum and thus becomes liquid sunshine. If it be taken internally and absorbed into the blood, so that all the blood vessels are saturated with it, the interior of the patient's body is bathed in sunshine. If any organ is diseased, as the lungs in consumption, or the liver by a cancer, the Roentgen rays are directed to that organ, an actinic stimulus is given which is fatal to bacteria. Further experiments are being made to determine the size of the dose and other details. Dr. Morton said that already he had cured three well-defined cases of cancer and two others were in process of cure. They were perfectly authentic, and had been examined by a number of medical men. It would appear from the Professor's explanation, that the curative operation of "liquid sunshine" is twofold. In the first stage it is taken and illuminates the system, and then it is quickened by radic influence from without. It is so in the spiritual world, with the influence that regenerates and sanctifies. The Spirit that begins life is needed to quicken it.

All these things worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will (1 Cor. 12: 11).

Three Heroic Sailors

A story of wonderful heroism is related by the passengers and crew of the steamer Walkerman, which foundered off Cape Hatteras on December 25. The boats were lowered when it was found that the vessel was going down. The women among the passengers were put on board first, and the men followed. It was quite dark, and there was a high sea. All the boats were filled, and one of them was loaded far beyond the limit of safety. It was in charge of First Mate Bruner, who seeing the probability of its being swamped and all on board perishing, appealed to the men for self-sacrifice. Three men must get out, he said, and he called for volunteers. Charles Schmidt and two Swedes offered themselves. The mate yet how few there are who are moved, when they hear of Him, who, to save them from eternal death, laid down his own life.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends (John 15: 13).

Money No Inducement

The contractors who are building the new bridge between New York and Brooklyn, are experiencing some difficulty in obtaining the services of competent masonry inspectors for work in the caissons. They have offered ten dollars a day, and very short hours, but though eight men were advertised for, only one man applied. The reason is, that already five men have succumbed to what is known as the caisson disease. In building the other bridges, there was no such mortality from this cause; but with this bridge, it has been found necessary already to sink the caissons ninety-two feet. The pressure of the air in the caissons is forty-five pounds to the square inch, and few men can bear it. One of the men who succumbed, was examined by a physician before he descended, and was pronounced fit. When he was brought up, after being only thirty minutes in the caisson, he was suffering severe pains in the stomach and the joints of his limbs. The others who died suffered in the same way. He, like them, was sent promptly to the hospital, where skilful treatment was given, but he soon died. The contractors have therefore made better offers, but though many men are unemployed, no one seeks that engagement in spite of the large remuneration offered. Life is too precious to be thrown away for money. Would that people understood that eternal life is infition of Isa. 6: 10, "Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes," etc. It was quoted by our Lord (Matt. 13: 15), and by the Apostle Paul in his address to the Jews who called upon him in Rome (Acts. 28: 27). The manuscript seems, from the shape of the letters, to have been written before the year 300 A.D. It was probably written by some early Christian. Among the large quantity of manuscripts that have been found and are waiting to be deciphered, there may be others of great value. It is remarkable that at this time, when scholars are so keenly interested in the origin and date of the sacred books, these long-buried manuscripts, the existence of which was never suspected, should have been unearthed. Thus has the promise been fulfilled:

A PAPYRUS FRAGMENT (ISA. 6: 10)

Truth shall spring out of the earth (Ps. 85: 11)

BRIEF NOTES

The Empress Dowager of China has taken a vow that if Russia gives back Manchuria to China, she will spend $300,000 in erecting new temples to Buddha. She is not likely to be called upon to fulfil it.

Dr. S. A. Knopf, a specialist on consumption, said at a meeting of the Twentieth Century Club recently, that alcoholism is responsible for more cases of tuberculosis than any other one thing. And consumption is by no means the worst of the evils traced to alcohol.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at North Adams, Mass., are stirring the whole community. The Herald, of that city, says that at the meeting following that for young people on January 10, nearly 250 persons, many of them young men, made public profession of faith. It adds: "It was a most impressive demonstration, and leads to the belief that the work will be lasting in its effects."

Dr. F. B. Meyer, whose addresses at Northfield and whose works have made him well known on this side the Atlantic, has taken a bold stand on the Temperance question. A rule has been adopted in his church in London against the use of fermented wine at the communion and against any person holding office who is engaged in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor. The latter clause, Dr. Meyer says, cost him the loss of the richest member of his church.

Gainesville, Fla., has issued invitations for a winter conference, similar to the summer conferences at Northfield, Mass., from July 31 to Feb. 15. An auditorium capable of accommodating three thousand persons has been erected. The following speakers have promised to take part: Dr. W. E. Blackstone, of Chicago; Dr. D. V. Gwilym, of New York; Dr. E. J. Pepper, of Philadelphia; Prof. J. R. C. Brown, of Virginia; Dr. Clarence B. Strouse, of Philadelphia; and Mrs. Margaret Bottoms. Particulars may be obtained by addressing the secretary, Mr. Wm. Pepper, Gainesville, Fla.

A RUSSIAN NATIONAL SONG AND DANCE IN A MANCHURIAN TOWN

strapped life-preservers on them, and they leaped overboard. For a time they swam in the wake of the boats, but the intense cold of the water and the collision with cakes of ice retarded them, and they lost sight of the boats. All night they managed to keep afloat, but were numb with the cold, and hurt by the blows of the ice. When morning dawned, they saw the land not far away, and coming out from it, in search of them, their own boat, which had safely landed its cargo of human lives, and was returning to rescue the brave men who had risked themselves that the others might be saved. They were taken on board more dead than alive, and after being fed, were sent to the hospital. The courage and devotion of those three men were beyond praise. Everyone must admire their act, nately more precious. Multitudes are throwing that aside to get money.

What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Mark 8: 36).

The Ancient Papyri

An interesting photograph reproduced on this page, shows one of the fragments of papyrus recently discovered at Oxyrhynchus, by Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt. As stated in a previous number of this journal, at the time the cable report of the discovery arrived, the fragments are somewhat dilapidated and defaced by time. It has therefore proved a difficult task to decipher them. The fragment in the photograph, however, was easily understood by Greek scholars. It is a quota-

IN THE "LAND OF THE MORNING CALM"

By W. O. JOHNSON, M.D., Korea

A YOUNG GIRL OF KOREA

YAMEN OFFICIALS AND SCHOLAR (IN CENTRE)

A KOREAN SUN HAT

A YOUNG NOBLE AND DANCING GIRL

A "PALACE GUARD"

THERE are two mistakes which seem very prevalent in the United States concerning Korea and the Koreans. One is that that country is uninteresting, very hot and unhealthy. The other, that its people are without much individuality; something between Japanese and Chinese. As to the first, Chosen, the "Land of the Morning Calm"—as its people term it—might well be termed the Switzerland of Asia. Its peaks are not as high, nor always snow-clad; but its succession of hills and mountains with narrow valleys, little rivers, and occasional plains, make it a land of rugged grandeur and beautiful views. Trees are

The Koreans are quite distinct from either the Japanese or Chinese. In size, they are larger than the Japanese. Their wide, flowing robes are always of white, and their tall, horse-hair hats, make them appear still taller. They are exceedingly dignified and polite. Appearances count for more than in America, and many a Korean would rather lose his fortune, even his life, than "lose face"—his dignity or the respect of others. But a Korean's politeness is more than skin deep. It is an inon all sides, at all times. So the two light their long bamboo pipes, sit down cross-legged and discuss the matter at length. Time is not money in Korea.

Women in Korea smoke about as much as do men. The middle and higher class women are secluded within their yards and houses, and only appear in public with their faces and heads covered with a thin muslin apron, or in a closed sedan chair. The wife, however, has considerable weight in the family councils, and after fifty she is privileged to go about with face uncovered. She now lives with her son and daughter-in-law, both of whom she is apt to rule with a rod of iron. Travelers in Korea

A CORNER OF THE REVIEWING GROUND

A REVIEW OF THE KOREAN ARMY AT SEOUL

EMPEROR VISITING ANCESTRAL GRAVES

scarce and forests extremely rare; but spring covers the hills with a mass of pink-and-white azaleas and rhododendrons. For nine months of every year, Korea has the finest and healthiest weather to be found in any land; from the middle of September to the middle of June, sunshine nearly every day, and rain enough only to bring on the spring crops; few high winds, little dust; cool, bracing falls; sharp, dry winters, and fresh, mild springs. The three summer months, however, are unhealthy, and trying to all foreigners. There is rain and sunshine alternately for weeks. The thermometer is not often above 85°, but the great humidity makes it extremely exhausting. Fevers and germs of every description flourish in the heat and moisture bred thoughtfulness, a care not to wound other's feelings.

Mentally, the Koreans are quick and bright in acquiring Western learning, especially language, which they speak more fluently and with less accent than either the Japanese or Chinese. A young man of good birth is often able to speak and write English fairly well in eight or ten months. They do not, however, possess the Anglo-Saxon perseverance. Few peoples delight to talk more than do the Koreans. "Yeage chom hap-sita" ("Let us have a little talk") is an expression heard sometimes say that seclusion of women is not very strict, because they see so many young girls on the streets. These are, however, really boys, who wear the hair down the back in a long braid, and have flowing white garments, similar to those of the girls.

Marriages are arranged by the parents, and generally without the young man or woman ever having seen each other. Consequently, unhappy marriages are very common in Korea, and there is no word in their language that means what our word "home" does. "House" comes the nearest to it. It is considered quite impolite for one man to speak of another man's wife to him, so when friend meets friend, the salutations are, "Have you been at peace since we last met?" "Has your

A KOREAN STRING BAND AND TWO DANCING GIRLS

THE MEMBERS OF A NATIVE KOREAN HOUSEHOLD

SOUTH GATE OF SEOUL, KOREA'S CAPITAL

THE EMPEROR OF KOREA

VIEW OF THE PORT OF CHEMULPO

use been at peace?" If very well acquainted, he may ask, "Is your son at peace?" But there is never any mention of the wife or girls. Koreans have few holidays. The two weeks' holiday at their New Year, which comes in February, is the most important. Everybody pays all debts, stops all work, and boys calls and entertains visitors.

Buddha's birthday is another celebration, when hundreds of country women—for few men believe in Buddhism—come into the cities to visit friends and see the sights. Every house has a tall bamboo planted in the front yard, from the top of which floats a gay-colored flag or streamer all day, while a lighted lantern takes its place at night. In summer the tug-of-war between half the city against the other—fords much amusement. The rope is an enormous cable, with a dozen or more tails at each end, so that sometimes there may be five hundred men on a side, pulling away for dear life. It may last for forty-eight hours, night and day, there being many pulling, that when one tires he goes off for food and sleep, and gives place to another. Koreans are chiefly spirit worshipers and Confucianists. Every large tree, big rock, and peculiar shaped hill, has its special spirit, generally an evil one, which must be propitiated by semi-annual offerings of rice and meat. These, after being exposed before the spirit's supposed dwelling, are eaten by the worshiper. Buddhist temples abound in the mountains; but for several hundreds of years Buddhism has steadily declined. None of these beliefs have as strong a hold upon the people as in India and China, and Christianity has progressed steadily in Korea ever since its introduction, but especially since the opening of the country to foreigners, in 1884. There are now about thirty thousand Protestant Christians in the country, and a large number of Roman Catholics. In northern Korea, where, eight years ago, there were but half a dozen little groups of Christians, there are now two hundred and thirty-five meeting places. These are steadily increasing, and last year 1,232 new converts were baptized in that section of the country, alone. A man bought a tract from a Korean Christian at the weekly market, where he was selling them. He carried it to his distant mountain village. He read and studied it. Six months later, three men appeared at the missionary's house, and told him there were eight men in that village who, although never having met a missionary, wanted to believe and learn more of the "Yasu Kwo" ("Jesus doctrine"). A merchant traveling through the country was told by his companion that he knew "the best doctrine ever heard in Korea, something just suited to Korean merchants," and before the journey's end, he became convinced that it was so. A printed page the Gospel spread. The progress of Christianity in Korea is one of the miracles of missions.

Americans should be deeply interested in that land and its people. American merchants and American missionaries were among the first foreigners who entered the then "Hermit Kingdom." An American company built the first railroad, thirty-five miles in length, from the Port of Chemulpo to Seoul, the capital. An American company built the electric street railway of Seoul, and still successfully operate it and the extensive electric light plant there, while the gold mines in North Korea—said to be the best paying in the world—were developed and are controlled exclusively by American citizens.

Japan's interest in Korea is vital, for her own foodstuffs are often insufficient, and from Korea she must get great quantities of rice when her rice crop is short. Her surplus population also must have an outlet, and where can the products of her rapidly increasing manufactories be disposed of as naturally and easily, as in exchange for Korean rice, beans and barley? It must be remembered that Japan is overpopulated, and her cheap labor, and the skill her people have already shown in the arts and manufactures, indicate her future prosperity to be along those lines that have made the other island empire of the West the greatest in Europe. Korea lies but ten hours from her shores. If she is to expand—and grow she must—it can be but in the one direction. Already she has large populations and great commercial interests in all the open ports, the capital, and the interior. She has bought the American railroad from Chemulpo to Seoul, and is rapidly pushing the completion of another to unite with it.

Russia, on the other hand, is already practically master of Northern and Eastern Asia. Only the little Korean peninsula remains; but, unfortunately, it juts out into the open ocean's highway and separates Vladivostock, one terminus of the great Trans-Siberian Railway, from Port Arthur, the other terminus. Korea, geographically, belongs to the northern Power; and Russia probably looks upon its control by Japan, much as an American would regard Cape Cod or Delaware being held by a European Power. Korea herself, with no navy or coast defenses, and with an army of less than ten thousand—drilled, it is true, by foreign instructors, but as yet untried—can do but little for herself. Russia she dreads, Japan she dislikes; and she looks to the intervention of the Powers to preserve her unity and independence.

A MISSIONARY PREACHING THE GOSPEL AT BUDDHA'S BIRTHDAY FESTIVAL

sick man, carried forty miles on his brother's back, reached the foreign missionary doctor's hospital, was cured, and believed the Gospel had cared for his body as well as his soul. And so, by example, word and structors, but as yet untried—can do but little for herself. Russia she dreads, Japan she dislikes; and she looks to the intervention of the Powers to preserve her unity and independence.

BEASTS OF BURDEN

MISSIONARY AND LANGUAGE TEACHER IN MISSION HOUSE

TYPE OF MISSION HOUSE

The Sabbath for Doing Good * A SABBATH AT CAPERNAUM

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEB. 7
MARK 1: 21-34

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT--LUKE 4: 40:
HE LAID HIS HANDS ON EVERY ONE OF THEM AND HEALED THEM

WE may imagine the mother of Peter's wife thus describing the events of that memorable day:

In the home of my son-in-law, Peter, we were strict Sabbatharians, according to the Pharisaic law. I say this as a background for the story of how I was healed by Jesus on the Sabbath day. We accepted the interpretation which the rabbis put upon the law of God, that the taking of physic on the Sabbath, or the gargling of the throat, or an application for toothache, was unlawful. Only when there was imminent peril of death could any effort to heal the sick be made on the Sabbath.

Now imagine, if you can, how contrary to all of this seemed the healing wrought in me on the Sabbath. I was sick of a fever, and, I doubt not, delirious, as I have no memory of seeing Jesus when he was first brought to my bedside. I can only marvel that Peter should have brought him in, for I have since learned that he had that very morning healed a man in the synagogue, not in danger of his life, but only one of those cases of demoniacal possession, where one may live out a miserable existence for an ordinary lifetime. There had been a great outcry of the Jews against this healing act of Jesus. As for bringing Jesus to me, Peter says that he did think my life in danger, for I had a great fever. Peter says that he did not ask Jesus to cure me, that of his own accord he moved toward where I lay, when he was told of my illness. When I awoke to consciousness he was raising me up by the strong grasp of his hand. First he raised me to a sitting posture, and then to standing upon my feet. I felt the thrill of health from head to foot. The fever had left me. I had no desire to lie down again upon my couch, but I was more than happy to be able to set about the preparation of the evening meal for all who were in the house.

Do you think I had any words of reproach for Him who had healed me on the Sabbath? Oh, no, for I was too deeply thankful for the marvelous kindness that had been done me. I could speak only words of gratitude and praise. I did not even have a thought that the Sabbath law had been broken when He had grasped my hand to convey the healing. And now I know it was not God's law, but only a foolish rule of the Pharisees that he broke.

Never can I forget the sight which followed our evening meal. From every direction people were seen coming towards our house. As they came nearer, we discovered that many of them were lame, and others blind, while others were brought on beds by their friends. Old people and children were among these afflicted ones. At first we wondered at so strange a sight, and then it dawned upon us that they had heard how I had been cured of the fever, and how the demoniac had been cured, and that they had been told they would find Jesus in Peter's house. The streets about our house were soon filled with these sick folk. And Jesus went down among them. We of Peter's household were gathered on the roof, looking down upon the scene. We saw the Christ touch blind eyes, and straightway they could see. We saw him put his fingers in the ears of the deaf, and then withdraw them, and they could hear. We saw lame men leap at his command to walk. We saw people with withered limbs grow suddenly strong. That great company which had come sick and sad, went away strong and rejoicing. There need not have been one sick person in all Capernaum that night if all had been brought to him.

Darkness and quiet settled down upon our home. And when the night was passed, and we gathered at the morning meal, our wonderful guest was missing. Peter said he knew that it was his habit to go aside by himself to pray after such exercise of his power. And so Peter sought him out, and told him of the people he had seen waiting to be healed, crowds of them. And Peter says that Jesus was ready and eager to go and help them.

Illustration and Application

Christ's example teaches us to keep the Sabbath not by doing nothing, but by doing good. That lesson is needed hardly less by Christians of to-day than by the Pharisees. It is needed by all who think that to do nothing except going to meeting is to fulfil the Sabbath law. To all such the Sabbaths of Jesus, crowded with miracles, declare, "It is lawful (that is, it is the law) to do good on the Sabbath-day." It is by no means Christlike for a physician or his patients to crowd healing labors into the Sabbath that could just as well have been put into Saturday or Monday. It was a good suggestion that Henry Ward Beecher made, that physicians should, like workmen, charge double for Sunday work, and so safeguard their rights to rest and their right to religious fellowship. One may even break the Sabbath by such an excess of public meetings that he has no time left to meet God alone. This is not available as an excuse for the "oncens," who reluctantly spare only one hour of the twenty-four for "divine service," which is not really "service," but only a preparation for real "service" such as filled the Sabbaths of Jesus. Ministry to the sick is not the only way to "do good on the Sabbath-day"—indeed there is danger of harming the sick by too many Sunday calls—but it was the most convenient way in which Christ could correct the error of the Pharisees, who forbade on the Sabbath all activities except those of the Synagogue and temple, and made it an "empty day." Jesus taught that divine work, unselfish work, was to go on through all days—work for gain being suspended one day in the week to give work for God full swing. "My Father has worked unceasingly up to now, and I, the Christ, work unceasingly," was Christ's profound rebuke to those who would stop all work on the Sabbath, even works of necessity and mercy. One day in the week work for gain is to stop, but unselfish work never, and other work stops only to give it for one day more adequate opportunity. And by making one day pre-eminently a day of unselfish activity, we are to learn how to make all days unselfish, even those in which we work for gain.

That man has kept the Sabbath most truly, after the fashion of Christ, that has gone about doing good that day in manifold ways; visiting homes of sickness and sorrow to brighten them, as Jesus did the home of Peter; casting out devils by Christian reform work, after the fashion of Jesus in his Synagogue miracle; helping in some way all he has met—by a word, a handgrasp, a gift if need be, after the fashion of Jesus healing all who came to him in the city street. In the heart that needs a day for fellowship, and a soul that needs a day for worship, as well as a Jew? Are Gentiles to be sentenced to fifty-two days at "hard labor" every year for not being born Jews? The most ancient records also prove the Sabbath to be older than the Jews. One may see the word "Sabatu" as the name of a weekly rest on tablets of those who knew Noah, who knew Methuselah, who knew Adam. "Was Adam a Jew?" I was once asked by a deacon, whose grown-up family had battled many an evening over the problem. If Adam was a Jew, then the Sabbath is a Jewish institution. But if we are all sons and daughters of Adam, then we all inherit through him the two surviving institutions of Eden, the family and the Sabbath, the home and the home day, the Jachin and Boaz pillars of strength and beauty before man's Edenic temple, which, though scarred by the fall, still stand, and behind those pillars in the Christian Sabbath at home, we still find, nearer than anywhere else on earth, our "Paradise Regained." We are not to put aside lightly this institution of the Sabbath, as old marriage, and, like it, founded in hygienic as well as high spiritual laws. For six thousand years, the Sabbath, which began in Eden, has marched at man's side as the messenger and monitor of God, its left hand laden with blessings for the body, its right hand laden with blessings for the soul, and surely in our age of strenuous daily struggles, when a day of rest and religion is more needed to save the individual and to save society than ever before, we shall not allow those who act as if the Sabbath was made for greed to destroy the Sabbath that was made for man.

II. The Sabbath is the very heart of the world's Constitution, the Ten Commandments. The three great codes of modern civilization, Justinian's, Charlemagne's, Alfred's all began with the Decalogue—convincing proof that it is not a law for one people, one age, but for all and forever. Now the very heart of this universal code, which God wrote with his own finger in the rock, one-third of this only autograph of God is devoted to the Sabbath—the keeping of which," said Cardinal Gibbons to me profoundly, "leads to the keeping of all the other commandments; the breaking of which leads to the breaking of all the others." It is absurd to claim that the other nine shorter commandments are of universal and perpetual obligation—the laws of worship, of reverence, of obedience to parents, of honesty of purity—but that the law of labor and rest is only a Jewish by-law, placed like a link of tow in the middle of a chain of steel. Dr. Haegler, of Basel, and Professor Hodge, of Worcester, both find the law of the Sabbath written in red and white in our blood and nerves. To disregard the Sabbath is suicide for the individual and for the nation. Only by Sabbath keeping can we insure for ourselves and for our country the longest and strongest life. Lord Salisbury spoke of "living and dying nations." The "living nations," the strongest and most prosperous, are those in which the Sabbath is best observed. Much confusion of logic has gathered about the claim that the first table of the law, being devoted to duties to God, should not be enacted into civil law, but only our duties to man in the second table. This may all be true, but the trouble has been in assuming, without information, that the first table included just four or just five of the commandments. The middle period is in fact after the word "holy" in the Sabbath commandment, where commands relating chiefly to our duties to God really end, with the command to observe the Sabbath religiously: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Then we come to our duties to man, first of which is the law of labor and rest: "Six days shalt thou labor"—a law against vagrancy, for rich and poor alike—which is followed by the law of rest, which is a common subject of civil law. No civil law should enforce worship of any day, and a Sunday law no more attempts to do than a Thanksgiving proclamation; but as law may forbid men to work more than ten hours a day, it may forbid them to work more than six days in seven. Christians should ever be ready to give a reason for the faith that is in them, especially in the case of the imperilled Sabbath.

III. Jesus kept the Jewish Sabbath during his life, and in his resurrection turned its heritage over to the "Lord's Day." IV. The references in the Acts and Epistles, and especially Rev. 1: 10, show that the Lord's Day came then to be the chief of days. The surest way to keep it aright is to be "the spirit of the Lord's Day." That led John not to idleness but to "write."

We shall do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done to-day?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give to-day?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer,
But what did we speak to-day?—NIXON WATERMAN

"JESUS REBUKED HIM, SAYING HOLD THY PEACE"

"HE HEALED MANY THAT WERE SICK"

Sabbath everyone should feed his own soul by a sermon read or heard, but he should also minister to the souls of others, by teaching or preaching or conversation; and he should also minister in some way to other needs of men, to the need of friendship, of sympathy, of counsel, of courage. It is not enough to say, "Here's my check; send a city missionary or a church visitor to the unfortunate." Say, rather, "Here am I, send me." I am thinking of one of the wealthiest and most generous men in New York City. "He is seldom at church," said his pastor to me, "for he goes almost every Sunday to some of the Missions to which he contributes." He had learned that "the gift without the giver is bare," and that the supreme gift is to give oneself to those whose chief need is strong, uplifting fellowship. I am surprised to find so few church trustees, so few elders and deacons, teaching in the Sunday School. They think that to give money, and conduct church business is their share, but they miss their best opportunity to do good in neglecting to apply their strong influence to shaping the characters of the youth of the church. Sunday visiting, now mostly Sabbath-breaking, might be made the highest form of Sabbath keeping if we sought out not alone the sick in body, but church neglecters, Sunday School truants and others, who might be healed by our coming to them tactfully in Christ's name.

Having emphasized the positive side of Sabbath-keeping, to which all Christ's miracles on the Sabbath chiefly point, let us now review in this critical time, when the sanctity of the Lord's Day is more attacked and less defended than ever before, the complete teaching of the Bible as to the Sabbath.

I. "The Sabbath was made for man"—not for the Jews alone. So says Moses in Genesis. So says Christ in the Gospels. So says reason. Hath not a Gentile muscles that need rest, and a mind that needs a day for culture, and a

ASTRONOMY ☆ OF ☆ THE ☆ BIBLE

By PROF. LEWIS SWIFT, F. R. A. S.

"And God said, Let there be light: and there was light. And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness." GEN. 1: 3, 4.

Number I. — LIGHT

IN assuming the task of writing a series of papers on "Bible Astronomy" for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I do so with some misgivings, well knowing how difficult it is to write well on astronomy to make it interesting and instructive. I shall endeavor through the entire series of articles to avoid as much as possible the use of technical terms, and shall adapt my phraseology to the capacities of my readers, bearing in mind that probably many are young, and unlearned in both the teachings of the Bible and Astronomy.

The Bible is not a work on Astronomy, though it contains many passages and inferences which I design to reconcile with the discoveries and deductions of modern Astronomy. For the opening paper of the series I have chosen Light, which God saw and said it was good. Light is not a substance any more than is sound. Sound is the effect of air waves impinging on the drum of the ear, while light results from the vibration of something we know nothing about, impinging on the retina of the eye. This something fills all space, but is not visible to any human sense, and is called ether.

The sun is the great reservoir of heat and light to the earth, and yet, strictly speaking, neither comes from there; nothing, in fact, but cold dark waves of the all-pervading ether. How can heat reach us from the sun, passing as it just through 93,000,000 miles of space probably a hundred degrees below zero? These waves pass through space without heating or lighting it, and plunge into our atmosphere without heating or lighting that, except slightly; but when they strike the earth and are reflected, quicker, if possible, than a flash of lightning, they are transformed into both heat and light.

Light is the most rapid moving principle in nature, equal to 186,300 miles a second, or, while a person would say the words "CHRISTIAN HERALD," it would revolve seven and half times around the earth.

I advise the reader to stop a moment, and reflect on what involved in the mighty idea of a circuit of seven times and half in one second.

Light reaches us from the moon in one and three-fourth seconds, from the sun in eight minutes, from the nearest star four years, from the Pole star in forty-eight years, and from the most distant stars that our great telescopes can see—like atoms of diamond-dust floating in the sunbeams—light must have been many thousand years on its journey. There are other waves which are a blessing to the human race, waves of sensation, which move very slowly, only about 10 feet in a second, producing pain, and taste, and smell, and pleasure, and hatred, and love, etc., but no taste or pain felt till the waves reach the brain. If a babe, in its cradle, had an arm 93,000,000 miles long, and should insert its finger in the sun, it would not know that its finger was burned until the lapse of 140 years.

Light is the source of all color. Objects have no color of their own. There is not a green leaf, or a red rose in the world. A leaf appears green because it reflects the green light and absorbs the others, a violet is blue because it reflects blue light and absorbs the others, and a calla lily is white, because it reflects all colors of the spectrum.

The marvels and mysteries wrapped up in a bundle of light waves surpass everything known in Astronomy, and the attempt to fathom them awakens emotions too deep for utterance, showing, in a striking manner, the wisdom of the great Creator, in which chance had nothing to do, for "God saw the light, that it was good."

The marvelous analyzing powers of the spectroscope have solved many of these mysteries, but the unsolved ones are legion. A beam of light, say from a lighted candle, in the spectroscope resembles a piece of a rainbow, except that the light, not being pure, it is crossed with lines, thus indicating of what the impurity consists. If the three-millionth of a grain of sodium (common salt) be put in the candle blaze, in-

The following experiment will show, in a striking manner, the delicacy of spectrum analysis: If I should brush some dust from my coat into the candle blaze, an observer would see no sodium lines; but on my return from Syracuse, where the air is impregnated with salt, should I try the same experiment with the coat-dust, the observer at the spectroscope would see the two sodium lines. When the light from the stars is analyzed, and the lines appear just as they do on earth, we know that the same substances exist there. There are three or four unknown substances in the Dog star.

What a thrilling interest do the realities of spectroscopic revelation excite, analyzing substances in worlds that would take a locomotive 500 million years to reach, bringing down to us, woven in their beautiful light, events transpiring in other worlds than our own.

These ideas fascinate the astronomer to an ecstasy of admiration, that God has given man the power to revel in scenes so grand. No lovelier picture is presented to human contemplation than this.

If the lines from the light of a star are all displaced slightly toward the red end of the spectrum, that star is moving away from the earth, but if toward the violet, it is approaching us. The amount of displacement indicates the velocity. In this way it has been computed that:

Alpha Lyra is approaching at	40 miles a second.
" Cygni	50 "
" Bootes (Arcturus)	55 "
" Ursa Majoris	60 "

By the same process, other stars have been found moving from us, by their spectral lines being moved toward the red. On the other hand, if there be no displacement of the lines, the star may be moving laterally, of which the spectroscope tells us nothing; but if moving toward or from us, the telescope tells us nothing.

In this way is the light from the sun, stars, comets and nebulae made to tell us the story of their birth, and what a marvel of human progress it is. We are doubtless only on the threshold of heaven's wide-open doors, through which posterity will gain a glorious view.

But for refraction of light, there would be no colors, no microscopes, no telescopes, no photographic cameras, and no spectroscopes, and, in fact no vision. A convex lens in each eye refracts the rays of light, and forms an image on its retina of objects to which it is directed. How vast is the field which the science of optics by refraction has opened to us, by the microscope in one direction and the telescope and camera in the other! With the little microscope we behold in a drop of stagnant water an amazing scene, often millions of perfectly formed animals so small that 10,000 can swim in the eye of a needle. We see the spider's silken thread composed of many hundred strands, spun from as many holes in its body. We see the butterfly provided with 25,000 eyes, all six-sided, with a beautifully polished lens in each, and, with uplifted hands, we exclaim, "God is great, even in littleness!"

On the other hand, with the telescope, we climb the celestial stairway, which, like Jacob's ladder, reaches up to where the angels dwell, where suns beyond estimation are seen shining all over the sky.

"Forever singing as they shine
The hand that made us is divine."

Marathon, N. Y.

PROF. LEWIS SWIFT
FELLOW OF THE ROYAL ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY, ETC.

stantly two lines near together appear in the yellow of the spectrum, whether in the chemist's laboratory, or the sun, or in the Dog star. Potassium gives three red lines, lithium one yellow and one red, silver two green lines, hydrogen five lines, and iron nearly 1,000.

FROM COLORADO TO A CHERRY STREET TENEMENT

THERE came from distant Colorado not long ago, a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, containing a sum of money, to be given, so ran the letter, to "the most needy and deserving case." Among so much need and suffering among the poor of New York City, it was hard to discriminate, but attention having been called to a family living in Cherry street, a representative of this journal visited that wretched locality. As she picked her way along the miserable street, several childish figures ran before her, and a chorus of shrill voices piped:

"Who yer lookin' fur, Missis?"

"I am looking for No. —," was the reply.

"Here it is, Missis," they screamed in unison; "right here." It was a rear tenement. The whole troop dashed into a dingy and forbidding alleyway.

A little girl darted into a hallway, old, black and broken. She ran up the rickety stairs as nimbly as a goat scaling a rocky hillside, while the visitor felt her way more cautiously. Finally the little pilot stopped in front of a door and threw open, shouting "Missus S—, dere's a lady to see yez."

"Mrs. S—" came forward, with two little tots clinging to her skirts—a boy and a girl—and placed a broken chair for a stranger, while the visitor explained to her the object of her call. The mother was a sweet-faced woman, and her children were both pretty, though they wore rags.

"I heard that you had a little baby," began the new-comer, and that you were out scrubbing when it was only a week old." She showed the baby—a wee morsel, lying upon a bed, guiltless of sheet or pillow-case; the little thing was asleep upon dirty, ragged remnants of what had once been a comforter. An old coat was its only covering, except some sort of a nondescript rag, which was wound about it.

This is the story she told, after a little questioning.

"My man Jim—he is in the little room beyond—is ashamed to see anyone, for fear they will not know what keeps him here, and me going out to work; but poor Jim is almost blind. He has but the one eye with which he can see a little, and the sight of the other is entirely gone; but it does not show the blindness. He is a big strong man, and he's trying to find something he can do. He earned good pay before, and we had a nice home; but now all he can do is to mind the children while I work. Yes, I did go to scrub the offices when the baby was less than two weeks old; what else could I do? I worked up to a week of when he was born, climbing up twelve flights of stairs in some of the buildings, and I was glad to have the work to do. It's all we have. The rent must be paid—six dollars a month—or we'll be dispossessed; but the landlord is good; he'll take a dollar or two at a time."

There was nothing to eat in the house except, perhaps, enough stale bread for one meal, and a little tea. A kettle upon the stove held a few bones, which were being boiled to make what the poor mother called soup.

When the poor little mother found that there was nothing alarming in the visit, she called to Jim. He came out of a dark room, and bowing, stood with cap in hand. The caller said he ought to be thankful he had such a smart wife.

"She's all right," he replied; "but it's awful for a strong fellow like me to be sitting here, loafing, when I want to work; and could work if I could see."

After paying the rent, the mother had just twenty-five cents with which to buy food for herself, husband, and two children for a whole week. Out of this she must buy condensed milk for the baby, as hard work and poor fare had rendered it impossible for her to nurse the little one.

If the far-off donor of the money sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could have followed the little woman and the writer for the next half hour, she would have praised the Lord for putting it into her heart to relieve such destitution. At a grocery store a small supply of the necessities—flour, potatoes, beans, etc. were purchased. Next, the mother's heart was delighted with a bundle of warm flannels, which she could make into dresses and petticoats for the baby.

As the writer left, the mother, with a choking voice, thanked her, holding the bundle close, while tears of gratitude rolled down her cheeks. She may never meet her kind Colorado benefactor, but never, while she lives, will she forget the help that came to her that day, like a miracle from heaven, bringing joy and blessing into the dingy home.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

W. M. McKeesport, Pa. Is it right to have boxing-gloves and punching bags in the basement of churches and to use them there? Is it right to have a club and play games in a church?

The church is an edifice consecrated to the worship of God. It is his temple, and nothing that would defile should enter it. While athletics and amusements are all right in themselves and in their own places, their proper place is not in the church, but somewhere else. Illustrated lectures, readings, and even concerts (of an approved character) might be tolerated, where there is no other public meeting-place available; but to transform God's temple or its approaches into boxing and gaming rooms is almost as though it were turned into a vaudeville hall or a saloon. See Matt. 21: 12; Mark 11: 16, etc.

E. M. W., Bradford county, Pa. What is the difference between Unitarians and Universalists?

The Unitarians reject the doctrine of the Deity of Christ. They regard him as a man divinely commissioned, the greatest of teachers, living a beautiful life and dying the death of a martyr. Like the Jews, they insist that there is only one God, and that Jesus was his Son, only in the same sense, though in a higher degree, by virtue of his purity and God-likeness, as other men may be his sons. The distinguishing doctrine of the Universalists does not relate to the Deity of Christ, which we think they believe, but to the universality of salvation. They believe that the punishment of those who die impenitent is remedial and that it will in the end bring them to repentance, and that when they are fit for heaven, they will be admitted there, and that eventually all will become fit, and will be able to enter.

Mrs. E. L., Windham, Pa., writes concerning the statements in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in regard to the age and marriage of old people:

My father was born January 9, 1816, and mother, April 9, 1817. They were married July 31, 1836. They united with the Wesleyan Methodist Church in early life. Came to this country from England in 1858, and since have been Methodists here. They are still living, and care for themselves.

L. A. V., Culbertson, Neb. 1. Did the wise men travel by night when they journeyed to see the infant Saviour? 2. Where were the Child and his mother when the wise men visited them? 3. About what age was the Child?

1. The presumption is that they traveled by night. Tradition says that the journey took two years, and that the Star was visible nightly. 2. In Bethlehem. 3. Probably only a few weeks old; certainly not a year.

H. S., Roca, Neb., and Subscriber, Kirby, W. Va. (1) A friend being challenged to produce evidence of the Bible contradicting itself, cites Gen. 22: 2, in which Isaac is described as the only son of Abraham; whereas Ishmael was his son. How do you account for this? (2) Is there any evidence in the Bible that Solomon was a negro? (3) Is it right for a Christian to join a lodge?

(1) Isaac was the only legitimate son of Abraham at that time. Ishmael was the son of the servant of Abraham's wife, and was therefore regarded as illegitimate. His anxiety that Sarah should have a son (see Gen. 15: 2, and other passages), shows that only such a child would be regarded as indeed a son. (2) The expression, "I am black but comely" (Solomon's Song 1: 5), is often quoted in proof, but those are the words of the Shulamite woman. Solomon's words do not begin till the eighth verse. This so-called proof is therefore worthless. There is nothing else, so far as we know, to imply that he was a negro. (3) It depends on whether any of the obligations may call upon him to do things inconsistent with his Christian character. If they do, it would not be right for him to join.

He should make careful inquiry before offering himself as a candidate.

Apropos of the recent discussion of reform in sacred song, the following is interesting:

I believe in raising the standard of church music as high as possible, always bearing in mind its true object. This object is twofold—edification and conversion; and corresponding to this twofold purpose there are two classes of church music, differing somewhat from each other and equally legitimate. Evangelists are practically unanimous that the same music will not suffice equally well in both branches of church work. It is a mistake to use the lighter evangelistic music in those services where the main object is edification. The constant and ill-timed use of this kind of music tends to the company of men who are profane or blasphemous, he can signify his disapprobation of their behavior either by open verbal rebuke or by leaving them.

S. D. J., Sheridan, Oreg. Has Lot's wife ever been found?

Professor Palmer writes that there is a singular pillar of solid salt, called by the Arabs Bint Sheikh Lot or "Lot's wife," and that one Arab legend says that this pillar of rock salt marks the scene of the transformation. Such a pillar was also found by an American party under Lieutenant Lynch. We make no comment on the tradition. The sin. If betrayed by his fleshly nature sin, he repents, seeks pardon, and waits against a repetition of it. 2. Better changing the phrase would be to change disposition. Christ said most emphatically that the person who would not forgive not expect forgiveness. See the Parable of the unmerciful servant (Matt. 18: 23-35).

Mrs. John J. J., Venedocia, O. I read in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a sermon on "Friendship," by Rev. Frank Talmage, remarked in it that "Caesar's wife was always in suspicion." What was her name, and what can I get her history?

Her name was Pompeia. She was involved in a charge against Clodius and Caesar divorced her; he explained that he did so because he believed her guilty, but because "Caesar's wife must not be suspected of crime," saying has passed into a word.

Reader, Norden, Neb. If nothing was made in vain, me to what practical use mastodon and other animals, whose skeletons have been found, could have been put?

Science tells us that remote ages (probably before antediluvian time) the natural conditions prevailing as to climate, moisture, etc., were such to conduce to vast growth in the animal world. It was a stage in development concerning which geological records are still very imperfect, and the animal type of which were afterwards modified into many of the leading types now existing. Thus we find the elephant as the descendant of the mammoth, and the beaver, walrus, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, and others, evolutions of their various gigantic forerunners.

Pablo V. The basis of the agreement or understanding between the Panama Junta and the United States, is that it is a duty to commerce and civilization to facilitate the building of the Isthmian Canal, at that the $10,000,000 to be received from the United States, be invested in behalf of future generations in the new republic. It now seems probable that there will be no further hostile movement by Colombia, and that an arrangement will be reached for allowing a fixed sum by way of compensation to that republic, for losses sustained through Panama's secession.

Mrs. J. Y. M., Bowling Green, Va. Where can I find the words in the Bible, "The wicked shall not live out half their days," or is there such a passage?

The passage is to be found in Psalm 55: 2.

Miscellaneous Questions

M. S., Morris Heights. Question too indefinite. Reader, New London, Mo. Consult a physician. H. D. G., Washington, D. C. We don't know the verses.

N. W. G., Forkland, Va. Turkey is our national bird for the table at all feasts, Thanksgiving included.

Student, Lenexa, Kan. Morley's Life of Gladstone, published by Macmillans, N. Y., is the latest and best.

W. S. P., Peoria, Kan. The necessities of the case, which you may not quite understand, compel the changes you speak of.

Mary S. Allen, missionary in Monrovia, Liberia desires to thank through this journal, all who have kindly responded to her appeal for aid.

E. A. Stone, Dolgeville, N. Y., asks some reader to send him the name of the author of the saying, "Happy is the country that has no history."

Reader, Spencer, Ia. 1. Columbus. 2. Doubtful. 3. Sometimes faint, sometimes brilliant. 4. It is impossible to state which general was the most popular at that time.

J. W. Cushion, Hennessy, O. T. 1. For answer to questions regarding Philippine Treaty, write to Department of State, Washington, D. C., for copy of treaty. 2. The District of Columbia is governed by Congress. Citizens do not vote. They own their property.

A STRANGE RELIGIOUS RITE IN ABYSSINIA

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL HAYWOOD, an English traveler in King Menelik's dominions, relates this interesting experience: "I was fortunate enough to be in Harrar during the stay of the Abyssinian Abuna or high priest, the head of their church, and was present at the priests' dance before him in the 'place' at Harrar, on the occasion of Feast of Epiphany. The high priest is a Copt, has a rich dark complexion, a peaked beard turning gray, and a handsome Eastern face, sleepy in repose. He was attired in a white striped purple silk jacket and tight white undergarments; an enormous purple velvet gold-embroidered cloak enveloped his entire body and neck, and must have been most suffocating, especially in the broiling sun which scorched us on the first day I saw him. He came up on a white mule surrounded by retainers; one held a huge umbrella over him, and others held the pommel and crupper of his saddle as he rode. The Abuna ranks next after Menelik, and is, therefore, a man of vast importance in Abyssinia. He seated himself in a chair under the shelter of a huge state umbrella and watched the ceremony with an unmoved eye. Near him, but on the ground, was seated Ras Makonnen, the governor of the province. The priests, dressed in white, and with high white turbans, played a monotonous sort of tomtom accompaniment to their dance, which consisted of backward and forward steps, a sort of chasse, all in unison. The drums on which the priests played were of different sizes and much the shape of the Indian tomtom. The crowd watched the performance with breathless interest, but the sameness of it all modified our regret when the Abuna rose from his chair and put a stop to the proceedings, and after an affectionate leave-taking of Ras Makonnen, mounted his mule and wended his way back to the white upper-storied building lent to him by the Ras during his stay at Harrar."

pervert our hymnology. Also, many critics fail to distinguish between these two classes of music. Some of them would go so far as to do entirely away with the Moody and Sankey style of music, even in the Gospel meeting, and replace it with the staid old hymns of the church. This would be a mistake; experience is against it. If we will keep these two classes of music and their uses distinct, the discussion concerning music reform will go on more intelligently, and the desired goal will be sooner reached. L. J. LUETHI, Jefferson, Ohio.

Dear Sir:—I received the premiums and handsome Calendar. My wife had never read Pilgrim's Progress. She is completely absorbed in it. I read it at ten years of age—am sixty now. The Crown Encyclopedia is a gem. I have kept track of events and people for the past forty-five years, and in looking over the books I find them a grand refresher of memory. J. A. CONNOLLY, New London, Conn.

A. C. T., Muscogee, Ind. Terr. The best badge a Christian can have is his conduct and example. If he should happen to be in Biblical passage concerning Lot's wife, is all that remains to us of the incident. Josephus, however, in his Antiquities (Book I, chapter 11), says of the pillar: "I have seen it, and it remains at this day." Clement, of Rome, also testified to its existence.

E. E. U., Keene, N. H. 1. Are not the two passages in the first Epistle of John 1: 8 and 3: 9 contradictory? In the former every one is represented as sinning, and in the latter it is said that whosoever is born of God cannot sin. 2. Would it be wrong for a person who cannot forgive a wrong, in reciting the Lord's Prayer to change the phrase about forgiving trespasses to "enable us to forgive," etc?

1. The statement in I. John 3: 9 has been variously interpreted. To suppose that none who sin are begotten of God would exclude every one, as John himself admits in the first passage you quote. One explanation is that the writer is speaking of the Divine nature implanted in the believer. It never commits or condones sin, but always protests against it. A second explanation is that the man who is begotten of God does not continue in

OLD LETTERS

GAZE upon you once again,
Fond records of the past!
And o'er the dim and faded lines
My tears are falling fast.

Did not think there yet was power
In these few simple words,
To stir within my quiet heart
Such old, familiar chords.

He loved, the lost, the changed, the dead!
All these you conjure up;
And mingle in the draught that lies
In memory's cherished cup.

Old letters! fond mementoes ye
Of friendship's shattered chain;
That the hands these lines have penned,
Mine own might clasp again! ANON.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

B. B. Mapleville, N. C. "I wish to express faith in God, and to acknowledge the many answers he has given to special prayers. Surely he hears the faintest cry."

M. C. Cloverdale, Cal. "I know God hears answers prayer, if we only trust and believe.
He answered many of my prayers."

A. A. Rock, Mass. "I want to acknowledge that I know God hears and answers prayer. Trust in him at all times."

L. C. Y., Wilmington, Del. "The Lord has heard my prayers so many times, I cannot refuse from acknowledging the blessings I enjoy.
Never I am in danger, I go to God in prayer, and he always helps me out of all difficulties, and gives me that sweet peace and consolation that God can give."

F. H., North Lubec, N. H. "I know that he hears our prayers. I have had several prayers answered, plainly and unmistakably, when I could not see my way out, and my heart is full of gratitude."

E. N., Denver, Colo. "I gladly testify to the wonderful goodness in answering prayer, and that ways are truly past our finding out."

M. H., Warren, Wyo. "I wish to express my praise to God for many prayers answered.
Several weeks ago I prayed to the Lord for help in a matter that was not immediate, but I kept on praying and he came."

M. H., Delta, Colo. "I have been in great trouble many times in my past life, and suffered I went to Jesus in prayer, pleading for deliverance, and help, and it came soon."

Der., Kansas. "I wish to acknowledge the Lord's goodness in answering prayers. I was in trouble, and prayed for help. He heard me, and always does."

Subscriber, Carthage, Mo. "I was sorely distressed, and I cried earnestly to the Lord for help.
He came to my rescue, just as he has done often before."

D. B., Elmira, N. Y. "The 'answered prayer' has always been a help to me, and I always for it, the first thing I do after I open the Bible. It always contains something which gives me special help and strength, and I want to add my praise, that the Lord always answers my prayers, and gives me help to do every duty he has laid upon me."

Der., Hallettsville, Tex. "I promised, if the Lord would hear me and grant me certain blessings, that I would acknowledge it to the world. I deem that promise, as he answered it in my life."

R., Greeneville, E. Tenn. "I find that God has answered my prayers many times, and I shall continue to trust him."

Subscriber, Cleveland, O. "Ever since a child I have had faith in prayer, and for nearly years God has answered my prayers, sometimes in wonderful ways. Pray on, he will always answer."

T., Oklahoma. "The Lord heard me and answered, as he has done before, in a wonderful way.
Praise him and will praise and bless his most loving name."

stant Reader, Hartford, Conn. "I wish to wedge an answer to prayer. My heart is with thankfulness, and I praise God for his faithfulness."

E. J., Detroit, Kan. "I wish to acknowledge that God has many, many times answered my prayers."

der., Coon Rapids, Ia. "God in his mercy has opened a very dark cloud from our home. 'Praise him from whom all blessings flow.'" acknowledgments of answers to prayer also been received from the following:

Green, Corinth, Mass.; Mrs. N. Everett,
Mrs. A. E. M., Pittsfield, Ill.; Mrs. S. J.
Zanes Mills; Mrs. E. H. Elliott, Pontiac,
Mich.; Mrs. Emma Gorham, Athol, Mass.; A.
L. Allegheny City, Pa.; W. G. C., N. Y. City;
da Starnes, Waco, Tex.; A. L. Merrill, Phil-la.; Mrs. E. L., Sayre, Pa.; Mrs. J. D. S., d, Neb.; Thomas Alldredge, Michigan City,
Constant Reader, New York; W. E. King,
N. J.; Wife and Mother, Plymouth, Ill.

"Four Little Maids"

Ms. R. N. P., of Cumnor, Va., sends the following pretty verses on our Calendar Pre-

Four little maids with gauzy wings,
With rosy cheeks and love-lit eyes,—
Did e'er before from chrysalis
Come forth such beautiful butterflies?
Whose was the thought, dear Dr. Klopsch,
This lovely Calendar to make?
Meetings to him, and every one,
Who of this Christmas gift partake.
And may THE CHRISTIAN HERALD live
As long as Time shall last, and send Kind words and deeds to every land,
And teach each man, man to befriend.

THE CORNISH PIANO

Catalogue Free (Handsome New Edition Just Out) tells how to save $150 to $250 if you buy your piano from the factory. Write us a postal—the penny spent will be dollars saved.

Catalogue shows
all styles

We appeal to those music lovers who will have the best and yet refuse to contribute to the enormous profits of retail dealers. We also appeal to those shrewd, successful, business people who can afford to pay any price they please for a piano, but who object to being "held up" for several profits. The economical instinct that leads to success will prevent such people from squandering $500 to $800 for a piano when the equal of any in the world can be bought direct from its maker for considerably less than half these figures. There is just as much quality, satisfaction, beauty and service in the Cornish Piano as can possibly be secured in any other, no matter what its price. It is as costly as any to make—you save, because (by our plan) it is less expensive to sell. The Cornish Piano is absolutely guaranteed for twenty-five years. The Cornish plan of selling direct from factory to home without the tax of middlemen's or agent's profits and commissions—without even paying high price, city store rent—must appeal to every thinking observer of the tendency of the times. We have 250,000 pleased customers located all over the world. We send you the names and addresses of thousands of them for reference.

Sent on a Year's Trial Free

Without any money in advance we will ship (freight prepaid) any Cornish Piano or Organ you may select and guarantee safe delivery. Test it for 30 days, and if it is not exactly as we represent it, or if you are not fully satisfied and do not believe it equal to any you can buy of local dealers for one-third to one-half more money, return it at our expense. If you buy, payment may be made in cash or easy instalments, as you prefer. Furthermore, we agree to refund the full amount paid us with 6 per cent. interest added if the instrument is not entirely satisfactory after a year's use in your own home.

If Cornish Pianos and Organs were not thoroughly good and reliable, would we dare bind ourselves to this contract as we do?

The Cornish Organs are known the world over for their wonderfully fine tonal qualities. The orchestral toned reeds and our special system of tuning and voicing, produce an effect so rich in melody and volume as to practically equal the pipe organ.

Cornish Organs are made in every convenient size and in handsomely carved and ornamented cases of richest woods. Like the Cornish Piano, these organs are sent on a year's free trial, sold at factory prices and guaranteed 25 years.

The Cornish Catalogue describes all styles of Cornish Pianos and Organs.

If You Cannot Play

and live in a locality where a music teacher cannot be employed, we will present to you free (if you request it when ordering piano or organ) a paid-up scholarship in a leading correspondence school, good for a complete course in music lessons by mail. By this plan a family music class can be arranged in the home with great pleasure and profit. Where a member of the family already understands music, he or she can be a guide to the others. Any one can understand the lessons. The only expense is for postage. Students buy music of the school at half rates.

Full particulars sent with the catalogue. By all means write us to-day.

THE CORNISH COMPANY, 27 Main Street, Washington, New Jersey

Washington Remembers "God's Poor" *

In the Midst of the Season's Gaieties, They are Not Forgotten—Merry Children's Parties at the White House—The Annual Reception

Copyrighted, 1906, Clumtist, Washington, D. C.

MRS. CHAFFEE

Wife of the Chief of Staff, U. S. A.

THE winter season at Washington thus far has been one of the gayest that the National Capital has seen in a generation. The appearance of the city proclaimed the holiday season, and in the windows of the homes, from the palatial residences out in the fashionable west-end to the tenements of the by-ways and alleys, the decorations gave evidence of social enjoyment. There was also a very general and concerted effort to remember "God's poor," those who, in many cases would not otherwise have had a comfortable, much less a merry, Christmas. The churches, the Associated Charities, and the Central Union Mission, (the two latter are the largest philanthropic organizations of the District), made a systematic canvass of the poorer sections of the city, and several churches and a large number of individual citizens, contributed generously to a fund which was to be used in sending substantial gifts to the deserving needy. The Sunday School of the Calvary Baptist Church, which has a membership of over sixteen hundred, had two entertainments, at which many gifts were distributed to the poor. Barrels of flour, potatoes, apples, and all kinds of fruit and vegetables, were contributed, beside bedding and clothing of every description, and the members of the school were supremely happy in learning how much more blessed it was to give than to receive.

But that which made the season pre-eminently pleasant and enjoyable in official life was the doings at the White House. There the happiness of the little folks is never overlooked, no matter what the pressure of other cares and duties. There was no happier family party in the land than that at the White House, and it radiated its happiness to others. The family reunion was complete. Miss Alice, who had been making a round of visits all the fall, returned home; the two older boys, Theodore and Kermit, came home from Groton on their vacation; little Ethel came in from the Cathedral College, in the suburbs, and the two youngest boys, Archie and Quentin were, as they always are, the life of the house. The five Misses Roosevelt, of New York, nieces and cousins of the President—the Misses Helen, Christine, Eleanor, Dorothy and Pansy—arrived also, and were entertained continuously both at the White House and by their friends in the city.

Mrs. Roosevelt had the historic mansion decorated with holly and other festive decorations from ground floor to garret, and the holiday season was entirely given over to the pleasure of the younger members of the family. Something new was planned for every day, but the culmination was reached in a Children's Party. Mrs. Roosevelt invited four hundred boys and girls, between the ages of six and sixteen—the majority of them from the official families—to come to the White House from four to half-past six o'clock. It was the first large party for children which has been given there since President Johnson gave a Christmas party for his grandchildren; but it was a wonderful success. The whole lower floor was thrown open to the young people, who, during the first hour, were seated in the East Room to listen to a short, comic pantomime musical programme. Then there were pleasant games, and a jolly time generally. Finally there was a delightful buffet supper, and when the fortunate little guests left, each was presented with a souvenir of the happy afternoon, which no doubt in future years will be treasured by their grandchildren.

The New Year's Reception at the White House—always the grand opening event of the winter in Washington—was more successful than any in recent years. The Mansion is now in an immaculate condition and perfect in its decorations and appointments. It was the first reception of its kind at which Colonel Symons, the new Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, has had charge, and he introduced several innovations that added to the comfort and pleasure of the occasion.

The reception began at eleven o'clock. The Marine and Fort Meyer bands were stationed in the front hall, and alternated in furnishing the music during the receiving hours. All the Diplomatic Corps were present in the gorgeousness of court dress, with their wives and daughters; also the Cabinet, the Supreme Court Justices, members of Congress, heads of Army and Navy, and of the various diplomats. The Cabinet ladies held afternoon receptions. Mrs. Root was the representative hostess of the Army, and Mrs. Dewey of the Navy. It was Mrs. Root's final public reception, as the Secretary's resignation takes effect this month, and Judge Taft is no route from Manila to take his place. Chaffee, whose husband now becomes Chief of Staff of the Army, assisted at Mrs. R. reception. Mrs. Chaffee, as wife of the Chief of Staff, will be the social leader of the circle. Mrs. Dewey's reception was also very brilliant affair. With a half dozen trons, she had a group of the most p society girls assisting her, and the house crowded the entire afternoon. The Ad stood in the drawing-room doorway and Mrs. Dewey welcomed their guests, who numbered almost three thousand callers.

LADY DURAND

Wife of the New British Minister

ABBY G. BAK.

THE PYROTECHNICS OF MRS. COOKE * CONTINUED FROM PAGE 67

the air, landed on the dock, and ran up the street, pursued by the jeers of those who had vowed eternal allegiance and obedience. Such is the fate of leaders.

Beppo's thoughts spelled: REVENGE. He had to think it out, and to do this he seated himself in a doorway to perfect his plans for "getting hunk." But even that was denied him. Barely seated, a gruff "Get out o' here," tore him from his revengeful reverie.

According to time-honored custom, the streets through which the returning excursionists would have to pass were being decorated with bunting and strings of lanterns. The men who had roused Beppo from his seat to place a stepladder there, had with them a pushcart holding several large, red boxes.

Beppo's scheming was superseded by his curiosity. What was in those boxes? When one of the men took a large armful of fireworks from one of the boxes and entered the store—a bakery—to leave the pyrotechnics with the proprietor to have them discharged at the return of the excursion, Beppo understood.

Their task finished, the men went on, and the baker, a sleepy German, returned to the rear of the shop to finish his nap.

Beppo saw an opportunity. Like a snake, he crawled into the store, and reappeared soon with his pilfered treasure.

There still were hours until nightfall, and the fireworks were too precious to be set off without an audience. They must be hidden somewhere, and there was no better hiding-place than Mrs. Cooke's. Tonight, ah, then he would show the "fellows" that he was still incomparable, and would strengthen his position with a blaze of glory.

To reach the tenement did not take long. Mrs. Cooke was still slumbering in the rocking-chair. To enter her apartments, Beppo had to wake her. Whispered the imp of mischief: "As long as you have to wake her, why not wake her effectively. Have your fun, and test the quality of your fireworks at the same time."

The "greaser" grinned with appreciation. Spreading his fireworks on the floor before him, he selected the most dangerous-looking specimen. It was a tube-like thing of the torpedo or giant-cracker kind, which rivals a cannon in noise. With great care he placed the miniature infernal machine under the chair of his benefactress. A match was quickly found, and he lit the short fuse of the torpedo, dried almost to a cinder by the heat of the day. The tiny spark ate its way so quickly that Beppo had no time to gather his scattered fireworks. He fled to the stairs leading to the upper floor to watch there the spectacle so ingeniously prepared.

Mrs. Cooke's smiles told of pleasant dreams. Pete was the central figure, and the mighty ones of the ward were doing homage to him. The women were looking at him with undisguised admiration and nudging each other: "That's Delia Cooke's husband! Ain't he grand? The children—"

"Boom!"

The thing exploded. With a pitiful wail Mrs. Cooke was thrown to the floor. Still on her knees, an inferno broke loose about her. The rest of Beppo's stock had become ignited, and crackers, sky-rockets and torpedoes, engulfed her in swishing, thundering, crackling cascades of blinding flashes. But before reason left her, she had one glimpse of a swarthy little face whitened into the paleness of horror.

The fearful din galvanized Da Bucci the father into action. He came bounding downstairs, kicking his crouching son out of the way. A pail and faucet were luckily at hand, and the water changed the fiery red of the squirming, writhing mass into murky, charred black. Showing excellent judgment for a "dago," Da Bucci wrapped Mrs. Cooke into blankets and placed her on the lounge. This done, he ran into the street for the usual panacea for all troubles—the policeman. Before the neighbors had learned of the occurrence, the ambulance had hurried away with that little handful of scorched and blackened humanity.

The day wore on and, at last, evening came, and the blare of the trumpets announced the arrival of the returning hosts. The tugboats gave their salute with screaming whistles, and the streets became a sea of light and noise. Not a house along the line of march was without some illumination.

It was great. But the greatest of all was the banner of the "Tom Hawley Association" carried, in strong and steady hands, by Peter Cooke. More than once the cry went up: "Hurrah for Peter Cooke, our standard bearer."

Pete was not insensible to the honor, and stepped out eagerly to get to the big tenement in Catharine, from where the face of his "little woman" would shine with joy at seeing him entrusted with the silken emblem in the midst of the great men of the ward.

At last he could see the windows, but they were closed and dark. He stared and stared until he encountered the eye of Da Bucci, senior. What he read there, made the proud banner of the Tom Hawley Association sink into the dust.

Da Bucci met him at the curb.

"You no go up. She no there. She in hospital."

"Hospital? What's happened, man?"

"We hurry up, and me tell everything," said Da Bucci, pulling Cooke along. "She sleep in da chair and catch fire from da crack. You know what is crack? Like dat, pish—bum, da fire-crack?"

That was all he would tell. All other questions were answered by the stereotyped "Me no know."

At the hospital, the surgeon would not permit them to see Mrs. Cooke.

"It is useless for you to insist," he said. "Your wife is now resting under the influence of opiates, and I am not going to have her chances impaired. We'll take good care of her, and perhaps in the morning you may be allowed to see her."

Pete did not go home. He spent the night in waiting in front of the hospital. In the meantime, the law had taken notice of the case. The policeman who had been called in by Da Bucci was an experienced man. After Mrs. Cooke had been removed, he investigated. The ashes in the hall told of their origin. Strange and mysterious are the ways of sleuths, and by what miraculous route they arrived at the result I do not know, but, finally, suspicion pointed to Beppo, and he became their quarry.

Pete, wearied by his long vigil, was dozing on the steps of the hospital. A tap on the shoulder woke him.

"Hello, Cooke," said the precinct detective. "Come on; I guess they'll let us in now."

They entered, and were permitted to step to the bedside of Delia Cooke, swathed in bandages, only her eyes and nose being visible. Pete stood speechless, while the tears welled from his eyes.

"Pete, man," she whispered, "sure it's nothing. Only a day or two, and I'll be cooking your supper as always."

"Mrs. Cooke," spoke the detective, "we got the little villain who caused this terrible calamity, and we'll hold him until you can appear against him."

She looked from officer to husband. "Did you understand me?" he asked again.

"Sure, I don't know what you mean. It was an accident, that's all it was."

The detective, nonplussed, whispered to Pete, and then left the room.

"Now, Delia, darlint, you know it's 'greaser' kid that put you on this bed pain," said Pete.

"Whist, man, be quiet. I know not at all about it, nor do you. And—Pete, even if I did know, would you me to have the buck arrested? He's only a boy and just as old as little girl—you know, Pete, the on heaven—would be now, and may be don't know no better. It's not his anyway, it ain't. It's his bringing and the bad boys on the block. A mind now—I ain't saying he done it."

Presently the detective returned, bringing Beppo with him.

"Now Mrs. Cooke," began the officer, "ain't this the boy that caused all this? She looked long, and not unkindly, 'poor, abused' Beppo, whose knees failing under him."

"Sure the boy wouldn't do that," whispered at last.

The policeman turned angrily to Beppo. "Come, now, tell the truth, or I'll you up for life. Didn't you do this?"

"Honest, I didn't do nothing," he how and was led away by the disgusted officer. Pete stared at his wife. "Why don't tell on the blackguard, Delia?" he asked.

She turned her head a little, sought hand, and whispered:

"May be it would be right to tel him, and may be it wouldn't. I have the mind, Pete, and the reason for figure it out, but I think I'm right. I was One who loved them all, the chi and He said nothing about the good bad, and it's not his fault, Pete, indee ain't, and if our young one was alive—oh, Pete, man, let's forgive him. It's the children that's to blame."

This pleading for Beppo, in whom saw just a fellow of the one she had brought a glow to the features of Delia Cooke, which obliterated all her blishes, and her smile told of a newer, perfect quiet. She did not move, but still and smiling, and the silence remained unbroken, Pete just sitting there. He in hand sat the partners until the night led him away, not yet knowing that peaceful life had been woven into fabric of eternity.

Delia Cooke knew naught about lav circumstantial evidence, and had harbored the comforting illusion that she had saved Beppo from a terrible fate. Of course she had been unable to do, and before she had been led away, Beppo on his way to the reform school.

JAN. 27, 1904

GOOD LIVING

BY

Mrs. Helen Armstrong.

The stomach is a slave that must accept everything that is given to it, but which avenges wrong as stylishly as any slave.—E. SONVESTRE.

THE theory that plain living induces "high thinking" maybe entirely correct, but little of it is seen in actual practice. Of all organs of the body, there is none so abused and mistreated as the stomach. Man's confidence in his individual constitution is such that even when pitted regarding food values and digestibility, he fancies himself an exception to a rule, and able to eat and drink anything, at any hour, with perfect impunity. There are a few fortunate mortals so perfectly constituted that they are not conscious of any digestive apparatus at all, so well does it perform its duties; but these people are painfully in the minority.

The worker in the field may consume large amounts of hearty foods, and thrive on such diet; but the large proportion of wage-earners to-day work less with the hands and more with the brains, and often under conditions which put fresh air at a premium. To such people a wise choice of diet is very needful. The food for the brain worker should be easy of digestion as well as of nutritive value and among such foods sugar plays an important part. Starchy foods are desirable, but sugar takes precedence over them, as it is more readily assimilated and less of a tax on the digestive system. A pure form of sugar is Karo Corn Syrup, a perfect product of the golden grain.

Irritability, general discomfort and ill humor are often the result of poorly chosen food, and to begin the day in such a way is a poor indication of what may follow. A hearty meat breakfast for any but hard workers (in the physical sense) is a great mistake, and will simply intensify conditions of mental dissatisfaction. As cold weather approaches, we look forward to the frosty morning when hot breakfasts of various sorts grace the early hour. The best accompaniment for these is hitherto been somewhat of a problem, and maple-syrup being hard to procure and also expensive, honey never really cheap, and the home-made syrups too variable in consistency and flavor.

"For griddle-cakes of all makes" Karo Corn Syrup has come to stay. It is pure, which means much to its consumers; it is of a novel and delicate flavor; it is more perfectly digested than a syrup from cane sugar, and is within the reach of the most modest purse. Is it any wonder, then, that its friends have enthusiastically christened it a "Jug of Joy?"

The child requires a heating food, and sugar, in suitable amounts, is especially adapted to the young, who will utilize it to their great activity. By the same reasoning, sugar is a desirable food for the old, who do not have enough exercise to keep up the bodily heat, and so can secure warmth and vigor in acceptable form.

Karo Corn Syrup is indeed a fine food for feeble folks, and many cases of malnutrition have been promptly cured by its free use.

According to the most approved dietitians, four or five ounces of sugar is a good proportion for the average daily allowance. We would do well to lessen the quantity of sugar on our cereals—which often is one source of fermentation on the stomach—and use syrup with bread and cakes of different kinds. In this way children may often be induced to eat the proper amount of bread, which by itself may not appeal to their tastes.

The coloring matter in cheap candies is often an injurious adulterant, and it is a wise economy to prepare pure confections occasionally at home, which may be easily done with Karo Corn Syrup as a basis.

The manufacture of this corn product is certainly a typical American industry, and when we consider that the "open-kettle molasses" is rapidly disappearing, and that there is not enough cane syrup to meet the demand; it is indeed well that corn syrup answers this so perfectly.

When we realize that fruits and vegetables will keep indefinitely in a rich syrup, we then appreciate that sugar is a fine preservative.

In earlier times, when sugar was neither cheap nor plentiful honey was more highly prized than it is to-day. Honey is wholesome in moderate amounts, but it is being hard pushed for popularity to-day by this new corn product. The adaptability of Karo Corn Syrup is remarkable, and the inventive housewife will find in these receipts only an indication of what may be done with this new product of America's grains of gold.

Mince Meat.

Three pounds of beef, boiled until tender and cooled in the liquor in which it was cooked, one and one-half pounds of suet, one peck Baldwin apples, one-half pound citron, one-half pound candied orange and lemon peel mixed. These ingredients are all to be chopped, and with the exception of the apples, may be prepared with the meat grinder, using the coarse cutter. When all are prepared and mixed, the other ingredients may be added in the following portions: Two pounds currants, three pounds raisins, one pound light brown sugar, one pint Karo Corn Syrup, one-third cup salt, one-fourth cup cinnamon, two tablespoons each cloves, allspice and mace, and a half tablespoon of pepper, three grated nutmegs, juice and grated rind of two lemons, half a gallon cider, one quart of meat liquor. Let all boil gently for half an hour, or longer, if too thin, and then add one-fourth cup each of vanilla and orange and two tablespoons of almond extract. Mix very thoroughly, put away in a cool place, and add a tablespoon of butter to each pie when placed in the crust.

Fruit Loaf.

Sift together three scant cups of pastry flour, a teaspoon each of soda and cinnamon and half a teaspoon each of mace, nutmeg and salt. Line a large loaf pan with buttered paper, dredge well with flour, shaking out all that does not adhere to the pan. Cream two-thirds of a cup of butter, and add the same quantity each of Karo Corn Syrup and light brown sugar. Mix in thoroughly half a cup each of currants, raisins and citron; also two well-beaten eggs. Then add the flour, with one cup of strong coffee. Bake in a moderate oven, with a pan of water placed below it for the first half hour or more to prevent the crust from forming too soon.

Colonial Pudding.

Measure one cup of oyster crackers after running them through the meat chopper, and pour over them a pint of hot milk. Add to this a quarter of a cup of cream and half a cup each of sugar and Karo Corn Syrup; also a scant cup of seeded raisins. When partly cooled add four beaten eggs, a little salt, and spice as preferred, and pour into a buttered baking dish. Have a slow oven and bake an hour and a quarter, stirring occasionally to prevent raisins from sinking to the bottom. Let a delicate crust form at the last and serve hot with sugar and cream.

Soft Gingerbread.

(without eggs)

Warm together half a cup each of brown sugar and Karo Corn Syrup, with a third of a cup of shortening. Remove from stove, add three-quarters of a cup of sour milk, and pour gradually into a bowl containing two cups of flour sifted with a tablespoon of ginger, a scant teaspoon of soda and a little salt. Beat thoroughly and bake in a moderate oven. Other spices may be added as preferred, cinnamon and cloves giving color as well as flavor.

Orange Tart.

Select a fine flavored, juicy orange, grate a little of the rind and add to the juice and pulp, which has been freed from all the inner skin. Heat one cup of water to the boiling point and thicken this with four tablespoons of Kingsford's Corn Starch mixed with a little cold water. Allow this to cook slowly for at least five minutes, then add two-thirds of a cup of Karo Corn Syrup, one tablespoon of lemon juice and the prepared orange. When heated through add three beaten yolks of eggs and remove from the fire, beating well until the mixture is smooth, light and partly cooled. Pour this into a crust of pastry baked to a delicate brown, and cover with a meringue of the three whites beaten stiff, sweetened with eight tablespoons of powdered sugar and flavored with lemon juice. Brown lightly and serve very cold.

Squash Pie.

To make a good squash pie much depends upon the consistency of the squash, and unless this is satisfactory one's efforts are often wasted. Sometimes the pulp proves so watery after being thoroughly steamed that a good pie is out of the question and, when the time for preparation is taken into consideration, it is often worth while to substitute canned squash. This may seem like heresy to the old fashioned housewife, but when a good brand is obtainable (and there are several such) is it not a justifiable saving of time as well as expense? If squash is dry and smooth after sifting, the following proportions will give good results: a firm, delicate pie with the real squash flavor. It should be baked in deep pie tins and have a glossy, inviting appearance when done.

Heat three cups of milk with a scant cup of Karo Corn Syrup, add two tablespoons of butter and mix with a pint of the prepared squash. Let this cool slightly, and add three well beaten eggs, one teaspoon of cinnamon and a half a teaspoon each of salt and nutmeg. Mix well, pour into two crusts and bake in a moderate oven until set.

Quick Graham Bread.

Place in the flour sifter one cup of white flour, two of graham (measured after sifting out the bran), five teaspoons of baking powder and one of salt. When sifted make into a rather stiff batter, with about two cups of milk and half a cup of Karo Corn Syrup. Beat well and pour into a loaf pan which has been greased and floured. Bake in a slow oven for forty minutes, covered during the first half of the time. This is an easy bread to make, and is wholesome even when eaten fresh.

Level measurements used in all receipts.

"Karo in the Kitchen," a new book of original receipts written for Karo Corn Syrup, will be sent free upon application.

If your grocer does not have Karo, please send us his name, and we will tell you where you can get it.

CORN PRODUCTS CO., NEW YORK AND CHICAGO.

Karo

CORN SYRUP

The Great Spread for Daily Bread

The new syrup with a new flavor that makes you eat—an appetizer that is nutritious and delicious. A pure, wholesome table delicacy, good for any stomach or any age, with all the goodness of the grain retained. A safe, reliable food article children love and thrive upon.

A Fine Food for Feeble Folks

Good for every home use—from griddle cakes to candy. Sold in airtight, friction-top tins, which make excellent household utensils when empty. Jellies and fruit can be put up in them with safety. 10c., 25c. and 50c. sizes, at all grocers.

CORN PRODUCTS CO.
New York and Chicago

YOU CAN BUY

Ivers & Pond PIANOS

By Mail

just as safely, as conveniently and with as much satisfaction as if you were present in person at our warerooms. The chances are you would get even a better instrument, as our trained experts take more pains than even you would yourself. Wherever no dealer sells them we sell direct from the factory to your home, and will send you a piano on approval, not to be retained unless entirely satisfactory, we paying railway freights both ways if it doesn't prove just what you want. We sell on easy monthly payments, practically allowing you to rent the piano till it is paid for. Ivers & Pond Pianos are of but one grade, the highest, and meet every demand of the most critical musician. Your name and we will send you our new catalogue and a personal letter with list of lowest prices. Write us to-day.

IVERS & POND PIANO CO.,
125 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

SEVEN SUTHERLAND SISTERS hair preparations certainly possess
GREAT MERIT

They are perfect in their action on the Hair and Scalp. Dandruff and Microbes cannot exist where they are used. They make and keep the Hair abundant, soft and lustrous.

Ask Your Dealer about it, and remember

"It's the Hair—not the Hat"
That makes a woman attractive

Squanto
the Pilgrims' Indian guide, was a queer character.

The Story of Plymouth Rock tells how he hoaxed the other Indians (and came near being tortured to death for it). This fascinating story-book about the Pilgrims, full of little engravings and larger color-pictures, contains many things of interest to Americans.

Send 6 cents in stamps to pay postage and get, with this handsome book, free, a full pint sample of the justly-famous Plymouth Rock (Phosphated) Gelatine. Or, send 15 cents and get the Pilgrim Book and a full-sized package of this Gelatine. Address Dept. 4.

Plymouth Rock Gelatine Co., Boston, Mass.

Learn to Knit

Send for the 104-page Columbia Book of Yarns. Worth a dollar. No other book at any price is so thorough, complete and beautiful. Begins with the simplest stitch and ends with the most elaborate garment, illustrating every stitch.

15 cents—a nominal price—at your dealer's, or send to Mrs. Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia.

100 VISITING CARDS Post paid 35c

Current styles and sizes. Order filled by express. Booklet "Card Style" Free! Also business, professional and fraternal cards. We have cards of emblems for all societies. E. J. SCHUSTER PEG. & ENG. CO., Dept. 36, St. Louis, Mo.

THE NARROW GATE

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "IN HIS STEPS"

CHAPTER XI.—Continued.

THE Mayor swore a terrible oath, and lashed out at Quits savagely. The whip fell on Quits' cheek and laid it open. The now maddened Mayor struck again and again. Quits standing in front of Douglas, who had leaped to his feet, received the blow on his face, the thong of the heavy whip cutting a gash over one eye. The third time the Mayor lashed out, but Quits caught the whip in his hand, pulled it away from the Mayor and threw it under the office desk. The next instant, before either Douglas or any of the pressmen, who came running in, could do anything, Quits had thrown his long arms around the Mayor and forced him down into a chair.

One of the pressmen picked the whip up from under the desk and handed it to Quits, as he let go of the Mayor and stood up, wiping the blood out of his eyes.

"Here, Quits! Give him—" the pressman said.

Quits mechanically took the whip as the man thrust it into his hand. The Mayor cowered down in his chair, a look of fear succeeding his look of hate.

Quits raised the whip and threw it out of the window, which was conveniently open just behind the Mayor. Everybody stared in a moment of the most intense stillness. Then the pressman who had handed the whip to Quits said, "Well, if that don't beat me, I'm Slug 50!" "Slug 50" was the pet name of the latest galley boy, who could make more blunders than any boy the Beacon office ever boasted.

The Mayor slowly rose, and said with a feeble sneer to Douglas, "The next time you won't get off so easy." The pressmen looked threateningly at him as he moved towards the door, but Quits elbowed them back and the Mayor sheepishly went away. Perhaps he divined in his poor contracted little thought that this act would cost him very dear. As a matter-of-fact, there was not a paper in the State that did not comment on the affair to the discredit of the Mayor. He never succeeded in living down the disgrace of it.

But the minute he was out of the office Douglas caught hold of Quits' hand. "Quits!" he said, "Old man, you ought not—Oh—why didn't you give him the lashing he deserved! And that blow—it will disfigure you for life! Oh, Quits—it was too much!"

Quits smiled as he let Douglas put him into a chair and wash off the blood:

"It's my fortune, Mr. Douglas, that I haven't any good looks to disfigure. You have, and so has your wife. I ought to have got the whip away from him before he struck. But when I saw him first he stood back of the angle of the doorway and I knew I couldn't reach his arm in time. It was the best I could do. Don't worry. It's all in the day's work, with all the rest that whisky has caused. I'm mighty glad he didn't hit you."

"I wish he had!" Douglas replied. There were tears in his voice. Quits understood. He said softly, while Douglas sponged away the blood:

"It's nothing, Mr. Douglas. Do you suppose I ever forget all you've done for me? If it wasn't for you I never would have found the Lord Jesus Christ. Do you think I mind these little cuts? What are they by the side of the joy of being a companion in His sufferings?"

"But don't you think you ought to have given the man a good whipping, when you had him in your power?"

"Vengeance is mine! I will repay, saith the Lord," quoted Quits. "Best leave him in the hands of God."

When Douglas told Esther the story of this affair, she broke down and cried over it.

"It seems to me, Frank, that we are always living in the midst of trouble over this law. Are we never to know anything but stress and fight and reform and all the rest?"

"It's the good fight of the faith, Esther," Douglas answered, with a sigh. "One of the hardest things about it all, of course, is taking sides in a cause where one must of necessity make enemies of fellow-townsmen. That is one of the bitterest cups I ever had to drink. I do not hate the Mayor. But he thinks I do. I hate his attitude as a nullifier of the law. He is an enemy of the home and of civilization. For him personally I have no feeling except that of good-will. But as long as the saloon continues to break down our Christian institutions I shall fight the Mayor in the Beacon, because he represents lawlessness, crime, disorder, and barbarism, as against Christianity. I cannot do otherwise, even if it cost us far more than it already has to enter this narrow gate of life."

"I know, I know, Frank," Esther spoke, smiling feebly through her tears. "I understand fully. But after all these years, I have been hoping so that there might be some end to all this trouble. Dear old Quits! To think of all the suffering his life contains, due to the drink and all its dreadful curses. Do you see any hope of any end to it all, Frank?"

"There is always hope, dear little woman, farther on. We're in good shape in Anderson county, just now. This decision against the Mayor will make property owners shy about renting anything to the jointists. There was a report about this morning that Jake Lawson had moved down into the Willows, because he couldn't find any place in town. The jointists are like rats hiding in holes. The power of the saloon is broken here if we can elect the right kind of officers."

"Do you think Jake Lawson will ever leave Colby? I'm afraid of that man. I'm afraid he will shoot you, or burn our house sometime."

Douglas smiled at his wife. "Don't worry, dear. I don't think there's much danger. He's a good deal more likely to get shot himself in one of the rows in his joint."

"But the Mayor—he's another enemy. Maybe he will do something to you," Esther astonished her husband by the first expression of timidity he had ever known her to utter. But when he thought it over he could not wonder at it. For nearly fifteen years they had lived at the very centre of exciting events, compelled to take sides in moral issues, making enemies of dangerous people, and living keyed up to a concert pitch in defence of a cause which was life itself to them. It was no wonder if Esther, feeling the strain of it all, especially as it began to assume physical violence to her husband, should cry out against it.

Douglas, however, laughed at the thought of the Mayor making another attempt. "He'll never get over his attack on Quits. Don't worry about that, little woman. And there's good cheer for the present. The county is well cared for. We can take time for a while to enjoy life in other directions. It's not fair to make it reform all the time. And if the President, in his next message declares himself, we will get such an impetus from that, that we won't get discouraged for twelve months. The rum business is on its last legs anyhow, and that is one reason it is getting so desperate."

Esther was comforted somewhat by this talk; but next morning Douglas smiled at her solicitude, as he started down to the office.

"Don't you think you ought to carry a

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

If You Are Looking for a perfect condensed milk preserved without sugar, buy Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream. It is not only a perfect food for infants, but its delicious flavor and richness makes it superior to raw cream for cereals, coffee, tea, chocolate and general household cooking. Prepared by Borden's Condensed Milk Co.

"ONEIDA COMMUNITY QUALITY"

SILVER PLATE TABLE WARE has the art value of the best sterling. The greatest care is used in selecting the designs and outlines of the various pieces. The ornamentation is rich and deep so that the ware has all the style and appearance of solid silver.

"Give Me the Remington" says the experience operator.

Remington Typewriter Company
327 Broadway, New York.

— JUST ISSUED! —
Devotional Songs
EDITED BY THREE FAMOUS COMPOSERS AND COMPILED

W. H. DOANE, MUS. DOG.
WM. J. KIRKPATRICK AND HUBERT P. MAH
It contains a larger variety of songs than any other hymn book of its kind ever published.
256 pages. Full Cloth Bound, 278 hymns.
$25 per 100; 30 cts. per copy, postpaid.
A returnable copy for examination will be sent on request.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York—Chicago

ARE YOU SATISFIED
with your present position and salary? If not, write us for plan and booklet. We have openings for Managers, Secretaries, Advertising Men, Salesmen, Bookkeepers, etc., paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. High grade exclusively.
HAPGOODS (Inc.),
Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York.

STORY-WRITING and Journalism taught by mail. MS. sold on commission to exclusive publishers and syndicate plan. Send for free booklet, "Write for Profit"; tells how. NATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION, 47 The Baldwin, Indianapolis

CHURCH FURNITURE. Pews, Assembly Chaises, Lutes, S. S. Seating, Largest Line, Latest Styles. Free Catalogue. MILBURN GRAND RAPIDS FURNITURE WORKS Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM
PAGE 80

horsewhip under your coat?" she said, half in earnest.

"Perhaps. Lend me yours! There's no danger. If any thing happens, I'll send George up to tell you."

"Do, that's a good boy."

"All right; there's no danger," Douglas replied cheerfully, as he kissed her goodby.

He had been at work an hour in the office, when George came in. Douglas said something in answer to a question about the forms, and George started to go out. He came back again and seemed to want to say something to Douglas, but lacked courage for it. He acted so queer that finally Douglas asked, "What is it, George? Are you in trouble?"

"Not exactly, Mr. Douglas," said George with a grin. "I—I am thinking of getting married, and thought maybe you could let me have a day off next week."

"What! Get married! You, George!" Douglas pushed back his chair and looked at him in amazement. He had not realized that George was out of his boyhood.

"I'm twenty-six, Mr. Douglas, and she's twenty-four."

"Who's she?" asked Douglas with a twinkle.

"It's Miss Lewis, of Clinton."

"What! You don't mean the daughter of Colonel Lewis, editor of the Clinton Mail?"

"That's her," said George, who never wrote ungrammatically, but sometimes spoke regardless of rules. "I've got her picture. Want to see it?"

He drew it carefully from an inside vest pocket. It was wrapped in tissue paper, and Douglas' eyes twinkled as George unfolded about a yard of the paper, and finally disclosed the picture of a good-looking young woman.

"Rhoda, that is, Miss Lewis, is all alone in the world. She hasn't anybody except me and her father," said George, growing suddenly confidential. "I got acquainted with her last winter, during the legislature." George had been in Clinton as correspondent for several papers. "Her father has been appointed as consul to Honduras, wherever that is, and has to start in two weeks. You know he's transferred the Mail to Judge Roberts. He's going out to Honduras for his health. They've been living in a hotel in Clinton."

"Who have?"

"Rhoda and her father. He is queer, you know. Some folks call him eccentric. He didn't just know what to do with Rhoda, and she didn't want to go to Honduras, so, when I told him I thought I knew a way out of the trouble, he seemed pleased. We can begin housekeeping here, and I have saved up enough to build something next spring."

"I congratulate you, George," said Douglas, heartily. "Why, it seems only yesterday that you were stumbling around the Beacon office, breaking your neck over the paper-trimmer and wasting the ink on your features! Remember that time you pied the forms, that day Coleman quit so suddenly?"

"Don't I!" George said with a grin, that brought back to Douglas the memory of the office-boy. "And the lunches Mrs. Edwards sent in? My! But that apple tasted good! I wonder if Rhoda can make apple-pie?" he added, contemplatively.

"Probably not," said Douglas, falling back into his old teasing habit that was common when George was a boy. "She has been living in a hotel all these years, and probably doesn't know any more about cooking than the author of a cook book."

George looked thoughtfully at Douglas.

"That doesn't scare me any," he said. "I would take Rhoda if she didn't know an apple-pie from a straw hat. Besides, we can buy most everything canned nowadays, Rhoda says."

"Canned apple-pie must be delicious," said Douglas.

"And there are more than twenty-seven different varieties of breakfast food," George continued. "Most of them are already predigested. All you have to do to them is to add boiling water and salt to taste."

"Breakfast food and kisses won't be bad for a month, George. Then you will sigh for ham and eggs, and coffee and doughnuts, and beefsteak and potatoes."

"Maybe Mrs. Edwards will send Rhoda in something once in a while, if we run short," George said with a smile.

He started to go out, but Douglas called him back.

"You haven't told me when the wedding is to take place, George."

"Sometime next week before the Colonel leaves."

"Where is it to be?"

George seemed embarrassed. "We've talked it over, and it didn't seem to us as if the hotel was just the place. So we were thinking of a church."

"What church?"

"The Methodist. The minister has a study in it, and we were going to ask him to marry us there. The Colonel is willing. He seems willing for most anything. I believe he thinks a good deal more of his consularship than he does of Rhoda. He seems kind of glad to get rid of her." George spoke with some indignation, as he started to go out again.

Douglas had been thinking, and called George back.

"I want you to go up to Mrs. Douglas with a message pretty soon, George."

"All right," George answered. "If we decide on Wednesday next week, Mr. Douglas, I suppose you can give me the day?"

"Have to, I suppose," Douglas said, smiling. And George went back into the pressroom whistling gaily, as if relieved of a secret that he had kept too long.

Douglas wrote to Esther:

"George is going to be married next week to Colonel Lewis' daughter, of Clinton. The Colonel is one of the queerest old men that ever lived, and has lately been appointed Consul to Honduras, where he is going for his health. Rhoda, the girl, is, from all I have ever heard, a sensible, good young woman, who will make George an admirable wife. They are planning to be married by the Methodist minister at Clinton, in his church study. The Colonel I know very well, and he is one of the most absorbed men in whatever is latest with himself. He will agree to anything his daughter wishes. Now, dear, we must have these young people married in our house. You talk it over with George, and persuade him that it is the only thing to do. I will write to Mr. Vernon. He is back in Leander, and is out of the active ministry, but is in good health for an old man, and I know he will be glad to come on for the ceremony."

"We'll have the Edwards, of course, and Quits, and the office force, and make George's wedding an event."

When, half an hour later, Esther answered the door-bell and saw George standing there, her heart leaped up in fear. Douglas, absent-mindedly, had forgotten all about his promise to send George up in case of an accident to himself.

"O, is he very badly hurt?" gasped Esther, clutching the door.

"What? Who?" George exclaimed, in bewilderment.

"Frank, Mr. Douglas! Tell me, George! Tell me the worst at once. Don't keep anything back!"

TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK

Pale babies become rosy and pretty babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food strengthens.

70 beautifully printed pages of helpful hints about "The Care and Feeding of Infants," bound in cloth, will be sent you free if you ask for it.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

PRAYERS

For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry. By Abbie C. Morrow. A New and Priceless Help to Spiritual Life. Invaluable to Christians everywhere. Gives aid to persons of all ages wishing to take part in prayer in public, also Prayer Meetings, Special Occasions, Family Prayers, Prayers in Sick Rooms, in Sunday Schools, etc., also the Prayers of eminent Christians. A Complete Guide to Devotion. Sent postpaid to any address. Fine cloth binding, gold side and back stamps, $1.00. Royal Purple cloth, silver back and side stamps, silver edges, $1.50. Beautifully bound in leather, gold edges, $2.00.

M. E. Munson, Pub., 27 Bible House, New York

Comfort at a turn of the valve is now within reach of all householders, even to the small cottager, by

Hot Water or Steam

Uniform heat, healthful heat, clean heat—no mixture of dust, ashes and coal-gases—is produced by

Ideal Boilers and American Radiators

They pay far higher dividends than gold bonds in the savings they effect in fuel, doctor bills, household cleanliness, in labor, in absence of repairs, etc.

Now as easily put into OLD BUILDINGS as in new—without inconvenience to occupants. Investigate at once—5 months winter ahead—apparatus can be put in without disturbing present heating methods until ready to start fire in the new. Advise us size and kind of building you wish to heat and let us send you, FREE, valuable information and booklet.

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY

Dept. 29.

CHICAGO

Absolute Range Perfection

Sold for Cash or on Monthly Payments.

$10 to $20 Saved.

Clapp's Ideal Steel Range

is not 50 per cent. better than others. My superior location on Lake Erie, where non-steel, coal, freights and skilled labor are cheaper and best, enables me to furnish a Top Notch Steel Range at a clean saving of $10 to $20. Send for free catalogues of all styles and sizes, with or without reservoir, for city, town or country use.

CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohio. (PRACTICAL STOVE AND RANGE MAN.)

THE "BEST" LIGHT

is a portable 100 candle power light, costing only 25c per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene, and cheaper than kerosene. No dirt. No grease. No odor. Over 100,000 lights lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted.

Agents Wanted Everywhere.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.,

3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, Ohio.

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package.

GLUTEN FLOUR

For DYSPEPSIA.

SPECIAL DIABETIC FLOUR. K. C. WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR.

Unlike all other flours. Ask Grocers.

For book or sample write

Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

For All Starching

from dainty laces to the heaviest pieces—for the best results—for the greatest economy, use

Kingsford's OSWEGO Silver Gloss STARCH

Its superiority shows in the results—purest whiteness, satiny finish, a stiffness that is flexible and elastic—not harsh and crackly. These are some of the points by which you know goods starched with this starch. It saves because a smaller quantity is needed. All grocers have it.

OSWEGO STARCH FACTORY
Oswego, N. Y.

Vapo-Cresolene

AN INHALATION FOR Whooping Cough,

Croup,
Bronchitis,
Coughs,
Grip,
Hay Fever,
Diphtheria,
Scarlet Fever,

Don't fail to use CRESOLENE for the distressing and often fatal affections for which it is recommended. For more than twenty years we have had the most conclusive assurances that there is nothing better. Ask your physician about it.

An interesting descriptive booklet is sent free, which gives the highest testimonials as to its value.

ALL DRUGGISTS.

VAPOR-CRESOLENE CO., 180 Fulton Street, New York.

ENTERTAINMENTS

MAGIC LANTERNS, STEREOPTICONS for illustrating sermons, giving entertainments, illustrating hymns. Finest collection of slides. Large catalogue FREE. MFG. OPTICIAN. McALLISTER 49 Nassau St. New York.

CHURCH SCHOOL

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Homeseekers Tickets

West and Northwest

Low round-trip rates to points in Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah and other points west, are in effect via the

Chicago & North-Western

Railway on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, with liberal limits and with stop-over privileges en route. Excellent through train service to all points west includes four trains a day Chicago to Omaha; three trains a day to Denver, Salt Lake, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Portland; four per day to St. Paul-Minneapolis; four per day to Sioux City; one per day to the Black Hills and similar ample service to points in Illinois, Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

For free books, maps and full information, including a copy of the "Northwestern Homeseeker" and "Opportunities for Business" address

W. B. Kniskern, Pass'r Traffic Mgr.
Chicago

NW59

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

A CHRISTIAN STATESMAN

Mr. John Morley's Biography of the Late Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone

HOW difficult it is to write the biography of a man so revered by his friends and so heartily hated by his opponents as was Gladstone, Mr. Morley evidently discovered, if he did not foresee. Many of the men who worked with Mr. Gladstone and those who opposed him, are still alive, and neither have lost since his death, any of the feelings which they had toward him while he was in power. That the book has been generally accepted as fair in the presentation of the man, and just and reasonable, is a splendid proof of the honesty and independence of the author. That it should be without bias, was not to be expected. In his later years Mr. Gladstone found in Mr. Morley a loyal supporter, when the number of such supporters had greatly diminished, and also a warm admirer and personal friend. "I should be heartily sorry," says the biographer, "if there were no signs of partiality and no evidence of prepossession." He writes in a spirit of respectful and affectionate remembrance, and may be pardoned for omitting, or passing lightly over, some matters, that an enemy would have made conspicuous in the portrait, and even a sincere friend would have found it difficult to defend.

It may be said, however, in justice to the hero, that the task was made easier for the biographer, by the courageous frankness with which Mr. Gladstone admitted his mistakes, and openly and publicly declared that he was ashamed of the course he had taken. In more than one instance, he deplored his own previous attitude, and acknowledged that he had been wrong. From a man who had been in Parliament for more than sixty years, and during the greater part of that time in the position of a recognized leader, first on one side and later on the other, such errors must be expected; but in few public men has been found the nobility of so unqualified an admission. Mr. Morley was consequently relieved of the task of justifying some public acts, and of explaining how it was that at one period of his life Mr. Gladstone took a course diametrically contrary to principles to which he had pledged himself at an earlier period. Doubtless his work will be annotated by Mr. Gladstone's friends, as it certainly will be by his enemies; but by an impartial reader, it will be pronounced a great and difficult task right ably performed.

In no feature does Mr. Morley's portraiture display more tact than in dealing with Mr. Gladstone's religious principles. It is well known that Mr. Morley is widely separated from his hero in these matters. It would not, however, have been possible to write Mr. Gladstone's life without recognizing how potent was the influence religion exerted over his character and conduct. Mr. Morley clearly perceived this fact, and though he could not sympathize with Mr. Gladstone's position, he has given the religious side its full weight. He says, "Mr. Gladstone cared as much for the church as he cared for the state; he thought of the church as the soul of the state; and he was sure that the strength of a state corresponds to the religious strength and soundness of the community, of which the state is the civil organ. . . . Not for two centuries had our island produced a ruler in whom the religious motive was paramount in the like degree. . . . Lord Salisbury called him 'a great Christian,' and nothing could be more true or better worth saying. He not only accepted the doctrines of the Christian faith, as he believed them to be held by his own communion; he sedulously strove to apply the noblest moralities of it to the affairs both of his own nation and of the commonwealth of nations."

How sincerely and how earnestly Mr. Gladstone made religion a prime factor in his life, appears from the following entry in his diary, written when he was twenty-one years of age: "In practice, the great end is, that the love of God may become the habit of my soul, and particularly these things are to be sought: The spirit of love; of self-sacrifice; of purity; of energy." These volumes give what is probably to many persons the first knowledge that Mr. Gladstone's early desire was to become a clergyman. In his twenty-second year, in a letter to his father, he declared his conviction "that his duty, alike to man, as a social being, and as a rational and reasonable being to God, summoned him with a voice too imperative to be resisted, to forsake the ordinary callings of the world, and to take upon himself the clerical office." That desire, as we know, was overruled, and there were clear providential indications that his call was to a public career. It is plain, however, even to those who differed with him diametrically, that Mr. Gladstone obeyed his conscience in every act of his public life, and did in all

CONTINUED ON PAGE 85

*In three volumes; 1,968 pages, with portraits and illustrations. Price $10.50; published by the Macmillan Company, Fifth Avenue, New York.

A New Year Suggestion

Start 1904 Right

Strength, energy, mental force and strong nerves are necessary for your success in 1904.

Better have a food that will supply these requirements.

Pettijohn's Flaked Breakfast Food is the food for you.

Guaranteed not pre-digested, but quickly and easily digested by you.

Pettijohn is easily home cooked. Served hot and tempting.

$10,000.00 in Cash Prizes

Read Carefully the Coupon in each Package.

5% ^{and} Safety

Will you invest your money and "suppose" it is safe, or will you take 5 per cent. and know it is safe? Every dollar invested through this Company is secured by suburban home property (the best security in the world) and partial payments are made by the borrowers monthly. Testimonials and complete information will be sent promptly on request. Write us.

5 per cent. per annum—quarterly, by check. Withdrawal at your pleasure, and full earnings paid to you from the day your funds were received.

ASSETS, $1,700,000
SURPLUS & PROFITS $175,000

Under New York Banking Department Supervision,
INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.,
110 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

GOLD FEET

are banished. Warm feet induce sleep. The most comfortable thing you ever put foot into is

McFarlan's Slumber Slipper

Will keep the ankles warm. Worn in bed and out. Made of a handsome fleece-lined knit fabric; tops beautifully embroidered with silk. Dainty colorings. Send size of shoe.

TWO PAIRS FOR 25c.—POSTPAID

Different sizes of slippers for men, women, children

McFARLAN MILLS, 40 Harvey Av. Amsterdam, N.Y.

Individual Communion Outfits.

Send for FREE catalogue and list of users.

SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO.
Box 7, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

FREE TO AGENTS

Patented knife cuts home as well as table. $2 outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N.Y.

BE A PROOFREADER

learn at home. Women receive same salaries as men; positions open. Send for free booklet, "Practical Proofreading"; tells how.

National Press Ass'n, 47 The Baldwin, Indianapolis.

THE HOUSEWIFE

A Handsome Cloth Bound Book Absolutely FREE

The Most Practical and Most Helpful Household Publication in America

Nothing Frivolous, nothing Trashy, but Sensible and Wholesome Entertainment and Instruction for the American Housewife and her Family. Among the contributors to the columns of THE HOUSEWIFE may be found the following well-known names:

MARY E. WILKINS, ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, AMANDA M. DOUGLAS, SOPHIE SWETT, MARION HARRIS, MARY A. DENNISON, ELIZA R. PARKER, ANNIE H. DONNELL, MARY R. P. HATCH, MARY LOWE DICKINSON, ROSE HARTWICK THORPE, CLARA AUGUSTA and EMMA C. DOWD.

A Cloth Bound Book FREE.—In order to more thoroughly introduce THE HOUSEWIFE, we will send it for one full year, together with your own selection from the following list of intensely interesting books, for only Thirty-five Cents. These books are all by famous authors and are handsomely bound in attractive cloth covers, stamped in silver or ink, and some contain nearly 400 pages, 16mo. The list of books is as follows:

A Day of Fate. By E. P. Roe.
Miss Lou. By E. P. Roe.
Found Yet Lost. By E. P. Roe.
Between Two Loves. By Amelia E. Barr.
A Daughter of Fife. By Amelia E. Barr.
Gipsy's Year at the Golden Crescent. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.
Jan Vedder's Wife. By Amelia E. Barr.
A Squire of Sandalside. By Amelia E. Barr.
Border Shepherdess. By Amelia E. Barr.
A Bow of Orange Ribbon. By Amelia E. Barr.
An Original Belle. By E. P. Roe.
The Wedding Ring. By T. DeWitt Talmage.
Recitations for the Social Circle. By James Clarence Harvey.
The Land We Live In. By Henry Mann.
For Mothers and Daughters. By Christine Terhune Herrick.
A Brave Little Quakeress. By E. P. Roe.
His Sombre Rivals. By E. P. Roe.
A Young Girl's Wooing. By E. P. Roe.
Holiday Stories. By Margaret E. Sangster.
How to Succeed. By O. S. Marden.
Fun for the Household. By Emma J. Gray.
Stories of Life and Love. By Amelia E. Barr.
A Hornet's Nest. By E. P. Roe.
Love for an Hour is Love Forever. By Amelia E. Barr.
Turning Points in the World's History. By Henry Mann.

Until quite recently these books have been obtainable only in higher-priced editions. Any one book and a subscription for a year, for only Thirty-five Cents. Remit by P. O. Order, or Express Money Order; stamps taken if either cannot be procured. Satisfaction positively guaranteed. Address

THE HOUSEWIFE, 56 Duane St., (P. O. Box 1198), NEW YORK

I SELL REAL ESTATE NO MATTER WHERE IT IS

Do you want to sell your real estate? Do you want to sell it quickly and with the least possible expense? Do you want to sell it at a reasonable price instead of sacrificing a good portion of its value? Do you want it sold without publicity? If these are your wants, I can fill them. For eight years I have been filling these wants for people in every section of the country. The result is the largest real estate brokerage business in the world. Isn't that proof that I have been filling my claims and isn't it sufficient evidence that I can sell your property? Sit down right now, and send me a description of your property, including your lowest cash price. I will then tell you frankly just what I can do for you and how and why I can do it. It doesn't matter what kind of a property you have, where it is located, or what it is worth. Just send me a description, to-day. If you want to buy any kind of a property, in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.

W. M. OSTRANDER, SUITE 161, NORTH AMERICAN BLDG., PHILADELPHIA.

The care of the teeth

Should begin in infancy. Strong teeth and healthy gums insure good digestion and consequent good health:

Rubifoam

does it; hardens the gums, keeps the mouth sweet and clean. Easy for children to use. 25c. per bottle at Druggists.

Valuable booklet on the Care of the Teeth.
Address
E. W. HOYT & CO., - LOWELL, MASS.

THROUGH GOLDEN GATE PARK.

A drive through Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, is a perfect delight, and is almost worth the trip across the continent to experience. All the beauties of the Pacific Coast, of climate and of scenery, are reached directly and quickly by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL LINES

and their connections. No other country surpasses ours in natural beauty.

A copy of the New York Central's "Four-Track Series" No. 5, containing a new map of the United States, of North and South America, and our new possessions in the West Indies, will be sent free, to any address, on receipt of a two-cent stamp, by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, New York Central Railroad, Grand Central Station, New York.

Clergymen

and others having money to invest safely and profitably, whether in large or small amounts, should write the Pittsburgh Bank & Savings of Pittsburgh, Pa., for a copy of their new booklet, No. 18. It gives full particulars about the bank, its new plan of money saving, safe investments, Banking & Mail, etc. This bank is one of the strongest, most stable and conservatively managed financial institutions in the country. It was founded in 1862 and its Assets are in excess of $14,000,000.00. It receives on deposit any sum from $1.00 up and pays Four per cent. interest, compounded twice yearly.

Mount Mellick Linen Doily Pattern FREE

No work to do.
No money to send.
Selected with the same care with which we select all our fine ready-to-wear ladies' garments, and sent to you with our compliments.
Just write to us for it. That's all

Sarland's
LADIES' CLOTHING STORE
Dept. F ST. LOUIS, MO.

FREE TO LADIES

Address of three friends who wear corsets, and give, absolutely free, our Boston Hygienic Dip for lengthening waist and holding skirt.

Don Hygienic Corset Co., 14 Winter St., Boston, Mass.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 84

things, the thing that at the time he believed to be right. One significant entry in his diary, shows the intensity of his religious life. He writes:

"One conclusion has been much on my mind—it is the importance and necessity of prayer—of the life of obedience and self-sacrifice. May God use me as a vessel for his own purposes, of whatever character and results in relation to myself. May the God who loves us all, still vouchsafe me a testimony of his abiding presence in the protracted, though well nigh dormant life of a desire, which, at times, has risen high in my soul, a fervent and a buoyant hope that I might work an energetic work in this world, and by that work (whereof the worker is only God), I might grow into the image of the Redeemer. It matters not whether the sphere of duty be large or small, but may it be duly filled."

To the American reader, these personal traits, and the reminiscences of his youth, which Mr. Gladstone wrote for his biographer's use, will be of more interest than the story of the vicissitudes of English Parliamentary life which have become matters of history. It was, however, inevitable that the greater part of the biography of a man so prominent in national affairs and for so long a time practically the ruler of his country, must be taken up by his official acts. Especially was this so with Mr. Gladstone, because he threw himself so unreservedly into politics and less than most politicians allowed himself the recreations of society. He was thoroughly in earnest, indeed his critics said, so desperately in earnest that his party could not bear the pace he set, and were secretly glad when his defeat compelled him now and again to retire from office for a time and give them a rest. He was an indefatigable worker to whom fatigue seemed to be unknown, and even after long and exhausting labors would rise to his feet in the House of Commons and make a long speech with as much force and freshness as if he had been enjoying a vacation. Prof. Goldwin Smith relates one of his own experiences with him, in which Gladstone, having sat up very late over a bill, worked with him from ten in the morning until six in the evening, when he went to the House, sat through a seven hours' debate, and made an exhaustive speech of considerable length beginning at one the next morning.

His entrance into public life was the result of a speech against reform, which he made while a student at Oxford. It was delivered at the University debating society, and was so vigorous and impassioned a defence of existing institutions, including the representation in Parliament of little boroughs, which were notoriously owned by the great landowners, that the Duke of Newcastle, one of these proprietors, at the suggestion of his son, who heard the speech, offered Mr. Gladstone a nomination for Newark, which was equivalent to an election. Mr. Gladstone accepted, and was duly made a member of Parliament. It is extraordinary that a man, who in his old age was regarded as the most dangerous and advanced of Radicals, should, at the age of twenty-three, have entered Parliament as an inveterate Tory. Not more strange was it that the most valiant champion of the Established Church, as he was in his early manhood, should have lived to incur the hatred of churchmen by disestablishing the Irish Church.

Sir Robert Peel, who was then Premier, recognized the ability of the new recruit, and gave him the office of Vice-President of the Board of Trade. No office, one would have thought, would have been more uncongenial to the profound classical scholar, but Mr. Gladstone settled down to the study of commercial affairs with such intensity that he soon became master of his subject, and proved the most successful finance minister of his time. When he rose to the chief office of the Department, his annual financial statements were listened to even by his opponents with admiration and delight. By that time Mr. Gladstone had definitely separated from the Tories, and after refusing to take office under Lord Derby, joined a Whig Cabinet. The popularity of his financial policy increased under successive Premiers, and when Lord Palmerston died, he became the leader of his party in the House. Three years later, at the age of fifty-nine, he rose to the highest office, and was the head of the Government. Four times, during the next quarter of a century, he was Premier, the last time in 1892, when he was eighty-three years of age. Even then, his vigor, and eloquence, and energy, had in no degree abated. His proposal to grant Home Rule to Ireland, however, had alienated the leaders of his party; even from his colleagues, with the solitary exception of Mr. Morley, he received but half-hearted support, and, weary of the disaffection, and conscious of his inability to carry out his measures, afflicted too, with deafness and failing eyesight, he, in 1894, laid down his office, and after sixty-one years of service in the House of Commons, retired to private life. Four years later, he died at the age of eighty-nine, a statesman whose work had done more than any other Premier in the century to mould the life of the nation.

LIST OF SUBJECTS comprising the set
Size of each mounted,
20 x 25 inches

1. THE MILL. By Ruysdael
In the Amsterdam Gallery.
2. SPRING. By Corot
In the Louvre, Paris.
3. PLOUGHING. By Rosa Bonheur
In the Luxembourg Gallery.
4. THE LIFEBOAT. By Harquette
From Salon.
5. REMBRANDT AND WIFE. By Rembrandt
In the Berlin Gallery.
6. THE COURSHIP. By Volkart
From Munich Gallery.
7. SHEEP IN SNOW STORM. By Schenck
Metropolitan Museum, N. Y.
8. BRINGING IN THE COWS. By Dupre
Owned by French Government.
9. LISTENING TO THE FAIRIES. By Boudenhuisen
In Private Collection.
10. DUCHESS OF DEVONSHIRE. By Gainsborough
Owned by J. Pierpont Morgan.

Copies of Master Paintings

An Offer Saving Over One-Half

After supplying our members and patrons we have left on hand a few sets of our superb reproductions of famous paintings done in carbon-tint. These sets we have decided to use as a means of bringing us in touch with art lovers and persons who appreciate artistic things generally. The entire set at once will be

SENT ON APPROVAL

A fragment of "Ploughing."

If Found Satisfactory After Receipt of Picture Send $1.00

And $1 a month hereafter for 5 months. Each picture is prepared for framing on mounts especially made for them or can be used unframed, a custom now much in vogue. They will make splendid gifts for weddings or birthdays. The originals are conceded the ten most famous paintings in existence. Inferior copies sell in art shops for $5 each copy.

FREE If you mail us the blank opposite at once, we will include in your package a set of 4 Additional Pictures hand-printed on genuine Japan vellum, mounted, 20 x 25 inches (formerly sold for $100 each), free of expense.

Name.....
Address.....

CONSIDER THE EVIDENCE

WHEN you are called upon to erect a memorial, large or small, consider the fact that marble has proved such a failure that some cemeteries now prohibit its use. Consider the fact that granite is very expensive, gets discolored and moss-grown, cracks, crumbles and decays. It is a sure burden of expense in future years if you try to keep it in repair.

THEN CONSIDER

that White Bronze is positively more enduring than any stone; that it is far more artistic and beautiful, and that it is less expensive.

WE WILL SEND THE EVIDENCE

if you will simply write us stating about what expense you anticipate in case of purchase. Our designs and prices will speak for themselves. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Distance is no obstacle. Write at once. Special inducements on Winter orders.

$100,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years, and everyone delighted. AGENTS WANTED.

ADDRESS: THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-90 HOWARD AVE., BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

$30 Church Money

No Investment. No Risk. Send no Money.

If you wish to raise money quickly and easily for any church purpose send us the photographs of your church and your pastor and we will reproduce them, together, in carbon photography on 20 satin finished, aluminum pin trays (six times size of cut) and send them to you express prepaid. Everybody wants this exquisite souvenir of church and pastor and your members quickly sell them at 25 cents each. Our whole charge, $20.00, is payable only when received from sale of souvenirs. You keep $30.00 for your cash profit. Send photographs (any size) and names to-day. Write and learn success of others.

NEW METHOD CO., 1060 E. 60th St., CHICAGO

FREE SAMPLE TRAY ON REQUEST.

5% Your Money 5%

WORKS WHILE YOU SLEEP

IF INVESTED WITH THE HARBOR AND SUBURBAN BUILDING
AND SAVINGS ASSOCIATION
(Organized 1888)

21 E. 14th St., N. Y. City.

Dividends 5% Per Annum

Send for descriptive pamphlet giving full information.
Under supervision New York State Banking Department.

PETER MOLLER'S COD LIVER OIL is scientifically prepared under the most improved method, insuring cleanliness in every detail of manufacture, and consequently is

PURE—SWEET—DIGESTIBLE.

No disagreeable taste or odor and Always Produces Satisfactory Results.

Sold only in flat, oval bottles, bearing name of Schieffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents.

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "OCULAR SCOPE," the latest invention of the 20th century. SENT FREE, with our beautiful illustrated catalogue of spectacles and eyeglasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Send to-day.

Grand Rapids Wholesale Opticians,
402 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

YOU WEAR STOCKINGS

SAVE MONEY AND WEAR MUCH FINER UNES. BY ORDERING THEM DIRECT FROM THE MILL. ORDER TODAY. MONEY BACK IF NOT SATISFIED. 3 PAIRS FINEST EGYPTIAN LACE GAZZES FOR $1.00 OR LATEST OPENWORK DESIGNS. POSTAGE PREPAID. GUARANTEED FAST BLACK. BOOZER FREE. CHESTER MILLS 14 JOHN ST. NEW YORK. LARGEST MANUFACTURERS OF FINE HOSIERY IN U.S.A.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years
LARGEST Nursery.
FRUIT BOOK FREE. We PAY CASH
WANT MORE SALESMEN. STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N. Y.; etc.

This Book Is Free

It Tells You About a System of Handling Figures With Lightning Rapidity.

One Thousand Copies Will Be Given Away to Those Who Apply First.

This book tells about marvelous methods of shortening calculations; methods that simplify the most difficult business problems and sometimes make it possible to do the work of an hour in the space of a minute. It is from the pen of a man who has devoted his life to the subject of rapid and accurate calculations. He is known throughout the United States as the foremost calculator of the day. Every man should calculate quickly and with ease. Every business man must calculate. Often a certain calculation must be made mentally and instantly if you would take care of your own interests. By our improved methods you see results without effort. You multiply, add, subtract and divide fractions or whole numbers with marvelous ease. The methods introduced by this book will revolutionize figuring and arithmetic for you. You can learn at your own home with little effort and without loss of time. If you are an office man, the result will be seen in your pay envelope. The man who figures accurately and rapidly can do three times as much work as the one who uses ordinary methods. Unless you know all about figures that you want to know, unless you are accurate in every calculation, you cannot afford to be without this information. It costs you nothing to write for the book, it is free; it may cost you a good position or a valuable promotion to neglect this opportunity. Address

Commercial Correspondence Schools, 3314 School Bldg., Rochester, New York.

We give 110 Premiums to quickly introduce our New Easy-to-thread, Gold Eye Needles. Send us your name and address. We will send you 2 doz. packages of Needles and 1 doz. Silver Aluminum Thimbles, postpaid, with large premium list. You sell the Needles at 5c. a pkg. and 10c. each person that buys 2 pkgs. you give a THIMBLE FREE. Your success is certain. When needles are sold, send us the $1.20 and we will send the Premium you select and are entitled to. If you order at once we will give extra Present FREE. Address, GLOBE NOVELTY CO., Box 561, Greenville, Pa.

GOOD REASONS:—Best materials. Most skillfully put together. Strongest, simplest, easiest, evenest. Never tears the shade. Improved HARTSHORN Shade Roller. None genuine without the signature Stewart Hartshorn

HEALTHY TREES Free from disease. Honest in quality. Grafted Apples, 5/4c. Budded Peaches, 6c. Budded Cherries, 20c. Good varieties. Concord Grapes, $3. per 100. 1000 Ash $1.20. B. and H. Locust, Rus. Mulberry, &c. Low price. We pay freight. Catalog free. Calbraith Nurseries, Box 82 Fairbury, Neb.

MEN AND WOMEN OF MONEY Write for my FREE BOOK about Missouri—her wealth, laws, and 5 per cent. Farm Mortgages—printed in colors—profusely illustrated. FREE. WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 5 Wardell Bldg., MACON, MO.

Reduced Rates on Household Goods to or from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Helms Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St. Chicago

The Judgment-Seat

The Order in the Series of Judgments
BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THERE are people who ask how there can be a judgment-seat of Christ, when we are explicitly assured that God's children will not be brought into judgment. But Paul says (II. Cor. 5: 10, R.V.): "We must all be made manifest before the judgment-seat of Christ; that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad." And it is very striking how the previous verse speaks of our being "well-pleasing unto him." There is no mention here of great, open sins, such as murder, stealing, drunkenness, swearing and such like; it is a question of being well-pleasing to him. I have met with people who, falling back on the Word in John 5: 24, have believed there is no judgment at all for God's children: they think because they are converted they are to go scot-free; that they will not be brought into any kind of judgment. "Verily, verily," I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth him that sent me, hath eternal life, and cometh not into judgment, but hath passed out of death into life." "Now," they say, "how can there be a judgment-seat of Christ, and one before which the Apostle Paul is to stand, if Christ himself says 'that he that heareth his Word and believes it, shall not come into judgment?'—it looks so contradictory." What is this judgment in John 5: 24? Surely it must be the judgment where the wicked shall be judged. We read in Rev. 20: 11, about the Great White Throne. Who are they that stand before the Great White Throne? Mr. Lowe points out to us that only the dead stand there; the judgment of the quick, or living, is previous to, and the judgment of the dead is after, the thousand years of Christ's reign on earth. Rev. 20: 10, 11: "When the thousand years are finished, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison... And I saw a Great White Throne, and him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them." Only the dead, no others, stand before that judgment-seat.

The judgment of the living on earth is "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the angels with him. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." (Matt. 25: 31-44). I once thought that meant heaven, but it does not; it means the kingdom Christ is coming to set up on earth.

But you may say, "What is to become of those who were righteous, and lived before the time of the thousand years?" Turn to I. Thess. 4: 16, 17. Speaking of Christ coming again, we read: "And the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." The righteous dead will be raised again, when the righteous living are taken away to meet the Lord in the air; those who are left pass through the tribulation. The righteous will enter into the kingdom, and the wicked dead will not rise until after the thousand years, and then they will be judged all by themselves at the judgment of the wicked, where the question will be whether their name is in the Lamb's Book of Life.

In II. Cor. 5: 10, we come to the judgment-seat of Christ; it is only mentioned twice in the Scriptures, once here and once in Romans 14: 10. What is this judgment-seat of Christ? Isn't it just like a Father not to judge his children before the servants or strangers? The Father takes his children into a private room, and speaks to them there. The loving husband will not reprove his bride before servants or strangers. And the Father's judgment takes place only where the family are present; but he does judge us. "We must all be made manifest before the judgment-seat of Christ; that each one may receive the things done in the body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Whatever has been misrepresented here will all come to light; whatever is not right must be put right then, and we shall be rewarded according to our works.

Deafness Overcome in Young and Old

Louisville Man Originates a Simple Little Device That Instantly Restores the Hearing—Fits Perfectly, Comfortably, and Does Not Show.

190-PAGE BOOK FREE TELLS ALL ABOUT IT.

Since the discovery of a Louisville man it is no longer necessary for any deaf person to carry a trumpet, a tube, or any such old-fashioned device, for it is now possible for any one to hear perfectly by a simple invention that fits in the ear and cannot be detected. The honor belongs to Mr. George H. Wilson, of Louisville, who was himself deaf, and now hears as well as any one. He calls it Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drum, is built on the strictest scientific principles, containing no metal of any kind, and is entirely new in every respect. It is so small that no one can see it, but, nevertheless, it collects all sound waves and directs them against the drum head, causing you to hear perfectly. It will do this even when the natural ear drums are partially or entirely destroyed, perforated, scarred, relaxed, or thickened. It fits any ear from childhood to old age, and, aside from the fact that it does not show, it never causes the hearer irritation, and can be used with comfort day or night.

It will overcome deafness in any person no matter how acquired, whether from catarrh, scarlet fever, typhoid or brain fever, measles, whooping cough, gathering in the ear, shocks from artillery, or through accidents. It not only overcomes, but stays the progress of deafness and all roaring and buzzing noises. It does this in a simple, sure, and scientific way. The effect is immediate.

Let every person who needs this at once send to the company for its 190-page book, which you can have free. It describes and illustrates Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums and contains many bona-fide letters from numerous users in the United States, Canada, Mexico, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, India. These letters are from people in every station of life—clergymen, physicians, lawyers, merchants, society ladies, etc.—and tell the truth about the benefits to be derived from the use of this wonderful little device; you will find among them the names of people in your own town or state, and you are at liberty to write to any of them you wish and secure their opinion as to the merits of the only scientific ear drums for restoring the hearing to its normal condition.

Write to-day and it will not be long before you are again hearing. Address, for the free book and convincing evidence, Wilson Ear Drum Co., 1363 Todd Building, Louisville, Ky., U. S. A.

DON'T SHOUT!

The Morley Ear Drum

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. No case of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E, 19 South 16th St., Philadelphia

NEW INVENTION!

Write for new booklet, Special Offer this month. Our new Quaker Folding Vapor Bath Cabinets, finest produced. Everybody delighted. Enjoy at home for 30 each all the marvelous cleansing, invigorating, curative effects of the famous Turkish Baths. Open the 5,000,000 skin pores, purifies the entire system. Beats Hot Springs. Prevents disease. Saves Dr. bills. Relieved thousands. Nature's drugless remedy for colds, grip, rheumatism, aches, pains, blood and skin diseases, Kidney trouble children's diseases and female ills. Guaranteed. Sent on 30 days' trial. $100 to $300 a month. Salesmen, managers, general agents. 100% profit. WORLD MFG. CO., 82 WORLD BUILDING, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

DO IT YOURSELF.

We have made plenty of money in the poultry business and have grown from year to year until our Milhook Farm is now the largest pure bred poultry establishment in the country. Our new year book "Poultry for Profit" will start you right. All about breeding, feeding, etc. Cuts out fowls with prices; eggs in season. Book has cost too much money and experience to be given away, but we mail it for 10 cents. THE J. W. MILLER CO., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.

GEM Incubators

and Brooders cost much less than other makes and are guaranteed to equal the work of any. Ask us to prove our claim by sending for our new catalogue—it is free and contains convincing evidence. Gem Incubator Co., Box W, Dayton, O.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE of standard bred poultry for 1904, printed in colors, fine chromo, suitable for framing, illustrates and describes 60 varieties. Gives reasonable prices for stock and eggs, tells all about poultry, their diseases, lice, etc. This book only 10 cents. B. H. GREIDER, RHEIMS, PA.

RHEUMATISM

Relieved Through the Feet

External remedy so successful that the makers send it FREE ON APPROVAL to anybody.

TRY IT.

Send your name and address to the makers of Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan relief for every kind of rheumatism—Chronic or Acute, Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter where located or how severe. You'll get a pair of the Drafts by return mail—prepaid—free on approval. If they give relief, send them a dollar; if not, keep your money. You decide.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn without inconvenience and relieve rheumatism in every part of the body by drawing out the poisonous acids in the blood through the great foot pores. You can see that this offer is proof of their merit, for hundreds of thousands of persons answer these advertisements, and only those who are satisfied with the benefit they receive, send any money. Write to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., R.A. 30 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair and be relieved. A valuable illustrated book on rheumatism also sent free.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT? If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed. HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED. We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

BECOME A NURSE

NO occupation open to women can compare with that of the trained nurse. It is elevating, enjoyable work, graduates earning $15 to $30 a week. We teach this profession by mail. An interesting booklet which clearly defines the scope of our courses and the nature of our work will be sent without expense to interested readers. Address: CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING, 241 Main Street, Jamestown, N. Y.

Salzer's National Oats

Greatest oat of the century. Yielded in 1903 in Ohio 157, in Mich. 231, in Mo. 255, and in N. Dakota 310 bus. per acre. You can beat that record in 1904!

For 10c and this notice we mail you free lots of farm seed samples and our big catalog, telling all about this oat wonder and thousands of other seeds.

JOHN A. SALZER SEED CO.
La Crosse, Wis.

HEMET LANDS IN CALIFORNIA

THE best watered lands in California. Located near Los Angeles. Irreversible right to the accumulation of centuries. Soil and climate suitable for orange, lemon and olive culture. Crops, wheat and potatoes yield splendid crops. Market good. Prices excellent. Town of Hemet is wide awake, has progressive stores, banks, schools and churches.

FREE Large illustrated pamphlet giving reliable information about the best irrigable lands in California, in books, maps, plans and perfect title.

HEMET LAND COMPANY
Dept. F, Hemet, Riverside County, Cal.

"Once Grown Always Grown"

The Maule motto for more than 25 years. My new

SEED

BOOK for 1904

Cost over $50,000 to publish. If you have a garden you can have a copy for the asking. Send a postal for it to Wm. Henry Maule, Philadelphia, Pa.

OUR SEEDS

Full and Ornamental Trees, Etc., have the standard of excellence for half a century. We mail postpaid, Seeds, Plants, Bulbs, Vines, Small Trees, Etc., at guarantee safe arrival and satisfaction, later by express or freight. Direct deal insures you the best and saves you money. Try us. Your access on a postal will bring you our elegant 16-page catalogue free. Correspondence solicited. 50 years, 44 greenhouses, 1000 acres.

BE STORRS & HARRISON CO.,
Box 193, PAINESVILLE, OHIO.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Cemeteries and Churches. Address: COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Winchester, Ind.

Christ, a Personal Saviour*

The Offer He Makes to the Individual of Redemption from Evil

MANY sermons have been preached and many books written, on the question whether Christ was a universal or a personal Saviour, whether his salvation is limited to a comparatively small number, or is efficacious for the whole world. That question may be left to the theologians. It is sufficient for us to know that the offer of salvation is made to all, and that none who avail themselves of it, can be lost. If the matter referred to temporal concerns, there would be no dispute about it. Suppose, for example, that a number of men were in prison under sentence of death, for rebellion against the government. The King's Son obtains the promise of pardon for all who will express contrition and promise fealty to him. A certain number do so, and are released; the others refuse or neglect the offer, and are executed. Technically, it might be said, that he had won the pardon only of those who were released; but it would be true to say that he had won the pardon of all; for all might have been saved if they had accepted the conditions. So, though the atonement of Christ is of no avail for many men, yet it avails for all who yield to him; and if the whole world would yield, it would suffice for the whole world.

Thus the salvation offered through Christ becomes a personal matter. Men are not saved in nations, or classes, or crowds, but are saved as individuals. The question comes home to a man in his own soul. In him there are impulses to a godly life, desires after holiness, righteousness, purity. There are also proclivities to evil, very strong, very insistent. He may yield to either. If he chooses the evil, his fleshly nature is gratified. His higher nature protests at first, but is generally silenced, and soon ceases to resist. If, on the other hand, he chooses the good, there is a struggle. His lower nature demands indulgence, and is restive under the restraints put upon it. It keeps up the battle, watching for some moment of relaxed vigilance. Quick to take advantage of any opportunity, ready to grasp the control whenever it is possible, it would surely succeed in most cases if the man fought alone, and in his own strength. But God sympathizes with the man who is fighting such a battle. It is his desire, shown in many ways, that his creatures should rise out of the animal into the spiritual. So he extends a helping hand to all who make the effort, or even show the same desire. To make it quite clear and more impressive, Christ came in human form, that he might approach men on their own level, and show them what human nature, imbued with the divine, might become. He was authorized to offer pardon for past offences and to promise help for the future. To all who would make the struggle he promised divine strength, and assured them that he would actually live in them, and thus reinforce the spiritual nature, enabling it to gain the victory.

That is the offer. Is it worth accepting? Every man has to answer for himself. It is his own soul, and he is at liberty to cast it away if he chooses. Christ does not conceal the fact, that the life to which he invites men is hard. The upward path always is hard. But it is the way to better things. The prize really is worth the struggle. Of that he assures us. And there are compensations. The road is not all rough. The man gains self-respect; his conscience approves his course; he is in line with the divine intention; and he has joys by the way that the world knows nothing of. As he goes farther on, too, there is less of opposition; the lower nature, steadily held in check, acquires the habit of subjection and its rebellious struggles are fewer and feebler. All the way Christ is with him cheering and comforting. In the end, the man is so developed on the spiritual side, that he is fit for a spiritual life. Then Christ assures him that death will have no power over him, and he will pass into another life that shall be endless and happy.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for Feb. 7. John 3: 14-21.

BURPEE'S Farm Annual

"THE LEADING AMERICAN SEED CATALOGUE," is now more "a leader" than ever before. Thoroughly revised and greatly improved, it tells not only THE PLAIN TRUTH about seeds, but has also many new features for 1904.

An elegant book of 178 pages, it contains hundreds of illustrations from nature and six superb lithographic colored plates. It shows in natural colors thirteen "true and tried" new Vegetables of sterling merit, three new Nasturtiums (of a distinct type), and seven Superb Sweet Peas,—all painted from nature, by New York's leading artist, at our famous FORDHOOK FARMS. It presents also twenty-one faithful photographs of America's Largest Mail-order Seed Trade,—views in both town and country. Altogether it is pronounced the

Best Seed Catalogue Ever Published

And it's Free! provided you will ask for it now. It will cost YOU one cent to mail your address on a postal card to us. It will cost us four cents postage—plus eight cents for the catalogue,—just twelve cents to respond to your request. We are willing to bear this risk—twelve for one! If you will only read

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1904

we feel quite sure that you will favor us with at least a trial order, and this is all we ask, as BURPEE'S SEEDS will tell their own story in your garden and field.

Better send for this catalogue to-day! One cent spent by you insures twelve cents spent by us, and this should be sufficient to convince you that we have faith in BURPEE'S SEEDS and also in our ability to persuade you to try Burpee's Seeds, if you will only read BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL.

Are you willing to spend that cent? Shall we hear from you? If not, You will miss an opportunity to become acquainted with the very BEST SEEDS that can be grown!

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

$37.50 Buys a Bath Room Outfit Complete

IT IS ALL BRAND NEW

We will furnish you all of the plumbing material in the above illustration, consisting of a bath tub of graceful shape, solid white porcelain enamel, 1 1/2 feet long, made in one piece of cast-iron, with nickel-plated bath cocks, waste and overflow, rubber plug and chain, and four fancy designed feet. A perfectly sanitary water closet, consisting of a porcelain closet bowl, with hardwood seat and tank, fitted with all necessary appliances, including nickel-plated flush and supply pipes, chain and pull. An elaborate marble lavatory with porcelain bowl, nickel-plated basin cocks, rubber plug and chain. It is strictly new, and as good as anything on the market that would cost you over twice as much. We will deliver all of this material loaded on board car Chicago, properly packed, for $37.50. We carry an enormous stock of NEW PLUMBING MATERIAL. WE BUY OUR GOODS AT WHOLESALE AND RECEIVERS' SALES. WRITE FOR OUR CATALOGUE 373 on plumbing material, household goods, etc.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO.,

WEST 35TH and IRON STREETS, CHICAGO.

Cornell Incubator Advancement.

The Cornell patented system of temperature regulation, and perfected system of ventilation. The Cornell ventilates in Nature's way. Gets the proper moisture lines at the right time—in any locality—under all conditions—at any season of the year. Result: Healthiest and most vigorous chicks ever obtained by artificial incubation. Compound door, Cabinet award at Buffalo Pan American Exposition.

PEEP-O-DAY BROODERS are the brooders that are used exclusively by the largest and most successful poultrymen. On the market ten years. Thousands of testimonials. Our very large, fully illustrated catalogue contains valuable information. Mailed free. All Poultry and Pet Stock Supplies.

Cornell Incubator Mfg. Co.
Box 83 Independence, Mo., Sept. 28, 1903.
Ithaca, N. Y.

Gentlemen: I must confess that the Incubator I bought of you is a wonder. It does its work well and economically, ventilation seems to be perfect, and it is so easy to operate. Very truly yours, Wm. THOMPSON, R.F.D. No. 7.

SWEET PEAS FREE

My exquisite "Sunburst Collection"—ten 1-ounce packages selected named varieties of Sweet Peas—enough for 500-foot row, by mail, postpaid, for 25 cents. Every collection contains a coupon good for 25 cents' worth of seeds from my 1904 catalogue. Send to-day. If you will sell eight of these collections for me, you may have your quarter back, together with fifty cents in seeds from my catalogue.

Harvey B. Snow, Camden, New York

VIGOROUS CHICKS

are the results of Petaluma Incubators. They maintain Nature's conditions. They have no accidents, make no failures. Catalogue free. PETALUMA INCUBATOR COMPANY, Box 61 Petaluma, Cal. Box 64, Indianapolis, Ind.

Buy Miss White's Exceptional SEEDS

Miss Emma V. White, Seedswoman, 818 Nicollet Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

ROYAL INCUBATORS 30 Days Free Trial

Why pay for an incubator you have never seen when you can try the Royal 30 Days Free. If it was not a record breaker we could not send it on trial. Send for trial offer. Incubator and Poultry Catalogue free, with poultry paper one year 10 cents. Royal Incubator Co., Dept. 71, Des Moines, Ia.

20,000 Acres Land

in Marinette Co., Wis., the home of the Red Clover, Timothy, Potatoes and raising every acre fit for farming. Adjacent lands are selling at $8 to $15 an acre for farms.

$100,000 Standing Timber

Fit for cordwood, posts and lumber—big market. A splendid opportunity to young men with capital to make $200,000 quickly. Price 20,000 acres, $100,000. Long time on half at 4 per cent.

SALZER LUMBER CO. La Crosse, Wis.

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS

BY ONE MAN. IT'S KING OF THE WOODS. Saves money and backache. Send for FREE illus. catalogue showing latest improvements and testimonials from thousands. First order secures agency. Folding Sawing Mach. Co., 55 N. Jefferson St., Chicago, Ill.

Don't Buy Seeds

until you see my new Seed Catalogue for 1904. Great offers in Seeds, Plants and Premiums. Mammoth Poultry Farm. 18 breeds. Scotland Poultry given away. Colored plates, many new specialties. Catalogue mailed free to all.

F. B. MILLS, Seedsman, Box 29, Rose Hill, N. Y.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

CUT THIS OUT

I estimate the attendance at St. Louis Exposition on July 4, 1904, to be Estimate

Name

Address

THIS COUNTS AS ONE COUPON when returned with three Cereta coupons taken from packages of

QUAKER OATS PETTIJOHN
Apitezo and Zest.

It is good for both Cereals and for estimate Cash Prize Contest.

Address

The American Cereal

1111 PONTIAC BLVD.
CHICAGO, ILL.
(C)

This Beautiful Silver

CERETA SILVERWARE

Cereta ware is heavier than triple-plate. The silver used is 999-1000 fine. And with each piece is sent the manufacturer's guarantee for twenty years of family use. The deep-cut designs, the beauty of the workmanship and the rich French gray effect give Cereta ware the appearance of solid silver. Cereta ware cannot be bought in stores.

MORE THAN HALF BOUGHT If you save your CERETA COUPONS

The Cereta silver includes
CERETA TEASPOON—mailed to you for 4 Cereta coupons and 15c. in coin.
CERETA CEREAL SPOON—mailed to you for 4 Cereta coupons and 20c. in coin.
(Larger than a teaspoon—for cereals and dessert.)
CERETA TABLESPOON—mailed to you for 4 Cereta coupons and 30c. in coin.
CERETA TEA FORK—mailed to you for 4 Cereta coupons and 25c. in coin.
CERETA TABLE FORK—mailed to you for 4 Cereta coupons and 30c. in coin.
CERETA TEA OR TABLE KNIFE—mailed to you for 4 Cereta coupons and 50c. in coin.
(Steel or plated blades, as preferred.)
CERETA SAUCE AND GRAVY LADLE—mailed to you for 4 Cereta coupons and 75c. in coin.
(Plate of gold on the bowl over full plate of silver.)

There is a Cereta coupon in every package of

QUAKER OATS PETTIJOHN
Apitezo and Zest

$10,000.00 IN CASH PRIZES—Free Contest—send in your estimate of the attendance at St. Louis Exposition on July 4, 1904. See the new issue of Cereta coupons for particulars and information to aid you in making your estimate.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 3, 1904

VOL. 27—NO. 5. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

DRAWN BY FRANK ADAMS

SEE PAGE 96

Winter Perils at Sea = An Ice-Coated Liner Entering New York Harbor

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

W. S. Hamilton, Ont. 1. Why did Paul prohibit women speaking in church? 2. Why did he require them to have their heads covered?

1. It would have caused a great scandal in a city so licentious as Corinth, where the church was to which Paul was writing, if women had spoken in public at the services. You can see by the two letters to that church, that the liberty which Paul had preached had been misunderstood. There were people there whose lives were not clean, and it was necessary to make it clear that Christianity, while not bringing Gentile converts under Jewish law, required decency and purity of life. Reproach had come already, and Paul was probably anxious that there should be no further cause for it. It was a concession to the public opinion of the time and place, which Paul was in the habit of making. As he said: "All things are not expedient" (1. Cor. 10:23). We do not imagine for a moment that he intended the prohibition to be permanent. 2. For the same reason. For a woman to appear in public in Corinth without a veil, would have been regarded as an act of immodesty.

W. P. K., Chicago, Ia. Do you consider it justifiable in a Young Men's Christian Association, to include in its equipment billiard tables, also to open its auditorium for the rendition of theatricals and negro (burnt cork) minstrelsy, and including the same in its entertainment course?

Some of the things you mention are certainly out of place in a Y. M. C. A. There is no reasonable objection to suitable games or a gymnasium, but the "show" element is distinctly antagonistic to the spirit and principles of such institutions, as they are now understood.

The recent suggestion, by Mr. James B. Sykes (printed in this journal), for a Union Hymnal, finds wide approval.

I most heartily approve of the suggestion of James B. Sykes, in your issue of January 20, for a uniform hymnal, and, in answer to your request, send you a list of twelve hymns and tunes, which I think ought not to be omitted. JOSIAH NEELY.

Philadelphia, Pa.

ALL PEOPLE THAT ON EARTH DO Dwell	AUTHOR	TUNE
Blest be the tie that binds	Fawcett	Old Hundred
Come, Jesus, Redeemer, abide	Palmer	Dennis
From Greenland's icy mountains	Heber	Phenice
Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty	Heber	Miss. hymn
Inspire and lead us to prayer	Toplady	Nicene
In heavenly love abiding	Waring	De Fleury
Jesus, lover of my soul	Wesley	Ewing
Mighty God, while angels bless thee	Robinson	Martin
Oh, could I speak the matchless worth	Medley	Autumn
Oh, for a heart to praise my God	Wesley	Ariel
The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want	Ross	Evan Balerna

Mr. E. Jennings, Baltimore, Md., sends this list:

All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name.
Blest be the tie that binds.
Rock of Ages.
Jesus, Lover of My Soul.
There is a Fountain Filled with Blood.
Just as I Am, Without One Plea.
More Love to Thee, O Christ.
Nearer, My God, to Thee.
Abide With Me.
Sweet Hour of Prayer.
Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone.
Fade, Fade, Each Earthly Joy.

Inquirer, Thompson, O. 1. Is it right to have shows, or such things as they call pantomimes, in the church? 2. Is it right to have a Farmers' Institute in the church? 3. Which would be the better way, to have a social or an entertainment to raise money for church purposes, or for the members to give the money? 4. Do you think it any worse to go to dances than to go to these kissing bees or "snap-up" parties?

1 and 2. The modern tendency to introduce secular amusements in the church is greatly to be regretted, and we do not believe that a church which is given over to such things need hope for spiritual growth. We advise you to procure a little book entitled Ecclesiastical Amusements, by A. W. Hull, Syracuse, N. Y., which will give you a very clear idea of the right way in dealing with such questions. 3. As to raising money for church work of any kind, the best way of all is for the members to contribute voluntarily, without turning the church into a vaudeville show. 4. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has repeatedly stated its attitude on the dance. If the question be simply one of "bad or worse," why not settle it by leaving these things alone altogether?

Freemasonry. — E. J. Brown, of Lisbon, N. Y., writes that at least four Protestant denominations, like the Roman Catholic Church, forbid their members joining the Masonic Order. They are: The Wesleyan Methodists; the United Presbyterian; the Reformed Presbyterian; and the Free Methodists. Another subscriber writes that the Mennonites, the German Baptists, and the River Brethren, have the same rule.

A. S. K., Mt. Desert, Mo. 1. Who was the leader of the mob that burned the Temple at its final destruction? 2. Was the ark destroyed? If not, what became of it?

1. The Temple was burned, not by a mob, but by Roman soldiers. Titus, their commander, was resting at the time, but word was sent to him that it was burning, and he immediately rushed to the place and tried to re-character, and a toleration of qualities which all right-thinking people must condemn. The same criticism may be applied to promiscuous novel-reading, with this difference—that a bad play, being presented with all the specious attractions of the stage, makes vice even more alluring and dangerous than a bad novel, and consequently makes a deeper and more lasting impression for evil. 2. It was an extravaganza of the spectacular sort, tuneful and frivolous, such as is usually offered to holiday audiences.

Rev. E. O. Guerrant, of the Soul-Winners' Society, writes from Wilmore, Ky.:

I am glad to say God continues to bless our work among the poor Highlanders of the Alleghany and Cumberland Mountains. Our roll this year numbers over eighty faithful men and women, who are preaching and teaching the "old, old story" to

It intimated that she did not belong to a class numerous in Corinth, the members of which disregarded the social relations. The veil was a sign of modesty. It was an oriental idea that the angels turned away from a woman whose head was uncovered, as one whose mind was impure.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I am more than pleased with Pilgrim's Progress. I thank you very much for such a premium. The calendar is the prettiest one I ever saw. MARY E. J.

Reader, No. Adams, Mass. Why is doubt thrown in the Revised Version on John 8:1-11, containing the incident of the woman taken in adultery?

The reason is stated in the margin. It is not found in the most ancient manuscripts. Another reason not given, is that the style of writing and several of the words differ from the other parts of the Gospel. For instance John does not refer to the scribes anywhere else. It is probable, however, that the incident did occur, that a memorandum was made of it, and that some early Christian, seeing that all the evangelists had omitted it, put it into the Gospel of John at this place. Both Jerome and Augustine believed the narrative to be genuine.

J. E. E., Wis. The Santa Claus myth seems to sit heavily on the consciences of many very good people. Your suggestion is a good one. Why not put it into practice?

Reader, Corinth, N. Y. Is it right for a Christian to own shares and receive a revenue therefrom in a manufacturing industry where some of the employees are required to work on Sunday under the plea of necessity, when the owner of said shares would prevent Sunday work if he could?

If anyone so act, that another person is compelled to work on Sunday, when such labor is neither a work of necessity or mercy the first person is guilty of Sabbath desecration by proxy. If he does this for the mere sake of adding to his wealth, he is all the more culpable. The whole question would hinge upon the point whether or not such Sunday labor is a real necessity? Not knowing all the circumstances of the case you mention, we cannot, of course, speak otherwise than on general principles.

Milton, V. B., Iowa. He was the priest king of Salem (see Genesis 14:18). It is explained that "without father, without mother without descent," was possibly intended to convey that he was of obscure parentage and could point to no illustrious ancestry, such as kings are wont to boast of.

Inquirer, Richmond, Va. Did Paul, in any of his epistles, or in his recorded sermons, forbid second marriage to the clergy?

We know of no such prohibition. The direction (1. Timothy 3:2), that a bishop should be the husband of one wife, is obviously against polygamy. There seems no ground for supposing that Paul meant that a widowed bishop should not take a second wife. It would be a strained and unnatural inference, to draw from his words.

A. M. R., Van Wert, O. 1. How can we regard God as acting justly in visiting the iniquity of the fathers on the children (Ex. 20:5)? 2. Was John the Baptist the son of God in the same sense as Christ was?

1. It does not mean that God will punish a man for the wrong-doing of his parents. No one will be punished for any sin but his own; but it is inevitable that we should be affected by what our parents have done. We enjoy the privileges of our free country, because they were won by our forefathers; we have freedom of worship, because our forefathers fought and suffered and died to secure it; we have a glorious literature as an inheritance from them; having received good, do we not inherit evil in the same way? The children of a spendthrift must lack the good start in life that they might have had; the son of a father who has disgraced his name, is under reproach. The children who were born in Babylon, suffered in exile because their fathers had deserted God. It is a law of life that the consequences of a parent's wrong-doing are entailed on his children, but the children are not held accountable for the sins of their parents. 2. No, you will see from Luke 1:13, that Zacharias was the father of John.

[Owing to the unusual number of letters received by THE MAIL-BAG, and not previously answered, additional space is devoted to them on page 105 of this issue.]

A FIRE-WALKING CEREMONIAL IN THE FIJI ISLANDS

This savage rite is performed by a certain tribe in one of the Fiji Islands. There is a legend that the power of walking over red-hot stones without being burned was given to one Tui Qualita, as a reward for having saved the life of a man he had dug out of the ground. The Fijians dig a hole in the earth and fill it with layers of wood and stone. In this hole a fire is kindled twelve hours before the ceremony, and at the appointed time the charcoal is brushed away, leaving the hot stones exposed. The chosen tribesmen then walk over these, bare-footed and apparently unhurt, although the heat sometimes rises to 280 degrees Fahrenheit. It is said that the explanation lies in the fact that their feet are already greatly calloused by exposure and walking on the hot sands under a burning sun, and that the leather-like, tanned skin of the foot, passing swiftly over the hot stones, is not even blistered by the contact.

strain his men and to extinguish the fire, but it was too late. 2. There is no record of the ark being in that temple. No mention of it is made after the destruction of Solomon's Temple by the Babylonians. As it is not included in the list of spoil carried to Babylon, it is thought probable that it was hidden by the Levites when the city was surrounded, and its hiding-place was lost. In the Apocrypha (II. Mac. 2:1-8), there is a detailed account of its being hidden by Jeremiah, but the passage is believed to be untrustworthy. Some readers have reminded us that John saw it in heaven (Rev. 11:19), but that could not have been the material ark, as the whole passage is symbolical.

I think that Mr. Morrison's book, How I Worked My Way Around the World, is the best premium I have yet received with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I have had several.

MRS. C. E. HENRY.

Adam S., Garner, Ia. 1. Does theatre-going lead to good morality or Christianity in general? 2. What was the nature of the play at the late fire in the theatre in Chicago, called "Bluebeard"?

1. In general—no. While there are, doubtless, many plays that convey excellent moral lessons—plays in which virtue is rewarded and vice punished, the general tendency is to false conceptions of life, false standards of thousands of our countrymen beyond churches and preachers. God's liberal children have sent us the means, many of your readers among the number.

Mrs. R. S., Cape Island, N. S. "Santa Klaus" is the old Dutch appellation of St. Nicholas. The Santa Claus entertainment, which is now so well known here, may be classed with the "Miracle plays" that were common in the early days of the Christian church, and which have come down to us with little change. Long ago, in parts of Holland and Germany, the children put out their shoes or stockings for "Santa Klaus" or "Knecht Clobes" to put a gift therein for good conduct. The idea probably had its origin in the gifts brought by the Magi to the Holy Child in Bethlehem. The origin and meaning of the observance should be explained to the children, of course.

Reader, Jersey City, N. J. What is the meaning of Paul's reference to the angels in (I. Cor. 11:10)?

The verse is rendered more intelligible in the Revised Version. There it reads: "A sign of authority on her head, because of the angels." This, you see, is the very opposite of having "power on her head." The veil to which Paul referred was a sign of the subjection of the woman to her father or husband.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

THE FAMOUS "BELL TOWER," MOKDEN

THE LOFTY WALLS OF MOKDEN

MOKDEN, AS SEEN FROM THE CITY WALL

From Copyright Stereographs by Underwood & Underwood

Scenes in Quaint, World-Old Moukden

MANCHURIA'S ANCIENT AND PICTURESQUE CAPITAL, NOW AN "OPEN PORT" UNDER OUR NEW TREATY WITH CHINA

WHILE the changeful kaleidoscope of events in the Far East gives us now a glimpse of peace, and again, a menace of war, the interest of Americans, for the time being at least, is diverted from contemplating the attitudes of Russia and Japan to a more attractive subject. Under the new treaty which we have lately concluded with China, the important cities of Moukden and Autung are made "open ports," thus affording most valuable opportunities to American commerce in Manchuria. And not to trade alone, but to missionary enterprise so; for though there are now in Moukden—the grand provincial capital of Shing-King, Manchuria, and the seat of government with Peking—a mere handful of mission stations—it may reasonably be expected that these will grow, and that Gospel influences will multiply as American interests extend in that distant region. Moukden, or, as it is frequently called, the Chinese, Shingyang, the ancient capital of Manchuria, is finely situated on the Shin River, in the southern province of Leaou-tung. The Shin flows into a larger river, the Leaou. Moukden's native population is considerably over 200,000, and this is now augmented by numbers of Koreans, Tartars, Japanese, Russians, and other foreigners, including a few Americans. It is a port of considerable importance, with a good deal of shipping, and with shops and bazaars that are filled with native and foreign goods. Its streets are broad and well laid out, and many of its buildings, especially those in the western and southern quarters of the city and the suburbs, are quite pretentious. There are eight city gates, and many fine monuments. It has witnessed many wars and undergone many changes. In the war with Japan, it was threatened with destruction by 40,000 Japanese troops, who landed on the Manchurian coast. China's army at that time amounted, on paper, to over 1,000,000 soldiers, and Moukden, with its force of 50,000 "Green Flag" defenders, armed with antiquated rifles, was considered impregnable.

Following the announcement of the treaty with China, under which Moukden and Autung are made open ports, comes the news from Washington of the appointment of Fleming D. Cheshire, of New York, as United States Consul-General at Moukden; Edwin V. Morgan, of New York, as Consul at Dalny; and James W. Davidson, of Minnesota, as Consul at Autung, all three being chosen largely with reference to their wide knowledge of Chinese affairs and their familiarity with the peculiar conditions in Manchuria. Consul-General Cheshire has spent nearly thirty years in China, and was attaché of our Legation in Peking during the Boxer rebellion. He speaks the language fluently. Consul Morgan is an acknowledged authority on Chinese manners and customs, and Consul Davidson speaks both Japanese and Chinese, and is a wide-awake American of experience in the consular service. Thus it will be seen that all three are trained men, well equipped for the important posts they are to fill. It is not improbable that at the outset, they may find themselves confronted with unusual conditions; for the treaty opening these ports to American trade, though now concluded in fulfillment of a long-standing promise, is not favorably regarded by Russian officials generally. But while Russia has continued to occupy Manchuria and to ignore China's sovereignty over that territory, the Czar's government has agreed to offer no obstruction to the exercise of the treaty rights granted by China to the United States, at Moukden and Autung, the new "open ports." How this concession may affect the status of the general question of Manchuria's occupation, or of its ultimate sovereignty, remains to be seen. Our acceptance of the treaty privileges now, cannot reasonably be interpreted as an unfriendly act toward Russia, as the general terms of the treaty, and especially the "open port" concessions, were in contemplation long ago. In this connection, a significant and hopeful fact is the consent granted by Russia to China's proposal to send 15,000 Chinese troops to the Manchurian frontier, for the purpose of preserving order and of suppressing the lawless bands that have lately been committing serious depredations there.

Diplomatic exchanges between Russia and Japan were still in progress late in January, and not without hopes of an ultimate peaceful settlement. It was reported that the Czar and the "peace party" in St. Petersburg had triumphed over the aggressive "war party," and that the leader of the latter—M. Bezabrazof—had gone to Cannes. Correspondents attribute to the Czar personally the emphatic declaration that "there would not be war, if he could prevent it." But while the general trend was toward peace, there still remained the serious possibility of a conflict being precipitated by some unforeseen act or circumstance, arising from the strained conditions at Tokio and Seoul. In the Japanese capital, the war feeling was still running high, and preparations were being urged hurriedly in both army and navy circles. In proportion as the tone of the Russian press grew pacific, that of Japan became belligerent. Moreover, Japanese warships continued to land small bodies of troops on Korean soil, and Seoul, the capital, was reported to be in a tumult and on the verge of a native attack on foreigners generally. Several European Powers have landed marines to protect life and property, and two hundred American blue-jackets are guarding the United States Consulate. Russia is reported to have a large army in readiness to march into Korean territory northward, in the direction of the Yalu River, the scene of the historic battle during the Chino-Japanese War. This movement, it is explained, would not be for the purpose of conquest, but to secure Russia's rights on and near the Yalu River, which she claims under concessions granted by Korea.

Russia has done more than any of her rivals to develop trade in Manchuria. At the present time, the principal business in both Siberia and Manchuria is controlled by Russian and German houses, which have retail branches at all the important points. Efforts on a large scale are being

LOOKING UP THE PRINCIPAL STREET OF MOKDEN

The ancient Bell-Tower, famous throughout Manchuria, in the distance

CONTINUED ON PAGE 104

The American Pulpit

: Sermon by :

Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, D.D.

The Conquering Few

TEXT — Judges 7: 6: "And the number of them that lapped, putting their hands to their mouth, was three hundred men."

NO sinecrist is the army's recruiting officer. In most cases, whether in peace or war, the problem which must be solved by the war department is not "How can we reject our volunteers?" but "How can we persuade or even compel men to enlist in the ranks?" During America's great Civil War, all healthy men in the South between the ages of eighteen and sixty were forced to shoulder a musket, if unwilling to go as volunteers, while in the North, after the volunteers had ceased to respond to Lincoln's repeated calls for troops, the "draft" officers went everywhere.

The story of Gideon's campaign is unique in history. Here was a general about to march against a powerful invader, well armed and equipped, whom he must meet with a raw and undisciplined force, actually reducing by a capricious test the number of his followers. Under God's command, he dispensed with nine-tenths of his men. When General Gideon raised his standard to repel the invasion of the Midianites and Amalekites, 32,000 volunteers answered the call to arms. But God said to Gideon, better quality than quantity. Better a few loyal and devoted men to repel the invasion than a great host made up of disgruntled and fault-finding, indifferent recruits. Gideon, as directed by God, cut down the numbers of that Israelitish army. He cut them down, and down, and down, and down, until there were left only three hundred men,—only three small companies to follow their intrepid leader. But they won the victory. So it may be in the great conflict between good and evil in this world. Consecrated, loyal, earnest men are needed in the struggle for righteousness. The falling away of the half-hearted, the quarrelsome, need occasion no alarm. The fight is the Lord's, and he can accomplish more with a few brave souls, inspired with the Holy Spirit and devoted to him, than with a host of nominal Christians disloyal to him and antagonistic to one another.

Brotherly Love

The church should be a harmoniously organized army. The loyalty with which one soldier holds to another in the national army, decides to a great extent the aggregate strength of that army. When going into battle, it is just as important for a soldier to know that he is standing shoulder to shoulder with friends, as to realize that he is standing face to face with attacking foes. Civil War veterans have told me that the affection which bound the men of each company together, was like bands of unbreakable steel. If a soldier out foraging found food hidden away in a barn, or if he found a deserted pile of blankets, or an extra pile of dry wood to be cut into kindling, the first persons he thought of were those of his company. There the members shared each other's joys. They sympathized with each other in their sorrows. If one of their number did wrong or got into trouble, the different members of his company would always come to his assistance. So, my friends, the members of each separate Christian Church ought to be linked together by Gospel love. They should try to shield each other, and pray for each other, and care for each other, and help each other. They should never before the world expose each other's weaknesses, any more than a wife should be willing to publish before a cynical neighborhood the weaknesses and shortcomings of her husband. Church members, in other words, should "be kindly affectioned to one another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another."

"The Church a harmonious Gospel company? Oh, no," says one, "that ideal is not always a possibility. I know it is not possible for me to live in sympathy and love with all the members of my church. Some of them have been too mean, and have done me too many injustices. I can truly say I do not want to harm them; but I certainly desire that they should leave me entirely alone. I certainly intend to leave them entirely alone. I do not wish to keep them out of heaven, but I do not wish some of them to sit beside me in a celestial mansion, or by any common earthly fireside made of brick and stone." My friend, by such an answer, you are proving the Holy Spirit's power inefficacious. You are demonstrating that you are unwilling to become one of Gideon's band and live in faithful harmony with the chosen three hundred. God is willing to give you grace enough to love all your fellow church members, if you will only ask for that grace. Has not the sure testimony been given: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me"? What an illustration of that fact we had in the closing months of the life of General Grant! In the darkest hours of that eventful life, when cancer, that most horrible of all diseases, was slowly but surely eating its way to the vital organs, how bravely, how calmly, how unselfishly the great soldier bore his suffering, and, sustained by God's grace, went unflinchingly to the grave. "The world may know him as a great general, as a successful politician, but I know him," wrote his family physician, Dr. Douglass, "as a patient, gentle, quiet, uncomplaining sufferer, looking death calmly in the face and counting almost the hours he had to live; and those hours were studied by him, that he might contribute something of benefit to some other fellow-sufferer. If he was great in his life, he was even greater in his death!"

The Test of Discipleship

If the Lord God could give sufficient grace to Ulysses S. Grant to serve him amid such harrowing surroundings, will not God give you enough grace, in the darkest hours of your Christian life, to be a good Christian soldier, so that you shall love your fellow church members as yourself? I say "in the darkest hours of your life," because I firmly believe that some so-called Christians are passing through a religious crisis. You are now about to decide your whole eternal destiny. You are to decide it, not by how you profess to love God, but by how you are willing to love your fellow church members. Are you ready, here and now, as Christian soldiers, to "be kindly affectioned to one another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another"? Do not tell me that it is impossible for you to live in Christian sympathy with those who belong to your same church family. By the grace of God, it is possible. And if you are not willing to let that Divine love have full control of your life, then instead of staying in a church and disputing and finding fault continually with the other members, it is far better for you to leave that church, and go back to the world, and thereby play the Gospel coward, as did the 22,000 men who deserted Gideon's standard at the first opportunity the Hebrew commander gave them to skulk home.

The church should be a harmoniously organized army. It is not only possible thereby to hurl a solid front against the Satanic foe, but also by preponderance of numbers concentrated in one move, to make, as the Bible says, a little one "become a thousand and a small one a strong nation." Concentration in military parlance means not only conquest, but generally the complete mystification and disorganization of an opposing foe. If by a sure mathematical calculation, the military chieftain can drive as a battering ram ten offensive men against one man on the defensive, the successful outcome of the conflict becomes an assured fact.

Concentration of Forces

It was by the successful concentration of forces against his enemies, and by the lightning rapidity of his movements, that Napoleon Bonaparte won his great victories. During all the military career of the "Little Corsican," his armies were outnumbered by those of his opponents. But one day we find the brilliant military genius attacking one wing of the Austrian army. The next day we find him attacking another wing of the Austrian army. One day he is falling upon the defenseless Italian fields by boldly scaling the Alps. Another day we see him concentrating his artillery fires upon a separated part of the German army. Napoleon with his forces would have been wiped off the face of the earth ten years before he met his fate at Waterloo had he attempted to battle his enemies in bulk. He beat Austria and Italy and Germany and Spain by defeating his foes by detail—piecemeal. He did it by the power of military concentration. This was the way Frederick the Great carried on his wars of many years. This was the way Washington and Nathaniel Green won their victories, and it was in this way that "Stonewall" Jackson, with a small force at his back, became the terror of every Northern commander campaigning upon Virginia soil. So, my friends, as Gideon marshalled his three hundred, the church soldiers should be a united band. They must be able to hurl all their spiritual strength against the Satanic foe in one place and at one time.

How can this great forward movement of a single church against sin be concentrated and conserved? First, by all the church members every seven days answering church-roll at the midweek prayer-meeting. Wednesday night prayer meeting is even more important than the Lord's day worship. It is by the comingling of prayers that the spiritual forces of a church become inflamed with the holy zeal and all-conquering Gospel enthusiasm. It is to that roll-call that the members of the church must give diligent heed. Concentrated church membership at the midweek prayer-meeting is of overwhelming importance. I know of what I speak. During my life, I have observed the ways of two kinds of churches. In the one, I have seen a mighty Gospel conquest going on, month by month and month out. Why? The people attended the midweek prayer-meeting. In the other kind of church spiritual results were never assured. Why? The people, no matter how the pastor begged and pleaded failed to attend the midweek prayer-meeting. A church with a full prayer-meeting means a spiritually conquering church. A church with an empty prayer-meeting means a spiritually dead church. Hear it, ye few! Hear it! The spiritual success of every church is decided by whether its members will regularly assemble, as did the first church in the upper chamber of Jerusalem, to pray together earnestly, week by week, the manifestation of the power of the Holy Ghost.

The concerted forward movement of a church, the next place, must be manifested in the united voice of its members lifted in songs of praise, and in Gospel energy. Oh yes, the very best voices trained in our musical colleges are never too good to be allowed to sing in the church choir. But the church members have no more right, in this Gospel movement, to let the choir do all the singing, than the pew has to expect the pulpit to do all the praying. Methodist pews have sung as many immortal souls into glory as Methodist pulpits have won by preaching. "Let everything that breathes praise the Lord!" In every service let the old-fashioned hymns be given out, and let all the people sing. Let shout forth your Gospel battle songs like the sound of many waters! Concentration of the church forces, prayer-meeting means spiritual conquest for Christ. Concentration of the songs of praise, in one great congregational chorus, means also spiritual conquest for Christ.

The Lamp of the Church

The concerted strength of the church, in the next place, should make that church a unit in its belief of the authority of God's revealed Word, and also in its protest against sin, wherever found. When the three hundred Gideonites went forth to battle, their most effective weapons were a lighted lamp concealed with a pitcher, and a trumpet in the right hand. The lamp, lighted, can be used as the symbol of Gospel faith, revealed in God's Word. The trumpet can be used as the symbol of the voice of a Christian church protesting against a world steeped in sin. Plenty of room in every Christian church for all repentant sinners saved by Christ's blood, but no room for any man who will not accept the sacrificial blood of Jesus Christ, and who will not protest against sin, wherever found. The Christian church must be a unit in its Calvary belief, and it must be a unit in its protest against sin.

As in every other army, the Christian army must have a countersign. When I belonged to the United States Army, during the Spanish-American War, there were certain times I could not pass in or out of the camp without giving the countersign. So we find that all Christian churches have a countersign. That countersign is one word of five letters, and that one word is: Jesus; Jesus; Jesus; Jesus! Jesus, who is our Savior Jesus, who lived, and died, and rose again, to redeem the world and to save his people from their sins.

The church army must be a harmonious army, a show a brave front. There is sure to be a more or less extent, cowardice lurking in the hearts of us all. If a Christian soldier is allowed—using a common phrase to show the "white feather," he will be very apt to moralize all the ranks. "What!" you say, "every man to a more or less extent a coward?" Yes, my friend! We all have a cowardly streak within us. We must therefore, be very careful how we let a faint-hearted Christian soldier influence us to turn and run.

Mischievous Cowardice

If you do not believe that all men may become cowardly, read the memoirs of one of our great generals, than whom no braver man ever lived. Yet, he tells us that when he went into battle the first time, he trembled like an aspen leaf shaken in the wind. He was so scared that he would have turned and fled, but for the fact that he was afraid his regiment would run away with him. Then, much to his surprise, when he came to where the enemy had been encamped, he found that they had been even more frightened than himself. During the previous night, without striking a blow, the enemy had turned and fled. Yes, there is a cowardly streak in all of us. Therefore, Christian soldiers, do not go publishing around your fears; do not criticize your minister in public, because you may start other people criticizing him. Do not talk about your anxieties to the church audiences should not keep up. Do not exaggerate the results of your foolish imaginations. I in other words, give free rein to your Gospel cowardice. If you do, you may unkenel and unleash the cowardly disposition in us all. If you ever wish to be as valiant as a church member, only sound forth the inspiring words of hope. God knows, there are enough, all too many, who are always ready to sit around in the dark church corners and croak the miserable, whining, grating words of despair!

Lastly, I remark that a church membership should be a united and harmonious and compact army. One traitor in the camp can do infinitely more damage than five hundred enemies without. Benedict Arnold, after he had fled into the British ranks, was not to be feared. It had Major Andre, his messenger, gone safely through to New York City, and had he, Arnold, been allowed to command West Point one week longer, all hopes of American liberty would have been destroyed. Julius Cæsar could conquer nations; but Julius Cæsar could not defend himself against a traitor's dagger. "What! Thou too, Brutus?" tells the whole story of the infinite mischief a traitor may be able to do.

It is of vast importance that the preservation of the sacred honor of the Christian Church be intrusted to those who are truly her friends. Therefore, my fellow church-members, never try to placate a church enemy by selecting any man to a position of trust, unless he be a prayerful man, and unless deep down in his Christlike heart, he fully realizes the solemnity of his trust. Never select any man to a position in a church unless that man is first ready to put all bitterness out of his heart, and to get down on his knees and earnestly and tenderly say, "Oh, Lord, my God, teach me to love my fellow church-members. Teach me to be an under shepherd to them, and Thou art ready to guide me. Teach me, oh Master, to say, 'I forgive,' as I would have Thee say unto me, 'I forgive thee also, my child.'" No man in church life is fitted to be a leader of men until he himself is first ready to be cleansed of sin. Better a smaller church; better three hundred loyal Gideonites, than thirty-two thousand men who are not ready to let Christ lead them as he would.

But I cannot close my study of this mighty theme of the church as a conquering army, without telling you, my people, the object I have in view. First, I want to kindle to holy zeal the scores, and hundreds, and thousands of churches all over the land, which have been for years torn and rent asunder with internal strife. Pastors are discouraged; people are discouraged; Christian communities are discouraged about them. "Oh," these people say, "we are only a little handful. We have dwindled down and down, until there is hardly any membership left. What are we to do?" Why, ye discouraged churches, by the grace of God, ye can do everything. God has been sifting your membership until the best are left. You are now a Gideon's band. United and welded together by trouble, you can accomplish wonders. It was not by great numbers that Gideon won, but by the loyalty of a few.

My second purpose in this sermon is to show you that these conquerors over the Midianitish hosts were ordinary men. Who were they? We don't know. They were selected at random. Some came, perhaps, from wealthy homes; some came from the homes of poverty. They were all selected simply by the way they lapped up the water when they drank of the famous brook. So God is going to judge our availability to be among his chosen followers by the way we are ready to do, in his name, the little things of life. He will judge whether we are fitted for membership in the Gideonite band by the way we smile a good morning; by the way we help upon the car a poor woman with her basket; by our willingness to sit by an humble sick-bed; by the way we lead in prayer in the house of trouble, and by the way we forgive.

The third purpose: I would show that these three hundred immortal Gideonite conquerors were all volunteers. Christ's disciples must be volunteers, not conscripts. One of the most horrible pictures ever painted was that by M. Clairin, called the "Conscripts." It shows an African scene, where hundreds of young men are manacled in chains, and are being forcibly compelled to enter the Sultan's army. As convicts they are being driven away to almost certain death. But Christ's army, like that of Gideon, has in it no conscripts. The Christian soldier of the church must be a volunteer. Will you enlist under Christ's banner? Will you go forth in the name of this church, a united band, to march against the Satanic hosts? Will you go forth a harmonious company of Christians, ready to battle in Christ's name? Will you not realize that all your past trials, whether in church or out of it, have been only a means used to fit you for ultimate Gospel triumph? Will you become a member of Gideon's band?

Many a foe is a friend in disguise,
Many a sorrow a blessing most true,
Helping your heart to be happy and wise,
With faith ever-precious, and love ever new.
So stand in the van,
Strive like a man,
This is the bravest, the cleverest plan:
Trusting in Christ, will you do what you can?

SAILORS LOVE THE LIFE-LINE LEAGUE

AWAY down on the southern outskirts of Philadelphia, not far from the mouth of the Schuylkill, is Point Breeze, an important shipping centre. Here ships from all over the world come to get cargoes of oil. This gives an opportunity to carry forward a far-reaching Gospel work, which a noble band of Christian people has been quick to take advantage of. This organization known as the "Life Line League," and its well and favorably known in many lands; for, through its ministrations, the hearts of many friendless seamen have been cheered and turned to Christ. For more than five years, this noble company has labored with zeal and faithfulness to give spiritual and material help to sailors, and much blessing has followed the effort. The work of the League has already been mentioned in this journal.

On a recent Sunday, the members of the League had a gratifying experience: the steamship Nithsdale, lying at the wharf, after a three years' cruise around the world, and waiting for her cargo of 6,000 cases of oil for Japan, was the scene of action. She had a crew of forty Mohammedans, and these swarthy East Indian sailors—Lascars they are called—are invited to attend the service of the League. The invitation was accepted, and these hardy Asiatics heard the Gospel story. Only two days before, on a Friday, these men had devoutly bowed to their prayer-mats, and chanted their prayers and praises to Allah and to Mohammed; but now they became deeply interested and listened reverently. As many could speak English, it was not difficult to make all understand. To the surprise of those conducting the service, some thirty-

A LIFE LINE LEAGUE SERVICE AT POINT BREEZE OIL WHARVES
Some of the Mohammedan sailors are shown in the background

five of the strangers signified their willingness to be prayed for, and some even expressed their willingness to become Christians. The Orientals were given books and leaflets in Arabic, setting forth the doctrines of Christianity, and also portions of the Old and New Testament, all in their own language. They were also given "comfort bags," containing needles, thread, tape, safety-pins, shoestrings and various other articles that would prove useful to them in a long voyage. These gifts touched them deeply.

Mr. John W. Hastings, the Superintendent of the League, is a quiet, kindly man, who works faithfully and well and gives God the glory. From many ports come letters full of appreciation for his helpfulness. Some come from Japan, Egypt, Florida, China, South Wales, etc.

Philadelphia's Unique Gospel Organization and its Work Among the Jack Tars

And what interesting letters some of these are! They tell of a ship lost; of a captain washed overboard; of a burial at sea; of a tumultuous storm; of continued faith in Christ; of the joys of a homecoming; of the heart-break of a parting; but, above all, they reveal that this quiet, big-hearted man, to whom they were written, has been winning the love and confidence of those brave followers of the deep, while he has been striving to win their souls for the Master.

A letter written at sea on the ship Dunstraffnage, by a young Christian Endeavor sailor, gives these extracts from his diary:

Dec. 15th. I read one of Dr. Talmage's sermons from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to the men, and let them know that I would hold meetings on Thursdays and Sundays.

Dec. 19th. Opened my Bible Class on the sin of drunkenness, and as I have a concordance in my Bible, I was able to direct the attention of the men to many excellent passages condemning it.

Dec. 21st. Had a good meeting. Read a sermon from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and gave the boys some tracts as they were leaving.

Dec. 28th. Had a very good meeting, and induced one of the men to join the Christian Endeavor. He is a fine singer, and will be a great help to me.

Jan. 1st. We had a good meeting, and renewed our vows to be true to God. We prayed that more would take a stand for Christ. Read one of Dr. Talmage's sermons from Rev. 22: 11.

May 24th. (In port). Some of the men have gone on shore to-day to have a look around, and I know what they will be like when they return. There are so many temptations awaiting them, and they are so weak. Oh, if they would only take Jesus to help them, they would be able to stand firm. I pray that the Lord will open their eyes, that they may see that they are lost for time and eternity, unless they turn to him.

SUPERSTITIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES

OM-PONG came over the border into this Province (Capiz) accompanied by two followers. Making their way to the sequestered pueblo of Narva, situated at the foot of the mountains, the two men deliberately put to death nine young women, four girls and one aged woman. The outlaw chief held the male population at bay with his rifle, while the men accomplished the act with their bolos. The motive of the wholesale massacre appears to have been to provide the daughter of the chief, who had recently died, with a suitable retinue to the spirit world.

Among the non-Christian Filipino tribes, superstition prevails to a great extent. In fact their religion seems made up of superstitious ideas, belief in witchcraft, ghosts, and beliefs probably prevailing among different tribes. On one occasion, a boy about ten years old struck and killed his younger brother. When arraigned before the court for the homicide, he said that he thought his brother was a ghost. His mother, who was present in court, seemed satisfied with the story. The so-called non-Christian tribes are semi-wild, dwelling in the mountains. There are two classes, one called the negritos, or little negroes, who resemble the negro, and have kinky hair and flat noses; the other class have straight hair and regular features, and are supposed to belong to the original race occupying the islands.

The case of an atrocious murder arising from a belief in witchcraft, illustrates another phase of the popular superstitions.

A woman was suspected of causing the illness of the mother of the accused, by casting over her the spell of witchcraft. The son repaired to the house of the reputed witch and begged her to remove the spell. According to his story she consented; but on his return he found his mother still suffering "from the incantation;" whereupon, accompanied by the son-in-law of the victim, he returned to the dwelling-place of the witch. The two men dragged her to a stream, wherein they repeatedly submerged her; they cut off both her ears. Finally the woman died, either from her protracted torture, or from her head striking a rock. The Supreme Court of the Islands, in passing on the case, considered that the belief in witchcraft constituted a mitigating circumstance, it being honestly entertained by the murderers.

In striking contrast with the believer in witchcraft, and the ignorant dupe of the religious impostor, are groups of men and women, found here and there throughout the islands, earnestly engaged in Bible study and the organization of evangelical churches.

In some places it almost seems as though history, in repeating itself, had returned to the days of Luther. The situation in this Province is peculiarly interesting. There is a Protestant movement, originating back in the Spanish days, and culminating in these later days of the American occupation. There is a Baptist medical missionary here, doing excellent work in the double capacity of physician and preacher. Some years ago, a certain individual obtained and began the study of a Bible. He became interested, and tried to interest a relative who was an individual of importance. This person at first strongly opposed him, but finally became the most strenuous advocate of Bible study and is now the chief reliance of the American missionary.

After the Americans came, the Bible students were eager for an evangelical minister to be sent to them. After long delay, this Baptist missionary was sent—a man well fitted for the place. The society have commenced the building of a church, in which they have manifested great interest and a most unusual energy, contributing liberally, considering their means, and pushing on the work with unflagging zeal. These people must be sincere, as in business, social relations and all phases of life, their attachment to the new cause they have espoused would work rather to their disadvantage than their profit.

Capiz, P. I.

Can't See How it Can be Done

I received, the other day, your premium, offered with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, The Red Letter Bible. Am well pleased with it, and cannot see how you can put out such a book for the price. As John the Baptist was the forerunner of Christ, so are the red letter passages the forerunner and light, shining through the entire Word.

Manhattan, Kan.

KARL W. HOFER.

SOUL-WINNING IN THE "BIG SMOKIES" *

By J. D. BURTON, Evangelist

AROUND Old Smoky's head, which towers 5,000 feet above sea level, and marks the State line between Tennessee and North Carolina, nestle hundreds of cabin homes of the mountain people. A little stream of smoke rising from a chimney, and the tinkling of a cowbell upon the side-hills, are characteristic of this region in the early morning and late afternoon. In these homes are hundreds of bright children, without the privilege of a Sabbath School or Christian training; hence, our missionary efforts to reach them interest those who are striving to advance Christ's kingdom in the world.

I visited Walnut Bottoms, a settlement in Heywood county, Western North Carolina, a few days ago. The way was up a narrow defile, along the clear and rapid waters of Big Creek. At many places the trail was very narrow and dangerous, as it led around high cliffs and great, overhanging rocks. Here and there it was necessary to hold on to trees and limbs, as we climbed around and down dangerous places. The beautiful hemlock and balsam trees, with an undergrowth of laurel and ivy, made the trail dark and lonesome. This is a part of the region embraced in the Appalachian Park Bill, now before Congress. For five miles, we followed this trail, and did not find a single house on the way to the Bottoms.

Here I found a settlement of mountaineers, isolated from the outside world, even from the neighboring mountain settlements, and raising children. I called at a Mr. Gunter's, and found his children at home. The cabin was one-story high, with a single room, which was used for sleeping, eating and cooking purposes. There were four home-made bedsteads, a stove, a table, and the powder-horn and rifle, in the room. The floor was hewn out of logs, and fitted down on the sleepers of the cabin. About half of the "overhead" was minus a loft.

Little Annie, whom I judged to be about twelve years old, hid behind the stove. I drew her out to talk to me. At first she refused, but finally came out. The snow was two or three inches deep out-of-doors, yet this little girl was barefooted. She could not read, but said her father could read "a leetle grain." I had written little Annie's name in a booklet (The Gospel of Matthew), and presented it to her, with the request that her father read it aloud to her. I did not see a Bible, a newspaper, nor even an almanac, in this home. There was never a day school or Sabbath School in this settlement, and there are no doctors or nurses to help them in their sickness. They "grow up" and die there, and are laid away on the hill without much ceremony. Of course, this is not the condition in all of the

EVANGELIST J. D. BURTON

MISSION HOUSE IN THE "GREAT SMOKIES," TAMPA, TENN.

settlements; yet each is a "spiritual waste," more or less.

One thing of singular import to Walnut Bottoms was a sewing machine. The natives carried this machine on their backs, over the trail I have just described. It is a wonder to me how they ever did it.

At Raven's Branch, over in Tennessee, I found a widow and her five children—three little girls and two boys—institute circumstances. The mother was laboring hard her corn planted on the steep mountain-sides. She had use the "sprouting axe" herself to clear off the ground had only a hoe to prepare the land for corn-planting, than once had the tax-collector found her without a to pay her taxes. I was thankful for the little clothing that a band of generous ladies had sent by direction of the Soul-Winners' Society, at which I was enabled to give this poor mother garments for her little children. Before leaving, I read a chapter and offered prayer in this little loft being so low that I could not stand up. The children and mother seemed encouraged by my visit, and I gave them an invitation to prayer meetings and Sabbath School. Over in the Catalochee camps, I invited the young folks to my place to stay, one afternoon. After a song service and short talk, an opportunity was given them to start for Christ. Over half-a-dozen rose and said they would like to live for the Master, and were willing to

In many of the homes of these children, the parents are totally unconcerned about spiritual things. One little girl went home, and hearing her father an oath, told him that she had learned in the Sabbath School that God would surely punish him for wickedness. The child's tender voice touched her father's heart, and he told her that he would do better. The people, as a whole, are ready to receive the Gospel. I have never found a more kind and hospitable class. The dwellers on the Smoky Mountains are a Christian school, where the children can be reached and taught. We are trying to bring this to pass by building the Smoky Mountain Seminary, at Tampa, Tennessee, under the auspices of the Society of Soul-Winners. There are hundreds of bright mountaineer youths who could be brought into this school for instruction. The work of the Society of Soul-Winners is too well known to your readers to need any explanation here. We cordially invite them to aid us in efforts to give the Gospel to the poor.

When comes the King in royal might
To crush the wrong and crown the right,
When thrones are set and crowns are given
And all the rich rewards of Heaven.
Oh, in that glorious by-and-by,
What's done for God can never die.

NEW YORK'S LIBRARY FOR THE BLIND

THE New York Free Circulating Library for the blind owes its existence to Richard Randall Ferry. Having lost his eyesight, he learned to read the New York Print System, but found the only way to obtain books in New York, printed for the blind, was to buy them; and as each volume cost between three and four dollars and a-half, reading was a luxury in which few of the blind could afford to indulge.

Mr. Ferry's letters, published in 1894, brought the need of a Free Library for the Blind before the public. He formed the plan for its establishment and financial encouragement, and subscribing ten dollars himself, called upon the public for additional subscriptions toward a fund to start the project. His plan was received favorably, and many responded with liberal subscriptions of money and donations of books.

The people interested met, and organized a society called "The Ferry Free Circulating Library for the Blind," and afterwards the association was legally incorporated under the name of "New York Free Circulating Library for the Blind." Its first home, through the generosity of a friend, was at 121 West 91st street, New York. The Library began with sixty volumes, which, the first year, increased to between four and five hundred volumes, besides music for the organ, piano, guitar and violin, arranged for the use of the blind. The Library was formally opened Nov. 9, 1896. At the end of the eighth year, the number of books had increased to one thousand six hundred and forty-nine, music to four hundred and ninety-two volumes, and the circulation of books and music to eight thousand five hundred and forty-three, while the number of blind readers increased from eighteen to two hundred and ninety-three.

This encouraging growth speaks for the success of the cause, as well as for the appreciation of those whom it benefits. The success of the enterprise is largely due to the efforts of the president, Richard Randall Ferry, and the disinterested, untiring energy of the secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Clara A. Williams.

In order to provide permanently for the Library, it was decided, at a recent conference of trustees, that the association should become a part of the New York Public Library—Astor, Lenox and Tilden foundations—so hereafter, the Library will have a permanent home in the new Public Library building on Forty-second street, when it is completed, and permanent support.

This Library has been helpful to the blind in many ways. Books are sent to the blind throughout the State, and even to adjacent States, and when applicants are too poor to bear the expense of sending them back and forth, the association provides the necessary money. A teacher is employed to take books around the city to those who are not able to reach them, and she teaches the system of reading to those who have not learned it. She also makes regular visits to the almshouse at Blackwell's Island. Through

RICHARD RANDALL FERRY
Founder, New York Library for the Blind

the reports made from these visits to the poor, and through the liberality of those interested in the work, many of the physical wants of the blind are alleviated. Medicine is provided for the sick, and other comforts often supplied to those in need.

The untiring efforts of the manager of the New York Free Circulating Library for the Blind, to lighten the way for the blind in darkness, are worthy of the highest commendation.

A NOOK IN THE NEW YORK LIBRARY FOR THE BLIND

Like a Glow of Warmth

Dear "Christian Herald":—My much-thought-of Calendar is on the wall. I sit by my window, looking at the cold, dark waves rolling into the banks, and the snow-flakes falling fast to the ground, where there are two feet and a-half already. I then look on the wall, see the warm colors surrounding the wee darling baby faces, and the glow of warmth comes into the heart.
Mrs. FLORA B. JACOBSWELL, Mich.

A Pleasant Surprise

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—We received a most pleasant surprise this week, in the shape of a Red Letter Bible, and a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I wish, through the pages of your paper, to thank the donor of the gift. The Bible is very beautiful and helpful, and the paper is like an old friend.
Ethel CARR.
Gaffney, S. C.

Up-To-Date

The Crown Encyclopedia was received, also the Calendar. I am very much pleased with the Encyclopedia. The volumes are of convenient size; the print is good; the articles, though condensed, are full enough for all ordinary purposes, and the claim made that they are up-to-date is fully justified. I am teaching in a High School of nearly six hundred pupils, and I wish each student had a copy for daily reference.
San Francisco.
CAROLINE L. HUNTER

EARLY BREAKFAST AT THE BOWERY MISSION

One Thousand Homeless Men and Boys, All-night Wanderers of the Streets, Fed with Rolls and Hot Coffee Daily—A Unique Benevolence

Do you, who have never experienced it, realize what it means to wander up and down the streets of a great city, friendless and homeless, upon a cold winter's night? Does anyone think because he has felt a tingle of cold, or a pang of faintness and hunger, that he knows what it is to be rilly hungry and cold? To have one's feet and hands in a state of aching numbness, to be faint from a delayed missing meal or two is not pleasant, but it is a mere nothing compared with the sufferings of those who have been cold for days and weeks, and whose stomachs are sometimes in a state of utter collapse for the want of food.

To this class belong many of the men of the Bowery, and it is to help them that the Bowery Mission has opened its doors every night, from the middle of January until the first of April, for the purpose of giving hot coffee and rolls to these wanderers, who, on cold nights, walk up and down the sidewalks of this famous thoroughfare, to keep themselves from freezing.

Where can the wanderer spend those hours of misery, those dark, dreary hours, between one o'clock and three, when the sick, surrounded by every comfort and held to earth by every tie of love and happiness, so often drift upon the sea of eternity? At this hour, when the cold grows more biting, when the lights burn dim, and the dawn seems a long way off—it is then, if ever, that the friendless, the homeless, the ill, need a helping hand; it is then that the Bowery Mission sends out its every invitation to these forsaken ones, to come in and refresh themselves with a cup of hot coffee and a good big roll, a slice of bread.

Every man has his story, some so dark and awful, that even the most sodden and hardened nature would shrink from the telling. Stories which would be beyond the comprehension of any acquainted with the underworld, were men lose all remembrance of everything pure and good.

But there is a vulnerable spot in the hearts of even such men, and when forsaken by their old companions, cold, hungry and utterly wretched, they wander forth aimless—sometimes even kicked out into the street—with curses ringing in their ears, their own hearts filled with the blackness of despair; then, if the kind word, with a bit to eat and drink, be given, it may find that little spark of feeling not wholly dead, which, if fanned up, may be fanned into a steady flame. Many of these men were born in degradation; they have the added load of heredity and environment to carry along with all the accumulations of their own years of wrong thinking and living; and yet even they may be saved, who have sold their birthright and have not even received a poor mess of pottage in exchange.

There are men in this crowd who nightly haunt the Bowery. Men who have little children at home, who do not know why their father never comes home any more, and why their mother has to work so hard that she never has any time to love and care for them as she used, when papa came home from work every night. There are other men who have fallen from their high estate of good family; men of refinement and education, who would have shrunk in horror from the vagrant's life they are now leading, had the future been unfolded to them before their own weakness and vice had brought them legitimate consequences.

obliged to leave their lodgings or boarding-places. There are no friends to whom they can apply for help; so, discouraged and hopeless, they drift to the Bowery. There, at least, they will not be alone in their misery; there, at least, there are others as wretched as themselves. There is light and bustle and noise—something going on to divert their attention from the heart-break, as they think of the dear ones at home, waiting so eagerly to hear of the success they were so sure of winning, if only they could get to the city. Too proud to let their families know to what straits they are reduced, many of these young lads, innocent and without a taint of wrong-doing, find themselves stranded. They are willing to do anything to earn an honest dollar, but find that the dishonest coin comes their way more easily; and it is not to be wondered at that they sometimes respond to temptation, in whatever way it may come, after struggling as long as possible with hunger, cold, and loneliness. There is no loneliness like that of a great city; but there is always company of some kind to be found on the Bowery. And surely the young men who gravitate thither, because, in their ignorance, they feel that there is no other place to go, are worthy of more than a passing thought from the modern good Samaritan.

Many of these young men who have been helped by the Bowery Mission, are now occupying honorable places in the business world, where they are in a position to help others, never forgetting what a little assistance meant to them when they were so wretched and helpless.

"Out of a job" and "sickness" are the primary causes of a good share of the destitution which overtakes these men. A few weeks', or even days' illness, results in their being thrown out of work. There is nothing to fall back upon; for, while the poor are notoriously improvident, they have very little to be improvident with. The landlord takes the bulk of the earnings, and, more's the pity, the saloon, too, often gets a large share of the remainder.

And so the procession files along, from one o'clock until three, on these bitter zero winter mornings. While every one with a roof over his head is comfortable in bed, this army, more than a thousand strong, wend their way to the Bowery Mission, where in the kitchen, during the early evening, under the direction of Superintendent Hallimond and Assistant Long, barrels of hot coffee have been prepared, many pounds of coffee and sugar and gallons of milk going to make up the inspiring beverage. Great mounds of the

"A Proud Man is the Cook"

"Great Mounds of the Biggest and Brownest of Rolls"

All kinds and types of men are represented in this crowd who fall into line at the dreary early morning hour for the comfort and help extended to them by the Mission breakfast. God alone knows how much good this coffee and bread may be the means of doing, or what courage may be infused by its warmth and comfort, in some poor hardened, calloused heart.

Supposing only a small percentage of these men are "worthy;" supposing nine-tenths of those who profess a desire for reformation, slip back into the old life, is not the remaining tenth worth saving? And who shall say that the seed of kindness, scattered from the sower's

"A Bit to Eat and Drink"

"Barrels of Hot Coffee Have Been Prepared"

"More Rolls Wanted"

perchance they can believe that any one cares for them; though they fall again and again, even to the twenty times seven" limit.

No one can say how many of these friendless men of the Bowery have mothers, fathers and families, who, having lost sight of them for years, are still hoping and praying for their return. There are men with grizzled hair and hard-lined faces, who, years ago, came to the great city full of hope. Literally "falling among thieves," they were robbed of health, decency, and of everything which makes life worth living, their lives have trailed along the downward path, until even the memory of all the good has become dim or entirely fled.

There are young men, scarcely more than boys in years, who have not yet forgotten their mother's tearful goodbye, when home was left behind; young men generous hand, on some cold winter's morning, on the hard pavements of the Bowery, may not, later on, spring up in the hearts of some of these men and bear good fruit of repentance.

Then, too, there are many young men—and these are more deserving of sympathy and help than any other class—who are as hungry and shivering as the rest, who have not, as yet, a smirch of disgrace upon them. Young fellows, who have left their homes in country towns, holding mental pictures of the city's possibilities and opportunities, that have proved to be very different from the hard reality. Their little store of money gone, and no employment found, the poor fellows have been brownest and biggest of rolls await the pitifully eager hands that are stretched forth for them a few hours later. A proud man is the cook as he reviews the results of his labors.

If anyone should think this charity not worth while, and the unfortunates not worth the help thus extended, their hearts would be softened were they to stand for one hour and watch this ragged, shivering throng, as they wait in line ready for this door of mercy to be opened to them.

Reader, if you feel any pity in your heart for these poor "wanderers of the night"—the unemployed, the homeless, the unfortunate—you can help them by aiding the Bowery Mission in this simple charity. Any contribution toward the Bowery Mission Breakfasts, sent to this journal, will be duly applied and acknowledged.

MARY SARGENT HOPKINS.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscriptions price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner possible to the proprietor. Register each remittance.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

The Wickedness of War

IN his recent speech before the Holland Society in New York, Mr. Bryan took occasion to pay a fitting compliment to the Dutch nation, upon whose "thorny stalk of war, there had at last appeared the fragrant flower of peace." This was spoken with reference to the proposed Temple of Peace, to be reared in Holland, whose government has been the generous host of the Peace Congress, since its organization.

In that address, which was a singular departure from the hackneyed themes of party politics, the speaker sounded the keynote of the desire of all nations—the hope of universal peace. He said:

A prophet in olden times foretold the coming of an era of peace so universal and profound that to emphasize it he pictured it as extending even to the beasts. The wolf and the lamb, he said, shall dwell together; the leopard shall lie down with the kid; the calf, the lion and the fatling shall keep company together, and a little child shall lead them. Are our eyes to witness the fulfilment of this prophecy?

We must not expect all armies to be disbanded at once, nor look for the immediate settlement of all questions by arbitration. Progress is slow—

Heaven is not gained by a single bound;
We build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies;
And mount to its summit round by round.

So with the advancement of the race. We press forward, often impatient of delay, but experience teaches us that as trees that are strong enough to withstand the storms do not mature quickly, so great reforms come by degrees. There is, however, reason, to believe that the light of a better day is already breaking.

The peace conference, which by invitation of the Emperor of Russia, convened at the Hague—the peace conference to which our own country has given such effective support—did not announce a new discovery; it simply gave expression to a desire that was felt, to a greater or less extent, among the more enlightened of every nation. It revealed the fact that society is at last approaching the point where conscience will assert its supremacy over the brute instinct.

There have been times when bravery upon the battlefield was considered the highest form of virtue, and there have been times when intellectual force and independence of thought have been considered all sufficient, but now, heart characteristics are beginning to be recognized as the dominant ones.

Instead of civilization being measured, as Buckle declares, "by the mastery of the human mind over the forces of nature," we are beginning to define it as the harmonious development of the human race, physically, mentally and morally. We are finding that neither the perfectly developed body nor the splendidly trained mind fills the measure of the man or of the nation. Moral development is indispensable; the perfect man is a threefold man, and the spiritual part of his being cannot be ignored.

There is an awakening at hand. In the United States, in England, in France, in Russia, everywhere, there is an increasing group of those who are looking up to a higher ideal, who insist that a physical combat between men is as powerless as a fight between wild animals to determine the right or wrong of any proposition. They fear that even intellect, unless warmed and vitalized by a belief in the brotherhood of man, may go far astray. They contend that love alone—an all-comprehending, an all-powerful love—can discern the truth, and, discerning it, both define the rights of man and prescribe his duties toward his fellows.

It is a cheering sign of the growth of Christian sentiment to find such utterances falling from the lips of our public men, to whatsoever party they may belong. Indeed, there are many in all parties who will echo them with sincere approval. Intelligent and thoughtful people in every land are awakening to a realization of the unutterable wickedness of war, and the inexcusable folly of resorting to violence for the settlement of national and international disputes. We thank God that our own land is taking a leading part in the movement for universal arbitration.

Four years ago, before the Hague Conference had been held, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in its issue of January 4, 1899, voiced the feeling of the world's peace lovers in the demand for "a truce of God, embracing as signatories all the great nations, with an international patrol on the seas in the interest of peace, and for the protection of commerce, and with a permanent international tribunal, before which all causes of quarrel should be brought for adjudication, so that the brutal clash of arms, the useless shedding of blood, and the wanton destruction of human life, might be wholly averted. If all Christians in civilized lands unite, the governments cannot resist their influence, and will fall into line for 'peace on earth and good-will to men.'"

When we look back to this foreshadowing, in the light of what has since taken place, it seems almost prophetic! It was then a dream of a time, apparently still far off, when all men might live, like brothers, in security and happiness. Now, it seems so much nearer. There have been grievous wars since then, it is true; and the whole earth is, even to-day, a vast armed camp. Yet, it cannot be denied, that the world is tired of war, and that militarism has assumed the aspect of a barbaric spectacle, which the few may love, but the many detest.

Let us hope and pray, that our own people and all the nations of earth, may soon come to the same conclusion—that war, in any form, is an evil and one which can be permanently averted, if the enlightened governments will unite on a basis whereby their differences may be brought to the bar of arbitration, and adjusted in accordance with the reason and intelligence with which an All-wise Creator has endowed men, who are not brutes, but "a little lower than the angels."

An Era of Disaster

UNUSUAL in number and character are the calamities which have occurred during the past few weeks. Coming one after another, in startling succession, following the terrible theatre fire in Chicago, there have been several appalling railroad disasters in various parts of the country. More recently there came the news of the destructive cyclone in Alabama, in which a whole town was destroyed and many lives sacrificed. Like the other disasters, it had the element of bewildering suddenness. No time for escape or preparation! The people, sleeping peacefully in their beds, were all unconscious of approaching danger, and were overwhelmed in a moment. Nor can we hope that the close of the distressing sequence is reached. The condition of our rivers, west and south, choked as they are by ice, gives serious cause for anxiety. Who can tell where the next catastrophe may occur? Who can tell who may be the next victims?

The sad succession may, in nervous people, produce a feeling of apprehension akin to panic. But that is not the way in which sensible persons should act in the circumstances. The wise and prudent course is to rise above physical perturbation, and take hold of the spiritual resources. People who are living wholly for this world, whose treasure is in worldly wealth, and who have no joys but those of the body, are they who have most reason for apprehension. The cessation of life, means for them the destruction of all their hopes and happiness. In a moment, the whole structure on which they have labored and all that existence means for them, may be swept away. Everything is precarious and evanescent. Common prudence demands that if there be any security, anything permanent, anything to be had which can survive any calamity and cannot be disturbed by any disaster, even by death itself, it should be sought, as men seek for hidden treasure. In the religion of Christ such a possession is found. Those who have it in their hearts need have no distressing fear.

How calming, how tranquillizing, the feeling that whatsoever calamity befalls, the chief treasure of life is safe! How glorious the conviction, that let death come in whatsoever form it may, the real life, the life of the soul, will go on under better and more blissful conditions! The disposition of our time is to be incredulous of the detailed descriptions of the heavenly life, which our fathers accepted; but such incredulity ought never to reach the foundations. There is a life beyond the grave. Every sense of our nature convinces us of that. Conscience and reason assure us also that its conditions are determined by our conduct in this life. The lesson is obvious. In the darkness and danger and doubt of our times, let us stretch out the hand of faith and grasp the hand which our Heavenly Father holds out to us, and then, come what will, He who is living and was dead, and who holds the key of the grave, will conduct us into that presence where there is fulness of joy forevermore. So may we rise superior to all fear and apprehension, strong in the faith that makes men free.

The Cup of Hot Coffee

THIS winter has been one of extreme severity, has caused an unusual amount of suffering among the destitute and homeless in New York. Public private charities have been taxed to the utmost. There are thousands of poor wretches walking the streets of the metropolis, on these bitter zero nights, who literally have not where to lay their heads, and who have not a good meal for days. They have no money and no place to go, and are as utterly forlorn and helpless as it is possible for human beings to be.

To reach this class, the Bowery Mission, which is always been a refuge for the destitute, recently decided to open its hospitable doors between the hours of 1 and 3 A.M., and to give to every homeless and shelterless man, young or old, who came there at these hours, a cup of steaming hot coffee and a roll of bread. Every night, at the same hours, until the first of April, this simple, practical charity will be dispensed to at least one thousand men nightly.

To feed the hungry, cheer the desponding ones, to give shelter and comfort to those who are ready to perish of cold and exposure, is the most elementary form of Christian work; but it was Christ's way. He preached, and in his ministry he practically illustrated his gospel of kindness to the poor. In a humble way, the Bowery Mission workers try to follow the Divine example. A cup of coffee and a roll given to the hungry ones on a freezing winter night, may carry with it food and drink a blessing that the selfish and indifferent, who give little thought to the welfare of the unfortunate ones, cannot understand. Yet the condition of the homeless and workless poor of our great city, never appealed more strongly to the charitable and kind-hearted than during this dreadful winter. It is not surprising then that the thousand shivering men and boys who, in the bitterly cold hours that precede dawn, when all the rest of the world is snug in bed, should gather in front of the Bowery Mission, to them, the steaming, fragrant coffee and the rolls are a veritable feast—a substantial reality, that will warm the body and allay the gnawings of hunger for a few hours at least. To this feast the Bowery Mission is the same helpless class of which our Saviour sympathized with such tender compassion.

We would cordially welcome the co-operation of our readers in helping to "turnish forth" this simple meal at the Bowery Mission during the next two months. Will you help us? If you can do no more than give the means to procure a single cup of coffee and a roll of bread to one of these poor creatures, even that will be welcome, and will not be without its reward.

Winter Perils at Sea

(See illustration on first page)

Winter has brought many perils and discomforts to us this year. On land, people are wading through snow drifts, or slipping about the icy streets, with frost-bitten fingers and toes; while at sea, storm-tossed and battered vessels are fighting the wintry gales, and ploughing their way through storms of snow and sleet that cover sides, decks and rigging with an icy coat of mail. Seldom have the clipper liners encountered rougher weather, or had fiercer battles with the elements. Many of them have been delayed for days, while anxious friends have waited for the arrival of dear ones whose names were upon the passenger lists. It is a wonderful sight to see one of these great steamers coming up New York harbor, clad in its icy covering, like a crystal coat of mail, the saucy little pilot boat puffing in its importance, escorting the giant to its resting-place at the pier. The aggregate weight of the icy mail of a big ocean steamer is many hundreds of tons—quite enough to sink a smaller vessel; but these modern leviathans of the deep are stanch and strong, and able to bear their unique armor, and also to stand the mighty warring of the elements, with which they fight almost from start to finish of their Atlantic voyage.

The Kuang-Si Famine

CANTON, CHINA, December 5, 1900. Editor Christian Herald:—I regret to note that in reports of the Kuang-Si famine relief, the work of the Hong Kong Committee and of the Canton benevolent societies almost wholly ignored. It is just to say, that in all probability the citizens of Hong Kong, headed by his Excellency the Governor, did more for the relief of the famine than any other agency.

Respectfully,
H. N. SHUMAKI
American Mission of United Brethren in Christ

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

To Fight Fire

ANY new device or invention, which will be of service in extinguishing fires, is of prime importance to us in the United States, where fires, incendiary and accidental, have been of so numerous and so destructive. The news, therefore, that comes from Germany, of the introduction and of what is known as the "Swift system," is of special interest. It has been tried at Charlottenburg, and is reported by German journals, just received, to have been eminently successful, both in extinguishing fires and in protecting the lives of the firemen. It has many novel technicalities, which are best understood by inventors, but its main feature is in the adjustment to the hose of a perforated ring. The water forced through the hose, thus does not strike the fire in a straight stream, but is distributed by the ring in a circular sheet, which is more effective in putting out a conflagration, and also prevents the smoke obscuring the vision of the firemen. The same principle is applied to the persons of the fire-fighters themselves. A man entering a blazing interior, carries on his helmet a perforated ring which is attached to a small hose. At any moment the water may be turned on, and will descend in a shower from the ring, covering the man completely, putting out a fire that may be consuming his clothes, and interposing a watery barrier against the flames by which he may be surrounded. The results of the experiments at Charlottenburg, it is declared, convinced everyone who witnessed them that the device is perfectly practicable and amply fulfils the aims of its inventor. If that statement proves true, the device will be sure to have a world-wide application, for in every land, fire, which is so useful a servant and so bad a master, is dreaded when it seizes its prey. We can but wish that the destructive forces of which fire is an emblem, could be combated with similar determination, and like readiness to seize the best means of equipment. Unhappily, those which God has provided are too often neglected, in spite of his promise:

When thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee (Isa. 43: 2).

A Belated Discovery

A well-known citizen of Iola, Kan., made a discovery the other day, says the Register of that city, that he regrets he did not make earlier. He went to Iola to obtain work as a poor boy many years ago. His pious mother gave him a Bible when he left home, and made him promise to read it every day. But he found it hard to secure employment, and when he did get it, he had to work very hard early and late. He suffered many hardships and was often hard-pressed for money. He was, however, patient and frugal, and gradually, after long and persistent effort, made his way. He never kept his promise to his mother. The Bible he had given him remained in his trunk and he had never taken off its wrappings. One day lately some cause led him to open the volume that had lain neglected for so many years. To his amazement, he found between its pages a twenty-dollar bill, which his mother must have taken from her small savings and put there for his use. When he remembered those hard times of penury when he had longed for a much smaller sum, he bitterly repented that he had not kept the promise that would have been so well rewarded. There are many who have similarly had cause to deplore their neglect of the Bible. They might not, as this man would, have found money in it, but they might have found that which would have saved them from sorrow and shame.

When thou sleepest, it shall lead thee; when thou wakest, it shall talk with thee; for the commandment is a lamp; and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life (Prov. 6: 22, 23).

Priority of the Cities

For some years past a controversy has been carried on between Santa Fe, N. M., and St. Augustine, Fla., on the question of their respective priority of settlement. Santa Fe had pretty clearly established its claim to a history running back to 1605. St. Augustine, however, made discoveries of documents showing that in 1562 Admiral Coligni obtained from Charles IX., of France, the right to found a French Protestant colony

GERMAN FIREMEN UNDER WATER-SHIELD

in America, and chose the region in which St. Augustine is now situated. But a citizen of Arizona now publishes a statement which relegates St. Augustine to a second place. He claims the priority for Tucson, Ariz., and bases the claim on authentic documents, including a parchment discovered among the records of the old mission of San Xavier, dated 1552, when the settlement was ordered to be established, and attached to which is an account of the founding of Tucson, written in the hand of Marcos de Niza, who explored Arizona in 1539. The settlement of the question is a matter of mere sentimental interest. A better glory for a city to have than that of being the oldest city on the Continent, would be that of being the city most like that which John saw in his vision, that was full of righteousness.

THE "SWIFT SYSTEM" OF FIGHTING FIRE AT CHARLOTTENBURG, GERMANY

And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life (Rev. 21: 27).

Life Saved By a Picture

A press despatch from Cleveland, O., describes a shooting affray, in which a man's life was saved in a peculiar manner. The trouble occurred in a restaurant where there was a rush at the supper hour. One of the customers made himself disagreeable by his rudeness, and his insistence on being served before the others. His language was so violent and abusive, that the waiters reprimanded him and the other guests protested. The disturbance ended in blows, and one of the men drew a pistol and began shooting. Instantly there was a rush for the street. One man, however, did not move. He held his hand over his left breast, and cried out that he was shot. An ambulance was summoned, and the injured man was carried to a lounge. On examining him, the hospital surgeon found that he had had a narrow escape. The bullet had struck right over the heart, but the man had a button picture of the girl to whom he was engaged, attached to his vest, which had deflected the bullet. It had glanced off, and made a flesh wound over the ribs. But for the fact of his wearing that picture, he must have been killed. Little did he think how much he would owe to the presence of that picture! He put it there simply as a mark of affection, but it proved a defensive armor. In the troubles and dangers he may have to encounter in the future, he may need other protection. The best and surest he can have is not in any outward symbol, but by having in his heart the love of Christ.

Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble (Pro. 3: 23).

A Fortune Squandered

A visitor to a poor-house at Evanston, Ill., describes a remarkable inmate with whom he talked. The man had once been a millionaire. Tottering with age, almost blind, his clothes thin and ragged, he presented himself one cold night at the poor-house door and begged for food and shelter. He was admitted, as he had formerly been well known in the neighborhood, and his poverty was obvious. He was seventy-three years of age, and had no relatives in the world that he knew. The man's life has been a strange one. He was born in Ireland in 1827, and came to this country when he was twenty years old. He soon afterward sailed for California as a common seaman. There he obtained employment, and saved enough money to buy a claim. Scarcely had he begun working it when gold was discovered on the adjoining claim, and he had many offers for his land. As the excitement spread, the offers rose in amount, and at last he sold out for an enormous price. He continued speculating until he had made over a million. Then he retired to enjoy his wealth. He soon became recklessly extravagant and dissipated. His friends succeeded, in spite of him, in getting the remnant of his fortune invested where he could not squander it for a term of years. Eventually he obtained control of it, and spent every cent. Then, too old to work, and utterly worn out, he found a refuge in the poor-house, having fully realized the truth of the warning:

There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt, but those riches perish by evil travail (Eccles. 5: 13).

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. Edmund Dowse, of Sherburne, Mass., who has just resigned the office of Chaplain of the Massachusetts Senate, is ninety years of age.

The religious census of Germany reports almost two-thirds of the people Protestant, and slightly over one-third Roman Catholic, with less than six thousand people registered as not Christians.

The Women's Temperance League of Vienna, Austria, now sends out little hand-carts with hot non-alcoholic beverages to markets, factories, and building works, with the object of keeping workmen away from the saloons.

A medical missionary in the Foreign field believes that he could advance his Gospel work materially, if he had an oil-light stereopticon, to enable him to illustrate his sermons and attract people to his services. Any person having one that he could spare, or being willing to contribute toward the purchase of one, may send to Mr. Wm. T. Blackley, 59 East 122d street, New York.

A unique district is that of Orsa, in Dalecarlia, Sweden. Its municipality, by judicious control of public land and investments of its rentals, is able to defray all expenses, so that the inhabitants pay no taxes, though every child receives a first-rate education and the streets are well paved and lighted.

The annual universal day of prayer for students is fixed for Feb. 14 this year. This will not interfere with the day of prayer for colleges, which is set for Jan. 28. The call for the former says that the number of students and professors who have become members of the Christian Students' movement throughout the world is now 89,000.

Miracles as Teachers of Prayer * : JESUS FORGIVES SIN :

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEB. 14
MARK 2: 1-12

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT--MARK 2: 10:
THE SON OF MAN HATH POWER ON EARTH TO FORGIVE SINS

PETER'S house in Capernaum is again the scene of healing. Only a few weeks have elapsed since that Sabbath day when Jesus cured Peter's wife's mother, and healed all who were brought to the door. Let us imagine how Peter would tell the story of this second healing in his house:

"The guest chamber in my house was at the disposal of Jesus, whenever he wished to stay in Capernaum. For considerable over one year he had made Capernaum the centre of his operations, so that it came to be called 'His own city.' During all this time he made his home with us. He came and went by the outer stair, and the chamber on the roof became a consecrated place, for it was to him a place of prayer, as well as of refreshment. It often occurred that companies of people gathered in the inner court of my house to hear Jesus talk, because this was the roomiest part of our house. Usually, the people who came were eager listeners, who wanted to know about the truths which Jesus had to teach. The common people heard him gladly. But on the day of our story, some Pharisees and Doctors of the Law had come with the rest for the express purpose of controverting him. This made the crowd greater than usual, for the people wanted to see these distinguished persons, and hear what they would say. The crowd completely filled the court, and even our living rooms which were around it, besides which they filled the door out to the very street.

"I went up to the guest chamber to get the roll of Isaiah, which Jesus desired to read. While on the roof, I saw four men trying hard to get up the outer stairway. It was a tug for them, because they were bearing a sick man on his bed. I noted that he was a paralytic, and utterly helpless. Their earnestness and persistence and their faith were so great I could not stop them, even though I knew they would need to break up a part of my roof to accomplish it. They lost no time in carrying out their plan, for almost as soon as I reached the side of Jesus with the roll, they were letting the man down."

Illustration and Application

The key to the significance and purpose of Bible miracles is in that profound saying of Jesus: "That ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins (then saith he to the sick of the palsy), Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house." Thus Christ taught that the healing of the body was not the chief end of miracles, but the teaching and healing of the soul. That men might believe he could save the invisible man, he healed the visible. That men might believe he could pardon, he cured the palsy. That men might believe he could answer prayers for pardon, he answered the prayer of those who sought healing for palsy.

What specific lessons for us are in this story. 1. It is contrary to Christ's teaching to put physical healing in the foremost place in religion, as several preachers are doing to-day. 2. Every miracle is also a parable of prayer. 3. This miracle, as such a parable, teaches us that in our prayers for ourselves and for others, forgiveness should come first, and material blessings should be secondary. It also teaches us to overcome obstacles with gracious persistence in bringing others to Christ. And it teaches that doubt produces distress, while to come to Christ, enables us to go on our way rejoicing, benefited in body and soul. The story also reminds us that Christ reads our very thoughts, condemning those that are sceptical and censorious, while answering those that are unspoken prayers, with forgiveness and healing. Come to Jesus, to be forgiven, to be healed, and then go rejoicing all the way to the heavenly home.

I. This story is the very one with which we should test the alleged miracles of those modern religions that are better known for reputed healings of men's bodies than for work in their souls. The newest instance of the power of the imagination upon the body, by which many of these modern faith healings may be explained, is the case of a colored woman in Chicago, who, on December 21st, was given by a neighbor a bottle containing a brownish liquid, and advised to drink it as a medicine, which she did. But instead of feeling better she began to feel sick, and so jumped to the conclusion that she had been poisoned, and in a short time she died. "Not poisoned, but dead because she thought she had been poisoned," was the verdict of the coroners' jury. Her fear affected her heart and killed her. As fear may kill, hope may cure. "If hope can cure, much more faith," it will be said, and we do not deny that the prayer of faith may still save the sick. But any person or church that turns the minds of worshipers to-day chiefly to physical rather than spiritual healing, is working against the whole trend of the New Testament, which sweeps on from miracles of the body to miracles of the soul. After Pentecost, it was conversions rather than cures by which the power of God was chiefly manifested.

II. This miracle is also the one with which to study miracles in general. In connection with this one, Jesus declares that miracles are not for the body's sake chiefly, but for the soul—in other words, they are teachers of prayer. "That ye may know that the Son of man hath power to forgive sin (then saith he to the sick of palsy), Arise." Does it seem hard to fix the mind on an infinite, invisible God and come to him with a finite cry for help? Then let us think how God in Christ once walked the earth, and how real men, and women, and children, no better than ourselves, came to him daily praying, that is, asking for bread, for healing, for light, for life; and in the varied ways he answered those requests, let us learn what answers to expect to-day, as again we come to him, whom having not seen, we love. It will help us, who pray to an unseen Christ, to remember that so prayed the blind of Christ's day. Bartimeus, as Jesus passed by at Jericho, heard that Jesus was near, and cried out to the Saviour he could not see, for light, and so should we. The miracles illustrate the need of asking. Jesus was wont to say to those who came to be healed, "What wilt thou?" "What shall be done unto thee?" He knew that it was important for the suppliant to express his want, even as appetite is needed to prepare for food. Prayer is requisite, not because God needs information, but because we need to hunger and thirst after righteousness. "Ask and receive" is God's law for the spiritual realm, just as "sow and reap" is his law for seedtime and harvest. God might give us what we need physically without work, and what we need spiritually without prayer, but it is not hard to see that in both cases it is better there should be effort on our part.

Some miracles teach that this effort should be earnest, even to a struggle, as when the Syro-Phoenician woman, apparently rebuffed by Christ in her prayer for her sick daughter, humbly persisted and got what she desired. "O, woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt," was Christ's approving answer to that Gentile woman, worthy, for her wrestling prayer, of the name Israel. God seems to leave us unanswered sometimes that we may grasp him the more earnestly, crying, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." Daily dew is not enough. Sometimes the soul must be outpoured in mighty showers of prayers and tears if our souls are to have the full harvest.

The miracles also teach the need of definiteness in prayer. When the sick woman's finger touched the sacred blue fringe of Christ's tallith, and was healed, many others touched him in the passing throng without benefit. It was her definite, though unspoken prayer, that he answered. The miracles also teach that faith is the vital breath of prayer. How often

"THEY UNCOVERED THE ROOF AND LET DOWN THE BED"

Jesus said, "Thy faith hath saved thee." But let us not forget those many miracles where not "great faith" but "little faith" was successful. "If thou canst do anything," said the father of the demoniac boy, "have compassion on us." Even that bruised seed of little faith Jesus did not break. When the storm came on the disciples in their boat, and they cried out in their terror, Jesus said, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" But he stilled the storm. Even such smoking flax he would not quench.

In this lesson, the four friends that brought the palsied man manifestly had great faith in Christ's power to heal, but probably neither they nor he had much faith in Christ's power to forgive; but to that need, which may not yet have become even little faith, Christ made gracious answer, "Son, thy sins are forgiven thee." This miracle, in the fact just mentioned, and other miracles in other ways, teach also that God often gives us not what we ask but what we need. And the miracle teach also that we must work as we pray. Jesus ever made those he would heal do whatever they could for themselves; as when the blind man was told to anoint his eyes with clay and wash in the pool of Siloam. "Go, show yourselves to the priests," said Jesus to the lepers. "And as they went they were cleansed." It was while they were in the act of obedience that Christ answered their cry for healing. So, in multitude of ways, miracles are parables of prayer.

AN ORIENTAL HOUSE, SHOWING OUTER STAIRWAY

III. But let us give final and chief emphasis to the spiritual teaching of this particular miracle, namely, that sin is worse than sickness, and often the cause of it, and that pardon is the thing every unforgiven sinner needs to pray for more than any earthly good. After a revival meeting, as the crowd were passing out, a watchful Christian woman handed to a man whose troubled face showed that he desired to be saved from his sins but was not, a printed text: "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions and as a cloud thine iniquities" (Isa. 44: 22). Then she disappeared. The inquirer carried the text to his home, hardly able to believe that it could be a promise for him, for his sins rose up against him occasionally, especially the ingratitude of rejecting Christ so long. After talking it over with his Christian wife, and getting encouragement from her, he said, "I will sign my name to that as true, and true for me. And so he did, and in that act found pardon and peace.

A boy went to the old country schoolhouse. He was careless and thoughtless. In his writing book one could see the boy reflected in whole pages of scribbles and blottings. The master's copy at the head of the page was always disregarded, and for weeks the boy's record was a disgrace to him and an annoyance to his teacher. One day, the boy looking over the blotted pages, recalled the fact of a coming examination day, when his copy-book would be open to the inspection of the school committee and of his parents. He also thought seriously of the folly of his behavior, and he resolved that from that day forward there should be an improvement.

He began in good earnest. His first page was a decided improvement. As the school master looked over the new endeavor of his pupil, did he upbraid him for the past failures? No. Keeping his thumb down firmly on the leaves that contained the records of his pupil's carelessness, he commended warmly the new departure, and encouraged him to persevere. And the boy did persevere. Every day's record was an advance upon the former. All the while, however, the boy remembered that the last day of school would expose his whole book to the public eye, and it was with no little dread that, on examination day, he walked with his father to the table where the copy-books lay.

"If my father should happen," he said to himself, "to open my book among the old pages, what shall I say? And if he should turn back from my better work to the beginning, what will he say?"

So it was with much fear the boy approached the table with his father. But judge of his surprise when he found that his teacher, pleased with his advancement, had cut out of the copy-book all the soiled and blotted pages, leaving only the evidence of care and thoughtfulness to be examined.

Is our God less kind than the old country schoolmaster? Do you forget his own words, "Abundantly pardon?" "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgression."

O God, my sins are manifold; against my life they cry, And all my guilty deeds forego up to thy temple fly. Wilt thou release my trembling soul, that to despair is driven? "Forgive!" a blessed voice replied, "and thou shalt be forgiven."

—BISHOP HEBER.

OUR MISSION OF MERCY IN MACEDONIA

Active Life-Saving Work in Progress Among the Refugees — Pastor Popoff Appeals by Cable for Aid

AFTER a remarkably quick journey, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Special Commissioner to Macedonia, Rev. Marco N. Popoff, arrived at Sofia, Bulgaria, on January 20. Pastor Popoff's letters from the field of relief operations may shortly be expected to appear in these columns.

Excellent work is being accomplished by our missionaries in the field with the funds already forwarded by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Rev. W. W. Peet, Treasurer of American Missions in Turkey, sends the following:

"CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 4, 1904.

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Esq., Bible House, N. Y. City.

DEAR SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your cablegram dated New York City, December 31st, cabling $5,000.00 through Messrs. Thomas Cook & Son. I have already received from Messrs. Thomas Cook & Son a draft for Frs. 51,350.00 as the countervalue of this sum, and as requested, I am sending the value of $5,000.00 to Rev. L. Bond, Monastir.

2,000.00 to Rev. E. B. Haskell, Salonica.

2,000.00 to Rev. G. D. Marsh, Philippopolis.

1,000.00 to Rev. J. F. Clarke, D.D., Samokov.

for Macedonian relief.

We are so nearly connected with the several stations as to make it possible, immediately on receipt of notice here of a remittance, to make the value of same immediately available at the stations named.

On Saturday last I cabled you in behalf of a new locality known as Adrianople Vilayet, in which the suffering is now probably greater than in any other place in Macedonia. It was only recently that the distress in this part of Macedonia was brought to my notice, and I immediately made arrangements for undertaking work in that locality, though the means at my disposal are quite inadequate to meet the demands. I am going forward, however, as rapidly as possible with the work, and shall be glad of any assistance that can be given in the way of providing the people with shelter, bedding, etc. Yours faithfully,

"W. W. PEET."

Smallpox has broken out among the refugees in the Kastona district.

In one village eighty-five died of the disease.

The villages of Aposkep, Gernovishta, Dymbeni, Kosenets, Kostenets, Labanitz, and Smyrdes are contaminated, and the disease is spreading rapidly.

Mr. and Mrs. Brailsford are now busily engaged in relief work in the Thrida district. They found the distress in the districts visited even greater than anticipated, and the need for additional funds very urgent.

Very little autumn ploughing and sowing has been done, and there is danger of the distress being prolonged and increased, by the consequent failure of next year's harvest.

In a letter just received from Dr. J. F. Clarke, American missionary at Samokov, the writer says:

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—The statistics of suffering which I put you in my letter of November 24, and which were published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of December 23, have been corroborated by subsequent examinations. The numbers should rather be increased, some representing eds now more than doubled. The official record of refugees on the border, over a month ago, was more than 23,000. I do those best able to know then put it at 30,000. Since at that time, companies from various villages, some of whom I have well known, have continued to cross the pathless mountains, braving the cold and the deep snow. Of such a party of twenty-eight, a woman and two children perished about a month ago. In some localities there are small bands of the Committee or others, hovering about to aid such refugees.

With the English ladies, Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Lewis, and a delegate from the Central Relief Committee, I have personally visited twenty-one of the places toward the Black Sea, where refugees had been placed. The destitution was so great, fearfully so, in some places near the Turkish border, where hastily-made huts of wicker work, half-plastered on the outside with mud, made a degree of shelter for those

Our Relief Committee Organized

Special by Cable to "The Christian Herald"

SOFIA, January 25.

KLOPSCH, New York.

Committee organized. Twenty-three members.

The Rev. Edward Haskell, Chairman. 80,000 persons reported suffering. Adrianople district not yet reported. Urgent need of money for clothing.

Bulgarian government unable to make more grants for refugees.

(Signed) POPOFF.

lying on the cold, damp ground. The vision of those needy ones haunts me day and night. I have also spent four days with another delegate in Dubnitsa, the place of most suffering and need in this vicinity. Here are many who fled from their homes a year ago and only found work enough to get their food, so that they have even more need of clothing than those who have now escaped from their homes.

The Central Government is supplying bread or flour to those in need, especially in the villages. In the larger towns

What afterwards? Many of the refugees now in Bulgaria will settle there, and will need seed, oxen, tools and homes. So also will those who will return from Bulgaria to their desolated villages in Macedonia.

Recent letters report that funds for the refugees in Macedonia and Bulgaria are being contributed slowly in America, because of Miss Stone's capture, and because the action of insurgent bands has partly caused the present sufferings. The women, children and babes, the old and decrepit, whose homes have been destroyed and they cruelly beaten, violated and massacred, have not been the ones to blame. They have not risen against their rulers. The insurgent bands were not persistently and relentlessly pursued and exterminated, because the soldiers found it easier to fall upon those who could not resist them—to make targets of babes and children, instead of men with weapons. Miss Stone would shield no guilty one from just punishment, but she knows that the sufferers are not the guilty ones, and she pleads that they may be succored. God's blessing will rest on those who shall give aid, and especially for that most needed.

Samokov, Bulgaria.

J. F. CLARKE.

Mrs. Z. D. Furnajieff writes of the sufferings and helplessness of the refugees on the Bulgarian border: "Yesterday morning an old man, a Macedonian, came to us (a refugee from Belitza), and I could hardly keep the tears from my eyes, as he told his story of sufferings. He arrived here about three weeks ago, having fled with his wife over the cold snow-covered mountains. At the time their town was burnt, they had hid themselves in the woods; but, being discovered by the Turks, they were taken to Mehomia, imprisoned for six weeks, and beaten so much, that every bone is still aching. At last a Pomak became their guarantee, and they were freed. But they were so poorly clad that they would have succumbed to the cold, had not an old woman given them some old clothes to put on their backs. A priest brought them to our door just as I was coming home. As I talked with the priest he said: 'Please see if a skin-coat can be given to this unfortunate man.' Dr. Clarke had ordered over twenty skin-coats for the most needy sick people among the refugees. A number of these coats were sent to Dubnitsa, for distribution, but, fortunately, there were two left, and the man was given one. Oh! the joy in his eyes as he repeated several times: 'Ah! that will warm my aching bones!' He greatly needed a pair of trousers, too, but there were none to give him."

"This cold weather is very hard on them. Deaths are frequent, either from diseases contracted during their flight over the rough and cold mountains, or from their sufferings and anxiety over their dark prospects for the future. So they pass on to eternity, being unable to endure their heavy misfortunes. Their very crowding together is a source of disease; but what can we do more for them? It is only when one says to himself: 'If I were in their place, how would I feel?' that one can begin to realize how unfortunate they are, and what a strong claim they have upon those whom our Heavenly Father has differently situated.

"Thro' midnight gloom, from Macedon,
The cry of thousands as of one;
The voiceless silence of despair
Is eloquent in awful prayer;
The soul's despairing bitter cry:
'Come o'er and help us, or we die!'"

All contributions should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Contributions prior to Jan. 11, are acknowledged on the next page.

MACEDONIAN REFUGEES AFTER BEING CLOTHED BY MRS. KING-LEWIS, AT BOURGAS

In the background stand (1) Mr. Obreshkoff; (2) Mrs. King Lewis; (3) Mrs. C. Tonjoroff; (4) Mrs. Obreshkoff and where the numbers are few, the refugees are supplied by the people

Dr. Clarke further states that American missionaries in Samokov, have received aid from England and America, which has been spent in that city, Banya, Kostenets, Ichteman, Dubnitsa and Ludjen, in Bulgaria, besides help sent to Mehomia over the mountains in Macedonia. Everywhere there has been great destitution. "The last donation of $1,000 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, came Dec. 31," he writes. "In two hours, arrangements had been made by telegraph for the supply of the most needed garments in Dubnitsa, up to the value of $300, in Ludjen, and with all the rest, and plans were at once arranged in Samokov, to prepare chiefly warm outside clothing, including sheepskin coats for the aged, and clothing for children. The aim has been to give work to the refugees. Many sad and suffering hearts are very grateful for what sympathizing friends in England and America have sent them. The amount of material good done, and the sympathy shown by the donors, and those directly in the work, have been of great value, but the immediate needs are still great. The severe cold which has come will last for weeks. $4,000 more are now needed in the region toward the Black Sea; at least $2,000 more for Samokov, and places supplied from this city. In addition to these amounts, another $2,000 is needed for scattered places about Philippopolis and west of Samokov, where refugees have received but little help, and are barely existing, in much need. Such aid continued will save much suffering.

The Christian Herald Macedonia Relief Fund

CONTRIBUTIONS IN AID OF THE SUFFERERS RECEIVED PRIOR TO JANUARY 11, 1904

MAINE		VERMONT—Cont'd		CONN.—Cont'd		MASS.—Cont'd		NEW YORK—Cont'd		NEW YORK—Cont'd		NEW YORK—Cont'd		NEW YORK—Cont'd
Abbott, M. A.	2.00	Billings, Mrs. J. & Mrs.	2.00	Mrs. C. F. L. & son	1.00	Remmonds, Mrs. W.	1.00	Bennett, Mr. & Mrs.	2.00	Hunter, Louis	1.00	Squires, Leander	1.00	A Friend, Bklyn.	1.00
Allen, Mrs. S. S.	5.00	Chamberlin, Mrs. J.	1.00	Earle	1.00	Rich, Mrs. C. M.	2.50	Hunt, Thomas J.	1.00	Hurst, Mrs. E. H.	1.00	Starkweather, A. M.	1.00	A Friend, Canajo-	1.00
Anderson, M. A.	1.00	Chipman, Mrs. E.	1.00	M. L. S., Bridgeport	2.00	Richardson, N.	5.00	Hunter, Mrs. E. H.	1.00	Jabbe, Clarence	1.00	Stater, Mrs. B. T.	1.00	harie	1.00
Babb, Edwin	2.00	Churchill, Mrs. W. B.	1.00	M. Y. Z., New Haven	5.00	Ridgway, Miss J. E.	1.00	Jabbe, Clarence	1.00	Jarvis, Miss J. M.	1.00	Stone, Mrs. E. S.	1.00	A Friend, Canad-	1.00
Barber, Miss H.	2.00	Clark, Mrs. A. S.	1.50	J. E. B., Darien	2.00	Rockway, Miss S. M.	1.00	Jax, A.	5.00	Jayne, Mrs. S. A.	1.00	Stones, N. J.	1.00	gua	2.00
Battcher, Reuben	1.00	Co, Ethel E.	1.00	S. J. K., Hawleyville	2.00	Rogers, L. W.	25.00	Betz, John	5.00	Jeffery, Mrs.	1.00	Stover, Mrs. E. R.	1.00	A Friend, Gilberts-	1.00
Bennett, Miss G. M.	1.00	Cunningham, Mrs.	1.00	E. V. N., Madison	1.00	Scott, Mrs. C.	1.00	Bigelow, Mrs. M.	8.50	Johnson, Mrs. D. S.	5.00	Strang, Mrs. T. S.	3.00	Avond, Kingston	1.00
Bowers, Mrs. R. E.	1.00	Winn	1.00	M. B. F., Mansfield	1.00	Seaver, Mrs. S. J.	1.00	Blakeslee, Miss E. A.	1.00	Johnson, Mrs. E. D.	2.00	Strong, Harriet	15.00	A Friend, Mexico	1.00
Brown, G. F.	3.00	Day, Mrs. H. H.	1.00	F. M. F., Marlboro	1.00	Shrewsbury, J.	5.00	Blinn, S. E.	1.00	Johnson, W. S.	1.00	Sweetman, J. T.	10.00	A Friend, Middle-	1.00
Buck, Mrs. Ed.	5.00	Flagg, Mrs. R. L.	1.00	Mills	2.00	Smith, Job H.	5.00	Blodgett, Miles	3.00	Jones, W. T.	1.00	Terry, Mrs. H. M.	1.00	town	1.00
Butler, Mrs. F.	1.00	Forsyth, J. T.	3.00	E. C. New Canaan	2.00	Stearns, C. C.	1.00	Blodgett, Mrs. M.	2.00	Kamerer, Edw.	1.50	Thomas, D. & M.	5.00	A Friend, Randolph	1.00
Chapman, Mr. & Mrs.	3.00	Green, Mrs. J. D. D.	1.00	F. A. W., New Haven	1.00	Stevens, Mrs. Cyrus	3.00	Borden, Mrs. W. F.	1.00	Keith, M. A.	2.00	Thomas, Mary	1.00	A Friend, Sharon	1.00
Clark, Hiram	10.00	Green, Mrs. W. H.	1.00	W. E. M., New Haven	1.00	Swift, J. T.	2.00	Bowers, Mrs. W. M.	1.00	Koberdin, Mrs.	1.00	Thompson, L. W.	1.00	A Friend, Spencer-	1.00
Clark, Hiram F.	5.00	Hazard, Saml L.	2.00	M. A. R., Shelton	3.00	Taylor, Henry	5.00	Brady, Miss Lulu	1.00	Kieffer, Emma	1.00	Thatcher, Mrs. O.	2.00	port	1.00
Cleaver, W. F.	1.00	Hooper, Mrs. E. J.	1.00	Friend, Highwood	1.00	Taylor, E. A.	1.00	Bredmeier, Kath.	1.00	Tibbitts, Mrs. M. G.	5.00	Tibbitts, Mrs. M. G.	5.00	A Friend, Syracuse	1.00
Crawford, Mrs. C. L.	1.00	Horey, Myrtle M. E.	1.00	Friend, Southington	3.00	Thompson, Miss J. O.	1.00	Brendle, Nora V.	1.00	Ticknor, J. M.	1.00	Ticknor, J. M.	1.00	Friend C. M., Dolge-	1.00
Crosby, Augusta	1.00	Kent, A. L.	1.00	Friend, Uncasville	5.00	Tillson, Mrs. I. S.	1.00	Brewster, S. W.	1.00	Tillson, Chas. E.	5.00	Toor, Mrs. John	1.00	ville	1.00
Davis, Miss M.	1.00	Ladd, M. S.	1.00	Friend, Waterbury	1.00	Tobey, Mrs. Rufus	5.00	Bridge, Mrs. C. F.	1.00	Toor, Mrs. John	1.00	Torney, Mrs. M. J.	2.00	Friend E. W. E.	1.00
Dresser, W. A.	1.00	Lewis, A. E.	1.00	A Friend, Bridge-	1.00	Travelling, Mrs.	1.00	Brierley, Mrs. J.	1.00	True, Wm. M.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	the poor	1.00
Eames, Mrs. H. F.	1.00	Lyman, Jos. B.	2.00	A Friend, Durham	2.00	Tupper, L. A.	1.00	Brock, Mrs. O. C.	1.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	N. Y. C.	2.00
Eastman, John C.	2.00	Martin, C. M.	2.00	A Friend, E. Canaan	1.00	Turner, Mrs. O. S.	1.00	Brook, Mrs. C. C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Friends, Eden	1.00
Elliott, S. W.	1.00	Mercure, L. A.	2.00	A Friend, New Brit-	1.00	Webb, Mrs. Sarah	1.00	Brown, Mr. & Mrs.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Friends, Selkirk	1.00
Geldthwait, Mrs. J. B.	1.00	Miles, Mrs. M. S.	3.00	ain	1.00	White, Augustus	5.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. Albany	1.00
Goodwin, H. C.	2.00	Nichols, Mrs. E. H.	1.00	A Friend, New Lon-	1.00	Whitney, Mrs. A. W.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. Bergen	3.00
Gould, J. B.	5.00	Parker, Mrs. Geo.	1.00	don	1.00	Wildner, Mrs. S.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. Cambridge	2.00
Hall, Mrs. Danl A.	1.00	Perkins, E. P.	1.00	A Friend, Tatfville	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. Lawrence	1.00
Hall, Wm. F. & wf.	1.00	Randall, Mr. & Mrs.	5.00	I. H. N., Guilford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. Lyons	5.00
Hatch, A. N. & H. M.	1.00	Robinson, Mrs. Hy.	1.00	I. H. N., Meriden	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. Moore's Mill	5.00
Hawes, C. J.	1.00	Seely, J. O.	2.00	I. H. N., New Haven	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. Olean	5.00
Higgins, Wm. J.	4.00	Shepard, F. H.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Hobart, Mrs. David	5.00	Shinclair, Edna L.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Jordan, Herbert F.	1.00	Smith, Alberta	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Lamb, R.	2.00	Smith, Mrs. E. C.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Loud, T. C.	1.00	Thompson, Mrs. S. S.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Lunts, A. F.	5.00	Young, Henry	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Miller, Mrs. A. F.	1.00	Mite, New Haven	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Mitchell, Mrs. H. L.	1.00	2 Sisters, Norwalk	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Morrill, Mrs. A.	5.00	Friends 1st Church,	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Poole, Mrs. M. J.	1.00	Guilford	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Riggs, W. T.	1.00	Massachusetts	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Russell, A. S. H.	2.00	Adams, J. W.	1.50	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Russell, Miss L.	3.00	Ainley, H.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Sherrin, Louis	1.00	Alcott, W. P.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Stevenson, Alice	1.00	Andrews, J. H.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Steward, Mrs. B. B.	1.00	Arnold, Amanda	1.50	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Tederson, S.	1.00	Austin, Miss E. L.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Tobbetts, J. H.	1.00	Bakeman, Lucy L.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Turner, Mrs. J. N.	1.00	Bailey, Elijah B.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Wells, Warren	1.00	Bailey, E. H.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Wells, Warren	1.00	Bemis, J. E. H.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Wheelwright, E. H.	1.00	Benson, Mrs. Julia	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Whitmore, Sarah M.	5.00	Bliss, W. A.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Worthen, O.	2.00	Bowden, Mr. & Mrs.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Clara, Waldo	2.00	Bray, E. T.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
A. E. E. Newburg	1.00	Bray, Mrs. Robt.	1.50	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Village	1.00	Bridgman, F. A.	3.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
M. K. G. Pittsfield	5.00	Brockway, Mrs. L. G.	3.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
W. C. T. U. Orono	5.00	Burnham, Everett	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Newburgh Vill-	2.00	Burgess, Pella G.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00 age	2.00	Butler, Mrs. J.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Portland	1.00	Butterworth, Miss	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Friend, Church Hill	1.00	C. A.	1.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Friend, Cushing	8.50	Collins, Salome	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
A Friend, Topsham	2.00	Cummings, Danl.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Friend in Me, Ox-	1.00	Daniels, Mrs. H. M.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
ford	10.00	dau	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
I. H. N. Portland	5.00	Davis, A. R.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
I. H. N. Berwick	1.00	Davison, M. S.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Reader, E. Turner	25.00	Dawley, A. H.	5.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
A Subr, Milltown	1.50	Deeg, Chas. T.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Two Friends, Rock-	2.00	Dewey, Mrs. E.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
land	2.00	Eager, E. M.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Two Sisters, Wells	4.00	Eddy, D.	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
New Hampshire		Eddy, Mary	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H. N. W. A. P.	1.00
Ball, G. T.	5.00	Ellis, Eli	2.00	Reader, Stratford	1.00	Woodbury, A. E.	1.00	Amos	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	Ullman, Miss C.	2.00	I. H.

AROUND THE HEARTH

By MARGARET E.

SANGSTER

CWARDE TRAVEL

Midwinter Occupations

SHOULD you happen to visit New York in January, leaving behind you the snowy fields and wintry peace that befit and enfold the country landscape, you would rub your eyes and wonder what had happened. There might, indeed, be snow, piled in side streets, profaned and blackened with city winds, smoke and rubbish, and people would be wearing heavy clothing, furs and overcoats. But the shop windows! They would be redolent of summer bloom and perfume. The instant the new year steps over the world-threshold, presto! commerce anticipates springtide and blossoms. Merchants display cotton goods, gowns, lawns, filmy tissues, parasols, all the whole gay paraphernalia of another season, when wraps will be discarded, furs packed away in camphor, and screens guard the house from flies and mosquitoes.

The annual springtime show in freezing January, conveys to the thrifty woman a hint about her midwinter sewing. Why not make the shirt-waists and the frocks now; rig out the children for summer now; remodel last year's gowns and jackets now? Nothing is more cozily pleasant than a family group, mother and the girls sewing in a snug kitchen, with something bubbling and fizzing and sending forth a savory odor from the stove, with the small boy fussing at a table near by over the bent wood set that Santa Claus bought him at Christmas, with grandmother knitting placidly beside the window, and the cat purring on the hearth. Finish substantially the family sewing for the next three or four months, during the cold weather, when most people enjoy being indoors, is good economy both of time, strength and money.

Another wholesome midwinter occupation is reading. Many women get very little opportunity for uninterrupted reading during warm weather. House-cleaning confronts them in the early spring. Then visitors begin to arrive, relatives and friends who pay their arrears as guests before "boarding season." Farmer's wives who open their homes to city boarders, have little leisure during the summer solstice. One sun-lady, known to me for her sympathy with and intelligent interest in every form of Christian and missionary activity, saves her summer literature for study and perusal during the winter. There can be no wiser occupation of the quiet time which comes when the drifts are piled high, and the house is comfortable, and no extraordinary pressure exhausts the energies of the housekeeper.

The Art of Conversation

When I was a child, I remember we had a certain garrulous neighbor who was the dread of every one because of her constant stream of talk. It went on, and on, and on, in placid monotone, with the effect on one's ears of a purring brook. I really do not imagine that she had very much to say, or communicated anything worth while, for her family hardly took pains to listen to her, and her friends lost no chance of getting away, though they sometimes tried to interrupt her in the very middle of her endless tales. She was not malicious or unkind, and not a gossip, but she was a fussy, verbose talker, who became wearisome and a bore because she took the floor and held it, because she gave no room on the other side half a chance to be heard. Conversation is a sort of game; it implies reciprocity; it cannot be successfully carried on by one alone. Two, or three, or four persons may join in a conversation, and the more general the talk the pleasanter and more genial will be the occasion. The possession of a talent for quick repartee, of a swift and pleasing wit, of a story-telling gift, so that one always has a happy anecdote ready at the right moment, is a thing to be congratulated; but though we may lack this, we need not despair. A good listener, sympathetic, intelligent, attentive, speaking, though in a monosyllable, at the appropriate juncture, is as indispensable in a perfectly balanced conversation as a helm to a ship.

Of two wonderful men, Thomas Carlyle and Alfred Tennyson, it is recorded that once they sat in absolute silence a whole evening, their meditative pipes sending clouds of smoke up the chimney. They declared they had had a very edifying period of discourse. It is a proof of extreme intimacy, of that telepathy which requires no response in speech, when friends can sit together dumbly, and yet feel that they have had satisfactory intercourse.

Sydney Smith said of Macaulay, who, at a dinner table was in the habit of grasping the conversation and carrying it on alone in brilliant monologue, that once there was an improvement; Macaulay had "flashes of silence." An eloquent talker is in danger of giving the others in the room no op-

A Cry from Macedonia

DEAR women who read this page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week, can you hear and not heed the moving cry of urgent distress from Macedonia? Driven from their homes by the rapacity and cruelty of the infamous Turk, victims of unutterable wickedness, the refugees who have left murdered kinsmen and burnt villages behind them, who have literally nothing left except the rags they wear, challenge the compassion and awaken the sympathy of the civilized world.

We have had a bitter spell of weather here; but our houses are warm, our tables are abundantly spread, and our children are clothed. What matters to us the inclemency of chill wintry days? Why should we be disturbed when the frosts are deep, when we have every possible comfort and luxury at our hand? But, suppose for one instant, that the case were different. Fancy yourself, dear mother, with a famished babe in your arms, and a group of half-naked, hungry children huddled round you, without the means to find relief, without a penny, without a friend near or far. You cannot put yourself in the place of these far-away refugees, and enjoy your next meal, unless you do something to lift the intolerable load of suffering from the Christian women of Macedonia.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing all it can to assist these poor people, and will gladly and promptly transmit your offerings. Send something at once. A day's delay at this time means illness and death in many cases. As you look at your own precious little ones, let pity stir in your heart for those children whose portion has already been unspeakable misery and desperate hardship. Their want is their appeal. A little self-denial, a little sacrifice, on the part of Christian mothers here, will save Christian mothers in old Macedonia. M. E. S.

A Provoking Habit

The habit in question is not vicious in itself, nor shocking, nor specially blame-worthy, though it is provoking. It is the habit of taking leave by instalments. "Well," observes the caller, tentatively, "I must be going; I have staid longer than I meant to, but you are always so entertaining." She does not rise, and her hostess, of course, remains seated. After one or two further futile endeavors, the lady gets on her feet, but does not move an inch beyond her chair. Presently she makes a heroic effort and advances, not directly, but in a zigzag fashion, half-way to the door. Here she takes breath and a fresh start, recollects something she meant to say, and practically makes another call. At the outer door, to which, if her hostess is one of the old-school order, she has accompanied her, the guest again lingers. She has wraps on, furs, or at least a cloak or jacket, and her head is covered. The hostess has only her indoor dress as a protection, and falls an easy prey to grippe, or pneumonia, or rheumatism, as she stands there in the draught without extra clothing.

The law of the road is, go at once, when you have signified your intention to go. All needless lingering is a sin against good form.

Husbands now and then, when not urged by the inevitable relentlessness of a timetable, have this provoking habit of loitering before leaving home in the morning. A wife may worship her lord, but she wants him out of the house after eight or nine o'clock, so that she may pursue her own affairs without delay and interruption. When a man says good morning three times instead of one, rushes down to the cellar for a parting glance at the furnace, though it was arranged for the day a half hour ago, stands on the sidewalk and gazes at the house as if he suspected it of an intention to move across lots in his absence, his wife is excusable for some irritation. Nothing is more trying in a small way than staying about when one is sure that the stayer has business elsewhere.

Beyond His Expectations

How I Worked My Way Around the World, by Harry Steele Morrison, has been received, and I must say it is beyond my expectations. The book alone is worth the two dollars paid. A. W. QUINN.

OLD CAPTAIN JEAMES AND LITTLE JOHN

Old Captain Jeames has sailed the seas, full many a gallant year,
But now he spends his days ashore amid grandchildren dear.
And when he builds for little John, a boat with spar and sail,
Be sure that boat is staunch enough to weather any gale.

portunity to speak, and so, instead of conversation, there is a lecture, or a homily, or some other form of exhortation, which none fully enjoy, and one or two, waiting their turn, resent.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—DOR. Don't ask me about Latin pronunciations. Go to your minister, or your cousin who is studying at Harvard. Your Aunt Prudence is not an authority on these questions of scholarship.

—ELLEN. A girl living under her mother's roof should obey her mother. You seem unreasonable. Your mother's wish that your friends should leave as a rule at ten o'clock in the evening is perfectly sensible and right.

—LOIS. Do not leave home for a strange city where you hope to find work, unless you have money enough to keep you for some weeks. Arrange for a boarding-place before you start. You may do this through the Young Women's Christian Association.

THE NARROW GATE

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Author of "IN HIS STEPS"

CHAPTER XI.—Continued.

GEORGE grinned. "If he's hurt very bad, I don't know it. He sent me up with this note, and told me to wait for an answer."

Esther clutched the note eagerly, and tore it open. As she read, a beautiful smile blossomed over her face.

"Come in, George, and sit down. You are the one that's hurt, according to this letter. Shot through the ear with a love song. Stabbed with a girl's black eye. Now, George, tell me all about her."

She showed him Douglas' letter, and before George went back to the office, Esther had arranged everything delightfully. George's cup promised to run over.

"It's awful good of you, Mrs. Douglas, Rhoda and I won't forget it."

When the happy event came off the next week, George had reason again to thank Mr. Douglas for an occasion that was long remembered by every one present. Mr. Vernon came on, as Douglas anticipated, and Mother Vernon with him, both very old and gray, but still quite vigorous, and rejoiced to live over the old times with the Colby friends. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards were there, as a matter of course, and Mr. Edwards joked George all the evening about his fondness for apple pie, and promised to send the bride a wagon load of canned goods as soon as the groom began to tire of angel food. Quits and the entire Beacon force were present, and added to George's happiness by their real expressions of regard and good wishes. Rhoda pleased everybody by her modest, sensible manner, and Esther had not seen her two minutes before she whispered to Frank that George was to be congratulated. The Colonel proved to be human, after all, and quite surprised everybody by his gift to the bride, which consisted of a $500 check, to go into the furnishing of the young couple's new home.

So the evening passed off perfectly. When it was all over, Douglas and Esther and Quits went along with George and his wife to their little home, which was in the lower end of the town near the river. They left the young people standing proudly in their little front room, surrounded with kind remembrances of their many friends, and the night was so pleasant that Douglas proposed to Esther and Quits that they walk around home by way of the north bridge, as it was called.

They had passed slowly over the bridge and had come out on the river road, still talking about the wedding and predicting all manner of delightful future for George and Rhoda, when they were startled by a sudden shot that broke the peaceful silence with a crack that seemed to come almost from the road in front of them. Next instant, out from a little clump of willows down by the water's edge, three men burst, coming on a dead run through the bushes. The minute they saw the group in front of them, they all turned precipitately and tore like mad down the road away from the town, and before Douglas and Quits had recovered from their surprise, the men had disappeared.

"That's Jake Lawson's joint!" cried Quits. "See! There's a light down there!" He pointed down the river bank, and Douglas and Esther could see a glimmer from the old shack in the willows.

For a moment they were all three still, not knowing what might appear next. Then Quits said, "What do you think, Mr. Douglas? Had we better go do down there? Somebody may be hurt."

"I don't know," replied Douglas, cautiously. "Think we'd better risk it?"

"Yes, let's go!" Esther said unexpectedly. "There can't be any danger, and some one may need our help."

They went down the bank slowly. Pausing occasionally to hear any noises from the hut, but all was still. That one shot was all that had disturbed that night's perfect peace.

When they reached the place they found the door open, but not a sign of any one about.

"You stay here until I investigate," said Quits, laying a hand on Douglas' arm. Esther was beginning to quiver with excitement.

Quits went in, and in a second or two they heard him exclaim in a muffled voice.

He appeared at the door a moment after, and his face was pale and stern.

"It's Jake. God's judgment has found him," he said.

Douglas and Esther went in with him. They stopped in front of the figure of the saloon-keeper, which was lying across a board, which rested on two empty beer kegs. He had been shot through the head, and apparently had been killed instantly. He lay on his back with his face turned upwards, and the light from a dirty kerosene lamp distorted his features into a ghastly grin. Quits laid the body out on the board and covered the face with a handkerchief, and the three went out from that presence awed at the event, to hurry back to the town and inform the officers. But on the way they met a detail coming to the scene. The shot had alarmed the police, and their investigation led later on to the apprehension of two of the guilty parties who were present. They protested that the shot had been fired in self-defense, and it probably was. But Jake Lawson's soul had gone to God, and it was along the track of violence that the liquor he had sold so often sent others. Verily it is true that in the history of men, it has come to pass very often that in ways we do not anticipate, He calls men to account. Yea, verily, the soul that sinneth it shall die; whether early or late, the summons is inevitable.

The death of Jake Lawson practically extinguished the last illegal liquor place in Colby. The facts brought out in the trial of the men who were present when he was killed strengthened the popular sentiment against the jointist. Douglas noted with increasing satisfaction, as the year came to a close, that all over the county it could truly be said that the saloon was extinguished.

Probably no one in the United States awaited the President's annual message that new year with more anticipation than Douglas. When he received the regular press edition for publication, he went at once into the office to glance it over.

It was divided with convenient subtitles, showing the different subjects treated. He looked down the columns, seeing familiar words like "Army and Navy," "The Conditions in the Philippines," "Trusts," "Reciprocity," "The Venezuela Matter," "The Isthmian Canal," "Labor Unions," "Report of Coal Arbitration Commission," etc. Then suddenly his eye paused at a new word:

"The Liquor Business"

"I wish to call the attention of the Congress to a peril which has for ages threatened civilization, and is to-day a source of more financial loss to the people, of more pauperism, crime, wretchedness and trouble than any other one thing in the Republic. The liquor business has been declared outlaw in several States of the Union. It is being declared, by legal option laws in nearly every State, to be, owing to its character and results, outlaw as a business. Last year this business took over $1,000,000,000 out of the pockets of rich and poor, and made both immeasurably poorer. I have no recommendation to make to the Congress by way of suggestion for the checking of this constant wrong to the country. But I call attention to the fact that in considering

The Laundry Class.

In many of the schools of domestic science, laundry work is now taught in a thorough and scientific manner. In the laundry classroom Ivory Soap is always used to wash the articles that require special care and it is frequently used to the exclusion of all other soaps. It is as important to know the best materials for domestic use as to know the best methods for using them, and Ivory Soap is very generally recognized by those who have carefully investigated the subject as the safest and purest soap.

Many a reputation for punctuality rests upon the ELGIN WATCH

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to

ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

A GOOD POSITION

is always open to a competent man. His difficulty is to find it. We have openings and receive daily calls for Secretaries and Treasurers of business houses, Superintendents, Managers, Engineers, Expert Bookkeepers, Traveling Salesmen; Executive, Clerical and Technical positions of all kinds, paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. Write for plan and booklet.

HAPGOOD'S (Inc.),
Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York.

Do You Know

that you can add to your income by reading or corresponding for the press? It will pay you to write us for more information on either subject unless you are satisfied with your present salary. The opportunities are many and you can succeed because our instruction is thorough, personal and founded on practical experience. If you prefer to write ads we can teach you that a HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE NARROW GATE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 102

er matters of great commercial and international moment to us as a people, we ought not to ignore a matter so fraught with danger to our homes, to our legitimate business success, and to our civilization as a whole."

Douglas read it through and rushed out to show the copy to Quits. Quits read it with a look of bewilderment on his honest face. The tears came.

Mr. Douglas, this will do more to wipe out the saloon than anything that has been done in this country by any one man."

I believe it will, Quits. It's something hardly expected to live to see. I feel like getting down to pray right here."

Quits turned and walked into the office. Douglas followed, and the two knelt down. Their prayers were like songs of praise. When they rose, and looked into each other's faces, there was the hope in them which men show when they see at the end of the straitened way, on the other side of the narrow gate, the rising of the sun of righteousness which floods the hills and valleys of the Kingdom of God.

The President's message was the sensation of the year. Whatever else was overlooked, that one paragraph on the liquor business was commented upon by every paper, big and little, on both sides of the water. The liquor men were furious. The politicians were dazed. The temperance people were overwhelmed with joy. The whole country rose up as one man under the excitement of that simple declaration, and realized that the benning of the end had come for the most iniquitous traffic, aside from that in sin and blood, that ever humanity ended.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, Mr. Sage, Quits, Gorge and his young wife, Douglas and Eher, are still living, and still working at praying for the good time coming when the saloon shall be no more. All of them have passed many times through the Narrow Gate of life. God grant to all of them a happy entrance into the City. "For there shall be no night there."

THE END

A Great Offer Repeated

1st January we offered to our readers a limited number of copies of Conversations with Christ, the last and greatest book of Bishop John P. Newman. Within a few days, the stock was entirely exhausted, and we were obliged to refund a considerable sum of money to subscribers whose orders had arrived too late. We have recently been fortunate in obtaining a small additional quantity of this inspiring book, and are thus enabled to repeat this exceptional offer.

"CONVERSATIONS WITH CHRIST," by Bishop John P. Newman, 268 pages, bound in cloth, regular price $1, postage ten cents extra; our price, postage prepaid by us, only 50 cents. As there are only a limited number of copies, act quickly if you expect to be fortunate enough to secure one. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPARTMENT, Bible House, New York City.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific

Burpee's FORDHOOK FARMS are famous

As the Largest Trial Grounds in America

From the Atlantic

Professor Johnson, of The American Agriculturist, performed a similar office on behalf of the members of the agricultural and horticultural press present. Mr. Johnson said that the day had been one rare treat. . . . In speaking of the immensity of the Trial Grounds at FORDHOOK, Professor Johnson stated that those present would take home a lesson which would be remembered for many years. There was not an experiment station in the United States, supported by State or national legislation, that had anything like the variety of tests that were conducted on the Fordhook Farms. He said this in all fairness to the splendid work of the Experiment Stations. . . .

—Extract from an Editorial account of "A FIELD DAY AT FORDHOOK," which appeared in THE FLORIST'S EXCHANGE, New York, July 4, 1903.

From the Pacific

A careful seedsman's experiment grounds, like yours, it seems to me, are far more useful than any of the colleges or public experiment stations, as it is all practical work. Your Fordhook Trial Grounds were the best of all my Eastern object-lessons, and I had many of them. I had no idea of their extent and value, not only to yourself, but to every one of your customers, and eventually to every one who cultivates the soil. . . .

Thus wrote LUTHER BURBANK, "The Wizard of Horticulture," from Santa Rosa, California, October 20, 1900, upon his return from an extended eastern trip.

The BURPEE QUALITY in Seeds is quite different from that of usual commercial grades. BURPEE'S SEEDS cost a little more, but they are worth much more!

Intelligent planters everywhere are learning to appreciate the difference, — that always "the best is the cheapest," — to such an extent that we have been obliged not only to grow larger areas, but also to make still further improvements in our system of handling orders to meet the increasing demand.

As heretofore, we do not attempt to compete merely in price. Our aim is to excel in quality, and the fact that in spite of fierce competition we still maintain the largest mail-order seed trade in the world is indisputable evidence that BURPEE'S SEEDS GROW and are the BEST THAT GROW! Should you forget our full address, please remember that letters reach us safely if addressed simply Eight Elegant New Sweet Peas.

For 25 Cts.

we will mail, postpaid, one regular retail packet each of the following "Eight Best" new Sweet Peas: BURPEE'S DAINTY, the large flowers are beautifully formed and uniquely marked, "white with a pink edge," — LORD ROSEBERRY, richly colored, deep rose-carmine flowers, gracefully hooded, — see illustration, — JANET SCOTT, "the best pink sweet pea," flowers of large size, three on a stem, — LADY GRISEL HAMILTON, largest and best light lavender, — THE HON. MRS. E. KENYON, beautiful primrose-colored flowers of truly enormous size, — COCCINEA, a new color in Sweet Peas, a bright cherry-red, — JEANIE GORDON, charming bright rose, shaded primrose, and a large packet of the unequalled new BURPEE'S BEST MIXED FOR 1904. The Seven Superb Separate Sorts are shown painted from nature, while the SPECIAL MIXTURE is described on page 108 of our new Catalogue for 1904.

25 Cts. buys all the above Eight Elegant New Tall Sweet Peas, and in each collection we enclose our NEW LEAFLET ON CULTURE for 1904.

Seven Nasturtiums. For 25 Cts.

we mail one full-size packet each of all seven distinct types: The beautiful Dwarf Liliput in best mixture, — the unequalled mixture, Burpee's "Gorgeous" New Tom Thumb, — the interesting small-leaved Tom Pouce, — the brightly colored Lobbs' Finest Mixed, — the superbly brilliant new and unequalled mixture of Burpee's Hotspur Harlequin, — the gracefully artistic Ivy-Leaved, and the finest Burpee's New Superb Giant-flowered Nasturtiums. In the large bag enclosing each collection is included our NEW LEAFLET on culture.

Burpee's GEM Collection.

For 25 Cts.

we mail one packet each of all the following: Little Gem SWEET ALYSSUM, carpets the ground with a mass of white, — Fordhook Favorites among ASTERS, embracing many of the choicest types, — Burpee's Defiance BALSAMS, in unequalled mixture, including the new Exquisite — Dwarf Marguerite CARNATIONS, in finest colors, — Burpee's New Giant-flowered NASTURTIUMS, in unequalled mixture, — Royal Prize PANSIES, both free-flowering and giant varieties, — Largest-flowering PHLOX DRUMMONDI, as grown by ourselves, — Fordhook Fairy POPPIES, most graceful double flowers, in many colors, — a large packet of Burpee's New Grand Tall SWEET PEAS, as specially prepared for 1904, and a small packet of the most beautiful New PLUMED CELOSIAS. This novelty is likely to give such rare delight to all flower lovers as to be alone worth the quarter paid for all ten packets!

Vegetables! "FIVE FINEST" FORDHOOK FAMOUS NEW VEGETABLES.

For 25 Cts.

we will mail, postpaid, one full-size packet (such as we sell separately at ten cents per packet) each of the following: FORDHOOK FAMOUS CUCUMBER, the largest, most handsome, and finest flavored of all cucumbers, — BURPEE'S BRITTLE-ICE LETTUCE, the popular New "Nameless" Lettuce distributed for advance trials last season, — BURPEE'S NEW HALBERT HONEY WATER-MELON, sweetest and best for home use, — BURPEE'S NEW GOLDEN GLOBE ONION, earliest and handsomest of globe-shaped onions, and CHALK'S EARLY JEWEL TOMATO, largest of all extreme-earlies.

Above Five are all shown, painted from nature, on the cover or plates in our Catalogue. Perhaps there are named above one or two vegetables that you do not care for. Therefore you may omit any of the above, and instead select a packet of either the New DANISH ROUNDHEAD CABBAGE, — the unequalled CHINESE GIANT PEPPER, — the earliest HAILSTONE RADISH, — the delicious FORDHOOK BUSH SQUASH, of the New QUARTER-CENTURY STRAIN of BURPEE'S Bush Lima BEAN.

For One Dollar

we will mail all the seeds advertised — ten New Vegetables and twenty-five packets Choicest New Sweet Peas, Nasturtiums and other Flowers — in all thirty-five full-size packets for ONE DOLLAR!

Every one of these varieties is entitled to be marked with a bull's-eye (O), — as absolutely the best of its type.

Or For One Dollar

you can have ANY FIVE COLLECTIONS, and mailed to separate addresses if so requested. Be sure to ask for BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1904 when ordering. Write TO-DAY!

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Burpee Building, Philadelphia, Pa.
Nos. 475 and 477 North Fifth Street } Headquarters in PHILADELPHIA of Nos. 476 and 478 York Avenue }
THE WORLD'S LARGEST MAIL-ORDER SEED BUSINESS

BURPEE, Philadelphia.

The Strongest Fence Made

To sell direct to the farmer the strongest fence in the world, we must not only use the best HIGH CARBON SPRING STEEL WIRE, heavily galvanized, but we must build so that the greatest textile strength of material is maintained. Sixteen years, spent in perfecting Coiled Spring Fence, each year showing an added degree of perfection, has brought us to a point where we can proclaim with a confidence born of attainment that

OUR FENCE IS THE CHEAPEST AND BEST

Cheapest because the highest skill of the craft has been utilized to reduce the cost of manufacture, and this achievement, coupled with the largest output of the largest and best equipped plant in the United States devoted to fence manufacture, enables us to name you the VERY LOWEST PRICE AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT. Buy direct. We sell to you as cheap as dealers can buy. Put the dealer's profit in your own pocket. Examination permitted at your station; your money back if not as represented. Completion of sale rests wholly upon your judgment. Write us; we have something more to say to you. After correspondence is opened, you have your judgment to defend your interests at every advance of the deal. Our Catalogue is free, and is full of fence lore.

COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY,
Box 47
Winchester, Indiana, U. S. A.

The long looked for hymn book
Just issued.

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

By GEO. C. STEBBINS

For use in Evangelistic and Church Services, Conventions, Sunday Schools and all Prayer and Social Meetings of the Church and Home.

It contains a very large number of most useful and singable sacred songs, both new and old, among which are

MANY of the favorite "Gospel Hymns" and "Sacred Songs."

MANY NEW SONGS soon to become FAVORITES. MANY Church Hymns and tunes, new and old, from the best American and English composers.

MANY pieces especially useful for Evangelistic and Convention Choirs, and many for Solo, Duet and Quartet purposes.

Substantially bound in cloth, $25.00 per 100. 5c. each per copy extra by mail.

Before deciding on the new hymn book for your church you had better see

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

A returnable copy for examination sent free to any earnest inquirer on application.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

Pope Manufacturing Co. Famous Chainless Bicycles

Equipped with two-speed gear, coaster brake, and cushion frame.

All Standard Chain Models

Eastern Department
Hartford, Conn.

"COLUMBIA"

"TRIBUNE"

"CLEVELAND"

"CRAWFORD"

Western Department
Chicago, Ill.

"CRESCENT"

"MONARCH"

"RAMBLER"

"IMPERIAL"

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

Learn Piano-Tuning

BY MAIL

The MUNROE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF PIANO TUNING, Dept. P., Fall River, Mass.

A great demand for piano tuners everywhere. Progress rapid; expense small. Pay as you go. Our graduates are expert tuners. A lucrative profession. Write for free prospectus, explains every thing.

NOW READY

CHARLES M. SHELDON'S
NEW BOOK

The Narrow Gate

240 Pages, Cloth, - - $1.00

Sent Postpaid on Receipt of Price, by ADVANCE PUBLISHING CO.

215 Madison Street, CHICAGO.

PRAYERS FOR HEART AND HOME
Morning and Evening Devotions. By Rev. F. B. Meyer, the great English devotional writer and preacher as well known in this country. Sent post free for 7c. A hard cover vol., cloth flex. FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY, 138 Fifth Ave., New York, or 63 Washington St., Chicago.

LYMYER BELL
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

6 Pretty Collars-10c.

2 Fagoted, 2 Linen and 2 Lace Collar patterns: Cat. of Embroidery. Walter P. Webber, Lynn, Mass. Box H

Wedding
INVITATIONS, ANNOUNCEMENTS, ETC. 100 in script lettering, including two sets of envelopes, $2.50. 100 Visiting Cards, 50c. WRITE FOR SAMPLES. C. OTT ENGRAVING CO., 911 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Scenes in Quaint World-old Moukden

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 91

made to provide abundant and cheap transportation. Russia has spent millions of dollars in building and developing Dalny alone, besides her tremendous expenditures in railroads, and it is reported that she now contemplates putting at least one million European farmers, all Russian, in the Far Eastern section. These facts clearly indicate that the whole of the territory in dispute will shortly become one of the greatest importance, and a sharp struggle between the commercial nations is inevitable. In this struggle American manufacturers have already begun to take an active part. Even if peace comes to the present disturbed condition of Far Eastern affairs, there is little doubt that the world will shortly witness one of the greatest battles for commercial supremacy that has ever been known.

Manchuria, like Tibet, was long regarded as a "forbidden land." With the Russian invasion, however, its exclusiveness disappeared. When the great trans-Siberian railway was built, there were at one time not less than 150,000 Cossacks in Manchurian territory. There are probably as many to-day. It is said that Russia has over 100,000 soldiers guarding the line of the railroad alone, so that uninterrupted transportation may be assured if it should become necessary to hasten fresh Russian legions to Port Arthur.

Aboriginally, the Manchus were Tartars, as were the early natives of Mongolia and Turkestan. They belong to the same stock from which has sprung the Chinese, Tungusians, Japanese, Koreans and Thibetans. But the Manchus are rather the descendants of a number of nomad clans than a nation by themselves.

Physically, they are short, with pleasant features, oblique eyes, high cheekbones and dark, ruddy complexions. As a rule, they are bright and intelligent. This general description applies to southern and central Manchuria; the tribes living in the extreme north are still semibarbarous. The civilized Manchurian of the present day differs very little from the Chinese of the south.

Moukden, the new "open port"—which is said to have been founded in 1625—is really a fine city of the first class, with strong walls, a mile long on each side. There is also an inner wall, which encloses an ancient yellow-tiled palace, which no "barbarians" are permitted to enter. There is, besides, a "Temple of Heaven," smaller than the famous one at Peking, and a "Temple of Earth." In the suburbs is the Fuling, or "Happy Tomb," where lies buried Nurhachu, founder of the Manchu dynasty. Parks, fountains, shrubberies, pagodas and flowering trees are abundant and beautiful.

From Copyright Stereographs by Underwood & Underwood

RUSSIAN TROOPS ON THE SIBERIAN RAILROAD

Sitting at the Feet of Jesus

SITTING at the feet of Jesus,
Hid away with him alone,
Looking, loving, listening, learning,
Bethany for us his own.
There our hearts are filled with longings,
Jesus and his love to know,
Deeply yearning, truly praying,
More and more like him to grow.

Sitting at the feet of Jesus,
Looking up with eyes so dim,
Lifting hearts oft heavy laden,
Sweetly smiling back to him.
E'en when all seems dark and dreary,
Peace and strength for us await,
Just believing they are seeing—
His eyes, all compassionate.

Sitting at the feet of Jesus,
Learning lessons—how to give
All for him, our blessed teacher,
How to love and how to live.
Never wearied with our coming,
Sinful, careworn—thrilled with song,
Sitting at his feet, our Jesus
Wants and draws us oft and long.

Orange, N. J. NELLIE L. YATMAN.

They Love "The Christian Herald"

A friend of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in South Bend, Ind., writes:
"My mother has been a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years. My children are all using the Red Letter Bible put out by you, and all the members of the family are enthusiastic subscribers and admirers of the dignity, the gracefulness and distinguished worth of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. With greetings and best wishes believe me," etc.

Helping the Sailors

The Seamen's Christian Association, No. 399 West street, New York, is doing an excellent work among seafaring men, as the following statistics for the month of November, 1903, show: Aggregate attendance, 5,577; Gospel services held, 27; average attendance, 72. Meals and temporary lodgings are supplied to deserving cases. Ships and hospitals are visited regularly and relief administered. This Association is deserving of support by those who have the interest of the sailors at heart.

Without MACBETH on it what can you expect of a lamp-chimney!

You need to know how to manage your lamps to have comfort with them at small cost. Better read my Index; I send it free.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

Clergymen

and others having money to invest safely and profitably, whether in large or small amounts, should write the Pittsburgh Bank for Savings of Pittsburgh, Pa., for a copy of their new booklet, No. 18. It gives full particulars about the bank, its new plan of money saving, safe investments, Banking by Mail, etc.

This bank is one of the strongest, most capable and conservatively managed financial institutions in the country. It was founded in 1862 and its Assets are in excess of $14,000,000.00. It receives on deposit any sum from $1.00 up and pays Four per cent. interest, compounded twice yearly.

SUTHERLAND SISTERS
Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

Mail Orders Exclusively. No Branches or Agents.

Spring Suits

$8 to $50

MADE TO YOUR ORDER

We Guarantee to Fit You

THE woman who wishes to be well and fashionably dressed should certainly have a copy of our new Spring and Summer Catalogue, now ready. It illustrates over 100 of the most beautiful and exclusive models, suitable for every occasion, and our line of materials is the largest and most attractive ever offered, many of them being entirely new both in weave and design.

If you order at once, you will have the advantage of a complete stock to select from, and will enjoy your Spring suit before everyone else is wearing theirs.

Catalogue and Samples FREE

Remember, we keep nothing ready-made, but make every garment TO ORDER.

We have a splendid line of very light fabrics particularly adapted for our South patrons, and also a choice assortment of materials suitable for those of our customers residing in cooler climates. We do not carry wash goods.

YOUR MONEY REFUNDED IF WE FAIL TO SATISFY YOU.

Our Spring Catalogue illustrates:

Tailored Suits	$8 to
Handsome Skirts	$4 to
Etamine Costumes	$10 to
Mohair and Brilliantine Suits	$8 to
Mohair Skirts	$4 to
Spring Jackets	$7 to

Walking Suits and Skirts, Rainy-Day Suit, Traveling Dresses, Rain Coats, Etc.

We pay express charges to any part of the United States. Our Catalogue contains explicit directions taking measurements correctly.

We guarantee to fit and please. If we do not, return the garment promptly, and we will refund your money.

Catalogue and a large assortment of samples be sent free to any part of the United States. Ask for New Spring Catalogue No. 50 requesting samples, mention about the color desired, and we will send you a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.
Established 15 years.

"Standard of Highest Merit."

FISCHEI PIANOS.

IN THE NEW SCALE FISCHER's finest Tone-quality is produced. The combined with artistic beauty of architecture and durability has won these pianos.

AN ACKNOWLEDGED SUPERIOR

OUR NEW METHOD of easy payment makes it possible for every home to have the musical delights of this Celebrated Piano. Old Pianos taken as part payment. Pianos delivered to all parts of the United States. Write for catalog terms and all particulars.

J. & C. FISCHER,

164 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Seeds, Plants, Roses

Bulbs, Vines, Shrubs, Fruit and Ornamentals

The best by 50 years experience, 40 in hardy roses including 45,000 of the Crimson Rambler, houses of Palms, Ficus, Geraniums, blooming Roses and things too numerous to mention. Seeds, Plants, Roses by mail postpaid, safe and satisfaction guaranteed. Elegant 168 page catalogue. Send for it and see what we give for a little money.

A number of collections of Seeds, Plants, etc., offered cheap which will interest you. THE STORRS & HARRISON CO. Box 194 PAINESVILLE, OHIO

Meals and 'tween Meals

A delicious, invigorating food-drink, superior to tea or coffee as a table beverage. A valuable addition to the diet in case of impaired digestion, and for those fatigued or run down. Cooperative during the close confinement of the winter months.

It is pure, rich milk, and an extract of selected malted grain, in powder form. Instantly prepared by simply stirring in water. Also in chocolate form, in either natural or chocolate flavor. Our booklet tells of many other valuable uses. Mailed free upon request.

At All Druggists. As for HORLICK'S, the original; all beware imitations.

Horlick's Food Co., Racine, Wis., U. S. A. 125 St. Peter Street, Montreal, Can.

QUALITY COUNTS IT'S

Stuyler's YOU WANT.

YOUR GROCER HAS IT.

Ultra Fine Imported

56-piece China Tea Set FREE

When an order for 25 lbs. of Tea Crop, 60c., 70c., or 80c. Tea, or 25 lbs. Great American Baking Powder, 45c. a lb., or an assorted order of Tea and Baking Powder, 60c. lbs. Bona Fide Coffee, 3 a lb., or 50-2 oz. Bottles of Pure Extracts—Vanilla, Lemon, etc., or 25-lb. cans of Spice—any kind—absolutely pure, 50c. a can.

Address Mr. P. B., care of T. Great American Tea Co. Box 289 33 Vesey Street, New York

Karo CORN SYRUP

the new table delicacy pleases the palate and satisfies the stomach. Delicious and nutritious. At all grocers, 10c, 25c and 50c. CORN PRODUCTS CO., New York and Chicago.

Our Mail-Bag

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

All letters for the "Mail-Bag" must contain the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but so that an answer may be sent by mail if necessary.

C. R. T., Easton, Pa. When was the first revival of religion? Can you give a satisfactory answer?

In Gen. 4: 26, in the days of Enos, it is recorded for the first time that men "began to call upon the name of the Lord." The race had sinned and fallen away from God and this was the first revival.

Reader, Turlock, Calif. Is it right for an active Christian to raise and plant such product as wine-grapes, and sell to be reproduced into wine?

We believe the drink evil to be such a blight upon our age and civilization, and the cause of so much sin and misery, that we consider it the duty of every Christian to fight it at all points and make no compromise. Therefore to Reader's question, we say unconditionally—No.

C. S., Alliance, O. Some time ago I saw it stated that the Forum at Rome, the ruins of which are yet seen, was built by the Emperor Trajan. Is this correct? Gibbon, in the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol. 1, chap. 19, A.D. 357, in speaking of the Emperor Constantius' visit to Rome, says that "he harangued the people from the tribunal which Cicero had so often ascended," and that he "admired the stately structure of the Forum" and "Trajan's column."

There were two kinds of forum, one being the fora venalia, or market-places, the other fora civilia, or law courts. Until Julius Caesar's time, there was but one of the latter kind, which was termed the Forum Romanorum, or simply forum. In the early part of Rome's history, only one place was so-called. It was a level space between the Palatine and Capitoline hills. During the republic there was only one forum, but under the empire there were several. Those of Julius, Augustus, and Nerva belong to the fora civilia. The forums of Trajan, Sallust, Diocletian and Aurelian were merely public lounges.

J. S. G., Clarion, Ia. 1. Is it right for a Christian to have his photograph (or likeness) taken? 2. Can a Christian be justified to have his life insured?

We see no harm in either. The first may be desired by friends as a souvenir of the giver and as a memento; the second may be necessary for business reasons, or as a provision for wife and children.

Inquirer, Passaic, N. J. Are we bound to help Korea, in the event of that country appealing to us? This question came up in a discussion here, a few days ago.

We are bound by the treaty, negotiated in 1882, under which we acquired certain commercial privileges in Korea, to give our friendly offices and support to that country, in certain contingencies, should the Korean government appeal. This does not mean war, but merely friendly counsel and moral support. It is quite distinct from a treaty involving an alliance, offensive and defensive. We have no such alliance with any country on earth.

Miss D. W., Aptakisic, Ill. Who were the parents of the first colored people and where can we find about them?

See Genesis 9: 25, 26, 27, which indicates the origin of the negro race. In the tenth chapter (verses 6 to 20 inclusive), the descendants of Ham are mentioned. Josephus, in Book I, chapter 6, of the Antiquities, gives a further explanation gleaned from ancient traditions.

Reader. How and where was the name of Dives applied in the parable of Lazarus and the rich man?

Dives is a name applied to one who is rich and lives daintily or sumptuously. It is not, of course, a real name, but rather a descriptive adjective, which is used as a name, as though we should say "Mr. Well-to-do," "Mr. Million," etc. One ancient writer gives Nimeus as the real name of the rich man, but nothing is really known of it.

Constant Reader, Bridgeport, W. Va. How is it that Paul calls himself (Rom. 1: 1) a "servant" of Jesus Christ, and yet in Galatians 4: 7 he says that Christians are no longer servants but sons?

In the epistle to the Galatians Paul is warning his readers against coming under the bondage of the law. They were Gentiles, and in Paul's absence some Jewish Christians had told them they must obey the ceremonial and dietary laws. He tells them to pay no heed to such teachers. They are not under the rudimentary discipline of servants, but have received adoption as sons. But even sons may and should serve their Heavenly Father. Paul was proud to be in that service, and his words might have been misunderstood had he begun his letter with, "Paul, a son of God." He was conscious of sonship, but consecrated his life to Christ as a servant.

Rev. G. S. P., Harmony, Pa. I see by your Crown Encyclopedia, that the new substance, radium, is quoted as worth $1,000,000 per pound; while in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of issue of Dec. 30. (in Dr. S. G. Tracy's article), it is quoted as worth $4,000,000 per pound, or $6,000 per gram. In your issue of Jan. 6, it is quoted at $2,000 per gram. Are there different qualities of radium, or are these different estimates of the same quality of the substance?

These are different estimates of the value of the same substance. So little is yet known about radium, and the substance itself is so rare, that it is impossible to get even scientists to agree concerning its value. It is practically priceless.

A. C. A., Chadron, Neb. Is there any hope of forgiveness for a certain sin mentioned in Leviticus, if the sinner is truly penitent?

That sin is clearly included in the general assurance of I. John 1: 7, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." You may be quite sure that any person who has been guilty of it and has repented, and finally and fully abjured it and has sought pardon through Christ, will be forgiven.

S. H. Y., Lecomma, Mo. Why should not Christians throughout the world subscribe to purchase Palestine, and present it to the Jews? We are indebted to them, and a very small contribution from each Christian would probably suffice.

The difficulty is not one of money. The Jews could easily provide the money themselves, if the Turkish Government would sell. They have offered to lease the land through the Zionist movement, but even that appears to have been rejected, or at least not definitely accepted, though Dr. Herzl hopes yet to negotiate such an arrangement.

Allen C., Stahl, Mo. What is the size of a cubit, in inches?

The length of a cubit has varied at different times. It is supposed to have been equal to six palms or hand-breadths, or about twenty-one inches.

Mrs. S. P. T., San Anselmo, Calif. If, as Paul contends (I. Cor. 15: 22), the effects of Christ's atonement are as universal and as potent as those of Adam's transgression, how is it that restoration has not been effected?

It is much easier to fall than to rise again. It is, of course, conceivable, that God by one supreme act might have restored all mankind, but, in his wisdom, he chose a different course. He desired that men should seek restoration voluntarily, and not by compulsion. It is a much surer and nobler way, but a more protracted one. When a child is guilty of a fault, an impatient parent may punish him and there let the matter end, but a wiser parent would try to get the child to realize that his wrongdoing is foolish as well as wicked, and might allow him to suffer the consequences, while providing him with the means of atonement, and promising him restoration on evidence of contrition. That child would be less likely to fall again, and would have a greater horror of wrongdoing. Christ's atonement is, as Paul says, as potent, for all who will avail themselves of it.

C. F. H., New Tripoli, Pa. If an employer wishes to correct an employee, and does not tell the employee to the face, but hints at an innocent person instead, is that fair dealing?

It is indirect. There may be circumstances in which it would not be wise to administer a direct rebuke, but there is no excuse for implicating or reflecting upon an innocent person.

L. N. D., Oyster Bay, N. Y. I am sending you my "tenth" and a little more, for suffering Macedonia, for I feel after reading of the privations of those poor, homeless people in the winter season, that I must do something or stand self-condemned of neglecting a great duty and privilege. Let me suggest that you ask the churches, Sunday Schools and societies to take steps to help the cause. I feel sure you would get such an answer as would help to save many lives.

We thank you for the suggestion, and hope that it may find an echo in many other generous hearts among the readers of THE MAIL-BAG.

A Reader, Hermet, Calif. Is it true that neither D. L. Moody nor C. H. Spurgeon were ever ordained to the ministry? To what denomination did they belong?

Neither of them was ordained, nor did either pass through a theological college. Mr. Moody, in his preaching and work, was undenominational, but we believe he considered himself a Congregationalist. Mr. Spurgeon was a Baptist, but not of the close communion type. No one could become a member of his church without being baptized by immersion; but all believers, whether baptized by immersion or sprinkling, were welcome to sit down with his church at the Lord's table.

Cudahy's Rex Brand Beef Extract

For Soups, Sauces, Savory Sundries and Beef Tea

SECURE A SET OF THE

Famous Cudahy Al Silver Plated Bouillon Spoons

FREE

(Do not confuse these splendid spoons with ordinary offers.)

The Cudahy Spoons grace the best tables, because they bear no advertising, are made in the latest design, French Gray Finish, and are heavier than triple silver plate.

How to Secure the Spoons

For each spoon desired send a metal cap from a 2 oz. or larger sized jar of Rex Brand Beef Extract, and 10 cents in silver or stamps to cover cost of mailing, and mention this publication.

MADE BY WM. A. ROSTER, THE FAMOUS SILVER SMITH
Address
THE CUDAHY PACKING COMPANY
BEEF EXTRACT DEPARTMENT 21
South Omaha, Nebraska
CUDAHY'S REX BRAND BEEF EXTRACT is sold by all druggists and grocers.

90 Days' Trial

We sell more reliable merchandise by mail than any house in the world. Volume of sales regulates prices. No firm can undersell us on reliable goods; we refuse to handle the other kind.

Our Oakland Machine
Our Oakland Machine at $8.25 is warranted for 5 years and is the best machine on the market at the price.

At $12.75 our Amazon is as good as the regular $20 kind; is beyond comparison with other machines at this price.

For 14.50

our Brunswick Seven Drawer, High Arm, Ball Bearing, Drop Head Machine is a beauty, one that will do all kinds of work and can be depended upon. Price is much lower than any other firm asks for equal quality. Mounted on handsome Automatic Drop Desk Quartered Oak Cabinetlike picture, only 16.95

Free Catalogue

of Sewing Machines containing our 90 days' free trial offer, sent on request. Write for it today.

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.

CHICAGO

MONEY IN GOOD CABBAGE

My elegant new book for seed growers is a storehouse of rare seed information. Tells about my famous varieties of money-making cabbage.

WRITE FREE Mention this Paper and I will send you a package of Buckbee's New Early Marvel Cabbage the best-growing variety on earth, together with a copy of my great Seed Book.

H. W. BUCKBEE
Dept. L-64, Rockford Seed Farms
Rockford, Illinois

DREER'S SEEDS

include everything the best to plant in the garden—vegetable or flower. The product of the largest greenhouses and nurseries in the world. The choicest, freshest, surest seeds to sow.

Dreer's 1904 Garden Book full of valuable cultural information, and one package each of Aster, Pink, and Poppy, will be sent free to any address for 10c. in stamps, or silver, to cover postage.

HENRY A. DREER,
714 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

FERRY'S SEEDS

Deserve your confidence. They have never failed—won't fail now. Sold by all dealers. 1904 Seed Annual postpaid, free.

D. M. FERRY & CO.
Detroit, Mich.

The Starless Crown

"THEY SHALL SHINE . . . AS THE STARS FOR EVER AND EVER." DANIEL 12: 3.

GRANT COLFAX FULLAR.

I. H. MEREDITH.

1. There is a land mine eyes shall see When I shall lay life's armor down;
2. The gains of earth are all but loss—E - ter - nal joys are all for me
3. For - bid it, Lord, that I should be Con - tent to live for self a - lone.

But all its bliss is not for me, If I must wear a star - less crown.
When I by faith up - lift the cross And lead one soul, dear Lord, to Thee.
Oh, may some soul I win for Thee A - dorn my crown when life is done.

CHORUS.
A star - less crown, when life is done, No glit - t'ring gems which I have won?

For - bid it, Lord, that there should be, A star - less crown in Heav'n for me.

Copyright, 1903, by Fullar-Meredith Co., New York and Chicago. Used by permission.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Reader, Eaton, O. "God has heard and answered my prayer many times. While yet speaking to him he answers. I was led by a sainted mother to take everything to God in prayer. I will ever trust in my Heavenly Father."

An Old Subscriber, Onawa. "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answer to prayer. I was in great trouble, and I asked him to help me and he answered. I have received many answers to prayer. Bless his name."

D. H. Alexander, Minn. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering special prayers."

Mrs. H. R. C., Marengo, Ill. "God has answered many of my prayers, and an especial one he answered; and I am so thankful to him, I wish to acknowledge his goodness to the world."

L. M. DeW., Delhi, N. Y. "If we pray in faith, God will hear our prayers. I have been praying and God heard and answered. Oh that we might have more faith in prayer."

Mrs. C. S., Northville, Mich. "I have had many prayers answered. I am a strong believer in a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God. Praise his holy name forever."

B. M., Camden, N. Y. "God has heard and answered my prayer, and I thank him more than words can express. I believe if we come to him in the right spirit he will always hear and answer our prayers."

L. E. M., Siena City, Calif. "I have many times had answers to prayer, and I thank God for his kindness to me."

M. H. H., Mamna, N. Y. "I have had two direct answers to prayer, and I praise God for them."

M. A. E. M., Waxahachie, Tex. "I promised the Lord if he would answer my prayer I would proclaim it to the world. I was in great trouble. I prayed much and God has answered. Blessed be his name."

Mrs. M. L. H., Weatherford, Tex. "I wish to testify with so many others, that God does answer prayer. I have prayed for help in my hour of need and the help has come."

M. A. L. K., Fowler, Md. "I know God answers prayer. I have asked him to help me. He gives me a trusting faith. I have had my prayers answered in different ways, yet always for my good."

Reader, McLouth, Kans. "I promised if the Lord would hear my prayer and restore a dear one back to health, I would acknowledge it to the world. My prayers have been answered many times."

Reader, Wrightsville, Pa. "I prayed long for a dear one. Thank God, I believe the change of heart has taken place."

Mrs. J. W. T., Polaski, Va. "I wish to acknowledge the answer to a special prayer a year ago. I have had direct answer to prayer, and now publicly acknowledge it with gratitude."

M. J. G., Castleton, Ill. "I find that whatever I earnestly ask God for and trust to receive, he never fails to give. I wish all who are in trouble would cast their burdens upon him."

E. M. C., Bradford, Pa. "I want to acknowledge the Lord's goodness to me in answering prayers. I know he is a prayer-answering God."

C. H. B., Yarmouth, N. S. "I have had so many answered prayers during the past few years, and realized the fact so clearly, that I wish to add my testimony, believing that it may increase the faith of some who are looking to God for all things, but in much weakness. I wish to give God the glory for all he has done for me."

"A Mine of Wealth"

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a mine of wealth to me in many ways. If I want information about almost any place on the globe, with illustrations, I find it in my file of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which I have had since 1898. For missionary programmes or W. C. T. U., and now in the "Bible Study of the Life of Christ," which a company of young (and old) people are pursuing in our church, the Bible pictures are eagerly welcomed, as I present them each week according to theme—Palestine, Africa, Syria, Morocco, Thibet, South America, Lapland, India, China, Japan, Corea, Egypt, Temperance news. I cannot begin to tell you how much and how valuable has been the information obtained for the various topics always coming up, and how satisfactory to all. Normal students also apply to me, if they want a complete history of, say, Thanksgiving—there it is all ready in compact form—a programme to give out to their children—so satisfactory because so reliable. I am glad of the opportunity to tell you how grateful I am for this "abundant in good works" paper.

MRS. L. A. CLARK.

Oswego, N. Y.

FLEISHER'S YARNS are made from selected wools carefully spun, and have an even, lofty, elastic thread. Dyed in a full line of beautiful shades which can always be matched.

An article knitted or crocheted of Fleisher's Yarns will always hold its shape and yet be soft and elastic. Every skein of the genuine bears the trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted, German town Zephyr, Dresden Saxony, Spanish, Shetland Floss, Ice Wool, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual mailed for four tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making the above garment and various kinds of sweaters and vests, as well as all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER, Inc.,
Department "B,"
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

You Can Earn

a very stylish, perfect fitting and durable Ladies' or Misses Corset or a Pair of Kid Glove!

by selling only one dozen extracts at 20 cents each. This is a special offer to help us introduce our new Flavoring Extract among your friends. The sell readily and are bought are always asked for again, so you can make a permanent growing business. See only 3 dozen for a Dreer's Skirt Rug or Mackintosh.

Our large illustrated catalogue shows over 50 articles you can easily and quickly earn by selling one dozen up to 30 dozen.

No Money Required—We Trust You

Send us your name and address and we will send you at once one dozen assorted Flavoring Extracts to commence with, all charges paid, also our catalogue and full instructions. We guarantee our extracts to give satisfaction. If you can't sell them we will take them back, but there's NO CANT about it, YOU CAN.

Lay This Magazine Down and Write Us NOW.

Peterson & Co.,

Dept. 120,
95 Kinzie St., Chicago.

BARGAINS IN SEEDS

Choice kinds of Vegetable and Flower Seeds at 25c per Packet. Flower Plants, 5 cents each. Many new novelties. Don't buy until you see our New Catalogue Mailed FREE if you mention this paper.

IOWA SEED CO., DES MOINES, IOWA

STARK TREES best by Test—78% Largest Nurseries. Fruit Book free. We want more SALESMEN. PAY STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.

MELLIN'S FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS FOOD

Weak babies become rosy and pretty babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food strengthens.

Beautifully printed pages of helpful hints about "The Care and Feeding of Infants," found in cloth, will be sent you free if you ask for it.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

GRANDMOTHER'S FAVORITE FLOWERS

Forget-me-nots, Canterbury Bells, Snapdragons, Four O'Clocks and Double Hollyhocks

Five Packages Free

To get you to write for our handsome new seed catalogue we will send with it, free, the five packages of flower seeds named above, you will send 10 cents to pay for mailing.

The catalogue shows all the Flower and Vegetable seeds for 1904, and fully explains Where to Buy, How to Plant, and How to Successfully Grow Flower, Vegetable and Farm Seeds. One business has been established over half a century. Our thousands of customers are located all over America. May we add you to the list?

WM. ELLIOTT & SONS, Seedsmen
61 Dey Street, New York

40 BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS FREE

US 25c. to cover cost of packing and postage, and receive this grand "40 Beautiful Flowers Free" collection of beautiful flowers, our new catalogue containing the most liberal offers ever made, and CASH CHECK for 25c., giving you your money back.

PACKETS SEED
1 pkt. Baby Rose (Japanese)
1 pkt. Sweet Pea (Grand)
1 pkt. Geranium special mixed
1 pkt. Snap and Sun or
1 pkt. Hybrid or Primed Flo'r
1 pkt. Flowering Sage
1 pkt. Early Ger'm Belltop
1 pkt. Blue Bells
1 pkt. Scarlet Freesia, 1 Wind Flower,
1 Spotted Calla, 2 Gladiolus, 1
1 Hyacinth, 1 Madetta Vine, 1 Shamel
flower, 10 assorted bulbs for house or garden.
The other flowers, each checked and the best available on the United States for the cost of packing and postage, 25 cents.

Bulbs 1 Scarlet Freesia, 1 Wind Flower,
1 Spotted Calla, 2 Gladiolus, 1
1 Hyacinth, 1 Madetta Vine, 1 Shamel
flower, 10 assorted bulbs for house or garden.
The other flowers, each checked and the best available on the United States for the cost of packing and postage, 25 cents.

ESCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N.Y.

FLOWERS 30¢

Worth $1.25
SPECIAL OFFER to introduce our goods.
Money back if not pleased.

20 Pkts. Seeds
1 Pkt. Diamond Flower.
1 Simple Aster, 4 cobs.
1 California Sweet Pea.
1 Pkt. Washington Weeping Palm.
1 Pkt. Heliotrope, mixed. 1 Pkt. Umbrella Plant.
1 Pkt. Double Cherry Blossom.
1 Pkt. Candytuft Empress. 1 Pkt. Philox Drummondii.
1 Pkt. Chrysanthemum. 1 Pkt. Carnation Marguerite.
1 Pkt. "American Flag." 1 Pkt. Petunia Hybrid, mixed.
1 Pkt. Sweet Pea, mixed. 1 Pkt. Pansies, bicolor, mixed.
1 Pkt. Butterfly Flower. 1 Calif. Golden Bell.
1 Pkt. Little Gem, mixed. 1 Giant Verbena, mixed.

23 BULBS
1 Begonia "splendens," 1 Summer Flowering
1 Double Pearl Tulip, 2 Butterflies and 2 Hy-
1 Gladiolus, 8 Fine Mixed Oxalis, 2 "Fair Maids of 2 Hardy Wind Flowers, 2 Lovely Cinnamon Vines,
1 New Canna Lilies—1 Jerusalem, 1 "Novelty."
1 Check Good for 25c. on first $1.00 order.
1 New Floral Guide, telling all about flowers and 10 other choice flowers. All above postpaid, only 30c.

TE CONARD & JONES CO.
Growers of the Best Roses in America.
Box O, West Grove, Pa.

A MISSIONARY'S HAPPY VISIT

MISS BREWER, FROM GUNTUR, INDIA, TELLS OF HER EXPERIENCES IN NEW YORK CITY

IT was my privilege to enjoy, recently, a very pleasant visit to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I am glad for the opportunity to share with the readers of that worthy paper some of the thoughts and reminiscences the visit brought forth. When one has been a sojourner as a missionary for more than seven years in a foreign country, such a person is always glad to come in contact with anything pertaining to that land; thus I was specially glad to be conducted directly to the India room, or the room where all matters pertaining to India are managed and looked after.

The hearty greeting from the ladies in charge was much appreciated, as also from the editors, who came in for a Christian handclasp—Dr. Klopsch came from the eager crowd, demanding his attention.

It is singular how hungry one's eyes become for a sight of the common things in the land of adoption, and, in that India room, I could "feast my eyes" on turbans, anklets, bangles and such like things, for you will find a cabinet there containing a splendid representative collection of India curios. Best of all was to see the large ledger, containing the names of the thousands of India orphans, and a corresponding number of names of those having the great joy and privilege of living in America, and who are nobly supporting the orphans. Let me tell you who are supporting orphans, that you will never be able was too much of a baby boy to leave his three sisters and go over with the boys. Here they come! in their rags and bones from the adjoining camp, and later from farther north, where we helped to relieve an overcrowded camp; some of the later ones too reduced and sick to raise their heads. The life flickered away from some of them, although the noble women doctors and trained nurses in our hospital did all in their power to save them. But look at those of whom it was said, "they cannot get well," see the strength and activity now! and that one of whom we were told, before we brought her to the hospital, "She will likely always be lame," and now see her walk off happily to church in line with the others, and with scarcely a limp! Then that one of whom I heard last week, "Ruby is getting on so well." Oh, I shall always remember her little bones, as I held her on my lap, coming to Guntur, and her pitiful wail for food, of which we had to be sparing lest we would quench the last spark of life. Does all the trouble and worry we have with them pay? Indeed it pays! You, who are supporting orphans in the General Synod Lutheran Mission, will be glad to know that the orphanage buildings are nearing completion, and that Rev. and Mrs. A. O. Becker will soon be settled in the midst of the orphans, to whom they will act

MISS JESSIE BREWER

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD "INDIA ROOM" IN THE BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

to realize in this world what an immense amount of good you are doing, by making it possible for some poor skeleton of a heathen child to become strong in body and strong in the One True God. Have you ever thought that when your body is beyond work, and resting in the grave, the one whom you helped to physical and spiritual strength will be winning souls from heathen darkness, which, had you not sent the money to educate an orphan or two, would be left to believe that their spirits would enter some animal at death, instead of going to dwell in the mansions prepared by our Saviour, in whom they have learned to trust? And to you who do not support orphans, or wish to discontinue such support—you lose the joy that comes by "doing unto one of the least of these?"

As I looked over the list of almost one hundred and fifty who are cared for in our General Synod Lutheran Mission, at Guntur, India, they came trooping before my mind's eye; especially the girls, whom I "mothered" for eighteen months, and little Sajana, who in the capacity of father and mother, for which position they are both well adapted. There will be a bungalow (house) for the missionaries, one for the girls, and one for the boys—in all three buildings. They are now in crowded quarters, and it will be much better for them when they are moved to the larger buildings.

I feel, for the sake of you who support orphans in our Mission, that I should tell you of the satisfaction I received by a visit to the India room of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In comparison, our work is as systematic and thorough as in any of the other missions, and I was more happy than ever for the privilege that God gave me in having a little personal share in the work of helping those destitute little ones to be strong physically and spiritually in the Lord. All who have a share in the work by helping financially, may feel proud of what you are doing, and, on that last great day, may expect to hear those welcome words addressed to you, "Well done, good and faithful servant." JESSIE BREWER, Williamsport, Pa. Missionary on furlough.

BOYS

The STAR MONTHLY is for boys. For clear-eyed, red-blooded, active boys between 10 and 20 years old. The STAR MONTHLY is the boy's companion; it plays baseball and football with him. It coasts, skates, swims, camps, hunts and fishes with him. It goes to school or to work with him. It chats with him about his future, his ambition to get on in the world. It teaches him how to build his head, heart and body. It has departments on athletics, carpentry, games, puzzles, amateur journalism, mechanics, photography, coin, stamp and curio collecting; prize awards in each department. Covers printed in colors. It never has less than 32 large pages, profusely illustrated, and is printed on fine polished book paper. The STAR MONTHLY is the official organ of the Coming Men of America, the great society for boys that has branches and members all over the world.

It is the oldest, best and most popular boy's magazine. It is ten years old, has $100,000 capital, owns a large printing plant, and buildings and now has 150,000 subscribers. The subscription rate is lowest of all.

3 years $1

This remarkably low price is building up our subscription list at a rapid rate. We do not give chromos or trashy premiums to bribe our subscribers; but we do give the greatest value in good reading that a dollar can buy.

Just think for a moment what three years for $1 means; 36 issues, nearly 1,200 illustrated pages, about 8 pounds of paper and 1,095 happy days!

MONEY BACK IF NOT SATISFIED.

Send $1 to-day for 3 years' subscription. You will get your first copy right away. Tell your friends to send in their dollars. Address

The Star Monthly
Dept. 13 Star Building
Oak Park Illinois

SEED POTATOES 500,000 BUSHELS FOR SALE CHEAP

Largest seed potato growers in the world!
Elegant stock. Tremendous yields.
From 400 to 1000 bushels per acre.

FOR 10 CENTS
and this notice we send you lots of farm seed samples and big catalogue, telling all about Teasdale, Speltz, Peasat, Aerid Land Barley, Macaroni Wheat, Bromus, Earliest Cane, etc. Send for same today.

JOHN A. SALZER
SEED CO. LA CROSSE, WIS.

50 BULBS 25 Cents.
Will grow in the house or out of doors.
Hyacinths, Tulips, Crocus, Fuchsias, Oxalis, Jonquils, Daffodils, Dewey Lily, Tuberoses, Gladiolus, Chinese Lily, Begonia, Gloxinia, Lilies of the Valley—all postpaid, 25c. in stamps or coin. As a premium with these bulbs we will send FREE a great collection of flower seeds—over 200 varieties. Address, Hillside Nursery, Somerville, Mass.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE

St. Paul Minneapolis Duluth

Four fast trains daily leave Chicago at 9:00 a.m., 6:30 p.m., 10:00 p.m. and 3:00 a. m. via the Chicago and North-Western Railway. These fast trains are equipped with all the conveniences of modern railway travel. One of them, the electric lighted leaving at 6:30 p. m. has Pullman drawing-room and compartment sleeping cars, buffet smoking cars, Book-lovers Library, dining car, free chair cars and day coaches. Other trains are equipped with Pullman drawing room sleeping cars, cafe and parlor cars and free chair cars.

North-Western Limited

Tickets, sleeping car reservations and full particulars on application.

W. B. Kniskern, Pass'r. Traffic Mgr.
Chicago

NW89

An Ex-Policeman's Testimony

A Career of Dissipation and Infamy
Changed to Christian Service

VARIED are the methods employed by the Holy Spirit, in the transformation of character. It may encourage some of your readers, who have relatives disgracing them, and who are well nigh hopeless of their redemption, to have the story of one who seemed beyond hope, yet who, by the power of God's grace, has been redeemed, and is now a living testimony to the might of the Gospel. It is the story of ex-policeman John E. Brown.

Mr. Brown was born in New York City, nearly thirty-five years ago. His first work was that of a painter, but he abandoned that trade to become a policeman, when he was twenty-one years of age. He joined the Brooklyn force, and was attached to the twelfth precinct for over three years. During that time, the habit of drinking intoxicants, which he had already formed, increased. Officer Brown could get as many free drinks as he wished, and though he was seldom intoxicated, it was just as seldom that he was quite sober. He had an ambition to become a saloon-keeper, and finally resigned from the force to embark in that business. Providentially his plan was thwarted. There is little doubt that, had he opened a saloon, he would by this time be filling a drunkard's grave.

EX-POLICEMAN BROWN AND HIS DAUGHTER

He succeeded in obtaining employment as a private detective in the Pinkerton Agency, and worked for two or three years in that capacity; but he had imbibed such a love for rum that nobody wanted him.

On March 24, 1900, Brown's drinking habits had reached a climax. He had not been sober in several weeks and was on the verge of delirium tremens. His misery was extreme, and he hurried out to a saloon, where he thought he might meet some one who would treat him, that he might forget his troubles.

He remembers sitting down and getting liquor at the expense of some one, but after an hour or two he lost the capacity of remembering anything. When he recovered consciousness, he was staggering on the sidewalk at midnight, bleeding profusely from cuts about the head and face; an ambulance was summoned, but he staggered home before it arrived. He believed that he was going to die, and he wished to die at home. When he reached home, his wife and children fled for their lives. They were afraid of him. He fell in a heap on the floor.

In speaking of this night, Brown says: "I tried to pray, but words failed me. I felt I was dying, and I must ask God to give me one more chance. He had indeed given me thousands, but I wanted one more, so I cried, 'O God, I am a poor drunkard, but please give me one more chance, and I will never touch the drink again.' God heard my prayer and gave me the chance that I had asked for. I slept during the night, and in the morning was somewhat sobered. I knew what I had promised God the night before, but where to turn I knew not. Wandering through the rooms of my home, half crazed with misery, my eyes lighted on an old Bible, so tattered and worn that no one would buy it, otherwise it would have been sold long before. It crossed my mind that in my agonizing prayer, the previous night, I was in touch with God, and as this was his Word, I had better look into it. I opened it, and by chance—no chance it seemed to me, but a direct message from God—I read Matthew 6:33, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you.' I fell on my knees, then and there, and prayed as I had never prayed before. I rose at last, feeling that God had heard."

In a few days Brown was on his feet again, sobered and in his right mind. Old things had passed away, all things had become new. He has become a zealous worker for Christ. His motto is, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul." (CHAPLAIN) J. J. MUNRO.

Have you a little FAIRY in your home?
We mean FAIRY SOAP of course!

Irrespective of price, the best is usually the cheapest in the end, but when the price of the best is also as cheap as the cheapest, twice wise is he who buys the best.

Its snowy whiteness, absolute purity, oval-shaped cake, free-lathering and floating qualities place FAIRY SOAP in a class above all other toilet and bath soaps.

The price is but 5c—as low or less than you are asked to pay for soaps with but few of Fairy's virtues.

FREE! Send us ten Fairy Soap oval box fronts (or if you prefer, 25 cents in Fairy stamps) and we will forward you a handsome collection of "10 Little Fairy" subjects. These pictures are artistic reproductions from photographs and will be admired and preserved by all lovers of children. Size 9 3/4 x 12 1/2 inches, FREE FROM ALL ADVERTISING MATTER, ready for framing.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Dept. 162, Chicago

5% Conservative and SAFE.

YOU cannot loan $50 or $100 to home builders (the best class of loans in the world), but it is the business of this Company to do it for you. Thousands are getting 5 per cent, through us on sums that would otherwise yield but 3 1/2 or 4 per cent. Testimonials and the fullest possible information on request.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.
5 per cent, per annum—quarterly, by check. Withdrawals at your pleasure, and full earnings paid to them from the day your funds were received.

Assets, $1,700,000
Surplus & Profits, . . . $175,000

Under New York Banking Department Supervision.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.,
1151 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

X-RAY Stove Polish

Ask Dealer for it.

Is Guaranteed to go twice as far as paste or liquid polishes. X-RAY gives a quick, brilliant lustre and does not burn off. Sample sent to you address Dept. "D," Lamont, Corliss & Co., Agents, 78 Hudson Street, New York City.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks
(TRADE MARK)

Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick-room. Worn in rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail, 50c pair. Parker pays postage. Catalogues on request.

J. H. Parker, Dent. K 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

AGENTS' OUTFIT FREE. Passes up Dust Pan, Hauled with foot; dirt emptied without litter. Latest Catalog very latest household necessities, rapid sales. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. G, Bath, N.Y.

Rheumatism Banished

"Cold Feet Made Happy"

An instant relief now offered to the public. Known locally in Hartford, its home, for many years.

No Money Asked

until you have tried and been absolutely convinced to your own satisfaction that we do what we claim.

The word of any reader of The Christian Herald is sufficient.

TONSO

Electric Hair Insole

prevents chill, starts normal blood circulation, the friction of the hair combined with electrical discs generate tonic electric irritation. Comfortable and stimulating—does not crowd regular size shoes. Helps instantly. We believe this to prove our belief send us size shoe you wear and we will send post-paid two pairs of Tonso Insoles, put in different shoes or alternate. If satisfied, we trust you to send us $1.00 within 15 days. If they do no good, tell us so and throw them away. That ends it. Who can refuse such an offer? Send us your name to-day.

TONSO INSOLE COMPANY
1220 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

Are You Deaf?

We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING. Sent on approval. Write for catalogue.

WIL. V. WILLIS & CO. 134 South 11th Street, Philadelphia

MOTHERS:

THIS SHOWS HOW TO SAVE THE CHILDREN

TAKE NO CHANCES

One Mother Writes—"After two doctors left my house stating that nothing could save my boy who was dying from Croup and Pneumonia I permanently relieved him with your cabinet an treatment." Mothers, you can save yourselves and your family. Send for our 100 page book FREE Premature Death comes from neglect. When we have no agent One Cabinet will be sent FREE with our $5.00 Course of Mirralno treatment. $80.00 a month to good Agents. Remember, the Robinson is the only Patent Cabinet; don't confound it with imitations.

RHEUMATISM Will give $100.00 for a case that can't overcome. Sent on 30 days trial. Write to-day as this offer will not appear again.

ROBINSON MAN'FG CO.,
702 Jefferson Avenue, Toledo, Ohio

REVERSIBLE Linene Collars and Cuffs

Save Money and Trouble
Professional and business men, students, mechanics, artisans, find comfort, convenience, and economy in these goods. Made of fine cloth, stylish, and neatly resemble linen.

No Washing or Ironing
When soiled, discard. We send by mail, prepaid, ten collars or five pairs of cuffs for 6c. Sample collar or pair of cuffs for 6c. in S. Stamps. Name and size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. P. Boston

ACME BOLSTER ROLL

Only $2.00, Delivered
Weighs But 4 Pounds

Put away the matted pillows and dress your bed with a stylish Acme Bolster Roll, which gives a neat and orderly appearance, and makes the bedroom look well kept and inviting.

The Acme Bolster Roll, made of corrugated jute board, is light and easy to handle and so strong that it never wears out. Cover it to match the spread.

Almost every good dealer from Maine to California has them; if your local dealer cannot supply you, write us, stating width of your bed, and we will send you a money order for $2; we will ship an Acme Roll and pay the charges to any express point on a coast of the Mississippi River. Money back if you want it.

Handsome Book, "Dainty Bedrooms," Mailed Free.

J. & D. PAPER CO., 843 Water St., Sandusky, O.

FREE 1904

We will send one sample of this pin FREE to any person who cuts out this advertisement and sends it to us with their name and address in a letter. You must also enclose a two-cent stamp to pay the postage on the pin. Only one pin sent to each family. This is a gold-plated pin. It can be used as a ladies' stick pin or buckle pin. It can also be worn as a scarf pin, or the buckle can be broken off and used as a charm. The leaves are in green enamel and represent a four leaf clover. This pin is made so that we can mail you FREE our new illustrated Jewelry and Fancy Goods Catalogue. This pin is gold plated. Address Yann & Co., 48 Bond St., New York.

AGENTS WANTED—Permanent and profitable employment can be found by reliable men and women willing to devote time and attention to selling our goods to the consumer. Cash commission paid. Established 180. 600 Agents now at work. Great Eastern Coffee & Tea Co., St. Louis, Mo.

$200. A MONTH

One reliable man or woman in each county as manager, to exhibit, take orders and appoint agents for Harrison's Oil Gas Stoves for cooking and heating. Wonderful invention. Automatically generates fuel gas from kerosene oil. Minute Gas Works. Absolutely safe. Enormous demand. Thousands sold weekly. Cheapest, cleanest, safest fuel. Customers delighted. Catalogue FREE. Write today.

World Mfg. Co., 5576 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

CORNS are nuisance enough without the bother and danger of cutting them. Don't risk blood-poisoning. Remove them with A-Corn Salve. 15c. at your druggist's or by mail.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

MODERN DELUSIONS
Mistaken Ideas of Creed and Worship Prevalent in These Days
BY MRS. M. BAXTER

STRONG delusion is in the air—the atmosphere of "this present evil world" is full of it. Men will believe a lie, and delude themselves and others, because "they receive not the love of the truth that they may be saved." How could a more possible condition have been imposed on men than to repent and believe? And yet, so obstinate is man's belief in himself, in his own goodness, and in his own resources, that only a very small minority, even of those who have Bibles and hear the Gospel, really repent and believe to the saving of their souls?

"My Spirit shall not always strive with man," said our God, one hundred and twenty years before the flood. And men went on sinning and rejecting God, with the testimony in their midst of such a man as Noah, who continually preached righteousness and lived it; and God gave them up to the destruction of the flood. Is God giving men up now to the strong delusion which we see springing up in so many forms and in many lands? We read of a church being organized, which claims to show its members how to connect themselves with higher forces through the power of mental concentration. In this way it is said that persons may choose the form and conditions of their reincarnation, which may take place nine days after the spirit leaves the body, but not sooner.

Can it be credited that men will go to such lengths in that sin which made the inhabitants of Canaan intolerable to God, so that he commanded their extermination?

The total disregard of God, defiance, and wilful ignorance of God, by such among so-called Christians as give themselves up to this essence of heathenism, is appalling. We can only think that they have sinned against light, and God has given them up to strong delusion. God bears long with man before he comes to such a point as this. But there are those who do know the Bible sufficiently to recognize and to avoid such damning sin as this, who yet are most unwilling to make the Bible their rule of life. They go with the multitude; they must be in the fashion; they must do as other people do; they will not be peculiar. "Everybody does it," say those who are members of churches, but who, encouraged by the church concerts, church dances, and church bazaars, argue that what is the right thing when presided over by the vicar or the minister, is a right thing anywhere. So more and more they give rein to the flesh; the taste for God's Word grows less and less; they cannot attend the prayer-meeting; they do their best to influence their ministers to make the church services more musical; good voices are obtained, irrespective of the spiritual condition of the choir; the flesh is pleased, the service is enjoyed by the people, and they pride themselves that they are neither narrow nor peculiar. Strong delusion!

Yes, strong delusion. In the church councils, does the question arise, Is God pleased with our church services? Does he find in them that which he is seeking for? "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship him" (John 4: 24). Is it a worship in spirit and in truth when paid singers, in the intervals between the singing of most holy words, talk one to the other about all manner of things? If they were singing in the spirit, could they so easily turn to their own spirit? Is it worshipping in truth to sing the chant, "O come, let us sing unto the Lord, let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation," when they have no assurance that they are saved at all? Is it truth when they sing in a continually-lengthening drawl, "And take not thy Holy Spirit from us," when they have never yet known anything of the Spirit's power? Is it not then a "strong delusion," that God is served by that which does not please him? No amount of externalism can be a substitute for the broken, contrite, conquered, surrendered heart, which worships "in spirit and in truth." Without this, all supposed worship has in it the element of strong delusion, that God is pleased when he is not.

At Factory Prices
Direct from our own Factory.
Why pay your dealer from $5 to $40 more for a stove or range, when you can buy direct from our factory

KALAMAZOO Stoves and Ranges

saving all dealers' and middlemen's profits? We save you from 25% to 40% on every purchase and you run no risk for we give you 360 Days Approval Test and a guarantee under a $20,000 bank bond. If a Kalamazoo does not satisfy you in every way, send it back and we return every cent you paid. We pay the freight. Can we make a fairer offer? We are selling thousands of both steel and cast iron stoves and ranges in all parts of the country, and can refer you to pleased customers in your own neighborhood. New patterns, large square ovens and guaranteed fire backs. All blacked and polished ready to set up. Send postal for Approval Offer and Catalog No. 103

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mrs. Kalamazoo, Mich.
We fit all our ranges and cook stoves with our patent oven thermometer which makes baking easy.

Spinal Curvature Corrected in Your Own Home
We offer a certain relief to all who suffer from this terrible affliction. Throw away the cumbersome and expensive leather and plaster Paris jackets and try our Scientific Spinal Appliance.

It does not encase the body like a vise, but allows perfect freedom of movement. It weighs ounces where others weigh pounds. It is 80 per cent cheaper than the old methods and 100 per cent better. It conforms to the shape of the body so that no one would notice it. It can be worn by the smallest child or the oldest adult with perfect ease and comfort. It will give permanent relief in any case of spinal curvature. They are not made up in large quantities, but each one is made to measure, to meet the individual case, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. If you or any of your friends suffer from any form of Spinal Trouble, write us at once and we will give you full particulars as to how your curvature may be corrected, without inconvenience or discomfort, and Without Leaving Your Own Home. Address:

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 30 Second St., JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

I SELL REAL ESTATE NO MATTER WHERE IT IS

Do you want to sell your real estate? Do you want to sell it quickly and with the least possible expense? Do you want to sell it at a reasonable price instead of sacrificing a good portion of its value? Do you want it sold without publicity? If these are your wants, I can fill them. For eight years I have been selling these wants for people in every section of the country. The result is the largest real estate brokerage business in the world. Don't that proof that I have been fulling my claims and isn't sufficient evidence that I can sell your property? Sit down right now, and send me a description of your property, including your lowest cash price. I will then tell you frankly just what I can do for you and how and how I can do it. It doesn't matter what kind of a property you have, where it is located, or what it is worth. Just send me a description, today. If you want to buy any kind of a property in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.

W. M. OSTRANDER, SUITE 161, NORTH AMERICAN BLDG., PHILADELPHIA.

THE IDEAL SIGHT RESTORER

RESTORES THE SIGHT
WEAK EYES MADE STRONG.
SPECTACLES ARE A NUISANCE. NECESSITY ONLY MAKES ONE WEAR THEM.

PREVENTS FAILING SIGHT
DULL EYES MADE BRIGHT.
Write for ILLUSTRATED TREATISE ON THE EYE, Mailed Free.

THE IDEAL COMPANY, 239 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

30 Day's Free Trial Standard Washer

We prepay all freight charges and deliver this direct to your door, absolutely free of charge. You try it thirty days, if you don't find it all and more than we claim, ship it back; we will pay return charges. This is different from any other washing machine ever made. Takes dirt out of wristbands, neckbands, collars, etc., thoroughly as it cleans blankets, sheets or pillow cases. Washday is a pleasure instead of a drudgery. Don't delay but write at once and we will ship you a washer FREE by the next freight.

Don't Send Us a Cent, but drop a postal card to WIARD MFG. CO., 75 West Ave., East Avon, N. Y.

Buy From Our FACTORY Save One Third

We cut three profits on the price of our carriages by selling direct, and offer a greater variety for selection than can be found at any dealers.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE & HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio.

DEATH TO HEAVES (Guarantee)
NEWTON'S HEAVE COUGH DISTEMPER AND INDIGESTION REMEDY. A veterinary specific for cold throat and stomach troubles. Sycophants. Recoveries $1.00 per can. Dealers Mail or Express paid.
Newton Horse Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?
If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcohol Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.
HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.
We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R 5, Lebanon, Ohio.

Factory Price

Direct to You

We are the only general merchandise house which owns, controls and directly manages a vehicle factory. We build our vehicles from the ground up and know what's under the paint. We add but one small profit to the cost of material and labor, hence our customers are getting a better made job in a finer finish and at a lower price than can possibly be secured elsewhere.

$19.80

"LEADER" Road Wagon — Imitation leather trimmed; carpet, wrench and shafts; just as illustrated. Write for further description.

$25.50

"CHALLENGE" Buggy—24 in. body, cloth trimmed; top, back and side curtains, storm apron, carpet and shafts. Write for details.

We also have better grades up to the very best and most stylish that can possibly be put together.

VEHICLE CATALOGUE FREE. Send for it today. It will give particulars about the above work. It also illustrates and describes the newest and best line of Runabouts, Stanhopes, Buggies, Phaetons, Surreys, Carriages, Carts, Spring Wagons, etc., ever quoted direct to the buyer. It explains the difference between good and unreliable work—between the hand-painted and the dipped buggy—and also explains our Guarantee of Satisfaction and

30 Days' Trial Offer.

Send a postal today for our Vehicle Cat. No. E1. Montgomery Ward & Co. Chicago

A special circular quoting our entire line of Sleighs, Sleds, etc., will be sent at the same time, if you request it.

REAL FRIENDSHIP*

A Relation Rare in Life, but Enjoyed by Friendly People.

WHO is there that has not at some time felt the need of a true friend? Times come to us all, when the sky lowers and there is trouble weighing upon us. Whatever the cause may be, the burden is very heavy, and for a time, the sufferer feels that a death that would deliver him, would be welcome. In such circumstances, how the whole situation appears to change, if some real friend comes and utters words of sympathy and encouragement. The burden is just as heavy, but one feels better able to bear it. The story Gough loved to tell was of an experience of that kind. It was a day or two after he had signed the pledge. He was cold and miserable, and was shaking from head to foot. He knew that a glass of whisky would brace him up. He knew that any doctor who examined him would say he ought to have it, but he had abjured it. Could he bear the misery? He thought not. In the crisis, a gentleman met him, and said how glad he was to hear he had signed the pledge. "You are having a bad time, I suppose," said his friend, "but I hope you will stick to it. I am sorry for you; but I hope you will be able to bear the trouble, without going back to your enemy." He grasped Gough's hand, and the poor, trembling creature's eyes filled with tears, as he said, "Thank you, sir, I think I can bear it now." Those few words decided the conflict, and Gough was saved. How many such opportunities of helping another we suffer to pass away, unused.

David's plight was a sad one. He had delivered his people from the giant; he had charmed away the king's melancholia with his music; but Saul's insane jealousy possessed him. David was liable at any moment to fall a victim to the king's ungovernable rage, and he was innocent of wrong-doing. It must have seemed strange to him, that God did not interfere to protect and vindicate him. To the man so worried and harassed, how precious must have been the sympathy and fidelity of Jonathan! The very man, apparently, who would suffer most by David's advancement; the man who must give up in David's favor his hope of succeeding to the throne, remained faithful to him in his trial, and saved his life at the risk of his own. Few men in his circumstances would have been so magnanimous. David's burden was heavy; but it must have been easier to bear after Jonathan had spoken to him.

Real friendship, however, cannot be one-sided. The opportunities of proving it may fall to the one or the other, but the love must be in both. David's kindness, in after years, to Jonathan's son, simply and solely because he was the son of his old friend, shows that David fully reciprocated Jonathan's love. So, we naturally suspect a man who has no friends, of being an unfriendly man. The suspicion is not always just, because true friendship is rare, and adversity winnows away all other kinds. But it is often true that the man who has no friends is himself responsible for the condition. If he is mean, or deceitful, or treacherous, he is not likely to have friends. Those qualities alienate and repel men. On the other hand, he who is kind at heart, who is eager to help another, whose unselfishness and sympathy are evident, attracts others and, as the dramatist says, "Grapples them to him with hooks of steel." A man must have been very unfortunate in his relations, rare as real friendship is, if he has had an experience such as Cowper describes, who, when his servant asked for leave of absence that he might go and see a friend, said:

Get me my hat and coat, John, though the night be raw,
I'll see him, too,—the first I ever saw.

Real friendship does exist. Human nature would be poor, indeed, if it did not. Those who move much among the very poor, tell us of instances so noble and pathetic as to be startling. For it does not need that a man have money in order to prove himself a friend. Personal sympathy and personal service prove it much more surely. The one essential quality is unselfishness, that quality which, if it were more prevalent, would transform the world.

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union for Feb. 14. 1 Samuel 20: 1-23.

A Buggy Made From Split Hickory will stand a half more hard wear than an ordinary vehicle. With this material and our experience, expert workmen, modern machinery and large carriage plant, you are assured of having the best strongest, handiwork vehicle in your county when you buy a

Split Hickory

Special Top Buggy

Made to Your Order Price only $50

When we say "made to order" we mean that we will finish this buggy as you want it, changing the painting, upholstery or general construction, from regular to suit your requirements. We are able to do this, as we make vehicles in large quantities and carry on hand at all times a large stock in different courses of construction. We carry thousands of these buggies regularly in stock in rubbing varnish ready to finish, so that shipment can be made promptly after order is received. We ship you our Split Hickory Special Top Buggy as you want it and allow 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL, so that you can compare your buggy with other buggies offered by retail dealers at 50% more, and if you are satisfied that you have the best buggy in the world for the money and it is what we guaranteed to furnish you, we will send you a Two-Year Iron-Clad Guarantee. Send for our 136-Page FREE Catalog at once. It describes and illustrates this buggy fully gotten up in twelve different ways. NOTE: We manufacture a full line of high grade harness, sold to user at wholesale prices.

The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co.
(H. O. Phelps, President)
3046 Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio

BUILT TO LAST

Never outclassed—Sure Hatch Incubators. Built better than your house. No hot centers, no chilling draughts on sensitive eggs. Every cubic inch in egg chamber at uniform, blood temperature of fowl. It's a continual pleasure to hatch nearly every fertile egg with a Sure Hatch. Free catalogue B-14 with pictures tells lively story. SURE HATCH INCUBATOR CO. Indianapolis, Ind.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

25 designs, all steel. Handsome, durable. —Cheaper than a wood fence. Special inducements to church and cemeteries. Catalogue free. KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE CO. 445 North St., Kokomo, Indiana.

"VICTORIOUS IOWA"

A good name for the Iowa Round Incubator that so often out-hatches its recent competitors. Any questions? Our new catalogue answers them all. It is free—send for it. Iowa Incubator Co. Box 246, Des Moines, Ia.

WANTED Energetic men and women everywhere, to sell the "Harrington" Tea and Coffee Percolator to housewives. Makes coffee clear as amber. No bother from tea grounds. Cleaned in a moment. No scouring of tea or coffee pots necessary. Agents making big profits. Write for illustrated description, price list and liberal inducements. O. W. Burritt & Bro., Weedsport, N.Y.

INCUBATORS From $6 up. Best reasonable priced hatcheries on the market. Brooders, $4 up. None better at any price. Fully warranted. Catalogue free. L. A. SANTA, LIGONIER, IND.

PETALUMA INCUBATORS and Brooders are the oldest and most reliable machines on the market today. Devices purely automatic and sure. Catalogue FREE. PETALUMA INCUBATOR CO. Box 63, Petaluma, Cal. Box 64, Indianapolis, Ind.

MEN AND WOMEN OF MONEY Write for my FREE BOOK about Missouri—her wealth, laws, and 5 per cent. Farm Mortgages—printed in colors—profusely illustrated. FREE. WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 5 Wardell Bldg., MACON, MO.

THE "SUN" OUTSHINES THEM ALL. Safe as a candle; 100 times brighter. Cost 1¢ of kerosene. Makes its own gas. No greasy wicks; no smoky chimneys; no odor; no bother.

The "SUN" INCANDESCENT HYDRO-CARBON LAMP

Strong, brilliant light, indispensable to all who use the eyes. Conforms to insurance underwriters' rules. Branch supply depots in all larger cities. Liberal commission to agents. Get catalogue. SUN VAPOR LIGHT CO., BOX 700 CANTON, OHIO. (Licensor of the ground patents for Vapor Lamps)

You will realize that "They live well who live cleanly." If you use

SAPOLIC

IS YOUR MONEY TIED UP?

Do you find yourself hampered because certain moneys are tied up? Houses and lands, buildings or factories, hold your money tight. You know where it is, but you can't get it when you want it!

We sell real estate, no matter where it is or where it is. That's our specialty. If you want cash for your real estate, place it in our hands at once and We'll Get the Money For You.

We know the man who wants to be exactly what you want to sell. It means of our special system and complete equipment, we can find you a customer promptly.

WE WILL SELL YOUR HOUSE FOR CASH
WE WILL SELL YOUR LAND FOR CASH
WE WILL SELL YOUR FACTORY FOR CASH
WE WILL SELL YOUR BUSINESS FOR CASH

Our company is an organization of practical real estate men.

Offices in all Important Cities.

United States Real Estate and Security Co.

Chicago	1410 Real Estate	New York
Washington	Trust Bldg.,	Boston
Hartford		Springfield
Cincinnati	PHILADELPHIA, PA.	Toronto, Can.

OPEN MONDAY AND THURSDAY EVENING

RHEUMATISM Relieved Through the Feet

Don't Take Medicine, External Remedy Brings Quick Relief. FREE on Approval. TRY IT.

We want everyone who has rheumatism to send us his or her name. We will send by return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, the wonderful external relief which has brought more comfort into the United States than any internal remedy made. If they give relief, send us $1.00; if not, don't send us a cent.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn on soles of the feet and relieve by absorb the poisonous acids in the blood through the large pores. They relieve rheumatism in every part of the body. It must be evident to you that we couldn't afford to send the drafts on approval if they didn't relieve. Write to-day to the Magic Foot Draft Co., RA 6 Oliver Building, Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair of drafts on approval. We send also a valuable booklet on Rheumatism.

Mark the Grave of your departed. Headstones $4. Monuments $11. Blue or White Marble nicely lettered. Instructions for setting. Save agent's commission. Send for Catalogue. W. J. MOORE, 345 Third St. Sterling, Ill.

The WOODEN HEN

A high-class self-regulating incubator on a small scale. Fifty egg capacity. Heat, moisture and ventilation automatically and perfectly controlled. Price only $6.80. Send for the Wooden Hen Book, mailed free, together with a book containing 14 colored views and telling all about the EXCELSIOR INCUBATOR, if you name this paper.

GEO. H. STAHL, Quincy, Illinois.

SHOEMAKER'S BOOK ON POULTRY

and ALMANAC for 1914, contains 212 pages with fine colored plates true to life. It tells all about chickens, their care, diseases and remedies. All about INCUBATORS and how to operate them. All about poultry houses and how to build them. It is really an encyclopedia of chickendom, and no one can afford to be without it. Price only 15c. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 702, FREEPORT, ILL.

DON'T SET HENS the same old 300 Egg Natural Hen Incubator costs but $3, other sizes equally so. Free 120-page New Indispensable—many who keep hens. Our Patent protected against infringement. Agents wanted everywhere, either sex, no experience necessary. Catalogue sent about and 25c Life Formula FREE. If you write today. NATURAL HEN INCUBATOR CO., 884, Columbus, Nebraska.

HE KNOWETH

WHO knoweth the flight of the years, as they go?
Trenturies, cycles, and ages away?
Thine grasp is but meagre, Thought's flight all too slow.
Thy seizes, that follows; both droop with the day.
Thy ebb ever swelleth and floweth.
To whom Time's vastness who knoweth?
Who knoweth?

Who seeth the sights which lie open to view
In e-fettered arctics, where dwarfed spirits dwell?
In snow-shrouded forests, where brawn wood-men hew?
In un-gladdened tropics, where fragrant fruits swell?
Thee, faithful father whom sleep early fleeth,
Thee, mother, mending, who seeth? Who seeth?

Who careth for all who have ease, or must toil
In damp mine, or dark mill, in mart or off shore?
Who finds where the swain sows, or rives the rough soil?
Who Mag volumes where genius contributes to lore?
Or who the lot of his fellow-man shareth,
Or the laden beast, bruised bird, or sad child, who careth?

Who seeth the throes that o'erburden the soul
When death drapes the door, or when birth brings her joy?
The poverty pines under greed's grim control
Who luxury tosses her wealth like a toy?
Who the dross which the self-slain concealeth,
Who pain, or man's pleasure who feeleth? Who feeleth?

Who, in the blue vault; the wide main; the proud hills.
Re there the mute message that Nature has penned.

Who measure of wisdom he stints or he fills.
Who boots it to beg or beginning, or end?
Who the finite bounds or Jehovah's great plan
Who ever, will never be, mortal's to scan.

Who mad comets rush, or where lone as-ters fall;
Who spheres are in harmony rolling through space;
Who land teems with verdure, or peaks tower tall;

Who waves mount, mid-ocean, or spurn earth's embrace;
Who wild torrents tumble, where still water floweth,
Who welletth. He seeth. He feeleth. He knoweth.

H. F. K.

PRIZE FOR BEST CAKE RECIPE TO SUBSCRIBERS OF THE AMERICAN HOME

THE AMERICAN HOME desires to get in as close touch as possible with its readers, and believes the best way to do this is to get the subscribers interested in honestly conducted competitions in which they can take part each month. In addition to those which are now being published in The American Home, we make the following proposition to those who are not now subscribers, but who intend becoming subscribers from now on.

FIRST PRIZE We will give for the best Cake Recipe sent us before May 1, 1904, a free outfit, Royal Enamel Kitchen Ware of twenty-five pieces shown in this ad.

SECOND PRIZE For the second best Cake Recipe, a Royal Enamel Loaf Cake Pan.

THIRD PRIZE For the third best Cake Recipe, a set of Jelly Cake Pans of Royal Enamel Ware.

One hundred of the best recipes will be selected and printed in a booklet and every contestant will receive a copy, thus obtaining a collection of cake recipes which will be valuable to every household.

If you are not a subscriber, send ten cents postage for a year's subscription to The American Home, and you will be entitled to compete, not only in this offer, but all the other competitions we publish each month. Old subscription advanced 1 year on same basis.

THE AMERICAN HOME

525 Temple Court Building NEW YORK CITY

Handy Farm Wagons

make the work easier for both the man and team. The tires being wide they do not dent into the ground; the labor of loading is reduced many times, because of the short lift. They are equipped with our famous Electric Steel Wheels, either straight or cat-gar-spokes. Wheel's any height from 24 to 48 inches. White hickory axles, steel hounds. Guaranteed to carry 400 lbs. Why not get started right by putting in one of these wagons. We make our steel wheels to fit any wagon. Write for the catalog. It is free. ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., BOX 136, QUINCY, ILL.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAK JOINTS,
VARICOSE ULCERS
AND LEG SWELLINGS Overcome by

OUR PATENT SEAMLESS HEEL ELASTIC STOCKINGS.

We make all goods to measure of new elastic made by us and send by mail to any part of the world, and guarantee a fit. Free Catalogue tells how to measure, gives prices, etc. Send for one. We are the largest weavers of special elastic work in the United States.

CURTIS & SPINDELL CO.,
54 Market Street, Lynn, Mass.

DEAF? Well, Listen!

The deaf are immediately able to hear ordinary conversation by the Magnetic Otophone Sound Waves, which penetrate the deafest ear. A wonderful scientific invention, which restores hearing and banishes head noises. Guaranteed Invisible, Effective, Comfortable, and Harmless. Not an ear drum or trumpet. Compare it with other devices, and be guided by your intelligence. Book FREE.

OTOPHONE CO.

1602 Arch Street, Dept. A, Philadelphia, Pa.

Twentieth Century Buying

The up-to-date consumer has ceased to allow his shopping affairs to worry him. He makes out his order from our large catalogue, sends it and we do the rest. We began pleasing and saving money for our customers over 32 years ago, and our remarkable success since that time is only a true mark of the people's growing trust in us and our methods.

We buy good goods, tell the truth in describing them, and sell them at wholesale prices. The consumer can buy fresh goods and enjoy the same low prices as does the dealer. Our oldest customers buy the largest bills of goods, because the larger the order the more money saved.

We accept all the responsibility, and guarantee that what you buy shall be satisfactory—whether it be a 25-cent or a 25-dollar purchase. If you try us once you will see how easy and pleasant a matter it is to deal with a strictly honest and accommodating firm.

Begin Saving Today. Cut out the coupon, send it to us with your name and address and 15 cents in partial payment of the postage on our 1128-page catalogue.

With this book in your possession it is an easy matter to sit comfortably by your own fireside and order your supplies for months in advance with a few hours' pleasant effort.

Your saving in the course of a year will surprise you, for you can buy many supplies from us for less money than your dealer pays for the same goods, thus saving even more than his profit on them. Besides, when buying from us you are enabled to select what you desire from a stock as large and varied as a thousand ordinary stores, and you are not obliged to buy what can be found in the small stocks of your local tradesmen.

Bear in mind that whatever you want—we have it. Don't put it off. Send in the coupon today before you forget it.

We Want You to Try Us and test for yourself our ability to please you. Tell us what kind of goods you are interested in and we will send you without charge any of the following illustrated special catalogues quoting wholesale prices. Merely mention the number or letter of the catalogue you want.

- | | | | |
|---|--|---|---|
| 100 Artists' Supplies | 170 Kitchen Supplies | 235 Stoves and Games | R Fancy Grade Furniture |
| 105 Athletic Goods | 175 Lace, Embroideries, Ribbons, Trimmings | 240 Toys, Dolls and Games | T Trunks |
| 110 Blacksmiths' and Machinists' Tools | 180 Lamps and Lanterns | 245 Underwear | U Youths' and Boys' Clothing |
| 115 Builders' Hardware and Supplies | 185 Linoleums, Carpets and Curtains | 250 Vehicles | V1 Men's Made-to-Order Clothing with samples of fabrics. Suits $10.50 to $16.50 |
| 120 Carpenter and Builders' Tools and Materials | 190 Men's Hats and Gloves | 255 Wagon Makers' Supplies | V2 Same as V1 except suit prices $18.00 to $30.00 |
| 125 Crockery and Glassware | 195 Men's Shoes | 260 Watches and Clocks | V3 Made-to-Order Overcoats with samples |
| 130 Cutlery | 200 Men's Wearing Apparel | 265 Women's Shoes | W Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 135 Dry Goods | 205 Music and Musical Instruments | 300 Women's Catalogue (Cloaks, Furs, Suits, Skirts, Waists, Hats, etc.) | W1 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 140 Fancy and Novelty Goods | 210 Notions | B Bicycles | W2 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 145 Farm Implements | 215 Saddles and Saddlery | C Baby Carriages | W3 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 150 Fishing tackle | 220 Silverware | D Dairy Supplies | W4 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 155 Popular priced Furniture | 225 Sporting Goods | E Drugs and Patent Medicines | W5 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 160 Harness | 230 Stationery and Office Supplies | J Telephones and Electrical Goods | W6 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| 165 Jewelry | | K Cameras and Photo Supplies | W7 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |
| | | M Books | W8 Men's Ready-Made Clothing |

Send four 2-cent stamps for our 10-Color Wall Hanger showing the inside of our building, with the goods, and the clerks at work. One of the most complex and complicated pieces of lithography ever attempted. Interesting and attractive. You can get it for what it cost us—four 2c stamps.

Cut this slip out and send it TODAY.

MONTGOMERY WARD & Co., Chicago.
Enclosed find 15 cents for partial postage on Catalogue No. 72, four 2c stamps for Wall Hanger, or 20c for both.

Name _____ (Be sure and write very plainly.)
Postoffice _____
Route No. _____ County _____ State _____

Montgomery Ward & Co.,

Michigan Ave., Madison & Washington Sts., Chicago

32 years World's Headquarters for Everything.

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

A Genuine and Wonderful Book Bargain

THINK OF IT

A STANDARD RELIGIOUS LIBRARY
WHICH FORMERLY SOLD FOR $41.00,
NOW OFFERED FOR ONLY

$10

THE VERY LOWEST PRICES EVER KNOWN

Just the set of books needed to equip every Sunday School, Pastor, Superintendent, Teacher and Bible Student for Bible study. We absolutely guarantee perfect books and entire satisfaction or money refunded. Order at once and secure one of the few hundred sets we have just made up to supply the demand.

Take Notice:  Former Price $41.00
Now Only ... $10.00
Choice of Six Vols., $6.50

Note to Christian Herald Readers
We guarantee to The Christian Herald readers that these great books which we offer at such a marvelously low price are newly made, clearly printed, strongly and handsomely bound in cloth, and perfect in every way. We are an old established house of thirty-six years' experience, and have the reputation of furnishing standard religious works at the lowest prices ever known. We have sold thousands of these books to Christian Herald readers, and they are happy, grateful, and satisfied.
THE S. S. SCRANTON CO.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET & BROWN'S BIBLE COMMENTARY

By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's, Glasgow; Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., St. Cuthbert's, York, and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen.
A complete commentary—critical, explanatory and practical—on the Old and New Testaments, 1380 pages, bound in cloth. Former Price, $7.50. The body of the work consists of notes that are concise, learned, free from verbiage and easily understood, that elucidate and explain difficult passages of Scripture, or whose import is not readily apprehended. Far in advance of the older works now in use, it is also the most practical, suggestive and scientific.
Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Editor of the Sunday School Times: "I do not know of its equal, within its scope and cost."
Rev. J. H. Vincent, Bishop M. E. Church: "It deserves a place on the table of every Bible student."

CRITICAL & EXPOSITORY BIBLE CYCLOPEDIA

Compiled and written by Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., joint author of the Jamieson, Fausset & Brown Bible Commentary. It contains 750 three-column pages; 600 illustrations. Regular Price, cloth binding, $5.00.

This great work is the result of seven years of labor by the author, contains three thousand seven hundred articles and presents a completeness, conciseness and thoroughness, such as to make it a perfect Bible Cyclopaedia. It sets forth briefly and suggestively those doctrinal and experimental truths which are contained in the Written Word itself.

J. W. Bashford, D.D., President of Ohio Wesleyan University: "It is a most admirable aid. I hope ten thousand teachers will use it inside the next six months."

The late Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage: "It is in advance of all books in that line—unique, learned, accurate and valuable."

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS

The celebrated Jewish Historian, translated from the Original Greek by William Whiston, A.M. Large Octavo Cloth, 1,056 pages, nearly 100 illustrations. Former Price $4.00.

In this great work is contained the History and Antiquities of the Jews, Destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; also Dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac.

ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF THE BIBLE

By Rev. John Kitto, D.D., F.S.A. It contains 735 double-column pages, 220 engravings, printed from excellent plates, on good paper, strongly bound in cloth. Former Price $4.50.

No modern writer has contributed more largely to enrich the biblical literature of our time, or to clothe with a fresh and living interest the main personages and incidents in Bible History than John Kitto in this magnificent work. Deeply interesting and instructive, and abounding in striking pictorial illustrations, it should have a place in every home. Over 100,000 copies of this popular work have been sold.

EDERSHEIM'S LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS THE MESSIAH

(2 Vols.) The Authorized American Edition. By Alfred Edersheim, M. Oxon., D.D., Lecturer Oxford University.

Two Volumes. Former Price, $6.00. Royal 8vo, 1,524 pages, handsomely bound in silk cloth. Gilt full account of the society, life and development—intellectual and religious—in Palestine, to serve as a full and background for the picture of Christ. The fresh study of the text of the Gospels makes the book a history commentary on the four Gospels.

The Sunday School Times recommends it: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Saviour which is critical in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time."

CONCISE CYCLOPEDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE

Biblical, Biographical, Theological, Historical, Geographical and Practical. Edited by Rev. E. B. Sanford, D.D., assisted by a brilliant galaxy of Bible Scholars and Divines. Complete in one volume, nearly 1,000 pages, beautifully illustrated. Regular Price, cloth binding, $3.50.

To the seekers after knowledge this work will prove a surprising storehouse of information regarding Church History, Bible History, Bible Names, Places, Customs, Doctrines, Creeds, Denominations, the Early Church, Story of the Reformation, the various Young People's Societies, Theologians, Scholars, Cathedrals, Churches, Christian Endeavor World, Boston: "Knowledge is here available for which many have not known just where to turn."

SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE

Edited by William Smith, LL.D., Classical Examiner of University of London. It formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1,024 large octavo pages printed on excellent paper, finely illustrated and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. An indispensable aid to ministers, teachers, families, Sunday School Superintendents and Bible readers generally. This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language.

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL

By the Rev. W. J. Coneybeare, M.A., of Cambridge, and J. S. Howson, D. of Liverpool. Formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1,014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc., is printed on the same quality of paper and is the same in size as Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, and bound in uniform style. There is no work that will compare with this in giving a life-like picture of the great apostle and the work which he did.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

By Alexander Cruden, M.A. Former Price $1.50.

Contains 756 large octavo pages, clearly printed and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Script is the best interpreter of Scripture, and next to the Bible, no volume is of greater value to the student than Cruden's Concordance.

DIRECTIONS FOR ORDERING

Send $10.00 and we will forward the ten books at once.
Send $2.00 and promise to pay $1.00 a month for ten months, making $12.00 as complete payment, and we will forward the ten books at once.
Send $6.50 and we will forward any six of the volumes you may select at once.
Send $2.00 and promise to pay $1.00 a month for six months, making $8.00 as complete payment, and we will forward your selections of six volumes at once.

You pay freight or express charges on above plans and we guarantee safe delivery to any station in the United States or Canada.

We will forward by prepaid express a selection of any Book in above list on receipt of ... $2.50

In all cases where books are sent by mail or express we guarantee safe arrival at destination, and will make good any loss in transit.

Take Notice! We will take back any or all books that are not satisfactory in ten days after examination, and will return money, deducting only the return freight or express charges. This marvelous offer is limited, and money will be returned if the books are exhausted and we cannot fill your order. As to our responsibility, we refer to any commercial agency. Established 1866. Mention The Christian Herald when you order.

The S. S. SCRANTON CO., Publishers, HARTFORD, CONN

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 10, 1904

VOL. 27—NO. 6. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

SEE PAGE 122

Daily Breakfast at One A. M. for Homeless Men and Boys at the Bowery Mission

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

SPECIAL NOTICE

All letters for the "Mail-Bag" must contain the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but so that an answer may be sent by mail if necessary.

W. E. M., Geysserville, Calif. Did Christ or his apostles ever use fiction in teaching or preaching?

They used parables, choosing for that purpose, by way of illustration, many of the familiar incidents of every-day life—in nature, in the home, in the marts of business, in the professions and in the various handicrafts of the Orient. It was not necessary to invent, or to draw upon the fancy, when the most pertinent and striking subjects for the purpose of giving point to their teachings were ready at hand. Even when the lesson to be conveyed was purely spiritual, it had its illustrative basis in conditions that were not imaginary, but must have been familiar to hearers generally.

Subscriber, Oswego, Kan. Is it morally wrong for a Christian to loan money at a rate above the rate prescribed by law in the State, when a thorough understanding and agreement is entered into between the parties?

It is usury for a lender, under any circumstances, to exact more than the legal rate of interest, whether he does so with the full knowledge and consent of the borrower, or takes advantage of the necessities of the latter and compels him to pay the exorbitant figure. Such an act is wrong, both morally and legally.

J. U. B., Van Leer, Tenn. Was Christ ever a carpenter by trade?

He appears, according to the custom of the times, to have learned the trade of Joseph. This view is adopted by Justin Martyr, Theodorus, Sozomen, Neander and other early Christian writers. See Mark 6: 3, where the people are represented as asking: "Is not this the carpenter?"

H. S. B., Bedford, N. H., writes:

I wish we could have a CHRISTIAN HERALD Band, and that all of the readers would join and pray for the temperance cause. When I think of so many young men ruined by intemperance, and so many dear children suffering, I feel like crying to God that those who make our laws might see the need of laws that would put a stop to the drink traffic.

Emeline D., Newark, N. J. Is it a physiological fact that a man's or woman's vocation has an influence on the expression of his face?

His vocation may not, but his leading traits of character will and do find expression in his face. A cruel man cannot have a kind face. Then there are the money-getting face, with its hard, set lines, and all the soft curves and graces gone; the philosophic face, that reflects noble qualities of mind; the artistic face; the dogmatic face; the belligerent, brutal face; the stony, agnostic face; the emotional face, that betokens a warm, loving, impulsive heart, etc.

W. R. M., Paris, Ill. 1. Are musical instruments an innovation in worship of God? 2. What does Amos 5: 23; 6: 5, and Isa. 5: 12; 14: 11 mean?

1. By no means. You will find in the Bible that even in the most ancient times, harps, cymbals, lutes, and a great variety of other instruments, were employed in temple worship, not only by the Jews but by other natives. 2. These passages mean that the Lord took no pleasure in offerings, or praise, or temple service, when the heart was enmity toward God and the life one of sin and hypocrisy.

Mr. Benjamin Wheelock, Baltimore, Md., writes:

In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for July 22, 1903, there was a notice of a letter of mine in our primitive Methodist journal relating to John King, as the first pledged total abstainer in England. But in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD it is stated, "John King did not keep his life." When he had signed the moderation pledge.

What I stated was, when J. King went from house to house with tracts advocating the moderation pledge, which some of the people had signed, had got drunk on beer or ale. I did not state J. King got drunk.

In THE HERALD it is stated, "Rev. Mr. Wheelock says John King was chosen by Prince Albert to lead a great demonstration of abstainers at the International Exhibition in the Crystal Palace, Hyde Park." In the year 1851 there was an International Exhibition in the Crystal Palace, Hyde Park. The Temperance members of London and the provincial towns resolved on having a gathering of abstainers to make a large procession on a certain day, to go as a body into the Crystal Palace. The Palace Commissioners, of which Prince Albert was one, agreed that the doors should be opened one hour sooner on that occasion, so that the thousands of that procession might enter unmolested. The Temperance Managing Committee sent for John King to lead that rally of some fifteen thousand abstainers. My letter as printed, further runs thus: "His admirers in London presented him a gold medal suitably inscribed in reference as to his signing the first total abstinence pledge from all intoxicating drinks. He also received three medals—one from India, one from Manchester, and one from Ireland; these three were silver. I have seen the medals. I knew him a number of years, but I never knew him to be a Primitive Methodist. I was acquainted with two of his wives. One was a Primitive Methodist in two of my stations; the other a Wesleyan Methodist."

Old Reader, Berlin, Pa. 1. How do you define "expansion" according to the U. S. Government? 2. Can the United States uphold the Monroe Doctrine to-day?

1. "Expansion" is that policy under which we have recently acquired Porto Rico, Hawaii warfare on this evil, which comes in the disguise of pleasure? Some people stand up for dancing, saying that it is mentioned so many times in the Bible. But in the Bible they danced in praise of God. Do people dance now in praise of God? It seems to me rather like praise of the devil. One instance of dancing for pleasure in the Bible dancers never mention. It was the time the daughter of Herodias danced for the head of John the Baptist.

Mrs. J. B. M., Covington, Ky. I am greatly interested in Dr. Alice Condict's appeal for an X-ray machine for the lepers of India. I earnestly hope you will succeed in your endeavor to send her what she desires for her Christian medical work among those poor, miserable creatures, who are apparently neglected by the world. Surely it is God's will that his children should give heed to such cases.

We are glad to see our friends interesting themselves in Dr. Condict's appeal. It would be a graceful thing if the machine could be subscribed for by, and go to India as the gift of Christian American women. Dr. Condict writes:

I want it for Central India, as well as Ludhiana bellas are frequently made of leaves fastened together by plaiting or pinning with the stems.

G. F. B., Montague, Me., writes, stating that he presented the cause of Macedonia to the school in that town, and the pupils generously gave $2.69. The first grade pupils gave one cent apiece; second grade, two cents; an third grade, three cents. The little folks did nobly for the suffering children of Macedonia.

Mrs. E. A. (a subscriber in Wadsworth, Nev.), sends a very pretty poetic tribute to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, one verse of which runs:

Crowned with charity; light to the poor;
Helping the needy from shore to shore;
Reaching the masses to help and to save;
In trouble, a comfort; loyal and brave;
Sweet as a balm, with pages all bright;
Truth, the eternal God's living light—
Infinite wisdom, given for all—
A teacher, a guide to great and small;
Near to the heart, a protection and wall.

T. G. L., Ireland. 1. How did the custom of erecting spires on church edifices originate? 2. If a person connected with the spirit trade be converted, should he continue in his calling, or give it up?

1. Spires were made long before the Christian era, both on turrets, and towers, in castle and fortresses and similar buildings. They are supposed to have been first used in connection with churches in the eleventh century. Their origin is obscure, though they are believed to have originated with the Norman period. 2. If he realizes what a tremendous agent the liquor trade is for spreading sin, degradation and suffering throughout the world, and what multitudes it is annually dragging down to destruction, he will not remain in such a business for a single moment.

Mrs. Judson W. B., Traer, Ia., writes of a unusual occurrence there. During a recent snowstorm, with a gentle N. E. wind, snow fell in streaks or flakes one and one-half inches long, and some even much longer. The fall continued for about twenty minutes.

Apropos of the present severe winter, A. C. Prospect, Pa., writes:

I have seen a statement, that in the year 17 there were twenty feet of snowfall that winter. There any record that would show if this record were true?

No regular record (except such as private individuals may have made) was kept of the weather (snowfall or rainfall or wind velocity) until the Weather Bureau was established about thirty years ago.

The book, How I Worked My Way Around the World, has been received, and we are more than pleased with it. It is the most interesting book I have read for many a day. Asbury Park, N. J. MRS. SARAH J. HALL

Miscellaneous Questions

Mrs. Osborn P. He is a Methodist.

John, Abha, Tex. Thanks for good wishes.

Peter E., Turlock, Calif. Already answered.

S. S., Mc. C., Rittman, O. Consult a physician.

Mrs. G. Shepherd, Nebraska. We have no trace of such a hymn.

Reader, Caldwell, N. J. Write to Civil Service Board, Washington, D. C.

S. M. L. Don't know. Better write to the principal of the Order for information.

Old Subscriber, Canada. Write to the Baker Taylor Publishing Co., New York.

Country Reader. Consult a lawyer. The law on the subject vary in different States.

Reader, West Newton, Pa. Not yet; but will let us know when it is now ended in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Jane P., Brome, Can. We believe it is open for women. For all information write to the superintendent.

W. N. McN., Stoneham, Mass. 1. It is usual to double up the "s" in the possessive. About 49 cents.

Miss Sarah A. R., Farmingdale, Ill. The origin of Santa Claus has been repeatedly explained in THE MAIL-BAG.

Reader, Watertown, N. Y. 1. Pronounced "Reese." 2. All the letters are pronounced as written, except "c," which is silent.

Mrs. J. R. de G., Philadelphia. Baker & Taylor Co., New York, are the publishers of Owen K. Ware's book. Price, $1.50.

Mrs. E. B., Toronto, Can. "Charity begins at home" is not in the Bible. She probably refers to the passage in 1 Tim. 5: 8.

Helen M. M., Dalton, Kan. "He tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" is a quotation from Laurence Sterne, and is not to be found in the Bible.

GOOD WISHES FROM DISTANT FRIENDS

Rev. Christos Papadopoulos of Ordu, Turkey, a native Christian pastor, sends us this pleasant note of greeting, which may interest the young readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

DEAR FRIEND: Our little ones wanted to give you a Christmas present, so they send to you their photographs to express their gratitude for the nice pictures and good stories in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which pleased them very much. We do just the same with mamma. I renew my subscription for the year 1904.

We wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, with rich blessings from heaven.

With kind regards, CHRISTO PAPADOPOULOS.

and the Philippines, and under which, in former years, we acquired Alaska, Florida, Louisiana, and the Southwest, with this difference, however, that the latter may be defined as natural or contiguous expansion, and the former the expansion of conquest, held by many to be abnormal and dangerous. 2. It does uphold the doctrine, in theory at least, and would no doubt assert it strongly if put to the test.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Of all the Calendars that have helped to start the New Year happily, yours is the most gladsome. It will help to keep us older people young, and that Ruskin and George MacDonald independently declare to be the common trait of the world's great leaders—to retain the freshness and feeling of childhood in the years of maturity, looking into each new subject with the big-eyed wonder of a child, and undertaking each new task with a child's unclouded enthusiasm. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Washington, D. C.

A young reader in Danville, P. Q., Canada, writes:

The dance has been the church's worst enemy here. Only a short time ago, a young girl told me the only thing that kept her from joining the church was dancing. One of our brightest girls was ruined last year through this curse—only one instance among many. Why is there not a greater

Medical School. Dr. Edith Brown and I are praying for it. It could be used six months in one place, and six months in the other. What a blessing it would be! There are many cases of cancer waiting for treatment if we had the machine. Do try to send us an X-ray, that we may reach thousands of poor victims, and help mission work as never before.

Mrs. A. B. S., Oxford, Mass. What is the origin of knitting? Who knit the first garment and what was it? Eve sewing fig leaves is the first sewing I have read of. Were there earlier seamstresses?

There are many things that cannot be traced back to their original source. It is probable that the first clothing was of leaves and twigs woven or matted (i. e. sewed) together, and that, subsequently, when the skins of animals came to be worn, they were literally sewed, though, of course, with the rudest sort of materials, probably horsehair or sinews. Then came the introduction of cloth made of woven or plaited hair, but even this was long before the discovery of making cloth from the fibres of plants. The art of spinning and weaving is very ancient, but it is believed that knitting, plaiting and matting are far older. The Hebrew word in the original (Gen. 3: 7) means "to plait," or "to connect," and "girdles" is the more accurate translation of the word that follows, which our translators have rendered "aprons." In the East, baskets, dishes, and even um-

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

PRESIDENT MARY MILLS PATRICK, PH. D.

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS OF THE AMERICAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, CONSTANTINOPLE

DEAN FLORENCE A. FENDHAM, B.D.

Our Woman's College in the Sultan's Capital

THE STORY OF AN EXPERIMENT IN CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN THE ORIENT, AND ITS FAR-REACHING RESULTS

FEW American women abroad can point to an experience as varied and unique as that of Miss Mary Mills Patrick, who, after a long stay in the Sultan's dominions, is now here on a "home visit"—her first furlough in many years. Miss Patrick is the President of the American College for Women in Constantinople. She is a bright-eyed, vivacious woman, whose career as a Christian educator abroad has been one of pronounced success, notwithstanding many difficulties.

Standing on a hill on the Asiatic shore of the Bosphorus, overlooking the Sea of Marmora, the Golden Horn, the minarets and mosques of old Stamboul, and the winding waters of the Bosphorus, extending off to the north, the American College for Women commands a picturesque and beautiful outlook. The brilliant coloring of sea and sky and an air of romance to education only to be found in the Orient. "Yet," said Miss Patrick with a smile, "the education given at the American College is not fictitious, like the romances of the East, but is very real in its character. Our professors," she continued, "are from the best American colleges, and are assisted by instructors from America, England, and other lands."

"The number of students varies. At one time," she explained, "there were one hundred and sixty, the highest number we have had. Eleven Eastern nationalities are represented in the alumni, numbering one hundred and fifty, besides many hundreds of women who have studied in the college for a longer or shorter period. Our graduates are leading women, both intellectually and morally. Two graduates write for the Turkish press, and one of them is the only Mohammedan woman in the Turkish Empire who has received the degree of Bachelor of Arts. She is married to a professor in the Imperial University in Constantinople."

The influence of American education is strong in Bulgaria. Three members of the Bulgarian Parliament and one member of the Cabinet were married to girls from this college, last year.

It is an interesting sight to see these Turkish, Greek, Armenian, Hebrew, and Bulgarian girls at their task, which is essentially modern, and totally different from any training enjoyed by their ancestors. It includes music, biology, archæology, psychology, philosophy, languages, chemistry, and many other studies.

students covering their faces before going out into the streets.

Side by side in the class-rooms are the daughters of the rich and poor, of the ruling and subject nations, and of races at enmity with each other. The daughter of the Minister of War of Bulgaria; the daughters of Turkish Pashas, and perhaps a slave girl, may be seen in a group in the grounds, using the common English language. The Greek graduates show something of the grace and beauty of their ancestors of ancient times, and are, perhaps, more practical. One of them studied nursing in Boston, and is now at the head of the Princess' Hospital for Children, in Athens. An Albanian graduate is in charge of the only school for girls in Albania, in which the vernacular language is Albanian. A Hungarian graduate entered the medical department of the University of Berne. A Danish graduate is official interpreter in Copenhagen. Of the Armenian graduates, one studied nursing in the London Hospital and in Vienna, and became the best trained nurse ever known in Constantinople, and received an Order from the Sultan for her skill. Another Armenian has returned to practice medicine among her own people. The Alumnae Association has a central association in Constantinople, and branch associations in Sophia, Philippopolis, Smyrna, and the United States.

BULGARIANS AND ARMENIANS IN THE COLLEGE CLASS OF 1904

Walking about the picturesque grounds surrounding the college, one might almost think they belonged to some home college, as they are so pleasantly laid out in courts for tennis and basket-ball players. The homelike feeling is increased by the familiar sight of the "Stars and Stripes" floating from one of the buildings, which strengthens the illusion of being in a small America. This illusion is, however, quickly dissipated by the sight of the high wall which surrounds the college grounds, and by the spectacle of the Mohammedan

Board of Missions, in Boston, and a third of its support is supplied annually by this organization. Fees for board and tuition of students make up the other two-thirds of the income. The religious influence is strong and direct, although the college is strictly non-sectarian in its teachings. Nearly all prominent religious denominations in America have been, at different times, represented in its faculty. It is the highest aim of this college, to teach a practical religion of life and character

CONTINUED ON PAGE 118

The PATIENT

LINCOLN • A MEMORIAL SERMON

... By ...

Frank De Witt Talmage, D.D.

"WHAT was the most powerful address you ever heard?" I once asked my father in one of our conversations when journeying around the world. "Well," he replied, "I have listened to nearly all the great American orators of my time. I have been personally acquainted with most of them, and have spoken from the same platform with many of them. But without any doubt, the greatest address I ever heard—if it is to be judged by its electric and overwhelming, instantaneous effect—was that delivered by Henry W. Grady, of Georgia, in 1886, at the annual banquet of the New England Society. I had just finished a speech on 'The Coming American,' when Mr. Grady arose. After a few introductory remarks, he said: 'My friends, Dr. Talmage has told you that the typical American has got to come. Let me tell you that he has already come. Great types, like valuable plants, are slow to flower and fruit. But from the union of these colonists, Puritans and Cavaliers, from the straightening of their purposes, and the crossing of their blood, slow perfecting through a century, came the man who stands as the first typical American; the first who comprehended within himself all the strength and gentleness, all the majesty and grace of this republic—Abraham Lincoln.'" These words were quoted almost verbatim from memory.

The tremendous impression produced by Henry Grady's speech was not due to the fact that he was saying something that no other man had said before; but to the fact that, for the first time since the Civil War, the great leaders of the North realized that Lincoln was appreciated and honored as much south of Mason and Dixon's line as he was among the Michigan pines and upon the Illinois prairie.

Since that time, I have read almost every biography written about the personality of that man who stands second to only one, if he does not stand side by side with George Washington, in the affections of the American people. I find that Henry Watterson, of Kentucky, has as deep a reverence for Lincoln as had Charles W. Dana, or Nickolay, or Joseph Medill, or William Herndon, or David Davis, or Swett, or Speed, who knew him by personal contact. Therefore, I am sure that on this Sunday preceding the celebration of Lincoln's birthday, I shall have with me the cordial approbation of the South, as well as of the North, as I draw from his character lessons of inspiration, and pay tribute to his memory. At heart he was a true friend of the South, and I believe that his untimely death retarded the consummation of reconstruction at least a quarter of a century.

Key-note of Character

Most Lincolnian eulogists start, as Henry Watterson beautifully expressed it, by looking into a "crystal globe that, slowly turning, tells the story of his life, and they see therein a little heartbroken boy, weeping by the outstretched form of a dead mother." But this I do not intend to do. You are already familiar with the facts of that eventful life. In speaking of him to-day I would try to get the key-note of his character, and show the predominant quality which made him so great and so useful to the nation. That quality I conceive to be his patience, and I shall recall to your minds the times and the circumstances in which, by the exercise of that quality, he proved the grandeur of his nature. At the base of the gigantic statue of Faith, overlooking the Pilgrims' graves at Plymouth and the harbor where the Mayflower cast anchor, are figures symbolizing Freedom, Education, Law and Morality. But here, to-day, standing by the grave of this great man, we see the figure of sanctified Patience. We find this figure, not cut from stone or cast in iron, but made out of dust which was once living; breathing, throbbing, moving flesh and blood. As the paramount desire of Lincoln's last four years on earth, and those tumultuous years which led up to them, was to save the Union, I shall try in this brief eulogy to show how, by glorious patience, that great purpose of his life was accomplished.

In the first place, we must start with the well accepted and universally acknowledged fact that Abraham Lincoln was a man of positive characteristics. William Herndon, just after Lincoln's nomination, wrote to Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, that when Lincoln made up his mind to anything, he had "a will of iron." After the assassination in Ford's Theatre, Senator Wilson wrote a letter to Lincoln's old law partner, that he had truly analyzed Lincoln's character in reference to this one characteristic. But though Lincoln was a positive man, and had well settled convictions, he never believed that "two wrongs make one right." In order to accomplish his patriotic purposes, he was unwilling to defile the majesty of the law. He was always ready to try to change the law, but never to break it. In his methods and principles, he was neither violent nor revolutionary. He was not, as many people supposed in 1860, a wild-eyed visionary or a crazed enthusiast, who would, to reach a beneficent end, trample on vested rights and interests, regardless of justice and equity. He himself was obedient to the laws as well as a faithful executive of the law. He was a respecter of the law in private life, as well as a conservative law-maker in public life.

Respect for Law

What was Lincoln's stand, when a great Abolitionist meeting was held in Springfield, some years before the war? There, the opponents of slavery proposed by force of arms to defy the public authorities, and drive out the slave-holders from the then Territory of Kansas. When called upon for a speech, Lincoln shocked some of his very best friends, and as some thought, then and there signed his own political death-warrant. "Let there be peace!" he emphatically said. "Revolutionize through the ballot box. Your attempt, if there be such, to resist the laws of Kansas by force, is criminal and wicked; and all your feeble attempts will be follies, and end by bringing sorrow on your own heads, and ruin on the cause you would freely die to preserve." What said he in his famous speech, delivered on July 17, 1858, in answer to one of the charges made against him by Douglas? "Now, as to the Dredd Scott decision: for upon that, Senator Douglas makes his last point against me. I am opposed to that decision in a certain sense, but not in the sense in which he puts it. I say that, in so far as it decided in favor of Dredd Scott's master, and against Dredd Scott and his family, I do not propose to disturb or resist the decision. I never have proposed to do any such thing. I think that in respect for judicial authority, my humble history would not suffer in comparison with that of Judge Douglas." When some enthusiastic admirers asked him this question: "Has the Territory of Kansas a right to come into the Union, a slave State, if the people wish?" Lincoln said: "Yes. By the national law it has a right which you cannot take away, unless, by national legislation you change that law." In all the fifty-six years of Lincoln's life, both as a public office-holder and as a private citizen, you cannot put your finger upon one act where he was an advocate of violation of the law. He was patient in his belief that moral right would ultimately become legal right.

On the approaching anniversary of this great American's birth, let us learn one of the greatest lessons of his life. Even amid the injustices and the weaknesses of the law, let us bow before and recognize the majesty of the law. Because in some municipalities the citizens may be terrorized every winter by "hold-up" men, who walk around at night shooting down innocent pedestrians in cold blood, that is no reason why, in order to extirpate them, we ourselves should become criminals. Because Alexander of Serbia was a bad man, that does not place the stamp of respectability upon those who, by regicide, proved they were as lawless as their detested king. Always obey the law. If it be wrong, then make the law right, but never defile the majesty of the law.

Although Abraham Lincoln was a man of positive characteristics, yet he was patient, in the fact that he was ready to keep step with the march of the common people. He never for one moment left the path of rectitude and honor. He was not a foolish color-bearer, leaving the ranks of his fellow-soldiers, and plunging far ahead of the lines, thereby courting death and annihilation. As the national standard-bearer, he was ready, if necessary, to "mark time," so that the common people could catch up with him, that all might advance in line.

Trying to Avoid War

All things may be lawful, but all things are not expedient. What did he do after he had delivered his first inaugural address? Did he do anything to antagonize the Southern leaders and people, as some rash statesmen would have had him do? No, that was not his way. He had "malice towards none, and charity for all." He bided his time, though in every town, village and city he was called a coward. If possible, he wanted to win the Southern leaders back by love and kindness. He knew that hate and Billingsgate and never won a willing subject. He was patient. His patience was expressed over fully in the words he once spoke to Alexander H. Stephens, at the memorable conference at Hampton Roads, with the Southern commissioners. "Stephens," he said, "let me write 'I am your brother' at the top of that page, and you may write 'be ye also patient' on the other side, whatever else you please."

TEXT:

JAMES 5: 8:

"Be ye also patient"

To placate the Southern leaders was one reason for delay. But there was still another reason why he was patient. There were scores and hundreds and thousands of men at the North, as well as the South, who believed that as the original Southern States came into the Union of their own accord, they had, therefore, a right to leave of their own accord. As Lincoln, in his quaint language, put the "popular sovereignty" issue, "They believed that the big kettle of the United States Government could be squeezed into the little kettle of State Rights." Horace Greeley believed this; Wendell Phillips believed this; other mighty Northern leaders believed this. Had Abraham Lincoln, on the night of March 4, 1861, started the invasion of the South, might have had two wars on his hands. War would have been in the front of him; war in the rear of him. When he entered the White House he had two poses: First, to do anything and everything that was honorable to save the Union. Secondly, if there was to be a war, then let others take the responsibility of striking the first blow.

But if Lincoln was willing to be patient with his Northern enemies and with the South, how much more was he willing to be patient with his so-called friends upon whose arm he had a right to lean, and from whose influence he had a right to expect succor and help. The armies of Lee were attacking him in the front; the rancorous tongues of some who were his closest advisers were broadcasting their evil murmurs every where.

Forbearance to Critics

"Well," says some hearer, "why did he allow those men who were nearest to him to criticize him? Why did he not do as one of his Springfield friends suggested, 'Kick them out of office'?" That question can not be answered in a better way than by quoting the words Lincoln spoke when he said, quietly, that it was easy enough to kick a man out, but not always easy to get another man to fill his place and do as well as he did. In those few words, we realize the reason of Lincoln's patience with those so-called friends, who kept publicly criticizing their chief. He once said to Leonard Swett: "I may not have made as great a President as some other men, but I believe I have kept discordant elements together as well as anyone could. Like Abraham Lincoln, are we as Christians read to let men criticize us, and find fault with us, if only we can use them for the cause of Christ, as Lincoln was able to use Stanton and Seward, and Simon Cameron, and Hooker, and McClellan, and Thaddeus Stephens, and Greeley, and Bennett to help save the Union?"

As the twilight is the most beautiful part of the day, so we find that the mellowing sunset of Lincoln's life was even more glorious in its golden reflections when he was accomplishing the great purpose of his life—the preservation of the Union. Like Moses, old, he was able to lead his people through the wanderings in the wilderness; but, also, like Moses, was not to be allowed to plant his foot in the Promised Land. The Jordan which separated him from the Southern people in the reconstructive period, was to be a great river, whose waters came from the falling of that millions of eyes shed over his bier and by his coffin-lid. In those few days that led up to Appomattox and thereafter, we may know what fruit the patience of Lincoln would have borne. His purpose was to bind the nation's bleeding wounds and make the "Boy in Gray" and the "Boy in Blue" clasp hands as brothers.

Magnanimous to Foes

How, then, did he want to reach out the hand of conciliation? On February 5, 1865, after the outcome of the war was practically decided, he drafted a bill which, if Congress consented, $400,000,000 was to be paid on account of the liberation of the slaves. He presented this proposed bill to his Cabinet, and when they unanimously rejected it, the President, as Northington Hapgood tells us, "sadly folded it up and laid it away. As soon as Richmond had been evacuated, he got the cars and started South. He went not as a conqueror, but as a messenger of peace. In his plain simple way, he practically said to the old Virginians, 'I am your brother. I am your friend. Come, be my brother and my friend.'" When that other messenger of peace, Ulysses S. Grant, practically said to the officers and men of the disbanding Southern army, "Go home. Take your horses and plow your Go home and be our friends and comrades, instead of our foes," what was Lincoln's comment? "Good, and all right. Exactly the thing." Admiral Porter sees these as Lincoln's words, which he heard him repeat a dozen times. In the glorious hopes Lincoln had of future reconciliation, do you wonder that Henry Clay, the eloquent Georgian, was impelled to say, "That the first who comprehended within himself the strength and gentleness, all the majesty, and grace of this republic, was Abraham Lincoln." He was as true, and pure, and noble, and patient, and God-inspired an American as ever lived.

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

To-day, if I had it in my power, I would start a pilgrimage to the Springfield tomb. I would have the Southerner as well as the Northerner, Easterner, and the Westerner go there, and learn the lesson of gentle and gracious love. "What," some cynic cries, "would you have the Southerner go there as to a shrine?" Yes, my brother, I would have the Southerner go to Lincoln's tomb and kneel, the same as I would have the Northerner go to the sacred tomb of Lexington, Virginia, and bow reverently before the dust of honored, gentle Robert E. Lee. Both of these men were conquerors.

Both have subdued, and by their example will yet subdue great hosts, whose numbers, in the dim future, will be counted by the millions. Both have won, and will win their greatest victories, not by the sword, but by love. When the Civil War was closing, these two great leaders were able to say to each other, "Thou art my brother." Both are enshrined in their nation's love and admiration.

Therefore, fellow-countrymen, with the universal affections of the American people, cannot the North come with her sacred dust of Springfield, Illinois, and the South come with her sacred dust of Lexington, Virginia; then, after the North and the South with their precious burdens, have both met at the National Capitol at Washington, cannot the two different sections which once stood face to face in battle, now stand side by side and bury their two sacred dead in one grave? Then over this one grave entombing the commingling dust of the two sacred dead, cannot and will not the reconciled North and South chisel one single God-given epitaph, such as Old Kentucky placed upon her memorial shaft, erected upon the once blood-soaked field of Chickamauga to her "Boys in Gray," and to her "Boys in Blue":

"As we are united in life, and they united in death, let one monument perpetuate their deeds, and one people, forgetful of all asperities, forever hold in grateful remembrance all the glories of that terrible conflict which made all men free, and retained every star upon the nation's flag."

Abraham Lincoln's parting words to his fellow-townsmen, when for the last time he left the Springfield depot for the National Capitol, were these: "To-day I leave you. I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon Washington. Unless the great God who assisted him shall be with and aid me, I must fail; but if the same omniscient mind and Almighty arm that directed and protected him shall guide and support me, I shall not fail. I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To him I commend you all. Permit me to ask that with equal sincerity and faith you will invoke, his wisdom and guidance for me." This was the keynote of his whole gentle, loving, patient, forgiving, life: Trust in God and patient dependence upon the Divine will. To Abraham Lincoln's God I commend you; May that God forever guide us all!

THE PENNSYLVANIA MINE HORROR

TREMENDOUS detonation, a sheet of blinding flame darting from the open shaft, and a rumbling and quivering of the earth, as though an active volcano had suddenly opened, were the phenomena that startled the workers above ground, at the Harwick mine near Pittsburgh, on January 24, at 8.30 A.M. It was felt at once that the terrible disaster had occurred in the mine.

Immediately, the little mining village of Harwick was thrown into a state of panic. All the people ran toward the mine, above which hung a pall of smoke. There were nearly two hundred men in the mine. The officials sent telephone messages to Neswick and Springdale for physicians, and soon working parties were on their way from various points to the rescue.

When the attempt was made to communicate with the imprisoned miners, it met with no response. All was silence in the depths of the mine. Speaking tubes and hoists were wrecked, and it was impossible, owing to the choking "after-damp," whose suffocating fumes filled the shaft, to begin the work of rescue until the air was somewhat purified. In the afternoon, a miner named McCann was lowered with a rope. At a depth of 190 feet he found the air shaft blocked, and was drawn up again. He believed all below had perished. Accompanied by Henry Baker, another miner, and Selwyn Taylor, a mining engineer, he again descended. They crawled over debris and penetrated into zigways and passages, stumbling over many dead bodies, and fighting the deadly "after-damp" inch by inch. Many times they were driven back to the shaft for fresh air. After hours of heroic effort two miners were rescued alive.

THE CROWD AT THE MOUTH OF THE HARWICK MINE, AFTER THE EXPLOSION

Engineer Taylor, who had come from a distance to give aid to the rescuers, lost his life in this humane effort to save others. He had been down several times, and his lungs had been filled with the choking gas. After some four trips, he fell unconscious and died, a victim of the "after-damp."

When the rescue parties had settled it beyond doubt that all in the mine were dead, there was great mourning in the little village, and many painful scenes took place near the mouth of the mine, where women and children were gathered, hoping and praying for the return of the fathers, husbands and brothers whom they will never more greet in life. Nearly every family in the place had sustained the loss of one or more of its members.

F. W. Cunningham, inspector of mines, made this statement as he came from the shaft:

"I explored the mine for a quarter of a mile. I am positive that of all those who entered for work not one will be taken out alive. Scattered about are dead bodies of the miners, dead mules, wrecked cars, and tons of fallen coal and slate. It is a terrible scene. The force of the explosion was terrific. It will take days to clear away the wreckage. Until this is accomplished we will not know how many met death. There is no chance of any of the entombed men being saved."

Within twenty-four hours after the explosion, seventy-five dead bodies were recovered from the mine, all more or less mangled and some merely fragments of bodies. Heads of boys and men were literally blown off by the force of the explosion. At the bottom of the shaft lay a pile of limbs that sickened those who looked upon them. These poor victims were swept into eternity without a moment's warning.

The Allegheny Coal Company, which owns the mine, will establish a cemetery, in which to inter the bodies of the men who were killed.

AMONG THE WORKERS

THE FOURTEENTH YEAR of the Chicago Tract Society, just closed, has been the most important in the Society's history. During 1903, literature has been used in twenty-five distinct languages. The twenty missionaries employed have been able to speak thirteen of these languages. Among the Slavonic people, the work has extended into five States, all reaches from Detroit on the east to Cedar Rapids on the west. The Society has no endowments, and is deserving of generous support.

MR. JOHN JACKSON, F.R.G.S., of London, is now visiting America in the interest of the lepers of India and the East. Mr. Jackson has recently returned from a tour of 700 miles among the leper colonies and institutions throughout India. In the course of his unique experience, he studied the condition and needs of these distressed people under every possible aspect.

THE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH of the city of Baltimore, recently celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. J. Wynne Jones. Under his spiritual charge, it has grown from a small flock to be a large and influential congregation, potential and zealous in good works.

REV. ASHLEY W. CAKE, the Life-saving Station evangelist, is delivering addresses along the Atlantic Coast stations illustrative of God's work among the lighthouse and life-saving men.

EVANGELIST D. H. FITZPATRICK, of Springfield, Mo., is lately been working in South Central Missouri, with gratifying results. Ten meetings were held.

REV. F. J. SAUBER, Pastor First Presbyterian Church, Emporia, Kan., writes: "We are in the midst of the greatest revival that Emporia has ever known. Our largest auditoriums are packed and people turned away by hundreds. Men in middle life and far advanced in years are turning to God. The work is under evangelist W. E. Biederwolf and his singer, Harry Maxwell. There are six pastors in the movement."

SEVENTY-SIX NEW members were received into the Second Presbyterian Church, Pittsburg, Rev. S. Edward Young, D.D., pastor, on a recent Sabbath morning, making over 1,500 new members during the present pastorate of six years, about eighty-five per cent. of these being on profession of faith.

A REVIVAL has lately been in progress in Carthage, Ill. After the meetings proper were closed, three weeks of daily prayer-meetings and meetings of the session were held by the Presbyterian Church. On the following Sabbath the Lord's Supper was observed, and 209 new members were publicly received, 193 being on confession of faith.

THE TELEPHONE was utilized to enable a number of sick persons confined to bed, to hear the revival services at the Warrensburg, Mo., Christian Church recently. Mr. Allen Wilson was the evangelist.

EVANGELIST R. L. LAYFIELD, writes from Parsons, Kan.: "We closed successful meetings here Jan. 17. One hundred came forward and confessed their sins and acknowledged Christ as their Saviour. We have begun union meetings at Pleasanton, Kan."

REV. TILMAN HOBSON, evangelist, and Professor and Mrs. George E. Slawson, singers from the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, are associated with the Presbyterians of Oakland, Calif., in their special effort in Evangelism. Their recent effort in the Centennial Presbyterian Church, Oakland, was crowned with success. Many were persuaded to forsake sin and confess Christ.

PRESIDENT BEERS, of Seattle Seminary, Seattle Wash., which has trained and sent many efficient workers to the home and foreign mission fields, is now busied with plans for a new administration building, to cost $30,000 for erection and furnishing. This extension is rendered necessary by the growth of the seminary.

SINCE DR. M. A. MATTHEWS took charge of the First Presbyterian Church of Seattle, two years ago, he has received 1,000 new members; two-thirds of these on profession. The church has built two mission churches and established a Chinese Mission in the city. Every department of the work is growing, and each service witnesses conversions.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND has been holding a week's meeting in Marietta, O. It was stated by an old resident at one of the services, that when Mr. Hammond was here twenty-six years ago, nearly a thousand professed conversion. Some of the best workers in the meetings now, were converted then. About two hundred have signed the covenant cards.

REV. MARCO N. POPOFF, our Special Commissioner to Macedonia, will send regular weekly letters to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD containing full accounts of the progress of the relief work.

A CORNER IN THE COLLEGE LIBRARY

There is an active department of Bible study, and religious services are held every Sunday. There is, besides, a flourishing Young Women's Christian Association, whose members are zealous in the efforts to do good.

Pere Hyacinthe, on visiting Constantinople, said that while he was dreaming of a union of the nations of the East, this college on the Bosphorus was accomplishing his dream. The college is the direct outcome of one woman's thought and effort, to have established in the Far East a school where the Oriental woman would at least have an opportunity to gain an education.

Mrs. Bowker, who was at that time president of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions in Boston, was so thoroughly in earnest in the matter, that a school was established under the auspices of this board. This was in 1871, and the school was begun as a high school, and remained so till 1890, when the institution became a college.

The young women are very zealous in their studies, and some of them make great sacrifices in order to obtain an education. As soon as these Eastern girls arrive at a marriageable age, their parents are much more anxious that they should make sure of husbands than that they should finish their education, so that when a girl goes home for the long summer vacation, it is a question whether she will ever return to the college. "There was the case of Zulika K. She was a very bright girl," said Miss Patrick, "and a very pretty girl. When she went home for the long vacation, we had a feeling that perhaps she would be persuaded into matrimony before she could return, and sure enough, within a few weeks, we heard of her engagement. We were sorry, of course, but could do nothing in the matter. We were very much surprised, when school opened, to find that the bride-to-be had come to the conclusion that she would rather finish her college course than get married."

Our Woman's College in the Sultan's Capital

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 115

"What arguments she brought to bear upon her family, we do not know. The fact that the would-be bridegroom was old, and that he was not at all pleasing, may have had something to do with her own decision in the matter."

Some of the girls help in the household duties—sweeping, dusting, clearing, setting tables, and serving at meals, and this partly pays for their tuition; but others are constantly begging for a chance to work for their education. "We are obliged," said President Patrick, "to turn them away, much as we regret to do so, and it is then that we wish we had an endowment fund."

"Do the Mohammedan students go about the streets veiled from choice?"

"Oh, no. They are very anxious to wear hats, but

TYPES OF THE STUDENTS IN THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE

ENTRANCE GATEWAY TO THE WOMAN'S COLLEGE

their religion forbids them to go upon the streets without the veil, and no matter what their personal choice or belief might be, they would not dare to disregard this law."

The Turkish government does not appear to be averse to this institution of learning, as the college has been exempt from taxes.

"This may be accounted for, possibly," said Miss Patrick, "by the fact that we try not to be aggressive in our methods, and thus do not offend the Turkish authorities."

President Patrick explains that the building now used for the preparatory department is an old Turkish house, which does not even protect the students from the rain and snow. A new one is greatly needed, and she hopes to find friends in America who are sufficiently interested in the work to assist in erecting a new building. Miss Patrick, who is stopping at No. 23 West Forty-fourth street, New York City, will be glad to answer any inquiries from interested readers, and to give such further information concerning the Women's College in Constantinople as may be desired.

A SONG PRAYER-MEETING ON A MAN-OF-WAR

ON board of United States war vessels, it is not easy to make any kind of public religious meeting successful. No worker who has ever tried to hold meetings on board—in the afternoon, for instance—will fail to appreciate this fact. If the evening be set apart for any kind of meeting, the chaplain may have to omit dinner in order to finish before "hammocks" (when the men are supposed to turn in for the night). He must get permission, in time to have the benches (for pews) spread; he must find a volunteer to play, and, often, an instrument to play upon, and books or leaflets for the congregation; and, as there are no newspapers published aboard to advertise in, the community must needs be apprised of the service by word of mouth or written notices, and induced to come, by whatever means he can devise.

READY TO SOUND CHURCH CALL ON BATTLESHIP

Claptrap methods will not attract the men long. The man-o-war's-man likes his coffee and his religion strong. Yet I find there are many legitimate ways of making the services attractive to him, even the prayer-meetings. Now, an ordinary prayer-meeting would not take with the men at all; because not one in two hundred of them have ever prayed in public. Few have made profession of faith. The only way in which any number of them can be led to take part in any service, is to have it one in which all can act together. I find a large number aboard who like to sing; but not one of them could be induced to sing a sacred solo, however well he might know the music.

But, after all, it is not to be regretted that these things are so, as they point the way to some manner of service in which all can participate, which appears better than being led entirely by a few, who alone take any part in the exercises. So I have always encouraged song services, both religious and secular, and on many occasions aboard ship I have held successful prayer-meetings by using hymns for the prayers. Many hymns suitable to such a purpose readily suggested themselves to me. In fact, I found many of them model prayers, often eloquent and touching; and, as a rule, the music was appropriate. Having selected a dozen suitable hymns, the next question was that of the proper attitude. After several trials, the usual method was to open standing; sing the next prayer seated (bowing), and the next kneeling; then two prayers seated, one standing, and again kneeling, and so on throughout. Occasionally, while standing, we smote our breasts, extended the right hand upward, or folded the hands under the book, all looking upward. I must say, this made an impressive and very solemn service. And one important thing about it was that, aside from the fact of their taking part in the service, they kept coming in increasing numbers—sometimes as many as two hundred at a meeting, which is a remarkable proportion, out of a possible three hundred. There is always a third of the crew occupied.

At the opening there would be a few remarks, as attractive as possible, before the first prayer was sung, which might be such a hymn as, "Now, from the altar of our hearts." Then would follow such devotional selections as,

When storms around me sweeping,
When lone my watch I'm keeping,
'Mid fires of evil falling,
'Mid tempters' voices calling,
Remember me, O Mighty One!
Remember me, O Mighty One!

"Softly now, the light of day"; "My Faith Looks up to Thee"; "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me"; "Nearer, my God, to Thee"; "Lead, Kindly Light"; "Abide With Me"; "Sun of My Soul"; "More Love to Thee, O Christ"; "Saviour, breathe an evening blessing," etc.

Once I used as a benediction, "God be with you, till we meet again." It is desirable to intersperse a few anecdotes or remarks suitable to the occasion; and, usually, I have prepared a ten-minute talk for these meetings.

Of course, there must not be the slightest attempt on these occasions to teach singing, else the singers will be timid or listless, and will soon desert the meeting. All must appear free and unconstrained, and no notice should be taken of mistakes, except to discourage dragging behind. I do not know whether this plan original, nor how it would take ashore, but this is how we have often sung prayer-meeting successfully on board man-of-war afloat.

BOW OF BATTLESHIP "MASSACHUSETTS" DURING A STORM

C. Q. WRIGHT,
Chaplain U. S. Navy

An Artistic Gem

The Butterfly Calendar is an artistic gem, and is much admired and praised by every member of the family. It is in every way worthy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
Brush Creek, Tenn.

JAMES M. W.

Perfect Satisfaction

I received your beautiful Butterfly Calendar, and am very much pleased with it; it gives me and every one who has seen it perfect satisfaction.
Olyphant, Pa.

J. M. COLEMAN.

Delighted with the Premiums

I received your beautiful Calendar. We are so delighted that words cannot express my gratitude to you for sending such beautiful premiums.

MRS. C. A. ACKERSON.

ALL EAGER TO HELP MACEDONIA

Christian America's Gifts Aid the Missionaries in Feeding and Clothing the Ragged Refugees

A GLEAM of hope and cheer has lighted up the darkness of the bleak Macedonian midwinter. In a hundred different localities between Monastir and the Bulgarian border, devoted missionaries and native pastors are now energetically at work relieving the distress of the refugees, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and giving shelter and comfort to the women and the tender little children. This Christlike work of benevolence—which has been made possible by the generous gifts of God's people in different lands, our own among the number, is apparently destined to save many thousands of precious lives.

During the week, letters have been received from several of the American missionaries in Macedonia, who are distributing the relief supplied by the fund, contributed by readers of this journal. These letters now take a more cheerful tone, and show the confidence of the writers that the American people, with their characteristic generosity, will carry through the life-saving work they have so well begun.

From Samokov, under date of Jan. 15, Missionary L. F. Ostrander writes as follows:

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Your letter of Dec. 29, reached me day before yesterday. I wanted to answer it the same day, but was kept busy until ten o'clock at night helping to distribute clothing to the refugees.

The refugees in and around this city, come almost exclusively from the district known as the Razlog, a part of northern Macedonia, just across the boundary, twenty-five miles south of us. They have been here since the first of October. While the number in this city has varied somewhat, it has never gone below 800, and at present is between 900 and 1,000. Of these, about 300 are children, and there are probably twice as many women as men. As soon as the first unfortunate fugitives arrived, a representative local committee was organized, and measures were set in motion to provide for the needs of the sufferers. From the very beginning, food has been furnished them every day, bread and soup and sometimes meat. The secretary of the local committee, Mr. Zaharieff, tells me that they have an allowance from the Central Committee of Sofia, of about $600 a month for the food of those here in Samokov, and that they will thus be able to give a satisfactory amount of food right through the winter. Second-hand clothing was at once collected and given out, and as soon as possible material bought and garments made, so that many padded jackets, shirts, underwear, stockings and skin sandals have been distributed. As to the matter of living quarters, those in Samokov are well provided for. Up to a year ago, the Bulgarian Orthodox Theological Seminary was located here, but then it was removed to Sofia, and its large buildings stood vacant. These are now full of refugees, and those who cannot find quarters there, are distributed about in vacant houses or among the people of the city. The forests near Samokov furnish fuel, and, as stoves are provided, the problem of warmth is not as great as it might easily be, and doubtless is, in other places. Before the arrival of any of the refugees, but in anticipation of their coming, a committee from the Protestant community was appointed to devise means and methods for relief work. All funds that have come through missionary channels for Samokov have been used under the supervision and management of this committee, assisted by the very valuable services of Mrs. R. Georgieva in connection with work for women. It has tried as far as possible to work in co-operation with the other local committee and to supplement its work. This is facilitated by the method of distribution employed. Every family is furnished with a card giving the name and the number of men, women and children. On one side the daily rations of food are checked off, and on the other is written whatever is given in the way of clothing, bedding, etc. Our committee gives nothing to those who have no cards, thus avoiding the danger of overlapping, and always writes on the cards the articles it gives, making a separate record for the Central Committee and for the information of donors.

Thanks to the generous and efficient provision of the Bulgarian authorities, the committee has not found it necessary to furnish food. It has, therefore, turned its attention to bedding and clothing. Among the nine hundred in Samokov and the six hundred in Banya, Kostenets and Ichtman, towns to the east of Samokov, it has distributed one hundred and ten burlap ticks for straw beds. It has prepared thick, warm quilts and given them out to the number of two hundred and thirty-five in the same places. These quilts are seven by six feet, are made of unbleached muslin and each contains about seven pounds of carded wool. Following our example, the other local committee also made up a large number of these quilts, so that the need of covering is pretty well supplied. For the old, the sick, and those suffering from Turkish beatings, thirty sheepskin coats, worn with the fleece inside, have been provided, and more are now being made. Twenty-seven stoves have gone to Banya and Kostenets, and in addition to these things numerous articles in the way of socks, stockings, shoes made of heavy woolen cloth, shirts and children's clothing have found their way to those most needing them. The last sum of money available for the use of the committee, and including part of the $1,000 sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has been invested entirely in the preparation of outer garments. One hundred and twenty-six suits of men's clothes are already finished, one hundred complete dresses for women are being made, fifty suits for boys and fifty dresses for girls.

REFUGEE WOMEN AT SAMOKOV

These clothes are not only useful, but handsome as well. From the local factory we are able to secure at very reasonable figures heavy, serviceable woolen cloth such as is much used for clothing here, and from this men's suits, consisting of native trousers and a jacket, have been made, at a cost in no case exceeding $3 a suit. These suits are made in three sizes. The women's skirts and the girls' clothes are being made from products of the Samokov home looms, while the jackets of the women are of factory material. The average cost of these suits, all finished, is about $2.50 and $1.75, respectively. In some cases the cut garments are given out to the women to sew for themselves, thus serving the double purpose of giving them something useful to do and saving us the cost of sewing.

We are very grateful, indeed, that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and other kind-hearted friends have so generously given us the opportunity to help these poor people, and we wish they could see for themselves how much good their money is doing. Last December, when we were distributing the quilts, during some very cold weather, one poor woman came trembling from head to foot, from the cold. As she presented her card she said, "Oh, oh! How shall we ever survive this winter? Where we live, we don't have such cold." We spoke to her, reassuringly, and gladly gave her something that would help her to answer her question. The blessings that have been called down upon our heads have been numerous and fervent. The delight of many of the men in their new clothes was touching to see. It was New Year's eve when we distributed about fifty suits. Many of the men were in rags and they could hardly restrain themselves, as they tried on the jackets and measured the pantaloons. The New Year's holiday was to have a different meaning for them, and the next day I met many of them on the streets wearing their new clothes with bright and smiling faces. And every time I see one of our sheepskin coats, I cannot but be grateful for the solid comfort that I know it is giving to its wearer.

As to the present needs, the thing that seems to be most necessary is outer garments. These people fled with only what they wore, and have been unable to procure other clothing. Practically every one of these people needs new clothing, and if we had $1,200 more, we could invest that amount very profitably in that line.

I shall not say anything just now in regard to the needs in the spring, if anything is to be done to enable these people to resume life, either in Bulgaria or in Macedonia, on a self-supporting basis. You may be sure that any money sent us will be gratefully, carefully and prayerfully used.

Once more thanking you on behalf of these unfortunate people here in Bulgaria and in Macedonia, whose distress you are doing so much to relieve, I remain very sincerely yours, LEROY F. OSTRANDER.

From Monastir (Jan. 18), Dr. Lewis Bond writes that relief work is proceeding with regularity. "In addition to the $1,000 previously reported, I now take delight in recording that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has forwarded $5,000 to my credit and $2,000 to credit of Mr. Haskell, at Salonica." (Here the writer refers to "the cultivation of real Christian benevolence," as illustrated by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD).

"Cold weather has set in, and the calls for relief are increasing. My dooryard gets fairly choked up with applicants. A man is here now pleading for flour. Was an innkeeper. The khan was burned, but he escaped from the flames through a shower of Turkish bullets. He has four bad bullet scars on his body. Expectant women come to ask for baby gear. These I refer promptly to my good wife, who usually warms them up with hot coffee before bringing out the diminutive swaddling suits, the materials of which are provided by Miss Muriel White's fund. Mrs. Bond spends one whole day a week in cutting out these garments, and her sewing circle meet for half a day at the chapel, while a few women do sewing at their homes, all without pay, of course. And here is a Jewess, whose husband, a village storekeeper, was carried off by an insurgent band and killed, after the store had been destroyed."

Letters have been received from Missionary Lewis Bond at Monastir, and Missionary G. D. Marsh of Philippopolis, concerning the remittances recently forwarded to them by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and expressing profound gratitude for the opportunity of relieving much suffering.

Mr. Marsh writes: "Bourgas, on the Black Sea, is the centre to which thousands of refugees came last fall, and they are now placed in many villages throughout this region. I expect to use some of the $2,000 sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the Adrianople region. It will be used carefully, efficiently and effectively."

All contributions should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made to the subscription manager, at the editorial office, 100 Broadway, New York.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date. It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

The Better Way

DURING the long drawn-out negotiations between Russia and Japan, we have heard often of Russian interests, and Japanese interests, and incidentally of British and American rights and interests. If any of those interests are menaced by the action of another Power, it seems to be considered a matter of course that the nation affected should prepare for war. Statesmen appear to think that the only way to make their several governments respected, is to fight, or to threaten to fight, for their rights. Therefore, the army and the navy and the fighting apparatus must be kept ready for use.

Another view of a nation's interests, is that brought to the front by the statements, published last week, of the comparative figures of exports and imports. It appears that last year our exports were over forty million dollars more than those of Great Britain, and more than two hundred millions larger than those of Germany. In the same period, our imports were nearly a thousand millions, and the balance of exports over imports was nearly five hundred millions. Thus, what are called our material interests, were in a most gratifying condition.

Nearly nineteen centuries have passed since Christ went about preaching and proclaiming the heavenly message of peace and good-will and showing what were the real interests of men. Yet still our boast is in our wealth and prosperity, and our confidence, like that of other nations, is in our power to hold our own in the world. If the inhabitants of some other world, in which Christ's principles are applied, can see what is going on in the earth, what must they think of us? Our conduct must seem to them much like that at which we smile when we witness it in dog-kennels. Every dog struggling for the bone he wants, and snarling and biting his neighbor if he cannot get it. What would happen if our prayer, "Thy kingdom come," was to be answered? What a change there would be in our national systems, our ideas of national interests! The measure of national greatness then, would not be the wealth or prosperity of a nation, or its fighting capacity, but in the righteousness of its people and in the beneficence of their influence on the world. What a glorious thing it would be, if some Government were to set itself to apply Christ's principles to its national policy! That would be something unique in history. It would cease its preparations for war; it would not selfishly struggle for the commerce of the world; its concern would be for the welfare of its people; it would strive to eliminate vice and misery from its borders; it would grapple with the ills of poverty, and take care that wherever there was sickness or want, there were ready means of relief. The man across the border would no longer be a foe or a rival because he happened to be an Englishman or a Russian or a German, but a brother, whose welfare would be sought as solicitously as our own. The spectacle of a Government so employed and a nation so inspired might become infectious. Others might follow its example, until at last God's "will might be done on earth as it is in heaven."

A Good Old Custom

SOME of the older readers of this paper, remember that when they were children, a certain family custom obtained in the old home. In those days, as a matter of course, the children went to church. Equally as a matter of course, when the children came home, they had to repeat the text, and sometimes they were asked for the heads of the sermon. At present, a good many grown people know no more about the sermon to which they have listened than they do about the boundary lines of Kamschatka. As for the text, it makes no impression on their minds at all, and they look vaguely about in amazement when asked to repeat it. What they are thinking about during the sermon is a mystery; but certainly the habit of trained attention, which is a priceless mental discipline, has gone from the majority of those who attend church to-day. Let a man go to a political meeting, and he comes home full of the address to which he has listened. He recounts its main points with joy, and dwells upon all the telling parts, especially where they have coincided with his views, with pride.

It is the same with a lecture. Those who attend a literary lecture seldom fail to get the gist of it fixed in their minds.

Why should it be otherwise in church? Sermons are worth hearing, and the preacher has a right to the same attention that any other speaker expects and receives. Perhaps the children of to-day would not thank any one for compelling them to bring home the text and as much as they can remember of the sermon, yet in days to come they will be grateful enough for this excellent training.

A Hero of the Mine

AMID the gloom and sorrow of the awful mining disaster at Harwick, Pa., by which nearly two hundred workmen lost their lives, there was one incident that will long be remembered throughout the coal region with a thrill of admiration. Selwyn Taylor, a mining expert, who had plotted the Harwick mine, and knew its subterranean passages, when informed of the explosion and the peril of the men, came at once from a distance to direct the work of rescue. With a few brave companions—for volunteers were scarce in the face of such deadly peril—he worked at the shaft all night long, making trips up and down in a rudely rigged bucket, for the regular hoisting apparatus was destroyed. They searched the blockaded passages, hoping to find some miners still alive, but were again and again forced through exhaustion to return. At last, two poor fellows were found still breathing. They were quickly taken up to the surface, and Selwyn Taylor with others, returned to the choking atmosphere of the mine and searched on. Then there came a moment when he could no longer resist the nauseating, suffocating fumes, and he fell unconscious. On being drawn up in the bucket, he opened his eyes a moment, gasped and expired.

This heroic soul, who gave his life for others, and who is now regarded by the miners as a martyr, was one of the leading men in his profession. His skill as an expert had brought him wealth and honor. He had a beautiful home and a loving wife. Life held much for him that was precious. Yet, when the call came, though knowing the danger probably better than any one else, he did not hesitate, but went down into that pit of death without a tremor. Although only two lives were saved as the result of his sacrifice, his deed of great-hearted heroism was as noble as though he had saved all.

"The fittest place for man to die is where he dies for man," and the example of Selwyn Taylor's splendid courage and devotion to duty, was the Christlike crown of a noble career. All honor to his name, and may the memory of his brave self-sacrifice long be cherished by the miners of Pennsylvania!

Two Men

LIKE opportunity came to two men. Both were servants to prophets. The one turned out like his master, only more so, and wrought double the number of his miracles. The other turned out a leper.

Elisha and Gehazi.

The first grew hungry for God, and got him; the second grew hungry for gold, and lost it.

Water on a tree will make it grow; but on a post, will help to rot it.

Two men will read this—one will go to the pit, the other to the pulpit. Two men hear a sermon—one grows bigger by it, the other grows less. For truth will do one of two things when poured out—it will expand or contract. The sun pulls an oak out of an acorn, but it dries up a pool.

I lately visited a church, where one of its members had been elected to a high post of honor; trust and esteem were his in abundance. Another, who sat in the pew ahead of him, is in jail. They both heard the same sermons, read the same ritual, and said the Lord's Prayer together.

I saw two bulbs in a florist's window: both looked like onions. Plant one, and it will grow a lily, beautiful and fragrant; plant the other, and it will grow—an onion, for that is what it is.

We are what we are. Put Christ in a heart and he will grow out a Christian. Put sin in a heart and it will grow out like Satan.

C. H. YATMAN.

Exceeds Expectations

Crown Encyclopedia premium bears examination, and fully equals your announcement. It exceeds my expectations.

Minneapolis, Minn.

L. B. FIELD.

A PRODIGAL'S RETURN

IN dealing with the multitude of wandering prodigals who enter the Bowery Mission, the workers find it the next best thing, after getting a man to make peace with God, is to get him to reopen communication with his friends at home. It is a very sad and pathetic fact, with many of these poor men, there are no dear ones to write to. Scores of them are absolutely alone in the world, but the majority are not only themselves suffering the consequences of their sins and failures, but they are causing inexpressible anxiety to those who love them, by neglecting to inform them where they are.

A placard hangs upon the wall of the Mission, in a place where it is likely to catch the eye of every man that enters, which reads:

HOW LONG IS IT SINCE YOU WROTE HOME TO YOUR FOLKS?

If you want to write, you can have pen, ink, paper and postage stamps on application.

This reminder is often sufficient. In the after-meetings of the Mission, the workers are dealing personally with the men, and after the subject of the soul's needs has been gotten into, such questions as these are addressed to the seekers:

"Are your folks living?"

"Do they know where you are?"

"How long is it since you have written to them?"

"Don't you think you ought to write at once?"

Very often the suggestion is acted upon immediately.

A few days ago, a young man entered the Mission, holding a letter in his hand. He asked that it might be mailed for him. This letter was to his parents. He had been away from home seven years, and been a soldier in the Philippines, Cuba and other places, and he was in destitute circumstances. Since his discharge from the army, he had been unsuccessful in obtaining employment; his clothes had become shabby, and he had grown discouraged; yet he bore himself with a considerable amount of pride and manliness. He declared that this letter was to tell his folks he was still alive, but that he had made up his mind not to return home, unless he could do so with as respectable an appearance as he had when he left.

The letter was despatched, and caused a wonderful flutter of excitement and interest in the family, at New Haven, Conn. The boy had asked that he might have the reply addressed to the care of the Bowery Mission. But the next day that he was alive and in need, made the loved ones at home feel that they could not wait to reply by mail. The father was busy at work and could not be spared; but a young brother was despatched immediately, and within an hour or two he was at the Mission, seeking his brother. The young man had scarcely expected such a prompt response to his letter, and did not call for the answer during that day; so after waiting in the Mission for several hours, the young brother returned to his home in New Haven.

During his tarrying in the Mission that day, however, he had learned a great deal about its work, and became especially interested in Dr. Klopsch's plan of giving an early breakfast to destitute men during the cold weather. On his return home, the story of the wonderful place was eagerly related, and the father at once said, "Why, my boy is in destitute condition, and he is very likely to be one of those breakfast guests." So, denying himself of his night's rest, he started off to the city. It was not long before he found his way down to the Mission, and saw one of the most pathetic sights his eyes had ever looked upon—that long line of shivering men, waiting for the Mission doors to open at one o'clock in the morning. He explained his mission to the police officer, who suggested that he take his stand and scan each face as the men entered the breakfast-room.

The policeman's heart was touched by the father's story, and he, calling Mr. Long, the assistant superintendent, and one side, introduced the father to him.

Just at that moment Dr. Klopsch appeared. He had come to personally supervise the distribution of the early breakfast. He was interested in the father's story, and waited until the breakfast was disposed of, in the hope of finding the boy. They were all disappointed. He was not there.

But the Bowery Mission is in close touch with all the lodging-houses in this notorious thoroughfare, and Dr. Klopsch gave instructions that immediate search be made for the boy. Within an hour or two the search was successful. The lost was found. The father's heart was gladdened, and an early Sunday morning train took father and son safely to the home in New Haven. There is little doubt that, on that day, it was one of the happiest homes in the United States.

Like the father in the parable, we can well imagine this bluff, hearty sailor father saying, as he entered the home arm and arm with his boy, "It is meet that we should make merry, and be glad, for this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found."

J. G. HALLIMOND, Superintendent.

A Highly Pleased Subscriber

I received my premium, How I Worked My Way Around the World, and the Calendar also; I am more than pleased with both of them. I have been taking THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for several years. I enjoy reading it very much indeed.

Winchester, Va.,

FANNIE RANDALL.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Norwegians in Peril

FIRE has devastated the beautiful and thriving town of Aalesund, in Norway. The flames broke out soon after midnight on January 23, when nearly

HON. W. W. THOMAS, JR.
United States Minister to Norway and Sweden.

the inhabitants were locked in slumbers. A high wind was blowing at the time, and the conflagration quickly spread from one building to another, until the whole town was destroyed. Churches, school-houses and stores alike were consumed, and even three steamers which were in the harbor were burned. Several other vessels escaped by being sunk to save them from the devastating element. The people first heroically fought the fire, but finding that useless, attempted to save some of their effects. Finally, however, that effort had to be abandoned, and every one fled for safety. So far as is known at present, only two persons perished in the flames. The refugees congregated in the open fields, in a driving storm of wind and rain. They were poorly clad in garments hastily patched up in the emergency, and they were wholly without food or shelter. It was a terrible plight, and most of them had lost everything they possessed. Fully eight thousand persons were in danger of death from starvation and exposure. News of the emergency came from our Minister at Stockholm, the Hon. W. W. Thomas, Jr., who, besides being a gentleman of remarkable ability, courteous and genial to travelers, Americans, and exceedingly popular with Court and people in Norway and Sweden, is a man of quick sympathy with people in trouble. His report of the urgent need received prompt response from the proprietor of this journal. Dr. Klopsch immediately cabled ten thousand kroner (about $2,700) to him to relieve the suffering people. Mr. Thomas was deeply touched by the gift, which was doubly valuable by its timeliness, and gladly undertook to forward it to the poor, shivering, destitute people. We are glad to learn that a public subscription has been opened for their benefit with the names of King Oscar and Queen Sophia at the head, and substantial contributions. At the suggestion of Emperor William, of Germany, the Hamburg-American Line has dispatched one of its steamers, laden with clothing, bedding, blankets and medicine, to the scene of suffering. On board are also three doctors and twelve nurses. We may, therefore, hope that all danger from hunger and cold is by this time averted. As, however, the loss by the fire is estimated by the most conservative authorities, at five million dollars, scarcely any of it covered by insurance, the calamity must mean ruin to many, who will now have to begin life over again. We may hope that among a people so proverbially religious as the Norwegians, there may be many of the sufferers whose real treasure is untouched by the fire.

Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt (Matt. 6: 20).

Pain Made Pleasant

In an interview with a leading physician of New Orleans, published in the Times Democrat, the doctor averred his belief that certain patients, while under anæsthetics, actually feel pain though they do not suffer from it. "Ether and some other anæsthetics," he said, "when administered to certain patients, prevent suffering, without destroying the consciousness of pain. That sounds like a paradox, and is somewhat difficult to explain without becoming more paradoxical still. The effect of the anæsthetic, in the cases to which I refer, is to render pain pleasant. While apparently insensible, the patient is fully conscious of everything that is going on, and the nerves respond as readily as ever, but instead of producing physical discomfort, the effect is exactly the reverse. I have encountered several anomalies of that kind." The doctor could not explain

Church. The excavation is necessarily very deep, and as it is in sandy soil, there is grave danger to the grand old sanctuary. The foundation of the tower, on which the spire rests, is only nine and a half feet below the surface; if, therefore, a shifting of the soil should be caused by the excavation for the subway, the beautiful spire, now a noted landmark, might fall, and with it the eastern wall of the church. The Chief Engineer of the subway, on learning the facts, ordered all work on that part of the tunnel stopped, until measures could be taken to prevent any movement of the soil. Every citizen, and many in other sections who know and admire the famous edifice, will be glad to learn that safeguards, perfectly adequate, will be taken before the work on the subway is resumed. With its many associations with our national history, the church could not be injured without a sense of public loss. Happily for us, the real church of Christ, of which the church edifices are only the symbols, can never be endangered by any work of man, for we have Christ's own assurance of its stability.

Upon this rock, I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it (Matt. 16: 18).

To Fight a Trust

Reports were in circulation recently, that an attempt was being made to form a trust to raise the price of the antitoxin, which has proved a successful remedy for some forms of diphtheria. Only two or three of the largest medicine houses in

Of all the schemes set on foot to raise the prices of things the people need, this is one of the most despicable. When the child of a poor man is smitten with this dread disease, it would be an outrage if the price of the remedy for it was more than he could pay. So conscienceless are some people where there is a chance to make money, that the very remedy for sin might have been reserved for the rich only, if the message that it is free had not come from heaven itself.

Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely (Rev. 22: 17).

A Stunted Skyscraper

A building in New York City recently erected, is a specimen of high ambitions which have been diminished by the fears of loss. A wealthy insurance company purchased, some time ago, at a great price, a site in one of the busiest streets of the city. It proposed to erect upon it a building twenty-five stories high, to be let out in offices. Soon afterwards plans for the edifice were filed, and work of putting down the caissons to carry the tall structure was begun. Immense steel girders and columns went up rapidly, the exterior walls were started, and everything proceeded in regular order until two weeks ago, when passers-by were somewhat mystified to see a cornice put in place above the sixth floor to mark the building's completion. The trouble was caused by the lessees of offices in the next building, whose windows overlook the site of the proposed structure. They claimed that they had been led to take the offices largely owing to their fine supply of natural light, and that their leases entitled them to this privilege. As the insurance company owned that building, too, it was in a dilemma. If some other corporation had owned it, there would probably have been a long fight in the Courts as to the right of people to light; but the company could not afford to lose their own tenants, so the new building stopped at the sixth storey. They have learned by experience the truth of the wise king's warning:

He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house (Prov. 15: 27).

BRIEF NOTES

The Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union, being the same as the Sunday School Lesson for the week, the article on the Topic is omitted. Members of those societies will find suggestions for their use on pages 98 and 131 of this issue.

Japan has a college for women. It is only two years since it was founded, but its students now number more than eight hundred, drawn from all parts of the empire.

The American College for girls at Erzeroum, Turkey, has been burned. It is believed that it was done by Turkish incendiaries. The building was completed only last year.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has undertaken to deliver a series of Bible lectures, under the auspices of the London Young Men's Christian Association.

The oldest Temperance pledge known to be in existence, since the old Testament Order of Rechabites, is one dated 1637. It is in the possession of a minister at Kettering, England. The signer left himself a loophole by writing under it, "except that necessity do require it."

A London fog brings profit to the gas companies. The extra gas consumed in the stores and offices on a single foggy day, costs $40,000.

An "Industrial Missions Association" has been formed in New York, with the idea of inaugurating and developing self-supporting industrial missions all over the world. The secretary of the association is Mr. Henry W. Fry, 105 East Twenty-second street, and its advisory council includes the Rev. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, the Rev. Dr. J. L. Barton, Mr. John W. Wood, and Mr. Robert E. Speer.

AALESUND, NORWAY, RECENTLY DEVASTATED BY FIRE

the phenomenon, but when it occurs in the spiritual experience there is no difficulty in understanding it.

We glory in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts (Rom. 5: 3).

Trinity Spire Menaced

The Rapid Transit Commission in New York City, at a recent meeting, received a warning from the Trustees of the famous church of Old Trinity, which stands at the head of Wall Street. The work on the subway with its connection with the tunnel under the East River, which is to connect Manhattan with Brooklyn, has now reached Broadway, in front of Trinity the country have a formula and plant for its manufacture in commercial quantities, and up to the present time, they have practically supplied the entire country with the exception of New York City, where the Health Department, a couple of years ago, established a plant of its own, principally for the purpose of supplying antitoxin free to the poor, and placing it within reach of people with moderate means. The city's Health Commissioner set on foot an investigation, and in a statement he has given out, announced that he was prepared to fight the combination to a finish in the interest of the poor, by doubling, trebling, or quadrupling the output of the Health Department plant, and supplying the product to cities from New York to San Francisco, if needs be. This will be welcome news.

A THOUSAND, HUNGRY AND IN PATCHED AND RAGGED COATS IN THIS LONG LINE

A THOUSAND men in line! A regiment and more, homeless and hungry, are standing, waiting, for the doors of the Bowery Mission to open at one o'clock in the morning.

Long before this hour the army begins to assemble, gathering around the Mission doors, patiently waiting for the signal, when every man may find the comfort of a good, hot cup of coffee and a roll.

Where do they come from at this hour of morning? at this gray, cold, unsympathetic hour? Have they waited all this time in the storm and cold just for that bit to eat and drink? Why are they not in their beds? and why, if the good people of the Mission want to help their less fortunate brothers, do they serve breakfast at such an unreasonable hour?

Well might anyone ask these questions who is unacquainted with conditions on the Bowery in New York City in the dead of winter. In no other city, in this country at least, is such a crowd of men to be found; so cosmopolitan, and with histories, personalities and circumstances so varied. A polyglot of dialect gives one a confused idea of nationalities, while years, hard times, and dissipation, have left their varied but unmistakable seal upon many faces. There are men in this long line in patched coats, men in ragged coats, and men wearing such a nondescript garment as to scarcely deserve the name of coat. There are men whose buttonless outer garments are pinned tightly around thin bodies and throats, to hide the absence of vest and shirt; men with their hats pulled down over their eyes; whose shifty glances betray inherent weakness—a pitiful heritage—men with their hats cocked at a rakish angle, which seems to say, "Yes, I'm down on my luck just now, but watch me, I shan't always be gittin' a breakfast here, see!"

Others look hard and resentful, as if they would like to give their opinion of a world where a fellow hasn't a bite to eat or a bed to sleep in. They would like to fix the blame on everybody, or anybody but themselves, for their hard fate.

There are a few young faces, and O, the pity of it! Some "mothers' boys," wandering in the streets of a great city, penniless, and hungry; tired, and with no place to lay their heads. God grant they may be spared the fate of many of those about them.

But the majority of this army of the tempted, of the wandering and the lost, are just weary, wretched men, who feel that their case is hopeless. And the worst of it is that they do not care. They slouch along, their only ambition to keep in the line and not lose their places, as they near this temporary haven of warmth, where the hot coffee cups await their trembling, eager fingers.

Here comes one with a Herr Most cast of countenance, all hair and defiance. He grabs his cup and roll, as if it were his right.

Next, a very respectable-looking middle-aged man nears the table where the hospitalities are being dispensed. He looks neither to the right nor left, but takes his cup and roll, drinking and munching as he walks. He does not pause, as most of the others do before they reach the exit, but keeps steadily on until he disappears up the stairs which lead to the sidewalk. His clothing, while not new, was evidently made for him, or at least for a man of his size; his collar is clean, his hair neatly brushed, his beard trimmed, and he wears a pair of new woolen gloves. The attention of one of the mission workers was called to this man, as being somewhat superior to the majority of the throng that was now surging through the basement.

"O, yes," said the worker, "just watch him. He'll be back again, as soon as he can get here from the end of the line. He came in seven times last night." And, sure enough, back he came again and again, until one could not help wishing he might sell his appetite for a consideration to some dyspeptic multi-millionaire.

As the pile of rolls grew smaller, and "Pop," the chef, sounded the bottom of the last barrel of coffee, it seemed as if the crowd grew more dense; but this was because the clock pointed to nearly closing time. The men made every excuse to linger—it was so warm and comfortable there, and so desolate and cold in the snowy street. And they had nowhere to go.

Three o'clock a. m.—And the wind viciously blows the icy flakes into the faces of those who are forced to be out in the storm. The streets are comparatively deserted—comparatively only—for New York, as a city, never sleeps. An army of night workers is toiling in the great daily newspaper buildings and in other places where daily supplies must be created at night. Physicians are returning from the bedsides of critical cases.

The street cars are comfortably filled with people are intent on getting somewhere, going from one of the city to the other, each with their own particular reason for not being at home at this hour.

Outside the uptown hotels patient horses stand for their waiting cabs, while "cabby" himself is up and down the sidewalk, threshing his arms to his fingers from freezing, wondering if the sun will before his "fare" comes out, and wants to go home. Balls and other social gaieties have about reached height at this hour, while the great mass of the mon people—or rather the people with common sense—are quietly sleeping in their comfortable beds, rearing themselves for the morrow's toil.

But where are the thousand and more men who vanish down at the Bowery Mission? What has come of that long "bread line"? Where did they go when they had eaten their rolls and drank their coffee?

They have vanished, but what has become of them? They have not gone home, because they have no home. They have not gone to a cheap lodging-house, because they had not the price of even a hard ten-cent bed and no one has given them a bed-ticket, or upon such night it would have been used long hours ago.

This is what many of them do: they walk to Harlem—a seven-mile trudge—and back again; they walk up down the Bowery and the avenues, solitary and in and threes. They curl up in doorways and the hallways of tenement houses, while some find a friendly grate in the sidewalk, where the superheated air escapes from some great steam plant. They will all be ready to come back to-morrow night, and travel the same round.

No! not at all. A few will drop out, health and strength gone, life gone, no matter how, gone forever. And Potter's Field grows apace, while the vacant places in the army of the homeless are filled by recruits as weary, miserable and hopeless as those who travel their last tramp, up and down the snowy streets, a night before.

All honor to the charities which make it possible to shorten these dreary nights, and to infuse a little cheer and courage into these well-nigh hopeless lives.

There is hope for many of these men, but hope does not grow and thrive on an empty stomach and sleepless nights.

The Following Contributions Have Been Received in Aid of the Work of the Bowery Mission, Including Food and Shelter Funds

New York	NEW YORK—Cont'd	NEW YORK—Cont'd	West Virginia	Georgia	PENNA.—Cont'd	Tennessee	Montana
Amend, Helen T. 5.00	Hall, Thos R. A. 5.00	Soper, Mrs A. W. 10.00	Carter, G. W. 1.00	Bell, Mr & Mrs C. 1.00	Ulmer, Louisa 2.00	Stewart, Mary E. 10.00	Rufus, Mrs J. C. 1.00
Avery, Samuel P. 25.00	Harris, Arthur C. & Co. 2.50	Stainach, Emilie 1.00	Carter, S. A. 1.00	Weston, G. 1.00	Wildenstein Mrs E. 1.00	Taylor, R. V. 5.00	Sargent, Edwin W. 1.00
Baldwin, Mrs E. P. 1.00	Hedges, Mrs C. S. 2.00	Stanford Mfg Co. 10.00	Knight, Mrs M. A. 1.00	Bowen, Mrs L. H. 1.00	Wilkinson, Mrs H. 1.00
Barbey, Henry I. 25.00	Hirt, Eliz 1.00	Starr, Theo B. 15.00	Steele, Mrs P. M. 1.00	Jackson, Fannie S. 1.02	Wright, Mrs J. E. 1.00
Barkeley, R. 2.00	Holden, Jos C. 1.00	Steele, Mrs R. M. 2.50		Julian, T. E. 1.00	B. J. & A. C. S. 1.00
Barry, B. M. 1.50	Hone, Mrs John 20.00	Sterry, Geo. E. 10.00		Matthews, A. 1.00	bleton 5.00
Barry, Beatrice M. 3.00	Hubbard, Thos H. 25.00	Stevenson, Rev J. R. 15.00		Moncrief, Mrs L. B. 1.00	Reader, Souderton. 1.00
Benedict, Mrs J. H. 1.00	Hudson, Paul H. 1.00	Stickney, Jos. 10.00		Rice, Mrs T. B. 1.00
Bigalow, Levi 2.00	Huntley, F. J. 36.00	Storm, Mrs Annie. 1.00
Biggs, Mrs J. D. 1.00	Hurlbut, Fanny L. 2.00	Sweetman, J. T. 3.00
Blakeman, E. L. 10.00	Jeremiah, Mrs T. F. 10.00	Toothie, Wm. 1.00
Boldt, Geo. C. 10.00	Johnson, Mrs G. A. 1.00	Trowbridge, F. K. 25.00
Bramley, Miss H. 1.00	Johnson's, L. Boys 1.00	Vrooman, John W. 5.00
Braward, Owen 1.00	Knowles, Chas V. 1.00	Walter, Herman 10.00
Brown, Mrs A. M. 1.00	Leshner, Arthur L. 10.00	Weed, Benj 5.00
Brown, M. B. 100.00	Littlefield, Miss H. 1.00	Wicke, Wm M. 10.00
Brush, Mrs Ida 1.00		Williams, Mrs G. P. 5.00
Burghard, Mrs GM 5.00		Yost, Mrs Henry 2.00
Byles, Miss E. 1.00		Zorn, Mrs C. C. 1.00
Carver, Miss N. M. 1.00		I. H. N. Cambridge. 2.00
Castree, Louise 10.00		A. Circleville 2.00
Chittenden, Mrs 1.00		A. E. D. Rochester 1.00
Christie, Jennie F. 1.00		L. T. A. Waterloo. 100.00
Clarkson, Mont'g. 2.00		—, Sag Harbor 1.00
Cole, E. H. 5.00		—, Spencertown 1.00
Coleman, Mrs M. C. 1.00		For Christs Sake. 1.00
Cook, Mrs Wm H. 1.00		N. Y. C. 1.00
Copeland, Mrs H. 1.00		For Christs Sake. 1.00
Craven, Anna C. 3.00		N. Y. C. 1.00
Cronk, Chester & Myra 2.00		For Christs Sake. 1.00
Culver, Mrs Henry 1.00		N. Y. C. 1.00
Davis, Jr. Mrs E. E. 1.00		For Christs Sake. 1.00
Dikeman, Miss CL 100.00		N. Y. C. 1.00
Dodge, D. Stuart. 25.00		A Friend, Fredonia 1.00
Doty, Mrs P. 1.00		A Friend, Haverstraw 1.00
Drake, Mrs A. N. 1.00		Reader of C. H. Amsterdam 2.00
DuMont, John C. 1.00		X. N. Y. C. 5.00
Duvall, Mrs M. B. 1.00		Stranger, N. Y. C. 2.00
Eggers, Aug. 5.00		Bloomington Ref. 1.00
Ellis, Wm D. 5.00		Church, Cutchogue 27.38
Elmendorf, J. 5.00		Puritan S. S. Bklyn 36.00
Evaus, R. T. 1.00
Felter, Mrs F. P. 1.00
Filler, Mrs P. 2.00
Floyd, Wm 5.00
Forham, Mrs A. 10.00
Forger, Mrs E. E. 10.00
Fraser, Alex W. 5.00
Goodhue, Chas E. 10.00
Gough, Mrs J. 1.00
Grant, S. T. 10.00
Gray, Mrs R. 1.00
Green, Jas W. 1.00
Greenward, Mrs. 1.00
Gurnee, A. C. 10.00
Halbert, Alice D. 2.00

Fanny's Private Purse

FANNY LIVINGSTON was engaged in the pleasant occupation of the king who sat in the parlor, counting out his money. Fanny was counting hers. She was dividing it, as she counted it, into three little piles, one for gold, one for silver, and one for copper.

The gold pile was, of course, a tiny one. Nevertheless, it was not insignificant, for Fanny had in the year that had passed since her last birthday, received four golden gifts. A five dollar gold piece from Uncle Jack; the same from her father, and two eight little gold dollars, from Aunt Susy and Aunt Mary. The latter bore dates thirty years back, though the coins were as bright still. They had lain in the jewel boxes of the aunts, and had been treasured on account of some youthful association.

In the silver pile or piles, there were half-dollars, quarters, and dimes. They amounted to ten dollars in all. The pennies brought up the sum to twenty-five dollars. This was the agreeably lavish amount which Fanny kept in what she called her private purse. It was replenished in various ways, this little purse, and a cherished hoard grew by accretion. Sometimes from savings that Fanny made of her monthly allowance; sometimes, though rarely, by earnings, when she sold a centrepiece or a bit of lace, the work of her clever fingers, and sometimes, often indeed, by presents from her relatives.

Fanny had usually expended the money of her private purse for something she very much wanted: for a picture, or a gown, or an additional luxury for her room; she had never felt any compunction in using it thus, and this year, when her twenty-first birthday had come, was the first to arouse in her a new thought and a new struggle. She was in the habit of devoting a tenth portion of her allowance to the Lord's treasury, and so, thoughtfully, took two dollars and fifty cents out of her private purse, and said, "Here! now that's settled! I'll put that in the contribution box on Sunday."

And the rest? Well, there was a sale of goods, at greatly reduced prices, announced in the morning newspaper. Fanny decided that she was in desperate want of a new boa, and she straightway determined to buy one without an hour's delay.

"I am writing to Cousin Helen, Fanny," called her mother from the foot of the stairs. "Have you a message?"

"My love, of course," she called back. Then a shadow fell on her bright face.

She began to think of Cousin Helen's letter that her mother was answering. Such a cheery letter, so brave, so uncompromising, but with an undernote of pathos, meaning that was felt between the lines, though unexpressed. Clearly before Fanny's eyes rose the picture of the South Dakota personage, little and chill and bare and bleak, the wild winds battering against it, the nakedness of want creeping across its threshold. Cousin Helen had a Fanny, too, just Fanny's age, and she had mentioned casually that she wanted to take lessons at or with a correspondence school, but they had not been able to manage the expense. "Poor girlie," Helen had said, "a home missionary's daughter has to learn to do without so much that we used to fancy indispensable."

"Mother," cried our Fanny, suddenly bursting into the room where Mrs. Livingston was just closing her letter. "I've decided on a new variety of birthday fun. I'm going to send my 'private purse' to Fanny Leigh. Here it is, twenty-five dollars. Change it into a check, please, and put it in before you seal your letter."

"You are sure you won't be sorry, daughter?" "Perfectly sure. And now I'm going to pack a barrel for those dear South Dakota people. If the Lord honors me by letting me have home missionaries for Norfolk, he expects me to pay him something back in return, and I'm trying my best to do it. I've been selfish, but I'm trying to be less so. I really am, though, to tell the truth, mother, dear, it's a sudden conversion. I was going down town, and all in an instant I had a vision, and I felt a tug at my very heart. Where do you suppose it came from?"

"I believe," said Mrs. Livingston, "that an angel opened your eyes, and spoke to your heart, Fanny."

The Marking of Household Linen

The bride's part in furnishing the new home is to provide the household linen. This includes towels, napkins, tablecloths, sheets and pillow-cases. The quantity she will need depends largely on the style of her establishment, on the kind of home she plans, and the simple or elaborate furnishings it will require. A linen-shower, which is a party com-

PRAYER FOR THE ABSENT

My love is on the sea, O Lord; the storm, I fear, is on the sea,
But thou can'st still the waves, and I can trust my love, O Lord, to thee.

posed of the bride's girl friends and acquaintances, each of whom brings some piece of linen as a gift, is a very graceful attention to an expectant bride. The marking of the linen may be with the bride's monogram or maiden initials, or with the monogram and initials of her married name. This is entirely a matter of individual preference and personal taste. Embroidery is more beautiful than other marking.

The Golden Milestone

Whenever any of our circle reach the golden milestone of fifty years of wedlock, we are glad to hear of it, and we ask to be included among those who offer congratulations on the auspicious event. In this world of change and incertitude, it is no slight thing for two to walk together on life's road in good comradeship, honor and perfect adjustment of principle, aims, and service to God and man. Mr. Charles Rollin Post and Mrs. Caroline Lathrop Post, of Fort Worth, Texas, had been married fifty happy years on October 10, 1903. They are the couple of whom we have last heard through their pastor; and it is a pleasure to know that their golden wedding was an occasion of rare dignity and enjoyment. May they live together many more years, and have a diamond wedding.

"Sir," and "Ma'am"

FORMERLY, well-bred children were carefully taught to say "Sir," and "Ma'am," to their elders, and polite grown people were apt to use the same forms when addressing one another. A person brought up in the "manly" ways of a previous generation, finds it hard to accustom herself to the bald "Yes," and rough "No," which seem permissible at present, and when a young girl who did not catch what she said, sharply turns on her with, "What?" this old-fashioned gentlewoman, feels as if she had received a blow in the face. In her life's traditions, girls were deferential to their parents, and surrounded all older people with little courtesies and attentions; the sort of attentions and small cares which accompany "Sir" and "Ma'am."

In our Southern States, where polish still appertains to good breeding, young people are taught to bear themselves with a certain reverence toward all who have gray hairs. A young woman does not think it beneath her to assist an old gentleman on or off with his coat, and she relieves him of his hat, and finds a chair for him as a matter of course. That sort of good manners goes with "Sir" and "Ma'am." A young fellow from Georgia, married a Northern bride several years ago. Her people demurred a little at his custom of saying "Ma'am" to women, young and old, and one tactless spinster took him roundly to task. "Yes, ma'am, I beg your pardon, ma'am," he said, with due humility; "but my mother would turn me out of her house if I spoke in any other way."

There is little probability that our growing boys and girls will have too much politeness of manner; and, as the first years influence the entire future, they are wise who early train the little tongue in speech, fragrant and decorous. If we restore the "Yes, ma'am" of the past, we shall not raise our children in servility, but in sweet and gracious courtesy, a thing at which to rejoice.

Naughty Children

A London doctor is exploiting the theory that naughtiness in children shows them to be moral degenerates and imbeciles, and he mournfully declares that punishment will not cure their malady. Before child culture became a fad, and common sense lost her bearings on the subject, there was a fact called original sin, which sufficiently accounted for the perversities and waywardness of our little folk. With daring disregard of consequences, parents used to bring up large families; loving them tenderly; obliging them to obey at once when spoken to; correcting them when they did wrong; feeding, clothing, educating them, and treating them with a good deal of wholesome neglect. The children thus brought up, turned out as well as do modern children, who are analyzed as if they were botanical specimens, treated with a degree of respect that is at least confusing, and generally set in the front and centre of the stage.

While the earth endures, there will be naughty children as well as good ones. To be naughty now and then is to be normal. Our Heavenly Father, surveying us with our greater burden of iniquity, impartially sends his rain and sun on the evil and on the good. We need not explain the baby's tempers on any subtle ground of moral imbecility. They are, no doubt, inherited from papa and mamma, and may easily be cured by a kiss, or the maternal rod, as may seem best.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—R. C. C. Would it be sinful to marry one man while in love with another? Certainly, very sinful and extremely foolish. Marry the man you love, or remain single.

—DORCAS. "I beg pardon," and "Excuse me," are said when there is some natural occasion to use those terms. Thanks are expressed when one has received a courtesy. A hostess says "Thank you," when a guest remarks that she has had a pleasant evening. Allow your friend to precede you in entering your own house. At her door be guided by her action. Common sense regulates these little matters.

—LIPH. Your wife cannot be blamed if she asks to be consulted about the sale of your joint home. I doubt whether you have a legal right to dispose of it without her consent. You have no moral right to do so.

—LAURA. I cannot think it right that a husband, in perfect health and strength, should depend on his wife's earnings simply because he cannot get the work he prefers. He ought to take any work that comes along.

THE IMPERILLED SABBATH

Jesus and the Sabbath

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEB. 21
MATT. 12: 1-13

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT - MATT. 12: 12:
IT IS LAWFUL TO DO WELL ON THE SABBATH DAY

RUINS OF THE SYNAGOGUE AT CAPERNAUM

WE see gathered together a group of people whom Jesus has healed on the Sabbath, chief among them the man whose withered hand has been restored. He is telling the others how it all happened: "My home is in Capernaum. My infirmity of the withered hand did not prevent my regular attendance at the beautiful synagogue, built for our people by the Roman centurion. As Jesus Christ resided in Capernaum, he was often seen and heard in this synagogue. On the day of my healing, he had come in, followed by Pharisees whose faces were dark with envy and hatred. They were muttering among themselves, casting glances at Jesus. I stood near enough to them to learn that they had had a controversy with Jesus about the Sabbath. The disciples of Jesus, walking with him toward the synagogue, had gathered and eaten some heads of wheat by the way in the fields through which they passed. To this act the Pharisees had taken exception, 'because,' said they, 'this act has broken our law against Sabbath harvesting.' They desired Jesus to censure his disciples, but instead, he upheld them, by referring to David eating the shew bread of the Tabernacle when necessity drove him to satisfy his hunger."

Illustration and Application

Two successive lessons on the Sabbath question are not too many, for the Sabbath is more attacked and less defended than ever before; and its observance is the most intricate of all moral questions. The writer, after twenty years of special study of this subject, is inclined to think a single lesson or address is likely to leave the minds of class or congregation in an unsettled condition, by raising more problems than can be conclusively discussed at one sitting. Let these two consecutive lessons on Christ's way of keeping the Sabbath serve as the frame, for a week of thorough study of Sabbath doctrine and duty, at this most favorable season, before the summer flood of temptations to Sabbath breaking. We suggest this comprehensive outline:

1. THE DOCTRINE OF THE SABBATH. 1. "The Sabbath was made for man" (Mark

The Sabbath not Hebrew, but Human and Humane

2: 27) at Creation, not for the Jews only. See references to "Sabbath," "seventh day" and "week" before the Decalogue: Gen. 2: 3; 7: 4; 8: 10-12; 29: 27; Ex. 12: 15; 16: 1, 5, 22-30. This revelation of the Sabbath as a primeval and universal institution is confirmed by reason—Hath not a Gentile as much need of rest and worship as a Jew?—and by the oldest records of the oldest nations in which the sacred "seventh" and "seventh day" constantly appear, and especially by the Accadian tablets, now in the British Museum, on which we read the very word Sabbatu, as the name of an imperfect weekly rest-day. Modern science also concurs with the Bible, that the Sabbath law is a universal law of human nature. This is shown in the accompanying chart of Dr. Haegler, of Basle, confirmed by Dr. Hodge, of Clark University, Worcester, Mass. The downward strokes, each represent a workday's loss of oxygen, say one ounce; the shorter upward strokes, the only partial recovery in the night's rest, which leaves a debt to nature, of, say, one-sixth of an ounce each morning, so that on Sunday morning, after steady work for a week, one is six-sixths a whole ounce short, and needs a whole day for recovery.

It is worth while to devote a whole address or lesson to laying this granite pedestal, "The Sabbath was made for man," that the conviction may be fixed for life that the Sabbath is not merely a Jewish by-law or a church rule, but is rather something copied out of the nature of things, to violate which is to collide with the universe.

2. The Sabbath is a part of the world's divine constitution, the Ten Commandments, whose universality is proclaimed in their adoption by Justinian, Charlemagne, and Alfred, as the corner-stones of their great codes, which are the basis of our Christian civilization. In the face of these three historic facts, it is a waste of time to argue that the Decalogue was only for the Jew. The important thing is that we must not treat at least what God wrote longest. The Fourth Commandment is the key-stone of the Decalogue arch, with which the whole of it in theory and practice stands or falls. This Sabbath commandment is our standard guide to Sabbath observance, and requires, first, Sabbath worship (a part of the Divine law which civil government does not and should not enforce), and, second, six days of regular and strenuous effort from all, regardless of whether they need salary, since we are all created for service; third, a weekly day of rest, not the seventh day of the week, but the seventh day after six of work, and this rest is not to be left to each individual, but taken together by the whole community, parents and children, natives and aliens, and their working animals, for which, as for all humane and hygienic arrangements of general labor and common rest, civil government must legislate. In the words of Horace Greeley, "The liberty of rest for each demands a law of rest for all."*

3. Christ interpreted the Decalogue as requiring a pause only in works of gain, not in works of mercy and necessity, that is, the exercises of religion and philanthropy, and the household work necessary for providing food and the like.

Those who make "necessity" cover a multitude of sins and selfishness find no precedent in the Sabbaths of Christ.

There were really five Sabbaths lying alongside in the days of Christ. Let us distinguish them on the five fingers, to save ourselves from many a sophistry that comes from confusing them. 1. The little finger Sabbath of the list was the Pharisaic Sabbath. Let it never be called the "Jewish Sabbath," for it had no authority but that of a sect whose pettiness and bitterness made its members seem to belong to the sect known as "insect," indeed, one of its hundreds of vexing rules was that one could not kill a flea on the Sabbath, how-ardless of whether they need salary, since we are all created for service; third, a weekly day of rest, not the seventh day of the week, but the seventh day after six of work, and this rest is not to be left to each individual, but taken together by the whole community, parents and children, natives and aliens, and their working animals, for which, as for all humane and hygienic arrangements of general labor and common rest, civil government must legislate. In the words of Horace Greeley, "The liberty of rest for each demands a law of rest for all."*

fireless hearth, where fire was only needed for excessive fear, and capital punishment for Sabbath-breakers, none of these binding any but Jews under Jewish civil government except in their underlying instructive principles. 4. The three fingers named having been turned down, as not la-for us, we have left the large middle finger erect for the universal fourth commandment, whose provisions apply to all human beings. 5. Off against this, let the thumb stand for co-operating "Lord's Day." The new Christian Sabbath, which, by the "act" of Christ's resurrection actually became thereafter the chief day of the week, the inheritor of the old Sabbath's worship and rest, and the sign and ensign of Christ's Lordship over time and eternity (Acts 20: 7; 1. Cor. 16: 2; Rev. 1: 10). Christian churches differ on many points but there are few doctrines where the agreement is so near universal as in the acceptance of the "Lord's Day." I do not, therefore, turn aside to discussion about "change of the day," which has become a fixed fact, but give our attention rather to the practical question how we can best defend the day against its chief desecrators. Most of all do we need to quicken the courage of really good people who are driven to the wrong side by fears and sneers.

WITH THE SEVENTH DAY REST

When George III. was repairing his palace at Kew, one of the workmen was particularly noticed by his Majesty. One Monday morning the King went as usual to watch the progress of the work, and not seeing the man in his usual place, inquired the reason of his absence. He was at first answered evasively by the workmen, but last they said that not, being able to complete a particular job on the Saturday night they had returned to finish it on the Sunday morning, and that as this man had refused to work on Sunday, he had been dismissed from the employment. "Send him back immediately," said the King. "The man who refuses to do his ordinary work on the Lord's Day is the man for me."

Early in the nineteenth century, a boy went to New York City to carve out his own fortune. He had learned the printing trade in the country town in which he was brought up, and that knowledge was his only aid to fame and fortune, except thorough training in a simple Christian home. He found work in one of the large printing offices in the city. One Saturday afternoon he was given a long "take" of copy which he could not possibly "set" without working on Sunday. He gave it a glance and then said: "I will work on this twelve o'clock to-night, and finish what I can; but I can not work to-morrow." "The boy will lose his place," said the foreman. The boy took the copy to his employer, told him that he had been taught to reverence the Sabbath, and that he would resign his situation rather than violate his conscience. His employer could not but respect such a spirit, and he never again required him to work on Sunday. The boy was John Harper, the principal founder of the publishing house of Harper Brothers.

We might give scores of such incidents of men and boys who refused to work on Sunday, and were not financially ruined as many, who have failed in such tests, have feared they would be, if true to God and themselves. Better far to fail financially than morally, but we have searched the world and found but one case of martyrdom to Sabbath keeping. And what is it not as glorious to die for conviction if need be, in keeping the Sabbath, as testing a yellow-fever cure, or hunting the north pole, or fighting a foreign foe?

"Is this a good book to read to-day?" The young girl who asked the question was away from home, and at home she was accustomed to make a distinction between Sunday and week-day books. Her hostess looked up smilingly at the book presented, gave a cursory glance, and said: "Why, yes, my dear little Puritan! anything on this table may be read on Sunday. There is nothing really bad in this house. Agnes went away with the bright-looking volume in her hand. The story was entertaining, but presently she rose quietly, replaced the book on the shelf whence it came, and went to her room. Her hostess observed the action, and touched a chord in her memory, for she, too, had been trained to keep Sunday sacred. Her husband laid aside his newspaper. He, too, felt uncomfortable. And a lad, Agnes' cousin, said very decidedly: "Well, she don't play at being Christian. She makes a business of it."

"THE SON OF MAN IS LORD EVEN OF THE SABBATH DAY"

ever pestilent, for that would be hunting. Let us say right here, and illustrate it later as the practical duty taught by contrast in the lesson of to-day, that as Christ showed his courage in condemning and breaking away from the too strict observance of the Sabbath in the church of his day, a like courage will lead us to condemn and avoid the other extreme of general laxity in the Sabbath observance of church members to-day. 2. This next finger shall represent the Jewish Sabbath, with its sacrifices, double those of other days, binding on us only in the principles of increased worship and "doubled sacrifice." 3. The forefinger shall stand for the Jewish civil Sabbath, beginning at evening with a

*Readers who desire a fuller discussion of the Sabbath question will receive a statement if they will write, enclosing two cent stamp, to Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, 206 Pennsylvania avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.

AS TOM SAW IT

THE wind whistled sharply around the corner and Tom's audience drew closer together. The ragged coats and frayed trousers flapped against the shivering little figure and the newspapers in half a dozen enbedded hands rustled noisily. The peep's voice grew more insistent. "Tell ye what, fellers, it was jest great. 'us thar was the singin' that made ye feel reepy way down ter yer toes an' an'tle shivers a-runnin' up yer back-on. Then thar was a big stillness so's e cold most hear yerself think, an' in a time the old chap on the platform, he ot to an' said, 'I wanter tell ye a story.' 'e's jest his words, an' he hadn't said horn that 'fore I felt 's if he had walked that explained, perhaps, his ease as a "public speaker."

"Oh—if I only could!" and he gave a delighted little skip. The impulsive movement brought a shadow to his face, and he looked down at the twisted, misshapen foot that was not meant for skips and leaps. "Thar ain't no use in thinkin' of it, though—not fur me, with that thing," he added, dolefully. "I jest got ter give it up, that's all. But there's Teddy an' Dot—thar ain't nothin' ails their legs—bless 'em!" Tom's face was visibly brightening—"thar ain't nothin' ter hinder them bein' somebody." And he limped hurriedly around the corner and began to climb the long flights that led to his garret home.

Tom was nine when his father died, and

"Come—come quick!" cried Tom, grasping Dot and dragging Teddy along the floor ghidown an' picked me out o' the ho' gang an' patted me on the shoulder 's talkin' ter me—jest me, ye know. "Ad—well," continued Tom, drawing lo' breath, "I can't half tell ye what he id. I wish't I could; but he told about clp that was like us once—sellin' parrsan' blackin' shoes an' all that, ye tot—an' how he got ter be an engineer 't pres'dent of the United States—I rg which, but 'twas somethin' that was g. He said thar wa'n't no reason why e couldn't be somebody, too; that all we'd it do was ter keep straight ahead an' snare ev'ry time an' stick it out an' s'c'it thar."

"A, Tom, what ye givin' us?" called a rige voice. Tom turned, with fierce nods of his head. "I think it sounds fishy, Bill—an' I jes when I tell it, an' we're out here in ereet an' down on our luck; but ye'd stagher heard him said it, Bill. Why, he he talked, I felt 's if I could black l' shoes in the city with jest a flip of y'ush, an' that 'twouldn't be no time illore I was drivin' a team or runnin' he l'!"

Cold Dr. Cyrus Heminway have heard on "speech," he would have felt well pa' for the evening's talk he had given t' Newsboys' Mission the week be-rebut could he, in addition to that, e followed Tom's forlorn little figure ng down the street, his heart would e warmed indeed. Tom was talking ou to himself—a habit of his—and one he was not ten when his mother so quickly followed—that white-faced, tired mother, who yet always had a loving word and a smile for him, and for Teddy and Dot. These two were so little then; they were hardly larger now, though two years older. "Skimpy soups and scraps don't make folks very big," Tom would say apologetically.

But Tom blacked shoes, sold papers, ran of errands, held horses—all in a frenzy of haste, from early morning until the last "extra" had been sold at midnight. The old cracked sugar-bowl in the cupboard was Tom's bank, and his precious store of dimes and pennies was steadily growing larger.

One snowy December day, Tom was hurrying homeward, when a clanging engine almost ran him down. Shouting men and boys pushed roughly by. The crowd increased, and became almost impenetrable as he reached his own street.

Tom was thoroughly frightened. The fire must be very near—and there was Teddy, Dot, and the sugar-bowl! He pushed and struggled, and beat his tiny self against the surging human wall.

A moment later he dashed into an alley not so crowded, and, by a detour, came out close by his own door. Policemen were forcing the crowds back and roping off an open space, firemen were shouting, engines were hissing and throbbing, and over all was the red glare of the flames.

For a second Tom stood motionless;

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 126

CORNISH

PIANO

The Only Piano Fully Guaranteed
For 25 Years

Catalogue Showing
All Styles
Sent
Free

Sold From the Factory

Saving You $150 to $250

If you intended to buy a Piano and could come to the Cornish factory where we could talk together, and show you how well the Cornish Piano is made—how beautiful, rich and full is its tone, and how handsome its cases are; if we could impress you with the great advantages and economy of the Cornish plan of selling from factory to family direct—you certainly would select a Cornish Piano in preference to all others. No combination of money and skill has ever produced a better or sweeter toned instrument. Most people who come, and many do, buy before they leave. The Cornish Piano must sell, and does sell, not only on its merits, but in spite of the war often waged against it by piano agents whose commissions are at stake. We have no agents and do not sell to dealers. We give our patrons the saving of the dealers' and salesmen's commissions, which we would have to pay if we sold that way.

Sent to Your Home On a Year's Trial Free

Without any money in advance we will ship (freight prepaid) any Cornish Piano or Organ you may select and guarantee safe delivery. Test it for 30 DAYS, and if it is not exactly as we represent it, or if you are not fully satisfied and do not believe it equal to any you can buy of local dealers for one-third to one-half more money, return it at our expense. If you buy, payment may be made in cash or easy instalments, as you prefer. Furthermore, we agree to refund the full amount paid us with 6 per cent. interest added if the instrument is not entirely satisfactory AFTER A YEAR'S USE in your own home.

If Cornish Pianos and Organs were not thoroughly good and reliable, would we dare bind ourselves to this contract as we do?

Cornish Organs

There are more Cornish Organs sold every year than any other one make—we are the largest manufacturers in the world. It would be hard to find a township in the United States in which there is not one or more in use. Every Cornish Organ is guaranteed, and is returnable after a year's use if it is not in every way satisfactory. Every one is sold on honor—we must be honest whether we wish to or not—because the organs would come back to us if they were not the best that money could buy. Can you purchase any other musical instrument in the world on such terms?

We claim without fear of successful contradiction that no better organ than ours is or can be manufactured. Our method of selling is in your favor because it saves you nearly half, and it is in our favor because it saves the enormous expense and labor of maintaining a large corps of agents. This enables us to devote 50 per cent. of our working energy to careful manufacturing—the selling practically takes care of itself. Every Cornish instrument is its own salesman.

If You Cannot Play

and live in a locality where a music teacher cannot be employed, we will present to you free (if you request it when ordering a piano or organ) a paid-up scholarship in a leading correspondence school, good for a complete course in music lessons by mail. By this plan a family music class can be arranged in the home with great pleasure and profit. Where a member of the family already understands music, he or she can be a guide to the others. Any one can understand the lessons. The only expense is for postage. Students buy music of the school at half rates.

Full particulars sent with the catalogue. By all means

Write for Our Catalogue

Handsome new edition is just out. It shows all styles of the Cornish Pianos and Organs, gives full information of our money-saving plan of selling and is sent free. Your name and address on a postal will bring it.

THE CORNISH CO.

30 Main St., WASHINGTON, NEW JERSEY.

A Receipt for Cheese Croquettes

CORN STARCH
TALK

By MRS. HELEN ARMSTRONG.

The use of cheese in various forms is becoming more frequent every year and it is well that it should be so as cheese furnishes proteid in a high degree. A mild cream cheese, cooked only enough to be melted, is easily taken care of by the average stomach, and greatly to be preferred to the raw article. Cheese by itself is too concentrated and needs starchy food with it to make a perfect combination. The ideal form of starch is obtained in Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch, a product which has stood the test of years and is considered the standard of excellence. By combining this with cheese we may prepare many wholesome and delicious dishes. One of the daintiest perhaps, is in the form of a croquette, and this may be served either as an entree, with broiled tomatoes, or a tomato sauce, or as an accompaniment to a salad.

CHEESE CROQUETTES.

Make a cream sauce with two tablespoons of butter, three level tablespoons of Kingsford's Oswego Corn Starch and a cup of milk. Beat into this the yolk of an egg and season highly with paprika and a little salt. Add two tablespoons of grated cheese, and when melted remove from fire and stir in gently one and one-half cups of mild cheese cut in cubes. Cool the mixture thoroughly, shape into squares or diamonds and bread them as any croquettes. Fry in hot fat, drain well on soft paper and serve in a nest of parsley or lettuce.

(CORN STARCH TALKS TO BE CONTINUED.)

Extra Fine Imported

56-piece
China Tea Set

FREE

with an order for 25 lbs. of New Crop, 60c., 70c., or 80c. Tea, or 25 lbs. Great American Baking Powder, 45c. a lb., or an assorted order Teas and Baking Powder, or 60 lbs. B. O. M. S. Coffee, 33c. a lb., or 50-2 oz. Bottles of pure Extracts—Vanilla, Lemon, etc., or 25-1 lb. cans of Spice—any kind—absolutely pure, 50c. a can.

Address Mr. P. B., care of
The Great American Tea Co.
Box 289
31-33 Vesey Street, New York

Learn to Knit

Send for the 104 page Columbia Book of Yarns. Worth a dollar. No other book at any price is so thorough, complete and beautiful. Begins with the simplest stitch and ends with the most elaborate garment, illustrating every stitch.

15 cents—a nominal price—at your dealer's, or send to

MRS. COLUMBIA YARNS, Philadelphia

AS TOM SAW IT

CONTINUED FROM
PRECEDING PAGE

then, deaf to warning shouts and heedless of outstretched hands, he rushed through the door and up the stairs. Stumbling, crawling—one flight, two flights, three, he passed; then, choking and well-nigh breathless, he threw open the door of his room.

The children were asleep.

He shook them roughly.

"Come—come quick!" he gasped, catching up Dot with a sweep of his right arm, and dragging Teddy to the floor with his left.

The air was stifling now. Darting tongues of flame leaped from the cracks over the doors, across the hall, and licked the dust from the walls. A crackling roar filled the children's ears, and a suffocating smoke burned their eyes and throats. Crouching close to the floor, they gained the stairway and started, half sliding, half tumbling, down the long flights. They had almost reached the street when there was a crash, a blinding glare, a scorching something across their faces—then oblivion for Tom.

Tom did not sell papers the next morning. If he had sold them, he might have seen his own name at the top of the first page of most of them. In big, black letters, he was called a "hero," and his "daring rescue of sleeping children" was told, with many a laudatory adjective, beneath the picture of a boy carrying two children down a blazing stairway.

But all this Tom did not see. What he really did see was a long room, full of pretty, white beds, in one of which he was lying. He turned his head, and met the gaze of Dr. Cyrus Heminway—the man who had talked at the Mission.

A glad flash of recognition came into Tom's eyes. "It's you ain't it? Well, I wanted ter tell yer," he began, hurriedly; "I was goin' ter do what ye said, but I couldn't ye know, on 'count o' my leg. But I'm goin' ter make somethin' of Dot an' —" he stopped suddenly, his eyes widening in a frightened remembrance of the night before—"Whar is Dot an' Teddy?" he screamed, his voice shrill with anxiety. Then he fell back with tightened lips and a stifled cry of pain.

"Steady, my lad, steady," soothed the big man gently; "the children are safe and well—thanks to you."

"Did I git 'em out all right? Somethin' happened, seems so, long at the last—I can't jest remember." The lips relaxed in a smile, then quivered pitifully. "I—I couldn't git the sugar-bowl, though, an' now I'll have ter begin all over." The voice ended in a sigh, then suddenly commenced again, with renewed vigor. "Say, whar am I, an' what am I here for?"

"You—well—you hurt yourself—a bit, my lad," explained the man, stammering confusedly. "So they brought you to the hospital for me to fix up."

The boy's face fell.

"Long job—is it?"

"Well, it will take a little while."

A big tear rolled down Tom's cheek.

"I know what that means, an' it's all up. I jest can't make nothin' of 'em now—'twill take forever ter catch up!"

"Make nothing of—"

"Dot an' Teddy, ye know," supplied Tom. "I was goin' ter make them like what you said I'd oughter be."

"What I said?" repeated the doctor, more mystified than before.

"Yes, down ter the Mission, ye know. You told how we'd all oughter do somethin' big an' fine an' be somebody. Well, I was goin' ter be somebody myself, but my legs ain't alike—one o' 'em wa'n't finished up right, an' so I'm counted out the game—'tain't no use for me ter try. But Dot an' Teddy was different. They was all right, an' I'd got half a bowlful of chink saved up ter push them along an' make somebody of them, an'—an' now it's all burnt up!" finished Tom, choking back a sob and winking fast and hard.

Dr. Heminway did not speak. He walked over to the window and stood for a long time looking at a lone leaf fluttering in a tree branch just outside. When he came back his eyes were moist.

"We won't count you out just yet, my boy. I've had a look at that foot of yours, and—I fancy I can 'finish' it so it will be like the other one." The doctor's lips twitched a little. "And, meanwhile, we'll fix up those other breaks and bruises you managed to accumulate last night.

Now just drink this and go off to sleep."

Tom's eyes were luminous. He drained the proffered glass, than handed it back.

"Doctor, yer don't mean yer can twist that foot o' mine straight—just like t'other?"

The man nodded.

"Jiminy!" murmured Tom, nestling happily among the pillows. "It don't sound's if it could be true," he added, after a long silence. "Then I'll be like other fellers an' stand some show. My! won't it be great!" We'll all be—presidents—an' things. Dot an' Teddy—an'—me. We'll all—be—" the voice trailed off into an inarticulate murmur.

A week later, between two and three o'clock in the afternoon, a lady and two small children came up the broad steps of the hospital, and were conducted by a white-capped nurse to Tom's bedside.

Tom gazed blankly at the two well-dressed, happy-faced children.

"Why, it's Dot an' Teddy!" he gasped.

The children, mindful of urgent admonitions to be "quiet," choked back their almost unmanageable glee.

"We thought you wouldn't know us!" chuckled Teddy.

"An' this is Mis' Morton—where we live," explained Dot eagerly, "an' —"

"Yes, an' we eat three times a day—heaps o' things!" interrupted Teddy. "Meat, an' pertaters, an' oranges —"

"An' rasb'ry jam!" gurgled Dot, blinking her eyes ecstatically. "An' I've got stockings an' shoes—both alike, an' —"

"An' I've got a top an' a knife an'—say, Tom, you're better, ain't you?" Teddy broke off, suddenly mindful of the purpose of their visit.

"Yes, dear, he's better," said Mrs. Morton, laughing softly; "but he won't be if you two chatterboxes stay much longer!"

This was but the first of many visits, which came more and more frequently as Tom got stronger. Not the least of his joys was the fact that Teddy and Dot were so well cared for.

Mrs. Morton was a childless widow, and it was the newspaper picture of Tom carrying the children down the blazing stairway that had caught her eye and had caused her to open her doors and her arms to the little waifs. Long before Tom left the hospital, the most precious things in the house, to Mrs. Morton's eyes, were Teddy and Dot, and the determination to keep them always grew stronger daily.

Tom must have seen something of the sort in her face, for one day, after she had left the hospital, he turned toward the doctor with troubled eyes.

"She likes 'em awful well, don't she, doctor? I'm glad she likes 'em so much—I am, truly I am," he added hurriedly.

"Mrs. Morton has a very kind heart, Tom," returned the doctor, smiling.

"I—they—I shouldn't wonder—they'll be somebody now, I guess," Tom went on.

"I shouldn't wonder," agreed the other. "I—I reckon they don't need me an' the sugar-bowl no more—do they?"

Dr. Heminway threw a sharp glance at the quivering chin and overflowing eyes.

"Need you," he sputtered, "need you; why, my boy, 'need' is no name for it. They simply just can't get along without you. Just you wait and see."

At last the day came when Tom, a little weak, but straight-limbed and jubilant, walked with even, unlimping steps down the long pavement leading from the hospital. Teddy and Dot, with skips and leaps of joy, danced along on either side.

"Oh, it's true!" murmured Tom ecstatically. "It truly is true. See, I don't limp the littlest bit!"

In Dr. Heminway's office now is a round-faced, strong-limbed boy, who answers the bell, runs of errands, and keeps the office fresh and neat—at least he does all this when not in school. He will tell you that he and Dot and Teddy "board" with Mrs. Morton, and Mrs. Morton herself will tell you that she has been forced—through Dr. Heminway's unyielding insistence—to accept each week a small portion of Tom's "office-boy" wages in return for the home she gives the children. To be sure, these dimes and quarters paid in each week have never been spent. They are safely hoarded among Mrs. Morton's dearest treasures.

Tom is happy. Are not he and Dot and Teddy traveling the straight road that leads to being "somebody"?

ELEANOR H. PORTER.

Mail Orders Exclusively. No Branches or Agents.

Spring Suits $8 to $50 MADE TO ORDER

We Guarantee to Fit You
CATALOGUE AND SAMPLES FREE

LAST year we made the best garments possible, but every year's experience raises the standard; therefore, this year's new and smart designs show better shape, better materials and better workmanship than ever before.

Remember that we keep nothing ready-made, but make every garment especially to order.

Our new Spring and Summer Catalogue illustrates 120 of the newest styles in ladies' suits and skirts, and we carry in stock over 400 of the latest styles from which you may select. Our line of materials includes new Eolian weaves, Etamines, Mohairs and Brilliantines, together with new mixtures particularly adapted for Spring and Summer wear. We have a special line of light weight fabrics for our Southern patrons, as well as slightly heavier materials for those of our customers who reside in cooler climates. We do carry wash goods.

YOUR MONEY REFUNDED IF WE FAIL TO SATISFY YOU.

Our Spring Catalogue illustrates:

Tailored Suits	$8 to $10
Handsome Skirts	$4 to $6
Etamine Costumes	$10 to $12
Mohair and Brilliantine Suits	$8 to $10
Mohair Skirts	$4 to $6
Spring Jackets	$7 to $10

Walking Suits and Skirts, Rainy-Day Suits, Traveling Dresses, Rain Coats, etc.

WE PAY EXPRESS CHARGES TO ANY PART OF THE UNITED STATES.

Our Catalogue contains explicit directions taking measurements correctly.

We guarantee to fit and please. If we do not, return the garment promptly, and we will refund your money.

Catalogue and a large assortment of samples be sent free to any part of the United States. Ask for New Spring Catalogue No. 50, requesting samples, mention about the color, desire, and we will send a full line of what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY

119 and 121 West 23d Street, New York.

Established 15 years.

Clergymen

and others having money to invest and profitably, whether in large or amounts, should write the Pittsburgh Savings of Pittsburgh, Pa., for a copy of their new booklet, No. 18. It gives particulars about the bank, its new plan of money saving, safe investments, Bank by Mail, etc.

This bank is one of the strongest, capable and conservatively managed financial institutions in the country. It was founded in 1862 and its Assets are in excess of $14,000,000.00. It receives on deposit sum from $1.00 up and pays Four per cent interest, compounded twice yearly.

—JUST ISSUED!— Devotional Songs

EDITED BY THREE FAMOUS COMPOSERS AND COMPILERS
W. H. DOANE, MUS. DOG.
WM. J. KIRKPATRICK AND HUBERT P. L.

It contains a larger variety of songs than any other hymn book of its kind ever published. 256 pages. Full Cloth Bound, 27c. $25 per 100; 30 cts. per copy, postage. A returnable copy for examination will be sent on request.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York—Cl

Church Help
MAGIC LANTERNS, STEREOPTIC for illustrating sermons, giving on ments, illustrating hymns. Finest tion of slides. Large catalogue
McALLISTER 49 Nassau St., New York

SENSATIONAL
FLOWER SEED NOVELTY

EVER-BLOOMING HOLLYHOCKS

FLOWER
THE FIRST
SEASON FROM SEED!

Blooming continuously and profusely from July until frozen.
Every garden may now be enriched with the stately Queen of Flowers. Grown as easily and flowering as quickly as any garden annual.
GRAND COMBINATION MIXTURE.
Doubles, Semi-doubles and Singles. In many colors. Packet, 25c.
Our 1904 Catalogue,
"EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN,"
the most superb publication of its kind ever issued—sent free to all purchasers of "Ever-blooming Hollyhock" seed who name this paper.

PER HENDERSON & Co.

537 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK.

10,000 Plants for 16c

More gardens and farms are planted to Salzer's seeds than any other in America. There is reason for this. We own and operate over 500 acres for the production of our warranted seeds. In order to induce you to try them, we make you the following unprecedented offer:
For 16 Cents Postpaid
1000 Early, Medium and Late Cabbages,
2000 Delicious Carrots,
2000 Blanching Celery,
2000 Rich Nutty Lettuce,
1000 Sprigged Onions,
1000 Rare Delicious Radishes,
1000 Gloriously Brilliant Flowers.
A above seven packages contain sufficient seed to grow 10,000 plants, furnishing bushels of brilliant flowers and lots and lots of choice vegetables together with our great catalog, telling all about Flowers, Roses, Small Fruits, etc., all for 16c in stamps and this notice. Mammouth 140-page catalog alone, 4c.
JOHN A. SALZER SEED CO.,
La Crosse, Wis.

Once Grown Always Grown

The Maule motto for more than 25 years. My new

SEED

BOOK for 1904

Cost over $50,000 to publish. If you have a garden you can have a copy for the asking. Send a postal for it to
Wm. Henry Maule, Philadelphia, Pa.

100 VISITING CARDS

Post paid 35c

Booklet styles and sizes. Order filled day received. Booklet 44c. Style Free! Also business, professional and fraternal cards. We have cuts of emblems for all societies.
CHUSTER PTG. & ENG. CO., Dept. 56, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The SUCCESSFUL CHURCH CHOIR

BY PROF. TALI ESEN MORGAN

PROF. TALI ESEN MORGAN

THE church that permits a quartette to do all its singing is a religious refrigerator, with all the outward show and signs of religion, but very little of the spirit of Christianity. On the other hand, wherever you find good congregational singing, you will find warmth, welcome and general good-fellowship.

Without a doubt, the perfection of church music is a volunteer chorus with salaried soloists and capable organist, all under the direction of a competent leader. But, at once, a host of objectors arise and say: "We have tried it and failed." "You can never keep a volunteer choir together." "Every volunteer chorus winds up with a fight." "Raw material can never learn enough of new music so as to sing it even partly well." To these objections, we will say that there are hundreds of volunteer choirs in this country, doing magnificent work, where social discords do not prevail, nor signs of decay are to be found. Perhaps the suggestions which follow may point the way to a better understanding of the problem.

The successful choir leader must never lose his temper. He must command respect and attention. He must know every measure of the music in hand. He must have definite ideas of what he wants and work towards that end. He must be brave enough to dismiss from membership gossipers and scandal-mongers. He must have no favorites and be equally just to all. He must keep his word and be always on time. He must never speak ill of any one in chorus or church. In adjusting disputes or misunderstandings between members, he must temper justice with mercy, and keep his own counsels. He must not have too great an opinion of himself, nor dress in flippant style. He must be one of the choir.

Ninety-five people out of every hundred have good singing voices. Singing is just as natural and necessary to human life as food or sunshine, and the great majority of people love to sing. Therefore it is not a difficult matter to start a choir; the trouble is to keep it alive and useful. Great care must be taken in the formation of a chorus, otherwise the rocks ahead will surely wreck it. Most of the "chorus choirs" in the evangelical churches are organized with a flourish of trumpets, and "everybody" invited to join. The result is that the first few rehearsals are attended by a large number. One or two anthems are well mastered and sung in church. Very soon the attendance begins to fall off, because the choir will sing music that is not half mastered. After that the choir is simply tolerated, for the reason that it is made up very largely of the members of the church.

When the formation of a chorus has been agreed to, decide at once on the number wanted. Let it be understood that a small choir of sixteen or twenty inexperienced voices can never do even moderately good work, and there should never be less than forty. Sixty and over would be better. But let us suppose a chorus of fifty is wanted. First select five people who have fairly good singing voices, but, above all, people upon whom you can depend in sunshine or storm, and who have the respect of all people. Apportion each of the five a "captain" over ten, and let them select with great care nine persons who like music, and who possess fair singing voices. Select neither very young nor old people. Girls in short dresses, or boys whose voices have not yet fully changed should never be chosen. Pledge each person to a serious vow to attend every rehearsal and the Sunday services, regardless of weather conditions. You have then a real, solid, live organization. Number your captains 10, 20, 30, 40 and 50, and these are respectively, "sections one, two, three, four and five." The captains are the executive committee, and ordinary business should never be transacted before the choir. Select a live young man or woman, who is not a member of the singing forces, as secretary. Let him take the numbers of the singers as they enter, and during a five-minute intermission hand each captain a list of those present. It is the special business of the captains to either write or visit the absentees, and if they miss three consecutive rehearsals to replace them with new material.

Once each month finish the choir rehearsals at nine o'clock and spend the balance of the evening in social intercourse. Let each member pay ten cents a month, and secure five dollars a month from the church or from individuals to provide refreshments for the social night. If these socials are kept up, the life of the choir is assured.

If the organist is not the leader, he should bow to the will of the conductor in every case. As a matter of fact, the leader should be permitted to engage his own accompanist in order to secure the best results. Unless the organist is a good reader, and an experienced accompanist, good work will be simply impossible. With an inexperienced chorus it is very necessary that the leader shall stand before his choir and beat time. In the hymns he should face the congregation, and compel everybody to follow his time and not permit the organist and congregation to lead him. A leader must lead.

We will now suppose you have a choir of fifty, divided into fifteen sopranos, ten altos, ten tenors and fifteen basses. Friday or Saturday nights are the best rehearsal nights. Begin on time, even if only a dozen are present. Take the music up in sections. First teach the basses alone, then the altos, afterward the tenors, and finally the sopranos. Sing that section through until it is well mastered. Work rapidly. Do not let things drag.

It is all very well for high-class musicians to say, sing good music or none at all, but it is a safe rule never to attempt music that is beyond the ability of the choir to sing, and sing well. This does not mean that you should select the miserable jingle music that is published under the names of "anthems." You can get easy music that is good. If you have no soloists engaged, never hesitate to have all the voices of that part sing the solo in unison. A good anthem can be sung and ought to be, six or eight times a year, and a chorus never knows an anthem well until it is given in public at least four times. Anthems, like hymns, are for worship, and not for show. Do not fall into the foolish error of not singing Easter and Christmas music except on Easter Sunday and Christmas. When the minister agrees never to allude to the birth and resurrection of Jesus Christ except once a year, then it will be time enough for the choir never to sing of these two most important events in the Christian religion. Songs like the "Lost Chord," the "Palms," the "King of Love My Shepherd Is," can be given in unison with splendid effect. Learn a few hymns like "Abide With Me," "Lead Kindly Light," and sing them as an offertory with much delicacy and expression. Be sure that each person has a copy of the music. A director is never compelled to follow the time and expression marks of the copy, for he has full liberty to sing it, in order to get the best effect, according to his judgment.

If there are voices in the chorus capable of singing well the solo parts, select your singers well in advance. If you have a "soloist" who is disposed to make trouble for the conductor by act or word, never hesitate to dismiss that person, for many a good choir has been destroyed by such people. When it is once understood that the leader has to go out of his way to please and smooth down the ruffled feathers of any member of the choir, his usefulness as a "leader" is ended.

The choir should enter at the same time, and promptly on the minute. After the chronic late-comers have been barred out a few times, they will either correct their bad habits or quit. Under no circumstances whatever should women be permitted to wear hats in the choir. During the past five years, the number of hatless choirs have been rapidly growing. The hats absorb the sound, and obstruct the view, and are entirely out of place during the church service. All honor to the conductors, organists, and ministers who are bringing about this much needed reform. If the choir is not uniformly robed, the ladies should wear white waists and black skirts. At any rate, do something to abolish the varied-colored waists that are now an eyesore to any congregation. Adopt one uniform style of dress. The behavior of the choir during the service is a most important matter, and it should be thoroughly understood that whispering members shall be dismissed. To write notes, or carry on a whispered conversation during the sermon is an insult to the speaker, an annoyance to the congregation, and shows extreme lack of good sense and proper manners on the part of the offenders.

The inauguration of robed choirs, with processional and recessional, in the evangelical churches is highly commended. It adds dignity and tone to the entire service, and tends greatly to the spirit of true worship.

The Infant
takes first to human milk; that failing, the mother turns at once to cow's milk as the best substitute. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is a cow's milk scientifically adapted to the human infant. Stood first for forty-five years

Said the Watchman
"Here's the Point"
Remember that when you buy
Dueber-Hampden
Watches
They are complete and
"Accurate-to-the-Second"

Movement and case built and guaranteed by the largest firm making complete high-grade watches. The only firm which assumes the responsibility for accuracy of time as well as quality of case in the high-grade watches it makes.

A Dueber-Hampden is Unique
How can anyone guarantee a watch who only makes half of it?
We have just issued a handsome book "Light from the Watchman," which we send on request. It tells much of interest to watch buyers.
DUEBER-HAMPDEN WATCH WORKS,
124 South Street, Canton, O.
Among other fine watches, the book describes "The 100" Ladies Watch—smallest accurate watch in the world. Perfect in durability and elegance.

BECOME A NURSE

NO occupation open to women can compare with that of the trained nurse. It is elevating, enjoyable work, graduates earning $15 to $30 a week. We teach this profession by mail. An interesting booklet which clearly defines the scope of our courses and the nature of our work will be sent without expense to interested readers.

Address
CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING,
241 Main Street, Jamestown, N. Y.

We are Going to Stop at the Christian Endeavor Hotel,
World's Fair, St. Louis

And so are we, Because
It will be the headquarters during the Exposition for Christian Endeavorers, Baptist Young People, Sunday Schools, Educators, etc. Adjoining the Fair Grounds, with street cars direct from Union Station to hotel. Built for perfect safety and comfort. Capacity, 3,000 daily; Auditorium 3,000. Backed by men of highest standing; endorsed by St. Louis Clergy. Charter Certificates, series A, issued on receipt of $1.00, entitle holders to reduced rate of $1.00 per day for lodging, or $2.00 per day for lodging and board. For full particulars, address at once,
Christian Endeavor Hotel and Auditorium Co.,
CHEMICAL BUILDING, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Gospel Triumphs in the New Hebrides

THE VETERAN MISSIONARY, DR. JOHN G. PATON
THANKS THE READERS OF THIS JOURNAL . . .

Dear Mr. Klopsch:—Let me most cordially thank the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the remittance they, by you, so kindly sent me for our New Hebrides Mission. At present, such contributions we specially welcome, because our income last year did not cover our expenditure by $11,200. With the utmost economy and care, the expenses of supporting fourteen missionaries, three lay helpers and about two hundred native teachers, and the cost of maritime work in the islands, made a total of $22,150, while our income was only $10,950. This debt has perplexed us a good deal; but in prayer and faith, leaving all to our dear Lord Jesus Christ, we have resolved for another year to press on in his work with our full staff of missionaries, in the hope that by his stewards He will supply all we need to meet our debt and carry on the work, so that we may not have to reduce our staff and close some of our stations where the work is so much needed.

REV. JOHN G. PATON

We began our work on the New Hebrides Islands when all the natives were nude, painted savage cannibals, who had no written language, and who murdered five of their first missionaries and feasted on two of them, and a sixth died soon after a savage effort with clubs to take his life and mine. Our lives were often attempted, and they plundered my station of all our food and of all I possessed, except my pocket Bible and the clothes I had on. What a treasure that Bible was to me. After, as by miracle, passing through many hairbreadth escapes, in what appeared to be our last extremity, a sandalwood trading ship called, by which another missionary, his wife and I, and two teachers and their wives, escaped to Amizum, but soon after they all died, and of our party I only was left to tell the sad story.

Our contributors to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the United States will be pleased to hear that I went to Australia, and God soon moved his people voluntarily to give me, by addresses at meetings, $25,000, with which we got our first Day-spring mission ship, and also many missionaries from Scotland and Canada, and with them I returned to the islands, nearly forty years ago. And by steady perseverance God has now given us to occupy twenty-four of our thirty islands on our group, by twenty-five ordained white missionaries and white lay helpers, and 330 native teachers and preachers of the Gospel. We have translated the Scriptures into twenty-four new languages, and have about 17,000 converts, yet it is believed that on the New Hebrides there are still from 40,000 to 60,000 cannibals or more, to whom we are doing all we can to give the teaching of our dear Lord Jesus Christ. We have an institution for training native teachers, under the care of Dr. and Mrs. Annand and their helpers, and a large hospital for white and colored people, under the management of Dr. Bowi and his assistants, and three smaller hospitals at a great distance from each other. The group is about four hundred miles in length.

Of late, we are having great success in the conversion of many of the natives. For instance, one missionary, after six years' work, has now six hundred avowed converts, who were once exceedingly savage cannibals. Another missionary, has a regular congregation of 1,300 persons, of whom 200 are communicants, and a Sunday School of 1,200. At a recent collection at that station, over $32 was given. Their contributions last year, in cash, arrowroot and work, aggregated $600. The churches have also paid the cost of printing the Bible in their own tongue.

At our station, the young chief and his wife are zealous evangelists among the people of this island. One day lately, they, accompanied by a young lad, walked five miles inland to preach at a heathen village. After the service, not far from the village, returning on the path, from the savages concealed in the bush, a volley of rifle bullets were discharged at them. As none were wounded, they ran for their lives, praying to Jesus to take them home to heaven or protect them. Fifteen savages ran after them, discharging their rifles at them as fast as they could reload them. The chief's wife got exhausted, and they caught her, and when about to kill her one of them came up and forbade the murder, as they had not first got the chief. After they had taken from her all she had, they let her go. Their miraculous preservation, in the circumstances, made a great impression for good on all the party; but the chief's mind was a little affected after it, and he was sent for rest, and to be under a doctor's care for a time, away from his persecutors.

Four savages from the same village were one night on the mission premises, and attended a service in the church, intending to murder the missionary; but God again frustrated their plans, to the joy of the Christians, and the strengthening of their faith. In a real sense, every convert on our islands, by their changed lives, and speaking to all of their new joys and hopes, become effective missionaries to others around them, in leading them to Jesus for salvation. If the Christians of civilized lands were as zealous as those converted heathen, and as earnest in the desire for the salvation of souls, the world would soon be transformed.

With feelings of deep gratitude to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and wishing you all every blessing in Jesus, I remain, yours faithfully, JOHN G. PATON.
74 Princess St., Kew, Victoria, Australia.

Worth Three Times its Cost

I received my premium and Calenear, and am delighted with both, especially with How I Worked My Way Around the World, which is worth three times what you ask for it.
Portland, Maine. MRS. W. E. ELLIOTT.

PRISCILLA

Priscilla

the heroine among the Pilgrims, lived at Elder Brewster's. The Story of Plymouth Rock

a thrilling account of the settlement of Plymouth, tells of her strange experiences.

Send 6 cents in stamps for postage and get this beautiful story of the Pilgrims, and a full pint sample, free, of the celebrated

PLYMOUTH ROCK (Phosphated) GELATINE

Or, send 15 cents in stamps and get this handsome Book and a full-sized Package of the Gelatine. Address Dept. Q.
Plymouth Rock Gelatine Co., Boston, Mass.

MEN AND WOMEN OF MONEY

Write for my FREE BOOK about Missouri—her wealth, laws, and 5 per cent. Farm Mortgages printed in colors—profusely illustrated. FREE.
WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 5 Wardell Bldg., MACON, MO.

FURNACES at FIRST COST

Our free book tells how you can save dealers' profit by buying direct from the makers. Send for it. Hess Warming & Ventilating Co., Room 711, Tacoma Bldg Chicago

Some Silk Tags

Recommend particular soaps and caution against Cheap Washing Powders. Latter is good advice, but cannot refer to

Pearline

Test. We washed our clothes in Pearline for three hours, 20 skeins of the most sensitive and delicately colored fabric. The result was a perfect whiteness and no loss of color. Pearline is the only soap recommended by the makers of all the fine fabrics.

The Results of the Abuse of Pearline prove that there is certainly no risk to Color in the Use of Pearline

WHILE YOU ARE GETTING PERHAPS 5% 3% or 4%, WE PAY

The difference in the income is from 25 to 66 2/3 per cent. Our security is absolute: our payments PROMPT. A postal card will bring you ample evidence of the Company's entire responsibility.

Some of $25 upward, always, withdrawable on 30 days' notice—5 per cent. per annum paid on every day invested. Supervised by N. Y. Banking Dept.

Assets, . . . $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, . . . 175,000

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Seeds, Plants, Roses,

Bulbs, Vines, Shrubs, Fruit and Ornamental Trees

The best by 50 years test, 1000 acres, 40 in Hardy roses. Including 45,000 of the famous Crimson Rambler, 4 greenhouses of Palms, Ferns, Ficus, Geraniums, Ever-blooming Roses and other things too numerous to mention. Seeds, Plants, Roses, Etc., by mail postpaid, safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Elegant 168 page catalogue free. Send for it and see what values we give for a little money, a number of collections of Seeds, Plants, Trees, Etc., offered cheap which will interest you.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.,
Box 194 PAINESVILLE, OHIO.

D. and C. Roses

are the best. Always on their own roots. Plants mailed to any point in the United States. Safe arrival guaranteed. 50 years' experience. Flower and Vegetable seeds a specialty. A premium with every order. Write for 'New Guide to Rose Culture' for 1904—the leading rose catalogue of America. 148 pages. Mailed free. Over 1,000 varieties. Tells how to grow them and all other desirable flowers. Est. 1850. 70 greenhouses. THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., West Grove, Pa.

ARE YOU SATISFIED

with your present position and salary? If not write us for plan and booklet. We have openings for Managers, Secretaries, Advertising Men, Salesmen, Bookkeepers, etc., paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. High grade exclusively.

HAPGOODS (Inc.),

Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT? If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcoholic Addictions. Relief Guaranteed. HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED. We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R5, Lebanon, Ohio.

FLOWERS—Park's Floral Magazine, trial, Park's Seed Pkg., 1000 sorts, for a big bed that will surprise you with new flowers every day all summer, all for stamp. Geo. W. Park, R52, La Park, Pa.

GET YOUR GLASSES AT WHOLESALE

Examine your own eyes. Send for "SCOPE" latest inv. of the 20th century. SENT FREE, with our titillating catalogue of spectacles and glasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Send to: Grand Rapids Wholesale Optica 402 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

SHETLAND PONIE

GIVEN AWAY

Everybody should have for my 1904 Seed Catalogue and see how land Ponies can be free. Catalogue full of Seeds, Plants, Bulbs, Flowers, Special fers, 18 Breeds Poul colored plates; dreds of illustrat and 100 cash cou worth 10c to all, for 5c. Send for it to

F. H. MILLS, Seedsmen, Box 102 Rosehill, N.

Morwick's Mutton Tallow

An old family remedy in new and pleasant form. Won't turn rancid. The ideal treatment for and all similar troubles. Large size 25 cents, or a good sample jar 10c—postage paid. Descriptive circular free on request.

Chapped Hands, Rough Skin

Wood & Bolton, 286 Main St., Poughkeepsie,

RAINBOW PANSY

A grand novelty which 25c. per packet, but if send us, before March cent stamp and the of three persons who we will send you a packet of Rainbow pay you for your trou a copy of our large, catalog, containing of illustrations, many choice novelties and bargain prices on seeds, plants and bulbs. IOWA SEED CO., DES MOINES.

The Burpee Quality in Seeds

Best that can be Grown! The new "Silent Salesman" of the largest mail-order seed trade in the world will be sent with 178 pages of useful information and hundreds of true illustrations—if you mail a postal to

W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Seed Farmers, Philadelphia

MELLIN'S FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS FOOD

File babies become rosy and pretty babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food strengthens.

Beautifully printed pages of helpful hints about "The Care and Feeding of Infants," bound in cloth, will be sent you free if you ask for it.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Hope Manufacturing Co. Famous Chainless Bicycles

Equipped with two-speed gear, coaster brake, and cushion frame.

All Standard Chain Models

Eastern Department
Hartford, Conn.

"COLUMBIA"
"RIBUNE"
"CLEVELAND"
"CRAWFORD"

Western Department
Chicago, Ill.

"DESCENT"
"MONARCH"
"RAMBLER"
"IMPERIAL"

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

5% Your Money 5%

WORKS WHILE YOU SLEEP

IF INVESTED WITH THE HARBOR AND SUBURBAN BUILDING
AND SAVINGS ASSOCIATION
(Organized 1888)

21 E. 14th St., N. Y. City.

Dividends 5% Per Annum

Send for descriptive pamphlet giving full information.

Under supervision New York State Banking Department.

5% 5%

PIANO Do You Want a Genuine Bargain

Hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting to be sold at once. They include Steinways, Knabes, Fischers, and other well known makes. Many cannot be sold at retail prices. All are offered at a discount. Also beautiful New Uprights as low as $125.00. A fine $250.00. Monthly payments accepted. Freight only about $1.00. For list and particulars. You make a great saving. Guaranteed as represented. Illustrated Piano Book Free.

LION & HEALY

75 Adams St., CHICAGO.

Largest music house; sells Everything known in Music

By R. A. TORREY, Supr.
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

THE GIST OF THE S. S. LESSONS, 1904

Three pages to each lesson. Spiritual. Practical. 160 pages. Bound in real leather. FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY, New York. 150 Fifth Avenue. Chicago. 64 Washington St.

FREE To all who mention The Christian Herald in ordering the GIST we will send for 3 months free. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ILLUSTRATOR. (Your's Truly Give)

ONLY 25¢

Individual Communion
Outfits. Send for FREE catalogue and list of users.
SANITARY COMMUNION SUPPLY CO.
Box 7. ROCHESTER, N. Y.

FREE TO AGENTS
Flat thin knife cut loose and take. $2
Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T.

US-SOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N. Y.

LURCH FURNITURE. Pews, Assembly Chairs, Bibles, S. S. Seating, and at GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE WORKS,
Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The History of Hymns

History and Use of Hymn Tunes. By David R. Breed, D.D., Chicago and New York. Fleming H. Revell Co. Pp. 364. Price $1.50. This book treats in an entertaining and instructive manner in Part I. on Ancient Hymns, Greek and Latin Hymns, German Hymns, Psalmody, English Hymnology, The Best Hymns. In Part II., Tunes, History of Hymn Tunes, The Appearing of the Hymn Tune, The Perfecting of the American Hymn Tune, The Best Tunes. Thus far the author seems to have stated his case fairly and well, and has given a fund of information requiring great research and study. The chapter on Gospel Songs and Singers does not show such research as one would expect in a work of this kind. The Gospel Hymns cannot be compared with such standard Hymn and Tune collections as "In Excelsis," "The Presbyterian Hymnal," or any Hymnal for use in the regular church worship. The Gospel Songs, with their Gospel Hymns, are intended only for the social meetings of the church, where there is no choir nor quartette, and possibly no stated leader of the singing; therefore the music is more in the song style rather than the hymn tune. It is a lamentable fact that the music of the churches to-day is more classical and less inspiring and devotional than was the simpler hymn tune of forty years ago, when sung by the choir and congregation, and it is not to be expected that the social meetings of the church can use the more classical music of the present day unless they are willing to come together for rehearsal beforehand; besides, there is not one independent reader of music to-day in the United States, where there were hundreds in the days of the old-fashioned singing school, and when there were fewer pianos and organs. This also is greatly to be regretted. Still, this book by Dr. Breed is well worth reading and study.

Books Received

The Life, Passion and Death of James Blount of Breckenridge. by Beulah Marie Dix. A strange, stirring, weird, old-time story, dating back to the seventeenth century, and dealing with the Rowles-stone family of Yorkshire, England. Pp. 345, cloth covers. Price $1.50 Macmillan Company, New York and London, publishers.

The Young Woman in Modern Life. by Beverly Warner, D.D. A little book (the author explains) which sets forth some of the problems with which the young woman is bound to concern herself. Thoughtful, entertaining and helpful. 218 pages, cloth. Price 85 cents. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York, publishers.

Half-a-Dozen Housekeepers; a Story for Girls. by Kate Douglas Wiggin, illustrated. An excellent and thoroughly enjoyable story, rich in humor and clever in character delineation. Cloth ornamental covers, 162 pages. Price 75 cents. Henry Altemus Co., Philadelphia, publishers.

Pomink, a Waif of Labrador. a brave boy's life for brave boys, by William Byron Forbush, illustrated. This is a true story of Pomink's life, and will be read with interest by young and old alike. Pp. 156, cloth covers. The Pilgrim Press, New York and Chicago, publishers.

"Sixty Jane," by John Luther Long. A little book of nine capital stories—"humorous, pathetic, thrilling, and all tenderly humane." Pp. 208, cloth binding. Price $1.25. Century Company, New York, publishers.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

M. E. W., Birmingham, Ala. "I wish to add my testimony to the answered prayers. For over forty years, I have learned to take all my cares to the Lord in prayer, and my prayers have been answered while I was yet on my knees."

Reader, Brooklyn. "God has answered my prayer. Recently, I promised that if he would grant me one request I would acknowledge it to the world. He heard and has answered it. Bless his holy name!"

Subscriber, Columbus, Kans. "I want to add my testimony to answered prayers. The Lord has answered my prayers many times. I take even my trivial troubles to him, for he is a Friend that 'sticketh closer than a brother.'"

Mrs. J. P., Brandy Station, Va. "The Lord has allowed me to be tried, that I might learn to know him as the 'Heaven of Prayer.' I have had, recently, a burden lifted, and a definite prayer answered."

E. M. H., Westfield, N. Y. "Three times within a year, God has answered my prayers almost directly, and I then promised to publicly acknowledge his goodness."

Believer, East Dorset, Vt. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to a special prayer. I believe God does answer prayer; and he will, if we only have faith and ask his help."

Reader, Canandaigua, N. Y. "I desire to acknowledge God's goodness in hearing and answering prayer for a dear son. I was afraid he was lost, but he is now saved."

Mrs. R. B., Canadian, Tex. "I promised the dear Lord if he would answer my prayer for the conversion of my husband I would acknowledge it publicly, and now I rejoice that I have the promise from God that he has heard and will answer."

S. Millersburg, Pa. "I promised the Lord if he would answer or hear my prayer, I would make acknowledgment of the same. It looked dark and dismal, but the Lord has kept his promise. Anything in the name of Jesus he will grant, if we only believe."

E. E. S., Saegerstown, Pa. "I wish to praise the Lord for answered prayer."

The Oldsmobile

is Built on the

FOUNDATION STONE OF EXPERIENCE

All Oldsmobiles are built on the foundation of experience.

Oldsmobile Standard Runabout, $650
Oldsmobile Tonneau Car, $950; without Rear Seat, $850
Oldsmobile Touring Runabout, $750
Oldsmobile Light Delivery Wagon, $850

For a copy of the captivating story "Golden Gate to Hell Gate" write Dept. O. Olds Motor Works Detroit, U. S. A. Member of the Association of Licensed Automobile Mfrs

To the Lover of Music.

THE MUSIC LOVERS' LEAGUE offers an original, interesting and inexpensive plan, by which the latest music, popular, sacred, etc., in sheet form, may be secured for its members.

The method utilized by the League has received the endorsement of men and women of national repute.

Not connected with any publishing house; not a so-called musical club; not a method for the disposal of worthless music; not an advertising trick of any kind whatsoever.

The plan, which is explained in our booklet, may be obtained by sending your name and address to the

MUSIC LOVERS' LEAGUE
ROOM 520,
UNITED BANK BLDG.,
PATERSON, NEW JERSEY.

PETER MOLLER'S COD LIVER OIL

prepared by an improved process, the result of years of scientific investigation, may be confidently relied upon as being of Absolute Purity and Free from Disagreeable Taste and Odor.

Moller's Oil always gives satisfactory results because of its perfect digestibility and it may be taken continuously without causing gastric disturbance.

In flat, oval bottles only, with name of Schiffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents.

BIG MONEY Made at Home

Weaving Rugs and Carpet
NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED
$4 a Day
Easily Made

We start men and women in a profitable business on a small investment. Write quick for prices and Loom Book.
REED MFG. CO.
Box S. Springfield, Ohio

Bound Books at Sheet Price

RIDPATH'S HISTORY OF THE WORLD

Sent on 7 Days' Approval; Small Monthly Payments.

If you'd like to possess the only world's history that reads like a story-book—yet is recognized by such men as William McKinley, Benjamin Harrison, Dr. Cuyler, Bishop Vincent and thousands more as a standard authority and the greatest historical reference work in existence, SEND FOR FREE SPECIMEN BOOK TODAY. That specimen book will give you all facts and details—why YOU need it—how YOU can secure a slightly "rubbed" set at the value of the unbound sheets—nine royal octavo volumes—4000 illustrations and color plates. Complete set is sent at once.

IN cleaning up our stock we find a few slightly "rubbed" sets—about 20, and rather than rebind such a small lot, we will dispose of them at what the sheets are worth to us unbound, and on small monthly payments.

Books are 11 inches tall

We guarantee that this is the latest, most complete, up to date and unabridged edition, containing our war with Spain, all about the Philippines, Cuba and our new possessions, etc.

Space here is costly; our free sample book tells everything.

CUT THE COUPON OFF AND SEND IT TO-DAY.

You need not cut off coupon if you mail your name and address to: Reed Manufacturing Co., Dept. O, Springfield, Ohio. We will send you the book at once. Name _____ Address _____

In Case of Accident

be prompt to apply Pond's Extract—the old family doctor; its soothing and healing powers are marvelous. It relieves burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sprains, wounds, lameness, soreness, neuralgia, rheumatism, sunburn, bites, frostbite, stings; stops nose-bleed, toothache, earache, bleeding lungs, hemorrhages and all pains. Keep a bottle of Pond's Extract handy and be your own doctor—there's a feeling of security about it. For 60 years your grandparents and parents have used it and have never been disappointed. Watered witch hazel is cheaper than Pond's Extract, and for that reason is offered sometimes as a substitute—you'll be disappointed if you accept it. If you want the genuine, get Pond's Extract.

Sold only in sealed bottles under buff wrappers.

ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTE

THE BLACKSTONE ROTARY WASHING MACHINE

Works both ways, backwards and forwards. Runs easier and washes cleaner than any other. Closes tight preventing escape of foul steam from soiled clothes. Plenty of room for large size wringer. This washer when used according to directions with each machine, is guaranteed satisfactory, or money paid will be returned. It will pay you to write us before buying elsewhere.

THE BLACKSTONE MFG. CO.
Dept. H.
Jamestown, N. Y.
Oldest and Largest Makers of Washing Machines in United States. Estab. 1872.

"The Pearl Suit and Skirt Hangers"

SOLD EVERYWHERE

The best device for keeping the dresses neat and shapely, enabling you to put three times the quantity of clothing in your closet. Women who like their dresses neat and shapely will appreciate the PEARL HANGERS. One-third the price of other hangers. Sample, Postpaid, 30 cents. Ask your dealer for them.

FREEMAN SCOTT, (Dept. D) 1506 Mont'g, Ave., Phila., Pa.

FAY STOCKINGS for Women, Boys and Girls.

Something Good. Protect Health. Prevent sickness, summer or winter. Button at waist. No supporters. Fit fine—Feel fine. Never wrinkle or come down. Fine for dress. Strong for play. The ideal stocking for all. Best yarns, best dyes. Prices low. Satisfaction or money back. Sent, postage paid, where not sold by dealers. Write for circulars to-day, or try a pair.

THE FAY STOCKING COMPANY,
31 T Street, Elyria, Ohio.

YOU WEAR STOCKINGS

SAVE MONEY AND WEAR MUCH FINER ONES BY ORDERING THEM DIRECT FROM THE MILL. ORDER TODAY, MONEY BACK IF NOT SATISFIED. 3 PAIRS OR LATEST OPENWORK DESIGNS FOR $1.00. POSTAGE PREPAID, GUARANTEED FAST, BLACK, BOOKLET FREE. CHESTER, PA. 14 JOHN ST. NEW YORK.

LARGEST MANUFACTURERS OF FINE HOSIERY IN U.S.A.

$100. to $300. MONTHLY.

Men and women. Salesmen, Managers and General Agents. Delightful business year round. Hustlers getting rich. Write today for brand-new plan and Special Offer this month. 100 per cent profits. No risk. Goods well advertised. National reputation. Fully guaranteed. Customers delighted. Write an old firm, capital $100,000. Catalogue FREE. Any energetic man or woman can get good position, paying big wages.

WORLD MFG. CO.,
81 World Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

A Golden-Hearted Princess

LITTLE Princess Pilar, of Bavaria, is twelve years old. On her last birthday, she appealed to the Bavarian children of rich or well-to-do families to come to the help of their poorer brethren and sisters of "Seraphic Band," and she asked all the poor who could do so to devote an hour a day to working for them. She hoped that forms of employment might be devised by parents who wanted the assistance of youthful hands for members who, having no money to give, might offer their labor. This appeal met with a generous response, and there will be a unique entertainment to which only members of the Seraphic Band will contribute, one of these days, at the Nymphenberg Palace.

The young Princess furnishes to the children of the poor whose work she asks, wool and cotton for knitting, silks for embroidery, knitting and crochet needles, and models. Any poor child is free to write to her to ask what may be needful for the fulfillment of the task she has set. She answers by postcard, and sends the things wanted by a lady belonging to some charity organization society, who recommends perseverance, and says a few words on the sacredness of the engagement entered into. Sometimes dolls' clothes, or small stockings, or knitted caps, are undertaken. Hundreds of children as Christmas drew, near wrote to the Princess to say they were too poor to hope for toys or a Christmas tree, and that, if she found work for them, they would be glad to help.

A poor boy of eight wrote to the twelve-year-old Lady Bountiful, to say that the judge's wife assured him he might address the princess freely, and tell her that his body linen was worn out, and he had to lie in bed on Sunday while his mother washed and dried it. Would she be so good to think of him when she had body linen to distribute. Another child, wrote from a slum, that she and her sister had seen with gladness the portrait of the princess in a shop window, and hoped she would allow them to present her their affectionate salutations. A third, made a request on behalf of herself and her little brother. He could make little frames and toy beehives with eggshells and the pulp of rushes, and the writer herself could crochet or paint flowers. "Send me, dear princess, some paper and colors, and you will see that I can paint roses and forget-me-nots very nicely." The princess has always on hand a stock of postcards with her portrait, to send to children who ask for it, and who have shown her that they can keep engagements. In her archives, are delighted letters of thanks for such portraits, and prayers for other favors.

A Question and Its Answer

ARE there any good results from spiritual work among prisoners? Those who are in the world say No; those who have worked among them say Yes. Not long ago I received a letter from one who had spent some time in prison:

"I am putting my trust in Him (he wrote) who does all things well, and since my home-coming I have made a public declaration of my faith in my Heavenly Father, and am praying every day that He will so guide me that I may not go astray, and that He will give me strength to fight the battles I have before me, manfully."

At the close of the services one Sabbath, while I was talking to the men, one man, pointing to his suit, said, "I did nothing wrong, so as to wear these, but I had no home nor friends, and so I went to the judge, asking him to send me here, for I did not want to do anything bad to be sent here." To me it was most pathetic, that a man should be willing to sacrifice his freedom and every feeling of respect rather than commit some offense against our laws, and be sent to prison, and wear what, to so many, are the marks of wrong-doing. It was one of the most extraordinary of the many things I have heard and seen in my prison work.

REV. R. C. BOWEN,

Chaplain King's County Penitentiary.

The Lord Gave Her Strength

Mrs. Mary Schnell was born in Germany, September 12, 1836. During the year of 1854 she came to America, and settled in Burnet County, Texas, near what is now the little town of Bertram, and was one of the pioneers of the State. She was reared a Catholic. During the summer of 1861, she attended a protracted meeting, was converted, and joined the Missionary Baptist Church, and for forty-two years she has been a faithful soldier. During all these years she has only missed one conference meeting, and she lives eleven miles from her church. For many years her husband was so afflicted that the entire care of supporting her children rested upon her. She says the Lord gave her wonderful strength and endurance for the work she had to do, and that his loving care protected her in many times of danger. "Sister Schnell," as she is familiarly known, is loved and respected for many miles around Bertram. She attends all the protracted meetings, when her health permits, not only of her own denomination, but others as well, and is never so happy as when testifying of the Lord's goodness to her. She gives gladly of her meagre means to the cause she loves so well. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is sent to her by a friend, is a treasure to her.

Lincoln Freed The Slaves

And we free the house-keeper—free her from the bondage of "Blue Day" or "Wash Day"—free the clothes from dirt without rubbing and wringing—free the wash from the kitchen and have it on the line at 6 o'clock in the morning—and we prove every one of these statements free by sending you the

"1900" FAMILY WASHER

FREE TRIAL Freight prepaid. No money or promise of any kind required. Use it for 30 days; then if you do not wish to purchase, return it at our expense. We pay the freight both ways.

Write today for full information and Free Catalogue.

"1900" WASHER CO., 29 B Henry St., Binghamton, N. Y.

No More Marble

"LEST WE FORGET"

Woodlawn Cemetery, New York, Brooklyn Cemetery, Boston, and some others, now prohibit the use of marble monuments. Why? Because

MARBLE HAS PROVED A FAILURE

from the standpoint of durability. Is there any reason why granite will not prove just as much of a failure? None whatever. Don't let an old prejudice to prejudice. Show your progressiveness by electing a which is positively more enduring than the best of granite, far more beautiful and artistic and at the same time less expensive.

WHITE BRONZE MONUMENT

Before ordering a memorial, large or small, write us stating about what expense you anticipate, and we will send you a selected variety of our with prices and information about White Bronze, all without putting you under any obligations. Distance is no obstacle. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Write at once.

BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS

SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS ON WINTER ORDERS.

AGENTS WANTED

Address:

The Monumental Bronze Co.,
70-90 Howard Ave., BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

SAW YOUR WOOD

RUNS EASY Backache weighs only 41 lbs. SAWS DOWN TREES EASILY CARRIED

With a FOLDING SAWING MACHINE. 9 CORDS by ONE MAN in 10 hours. Send for FREE illus. catalogue showing latest improvements and testimonials from thousands. First order secure agency. Folding Sawing Mach. Co. 55 N. Jefferson St. Chicago, Ill.

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package.

Gluten X Grits AND BARLEY CRYSTALS,
Perfect Breakfast and Desert Health Cereals. PANSY FLOUR for Biscuits, Cake and Pastry. Unlike all other goods. Ask Grocers. For book or sample, write FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

You Can Succeed

In the poultry business just as we have if you follow the same plans. We tell all about what we have done and how we did it, in our new book "Poultry for Profit." Gives cuts of every variety of fowl, together with prices for singles, pairs, trios and pens, and eggs for hatching, in season. Cuts and plans for poultry houses. It cost too much money and time to be given away, but is sent for 10 cents.

THE J. W. MILLER CO., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.

Doesn't Overheat Air

The ventilating and heating system of the Gem Incubator doesn't burn the air and kill chicks in shell. Learn more about this low priced, high per cent hatcher from our free catalogue.

GEM INCUBATOR COMPANY. Darmer W. Dayton, Ohio.

VIGOROUS CHICKS

are the results of Petaluma Incubators. They maintain Nature's conditions. They have no accidents, make no failures. Catalogue free.

PETALUMA INCUBATOR COMPANY,
Box 64 Petaluma, Cal. Box 43, Indianapolis, Ind.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE of Standard bred poultry for 1904, printed in colors, fine chromo, suitable for framing, illustrates and describes 60 varieties. Gives reasonable prices for stock and eggs, tells all about poultry, their diseases, lice, etc. This book only 10 cents.

B. H. GREIDER, RHEIMS, PA.

DON'T SET HENS the same old way while A 200 Egg Natural Hen Incubator Costs But $3, other sizes equally as low. Over 100,000 in use. Indispensable to anyone who keeps a hen. Our Patents protected against infringement. Agents wanted everywhere, either sex, no experience necessary. Catalogue mailed at about 25c. Write for Form FREE. If you write today

NATURAL HEN INCUBATOR CO., B84, Columbus, Nebraska

The Wonderful Mission of the INTERNAL BATH

by means of the

J. B. L. CASCADE

Do you know that many of the greatest physicians endorse and prescribe the "J. B. L. Cascade" treatment? Also that the following distinguished people are among its patrons: Ex-Gov. Goodell, of Vermont, U. S. Senator A. P. Go of Maryland, General T. S. Peck, G. A. R., Mont. Miles Devine, ex-City Attorney, Ch. Ill., Lillian Russell, New York, Judge S. V. of Missouri, Judge W. H. Tedford, of Iowa, J. Lowery, St. Mary's Church, Troy, N. Y. John Potts, Victoria College, Toronto, Canada. Rev. W. L. Strange, New Plymouth, Idaho. hosts of others? Do you know that it goes root and eradicates scores of the most troublesome and dangerous diseases that afflict man? Do you know that an occasional Internal Bath is a better preventative of illness and preservation of health than any other single means?

The record of its benefits reads like a revelation to those hitherto unacquainted with it. It is (by means of the "J. B. L. Cascade," the scientific appliance for this purpose) by hundreds of the best known people in New York an innumerable ministers, lawyers, and other persons whose intelligence gives unequivocal weight to their testimony.

It is known that seven-tenths of all disease from the retention of foreign matter in the system; also that the greatest part of this is held in the colon, which is Nature's sewer. The flushing of this sewer removes the greatest cause of disease. While immeasurably the best treatment for constipation, indigestion, etc., it is scarcely any known disease for which the "J. B. L. Cascade" may not be confidently prescribed.

We want to send free to every person, simply a simple statement setting forth this treatment. It contains matter which must interest every thinking person. If you live in New York you are earnestly invited to call and make a pointment for free treatment, but if you cannot call, write for our pamphlet "The What, The Why, The Way," which will be sent free on application, together with our Great Special Offer to the readers of The Christian Herald for this month.

TYRRELL'S HYGIENIC INSTITUTE
Incorporated under the laws of New York State.

Dept. 10 R, 1562 Broadway, New York

RHEUMATISM Relieved Through the Feet

External remedy so successful that the makers send it FREE OF APPROVAL to anybody.

TRY IT.

If 100,000 men and women, suffering from every kind of rheumatism, acute or chronic, have been relieved by a harmless draught on the foot, isn't it worth a trial?

Send your name to the Magic Foot Draught Co. They have so much confidence in the merit of the draughts that they send the every sufferer in the world they send the draught—without a cent in advance. You pay $1.00 Dollar when satisfied with the benefit you receive—otherwise you pay nothing—no decide.

TRADE MARK

The Draughts are worn on the soles of feet because the entire circulatory and nervous systems are most easily reached through the extremely sensitive skin at this point, but they relieve rheumatism in every part of the body, to stay relieved, by drawing acid poisons out of the blood through foot pores. Write to-day to the Magic Foot Draught Co., RA 13 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Miss. for a pair of Draughts free on approval. valuable free booklet on rheumatism is a neglected tooth.

An aching tooth

RUBIFOAM

is elegant, agreeable cleaner, easy to use, just the thing for children. Prevents decay, assures a sweet breath, cleans the teeth and gums in perfect condition.

25c. at Druggists.

For Free Sample Vial, address
E. J. HOYT & CO., - LOWELL, MASS.

Expo-Cresolene

AN INHALATION FOR Whooping Cough,
Croup,
Bronchitis,
Coughs,
Grip,
Hay Fever,
Diphtheria,
Scarlet Fever,

on fall to use CRESOLENE for the distressing and often fatal affections for which is recommended. For more than twenty years we have had the most conclusive assurance that there is nothing better. Ask your physician about it.

An interesting descriptive booklet is sent free, which contains the highest testimonials as to its value.

ALL DRUGGISTS.

EXP-CRESOLENE CO., 150 Fulton Street, New York.

FRANK'S

Drop us a postal. The only complete Fancy Goods and Art Embroidery Material Catalogue issued.

JACOB FRANK & CO., St. Louis, Mo.

HOME WORK FOR WOMEN

Book, "Practical Ideas for Profitable Home Work," teaches women how to become independent without leaving home. It is clear and practical, covering many lines of work. The FIND-IT-MARKET for your goods is thoroughly explained and valuable suggestions are given.

10c sent prepaid on receipt of 50 cents.

Woman's Work Pub. Co., 150 Nassau Street, NEW YORK CITY.

The "Best" Light

is a portable 100 candle power light costing only 2-cts. per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene and cheaper than kerosene. No dirt. No grease. No odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted. Agents Wanted Everywhere.

THE "BEST" LIGHT CO.,
3-70 E 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

IF A SHADE ROLLER HASN'T THIS SIGNATURE ON THE LABEL

Stewart Harkshorn

IT ISN'T AGENUINE HARTSHORN

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Commercial and Churches. Address COILED SPRING FENCE CO. Box 19 Winchester, Ind.

THE HOLY DAY

Christ's Teaching About the Observance of the Sabbath

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE word "Sabbath," singular or plural, occurs no less than eighty-three times in the Word of God. God never wastes words, and we may be sure, that which he speaks of so often is of great importance in his sight. Our Lord says: "The Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day," but he has never given this lordship to another. In a day when there is increasing desecration of the Sabbath, it is well to search diligently the Word of God, that we may know his mind about the keeping of the Sabbath.

God would have us "call the Sabbath day a delight," not because we can indulge ourselves more on that day than on any other, but because it is "holy of the Lord, honorable." "Oh, what a dull Sunday you would have us lead!" say some. The Lord Jesus said, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." And how true it is! But our beloved Lord died that we might be forgiven, and saved from that love of self which seeks its own pleasure, does its own way, and speaks its own words, not only on the Sabbath day, but on every day. When he has drawn us to himself, and we have passed from death—in trespasses and sins (Eph. 2:1), and in the dead works of our own unregenerate nature—unto life in him, then our hearts are filled with him. Delighting ourselves in the Lord (Ps. 37:4), we call the Sabbath a delight; and it is our delight to "honor him" and to honor his day, because it is his day. No outward observance will honor him as will a heart that appreciates him and his gift of the Sabbath.

The Pharisees were proud of their external observance of the Sabbath, but Jesus saw down below this; he read their hearts, and weighed their lives in the balance of the sanctuary. He found them to be men who, "for a pretence made long prayer;" it was entirely an outside thing, for the eye of man; and their Sabbath observance was of the same order. They "devoured widows' houses," they committed perjury, yet they were as particular about tithing the herbs of their garden as they were in the outward observance of the Sabbath; but their hearts were unchanged; they "omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and truth" (Matt. 23:23), and the Lord described them as whitened sepulchres, beautiful outward, but full of corruption within. Such men could not honor him; they did not, and could not, themselves call the Sabbath a delight; and for others, they made it an intolerable yoke (Matt. 23:1-5).

It was on a Sabbath day: Jesus went through the newly-ripe corn. His disciples were hungry; eating and drinking did not take the first place in this little company; their mission came first. Therefore, as it was lawful for them to do, they plucked the ears of corn, and ate the grain. In Deut. 23:25 it was written: "When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbor, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle into thy neighbor's standing corn." On the first day of the Passover, the children of Israel were enjoined to have a holy convocation, and it was expressly stated that no work must be done, "save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you." The law of the Sabbath could not have been stricter than this. But the Pharisees and scribes, eager to find some accusation against Jesus and his disciples, said unto him, "Behold, thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do on the Sabbath day." As usual, the Lord Jesus does not meet them on their own ground, and argue with them. He takes them to the written Word. "Have ye not read what David did, when he was a hungered, and they that were with him, how he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shew-bread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests? Or have ye not read in the law that on the Sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath,"—i.e., by circumcising infants—"and are blameless?" David had seen God to be above his own law in that exceptional case.

Would You Be Well?

- A Better Wife,
- A Rested Mother,
- A More Cheerful, More Wholesome Companion,
- A Sweeter Sweetheart,
- A True and Well-Balanced Woman?

I WISH I could put sufficient emphasis in these words to make you realize that you do not need to be ill, that you do not need to go onto the operating table, but that you can be a buoyant, cheerful, wholesome woman—full of strength, life, and vivacity—which is the crown of American womanhood.

If you want to Strengthen the Digestive System and the Nerves; to tone the Vital Organs so that your foods will Nourish you; if you want to strengthen the Liver, Kidneys, and Intestines so that the Impurities are Thrown Off from the System; if you want to correct a Sluggish Circulation and send the Blood Bounding through your Veins so that the Rheumatic twinges will disappear and you feel warm and comfortable; if you want to strengthen a Weak Heart and Lungs, to relieve yourself of weaknesses, Lame Backs, and Headaches, I can do more for you than medicine can do. I can give you a Clear Brain, a Quick Perception, and a Nerve Force Vibrant with Life. All you need to bring yourself to this condition is fifteen minutes every day upon definite, scientific exercises, which I will prescribe for you. With this definite work, your health once regained can be retained.

I thoroughly study your case, prescribe the diet and the bathing which your system requires and give you special exercises necessary to bring you out as an individual to perfect health and symmetry. It is to my 12 years' work with women in person before I began my instructions by mail that I attribute my marvelous success with my pupils. I have failed in but one instance to relieve the condition I set out to relieve. My work begins with causes—with the vital organs, the nerve centers, the lungs and the heart—and when I reduce a woman, I reduce her to STAY reduced. When I build her I build her to stay built.

I can take but a limited number of pupils, because I give each pupil my personal attention. Write to me. I shall be glad to tell you just what I can do for you. I do not work with a woman unless I am sure I can help her. I know that I can reduce prominent abdomen and hip, build up thin neck, chest, and bust, and bring any woman to roundness and symmetry and give them relief from above diseases. I have done all of these hundreds and hundreds of times. It is no longer an experiment with me. Write to me.

For ten cents I send you an instructive and interesting booklet, showing the correct lines of a woman's figure in poise and movement and a card of correct poise for your dressing table.

Yours for a body expressing perfect health, perfect grace, and perfect womanhood.

SUSANNA COCROFT
Dept. 413 57 Washington Street, Chicago

LEARN Bookkeeping Free

WOULD YOU BE A SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS MAN? Would you obtain a good paying position or secure an increase in salary? Would you possess the capacity that directs and controls large business enterprises? A knowledge of accounts increases your opportunities a hundred fold. Our method excels all others. You can learn quickly at your own home without loss of time or money. We guarantee it. No trouble to master bookkeeping when a bookkeeper teaches it. The author of our works is an expert accountant; he has kept and audited books for the largest corporations in the world.

A GREAT BOOK FREE. "How to Succeed in Business" is the title of an extensive treatise on bookkeeping and business. It tells of the best system of accounts in the world. It explains how you can make more money and better your position in life. It is just the book for beginners. It is invaluable to bookkeepers and accountants. To advertise our system and other books, we propose to give away 5,000 copies of this book absolutely free. This offer is positively genuine and without any condition whatever. Simply send your name and address and receive the book without cost. A postal card will bring it. Address, COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS, 331 B Schools Buildings, Rochester, N. Y.

I SELL REAL ESTATE NO MATTER WHERE IT IS

Do you want to sell your real estate? Do you want to sell it quickly and with the least possible expense? Do you want to sell it at a reasonable price instead of sacrificing a good portion of its value? Do you want to sell without publicity? If these are your wants, I can fill them. For eight years I have been filling these wants for people in every section of the country. The result is the largest real estate brokerage business in the world. Don't that prove that I have been fully living my claims and isn't it sufficient evidence that I can sell your property? Sit down right now, and send me a description of your property, including your lowest cash price. I will then tell you frankly just what I can do for you and how and why I can do it. It doesn't matter what kind of a property you have, where it is located, or what it is worth. Just send me a description, today. If you want to buy any kind of a property in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.

W. M. OSTRANDER, SUITE 161, NORTH AMERICAN BLDG., PHILADELPHIA.

Try a Royal 30 Days Free.

We believe and claim that it's the best incubator ever made. Try it 30 days, if you don't like it you needn't keep it. Absolutely self regulating. Send for trial order blank. Incubator and Poultry Catalog free, with poultry paper one year ten cents.

Royal Incub. Co.,
Dept. 71, Des Moines, Ia.

Save one-third on carriages by buying direct from the maker. Send for our free illustrated catalogue. THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE & HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio.

DON'T SHOUT!

The Morley Ear Drum

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. No case of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for details and estimate to
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
19 South 16th St., Philadelphia

STARK TREES

best by Test—78 Years LARGEST NURSERY. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN. PAY Weekly. STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Elm

RESIDENT SUSPENDERS

Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

Bridal Veil, or Genista Monosperma.

THE RAREST AND MOST BEAUTIFUL FLOWERING PLANT KNOWN.

A hard-wooded plant suitable for pot culture, or it may be grown in the open ground in any latitude south of New York, and will grow from 3 to 6 feet high according to accommodations given it. This odd plant has no leaves but produces long, graceful, needle-like green branches which droop in copious masses like drapery. It has several blooming periods each year at which time every stem and branch robes itself in clusters of charming snow-white blossoms, the whole drooping in an exquisite wavy mass and is appropriately called the "Bridal Veil." Our cut is from a photograph, but it is impossible to give an adequate impression of the beauty and perfection of a flowering plant. The fragrance of the flower is the richest and most pleasing to be found and a blooming spray cut and dried will retain its delicious fragrance for years, and will impart to a drawer of linen a fragrance which no perfumer can imitate or equal. As a pot or tub plant it is as easily grown as an Oleander or Hydrangea and will succeed anywhere in open ground where the winters are not too severe. This plant has been known a hundred years, but seen only in the gardens of Kings and Princes. It has never been generally introduced because it is almost impossible to propagate it. During the last three years we have succeeded in getting a few thousand plants, with no prospects of a further supply.

Strong 2 year old plants, $3.00 each, 2 for $5.00. Strong 1 year old plants, $2.00 each, 3 for $5.00. Delivered prepaid by mail or express, and guaranteed to arrive in good condition. Order now. This offer will not appear again.

New Everblooming Tritoma.

The grandest bedding plant ever introduced, surpassing the finest Cannas for attractiveness and brilliancy, equal to the Gladiolus as a cut flower and blooms incessantly from June until December regardless of frost. Should be planted out very early in the spring, and will commence growth and bloom at once, growing larger and finer every day. Plants show from 6 to 8 grand flowers at the time, each holding at a height of 3 to 4 feet a great cluster of flame-colored flowers of indescribable beauty and brilliancy. Each cluster keeps perfect several weeks, and when it fades 2 or 3 more are ready to take its place. Fall frosts do not kill it or stop its blooming, and it is as brilliant as ever long after all other garden flowers have been killed. For cutting it is unsurpassed, and the beautiful long spikes keep several weeks in water. Without a single exception, it is the most desirable garden flower.

Price strong hardy plants 25 cents each, 5 for $1.00, 12 for $2.00, delivered prepaid by mail or express in good condition.

Everblooming Tritoma.

Our Great Catalogue for 1904, Free.

Of Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and Rare New Fruits will be sent free to anyone interested. 140 pages, hundreds of fine illustrations and many plates. We have been established 29 years, issuing over a million catalogues annually and doing the largest business of any house in our line in the world. Our Flower and Seed gardens at Floral Park, Long Island, cover 300 acres, with scores of greenhouses. This business has been built up by supplying Seeds, Bulbs and Plants of an exceptionally fine quality—better, in most cases, than can be procured elsewhere. Our goods have stood the test of time and experience and now go all over the world direct to nearly a million individual customers.

Flower Seeds. We offer only select strains of the most desirable kinds, Asters, Pansies, Carnations, Nasturtiums, Verbenas, etc.

Vegetable Seeds. All special strains bred up to the highest mark of perfection. Some grand good Novelties, such as Rosy Nugget Watermelon, Giant Emperor Asparagus, Wakefield Savoy Cabbage, Pineapple Onion, Crimson Winter Rhubarb.

Bulbs. Of Gladiolus alone we grow more than 100 acres, and supply most of the bulbs that the world uses. Our strains, especially Childs, are the best in cultivation. The same may be said of our Glaxias, Tuberous Begonias, Fancy Calas, Cannas, Dahlias, Lilies, Tuberoses, etc.

House Plants. Such as rare New Begonias, Azaleas, Carnations, Ferns, Palms, Geraniums, Cyclamen, etc., are the best to be had.

Hardy Flowering Shrubs. Vines and Trees. A splendid collection of new and rare varieties. Tree Lilac, Clematis, Wistarias, Japaneses and Phloxes. All grown in immense quantities and offered at low prices.

Choice Fruits. The newest, rarest and best—Raspberries, Blackberries, Grapes, etc. Also the wonderful Japanese Cherry and Bismarck Apple.

Special Offers of Some Extra Good Things.

We will send by mail postpaid any of the following special offers, and guarantee safe arrival in good condition.

100 Choice Mixed Gladiolus. Fine flowering bulbs of all colors, white, scarlet, maroon, yellow, pink, variegated, etc. $1.00.

10 Named Gladiolus, Childs, all different colors and correctly labeled. 25c.

5 Mixed Lemoncel Gladiolus. Most exquisite orchid-flowered type. 10c.

3 Double Azaleas. Fine plants all different colors and extra fine. 50c.

12 Morning Star Strawberry. New this year and the finest and earliest sort yet known. One week earlier than any other, large size, fine flavor and very prolific. $1.00.

10 Pkts. New Sweet Peas. 10 sorts. 25c.

5 Pkts. Giant Pansy. 5 different colors, white, coal black, pure yellow, cardinal, sky blue, special trial offer, all for 10c.

4 GRANDEST CANNAS. We offer here the best flowering and foliage Cannas in cultivation. All absolutely new and much better than any previously introduced. Mont Blanc. The finest only pure white Canna. Large perfect flowers, fine green foliage. Clara Barton. Fine largest pink. In fact the only pure pink variety. Flowers of enormous size and borne profusely all the time. Red Cross. Leaves, large, bluish green, flowers of intense scarlet, finest scarlet and foliage variety. Musa folia. Rank with enormous musa-like leaves, dark green, edged brown and bordered with bronze. A foliage plant. Price, 25c. each; the 4 for 75c.

THE MAYFLOWER MONTHLY MAGAZINE, 3 years for only $1.00, as the best Horticultural Magazine published. As a special offer to any one who reads this advertisement for 3 years for only 25 cents. This is one-half the regular price.

Address JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N.Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 17, 1904

VOL. 27—NO. 7. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

George Washington, After the Famous Painting by GILBERT CHARLES STUART

Talmage Sermon Treasury

Twenty Large-Print Volumes, Aggregating 8,500 Pages, Bound in Cloth and Gold, Containing over 500 of Dr. Talmage's Choicest Discourses--No Preacher's Library Complete Without this Great Work

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., stood before the Christian world for upwards of forty years, as one of the most eloquent exponents of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Never before, since the days of Peter and Paul, had it been given to any one man to preach through pulpit or press to such vast audiences as he has been privileged to address.

Dr. Talmage's sermons are marvels of vivid imagery, and superb word painting, rich beyond comparison in anecdote and incident, unsurpassed for originality, versatility, terseness and splendor of diction, and notable for their close fidelity to the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour as laid down in the New Testament. They constitute a vast mine of information, covering nearly every phase of national and religious life and thought, and are generally admitted to be the best known models of popular presentation of religious truth.

★ ★ ★

These discourses are justly noted for their wealth of pertinent illustrations, and the possessor of this Comprehensive Sermonic Library, will find readily available thousands of the choicest anecdotes peculiarly adapted to the enrichment of talks, sermons, Sunday School expositions, and public addresses of whatsoever character. It matters not whether the occasion be a Christmas Celebration, a Thanksgiving Service, a Patriotic Festival, a Missionary Address, a Funeral Oration, or a Prayer Meeting Talk, these discourses will be found full of suggestive ideas, full of illustration, and full of helpful hints that will prove invaluable in the preparation, embellishment and presentation of the subject.

Every volume of this great Sermonic Library is separately indexed and cross-indexed as to texts, titles, anecdotal and historical illustrations and topics, so thoroughly that the contents are readily available whether for suggestion, illustration, reinforcement or for special courses of reading.

Then the entire twenty volumes, aggregating over 8,500 pages, are indexed as one work, in the same complete and thorough-going manner, so that this general index will aid any one to find with the greatest facility all the utterances of this eloquent pulpit orator on any particular subject.

★ ★ ★

Please bear in mind that the index to this notable series of Dr. Talmage's sermons, representing the very cream of the life-work of this eloquent and world-renowned preacher, contains over 25,000 distinct references.

★ ★ ★

After many months of the most careful revision and preparation, Dr. Talmage, four years ago, consented to the publication, in book form, of more than 500 of his most forceful discourses, specially selected for this purpose, and we now offer these twenty volumes at the low price of $20 for the set. One Dollar down, and One Dollar a month for nineteen months, or 10% off for spot cash.

★ ★ ★

Special Offer

On all orders received from Librarians, Ministers, S. S. Superintendents, and Christian Workers, if mailed on or before March 10, 1904, we will make a special discount of 25%. That is, we will sell the entire set at $15. One Dollar down, and One Dollar per month for fourteen months, or, if paid spot cash, we will make an additional allowance of 10%, thus reducing the cost of the entire set to $13.50. Freight charges are always paid by the purchaser.

This is the last opportunity that we shall ever present for purchasing these sermons at a discount.

T De Witt Talmage

"These are the Brightest Sparks from my Anvil"

T. DE WITT TALMAGE

Each volume measures 5½ by 8½ inches when closed, and the twenty volumes require shelf space 32 inches long. Their combined weight is about thirty-five pounds. All orders for this great Sermonic Library should be addressed:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPT.
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

REV. CHR. SCHMITT, OF NAIN

A GIANT ICEBERG OFF THE COAST OF LABRADOR

BISHOP MARTIN, OF LABRADOR

THE LURE OF DESOLATE LABRADOR

Soul-Winning in the Arctic Regions — Experiences of a Traveler who was Lost in the Wilderness for a Night

By DR. SAMUEL A. BINION

[Public attention has recently been directed to Labrador, in consequence of the death of Leonidas Hubbard, Jr., a young American scientist, who is believed to have perished while exploring the central portion of that practically unknown Arctic country. Dr. Samuel A. Binion, who recently returned from a visit of exploration to Labrador, has written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the article below, which is of special interest at the present time. Dr. Binion is a recognized authority on Egyptology, a physician and naturalist, a noted linguist, traveler, author and translator.]

THE fascination of the Lands of the Eskimos induced me to join a few friends going to Labrador at the beginning of last July. I acted as the physician and scientist of the party. The steamship Bruce carried us across the Cabot Straits from North Sydney to Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland. Thence, we proceeded by railroad to St. Johns—a distance of four hundred miles. After two days' journey we reached St. Johns, where we sojourned for a fortnight, waiting for the return of the steamer, the Virginia Lake, from Labrador, and getting the necessary equipment and provisions for our journey north. On the 7th of August we left the beautiful harbor of St. Johns, for Labrador.

We encountered no ice-floes. But we passed hundreds of icebergs. With the exception of the Straits of Belle Isle, we were always in sight of land. Between Battle Harbor, 52° north latitude, on the southeastern extremity of Labrador, and Nain (56° N. L.), we stopped at forty places, to deliver the mails, and to send the doctor ashore.

It is a very interesting sight when the numerous fishing-boats and canoes surround the steamer at every

God and manual labor." They are now earning the fruit of their toil. We were invited by the Brethren to their meeting-house. Within it was assembled the entire Eskimo population. The congregation consisted largely of young women and children. The able-bodied men were absent, owing to the fishing-season, when there is an exodus to distant islands and places of encampment. In the meeting-house the women sat on one side of the sanctuary and the men on the other. The first hymn sung was Luther's immortal war-song of the Christian soldier, Eine feste Burg ist unser Gott! The congregation sang it with thrilling fervor. Then followed several of the Moody and Sankey hymns—all in the Eskimos language.

It shook my soul, and brought a mist across my eyes, to hear the old, old hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," given with a heartiness by these poor Eskimos, whose lives have been touched and changed and transfigured by the Story of the Cross. After these hymns, there followed one or two addresses. I had the happy opportunity of saying a few words to this congregation.

Hundreds of icebergs sailed majestically past us next day, as we ploughed on our way north, and still north. Icebergs of every shape, and tinted like the train of a peacock. I shall long remember the afternoon when our jolly captain ordered the ship's yawl lowered, and four sailors rowed off to a giant

CONTINUED ON
PAGE 139

THE SETTLEMENT OF NAIN IN MIDWINTER

station. Their crews swarmed on deck as soon as we dropped anchor, clamoring for letters from their kin in Newfoundland, the United States and Europe; as also for the doctor's services to some fever-stricken patient in a fisherman's hovel on shore. There were neither wharves nor landing places, and as most of the harbors, called "ticks," abound in submerged rocks, the boats and canoes have to row out to the steamer. This causes delay—and again vexatious delays. On the 15th of August, we reached Rigolette on Hamilton Inlet. The coast on both sides of the inlet is magnificent. Volcanic peaks rise to the height of many hundred feet. Here you put your finger on the soft Fur-trade that roughened men's consciences. Here, the Indian, inebriate of freedom, was introduced to "fire-water." The history of the Hudson's Bay Company has been written in red—and rum.

On the 16th of August we arrived at Hopedale, where we went ashore.

Hopedale is a perfect oasis in the wilderness. In the midst of the barren wastes, the followers of Zinzendorf have worked for nearly two centuries. They began work with the sword and trowel—"with the word of

AN IGLOO OR NATIVE SNOW-HUT

"KINGMEK" OR ESKIMO DOGS

The American Pulpit

HOW TO OVERCOME

A Sermon by REV. JAMES I. VANCE, D.D.

Pastor of the North Reformed Church, Newark, N. J.

TEXT—I. Cor. 10: 13: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man," etc.

A VERY peculiar sinner, a very peculiar Saviour, a very peculiar saint! There is a trio that should furnish a live point of contact to every human life.

First, a very peculiar sinner. Every sinner is disposed to regard his case as peculiar. By this he does not mean that he is worse than other sinners. He is not insisting that his heart is more corrupt, his will more enslaved, his appetite more vicious, his character more degraded. This is the very thing he does not mean. He is fully persuaded that he is every bit as good as anybody else, and a deal better than many. He may call himself names, and say naughty things of himself, but he will not allow you to do so. The average sinner surveys himself with some satisfaction.

Peculiar Circumstances

What he means is that his temptations are peculiar, his difficulties are extraordinary, his obstacles are insurmountable. It is harder for him to do right. No one was ever so tried as he. The devil has singled him out as a shining mark against which to hurl all the arrows from the satanic quiver.

Perhaps it is thus some of us view the matter. We are sinners, but there are mitigating circumstances. The conditions are exasperating. Some people can be good because they were born angels, and a seraphic temperament is something they cannot help; but we were born with the fire in our blood and the thunder in our tempers. Why should it be expected that our acts should be angelic?

You think of your home, and say: "No man ever had so much to try him at home as I. There is no sympathy there, and nobody understands me." I have a little friend who so continually insists that no one understands her, that her friends have dubbed her, "Miss Understood." Your case is peculiar, for you are a "Mr. Misunderstood." You think of your business and say, "No man ever had such business difficulties to contend with." When you want the markets to fall, they shoot up; and when you want them to rise, down they go. Providence is against you. The stars in their courses fight you. The fates conspire to destroy you.

Suppose it is all true, why should you yield? Is difficulty any reason for defeat? Because the enemy's flag shows itself on the horizon, it is no reason you should flee the field. Because a man has a shrew for a wife, it is no reason he should take to drink and play the fool. Because a woman has a vagabond husband, it is no reason she should commit suicide. I like the man who regards difficulties as incentives; like the old New England farmer, who said he did not care to live where his spade would not strike a rock when he drove it into the ground. Temptation is a call to battle, not the sound of retreat, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

But your case is not peculiar. The truth is you are no more tried than other people. You are living the common average life. You are not having a harder time than hundreds and thousands of your fellows all around you. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." The devil has long since ceased to be original. We make original sin a part of our creed, and that satisfies orthodoxy; but if there is one thing sin has long since ceased to be, it is being original. Satan never did have but three lines of attack. The Bible characterizes them as "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life." He tempts us through our flesh, our mind, or our surroundings. He tried all three on Eve, when he tempted her, and again on Christ when he tempted him. When he attacks you, it is along one of these ancient roads. You face the same foes as your kind have faced from the birth of the race.

Illustrious Victors

If others, who were tempted as you, have conquered, it is not necessary for you to go down in defeat. Joseph, Job, Daniel, Peter, might have regarded their temptations as peculiar, but they won the victory. Your case is far from hopeless. Do not magnify your difficulties nor become soured on life. From a thousand battlefields the shouts of victory rise, and from the throats of God's elect, who have won the hard fought fight, sound the notes of good cheer. "We are conquerors, and more than conquerors, through Him that loved us."

You are a very peculiar sinner, but you have a very peculiar Saviour. We have been studying sin scientifically, and think we have learned a lot. We have laid hands on two things which we say solve the problem. One is heredity and the other is environment. What we have been calling sin is heredity and environment. Heredity is what one gets from his ancestors, and environment is what he gets from his surroundings. These two make him what he is. If he sins, it is because he must. Yonder is a thief. Had you his heredity and environment you would steal too. There a murderer is going to his execution. If you had been born as he and had lived among the same surroundings, you would be the murderer. Such is the scientific treatment of sin. The sinner is not so much a criminal as a victim. He is to be pitied rather than punished.

Two Excuses

Heredity and environment are something, but they are not all. To say one is compelled by these to crime, is to say what is not true. It is to strike hope from the sky and clothe vice in the garments of virtue.

There is something in sin you cannot get at with science, nor cure with social reform. There is an element in blasphemy you cannot detect with the microscope; a quality in murder you cannot estimate with the apothecary's scales. It is a depraved nature. Heredity is something and environment is something, but personality is more than both. Personality is what one is of his own volition.

REV. JAMES I. VANCE, D.D.

The supreme need of the sinner is not so much to change his ancestors and his surroundings as to change himself. The way to cure sin, is to cure the sinner. Christ is a very peculiar Saviour because he does this. He knows the situation. He has been tempted in all points as we. Christ lived the common, average human life. When God sent the world a Saviour, he did not send an angel, but a man with a nature to feel all that tries any human life.

'Tis the weakness in strength, that I cry for! my flesh that I seek. In the Godhead! I seek and I find it.

Christ has felt and conquered all temptation. He was tempted as we, but without sin, and this enables him to succor those that are tempted. He meets and checks heredity with Christian ideals and the potent spell of "the powers of the world to come." He overcomes environment with his own blessed fellowship. He surrounds us with himself, and, before temptation can destroy us, it must break through Christ. Thus our very bodies become a fortress, and our flesh friendly instead of hostile to the soul. It is a mistake to suppose that our flesh is always to be regarded as something on which we are to make war. Christ's flesh was the friend of his Spirit; God means ours to be, and it when Christ dwells in our mortal bodies.

Let us not always say,
'Spite of this flesh to-day
I strove, made head, gained ground upon the whole.
As the bird wings and sings,
Let us cry, All good things
Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps so

Then, in addition to all else, Christ gives the sinner new nature. Ye must be born again. He cures personality.

He is greater than heredity, stronger than environment, and he can give you the victory; until there on the battlefield, where the soul is contending with the tempter, and all eternity is at stake, there may be heard, instead of the shriek of despair, the shout of triumph.

There are three notes in the song of victory. "God is faithful." That is the first. So long as God is faithful, you need not be fearful.

"Who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able." This is the second. God knows what you can withstand. Just as the engineer's keen eye watches the steam gauge, so God's eye is on you. He will not let the pressure be too hard. He does not exempt you from struggle. Why should he? Your soul was built for battle, and its greatness can be shown only by conflict. The fine steel boiler, the best the shop can produce, would rather be tried by the pent-up steam raging against its powerful casements than to be pitched uselessly on the slag-dump. Why should the soul sigh for the slag-dump? God gives us the battle-hour, but he promises that we shall not be tempted above that we are able.

"But will with the temptation also make a way to escape." That is the third note in God's child is never so hedged in he cannot get out. The devil cannot blockade all points of the compass. He may command the ground on which you camp; he may surround you fore and aft, on the right hand and on the left; but overhead is always free. He can never get between you and the mercy seat. Prayer is always possible; and when every other way has been closed the tempted soul may escape by the highway of prayer. Man, God intends you never to surrender. He means you always to be living the victorious life.

The Triumph Song

If the very peculiar sinner will claim the very peculiar Saviour, there will be a very peculiar saint. Every Christian should be peculiar. He should have enough color to show what he is. I do not mean he should be an exaggerated saint. I am not pleading for a Christian who is abnormally good, and whose sanctity seeks publicity; but for one who conquers. "That ye may be able to bear it!" That is victory! That is Christian singularity.

The life of the ordinary Christian is cursed by worry and worn by fret and friction. He is living in the wilderness, when he should be in the Land of Promise. Many of us are not satisfied. We are saying that Christ can save, somewhat, but not entirely. He can deliver from some conditions, but not from others. He can redeem to a degree, but not altogether.

That slanders God. Christ can save unto the uttermost. But you must trust him if he is to deliver you. You must trust God absolutely if he is to give you complete deliverance. Israel remained in the wilderness not because they had to. God wanted them all the while in the Land of Promise, but they would not trust him; and doubt kept them out. Quit trying and go to trusting. Instead of joining an anti-worry club, and worrying the more over not worrying, get into the calm, safe presence of the mighty God and have perfect peace.

Out there a tug-boat, left by a careless pilot, has grounded in the sand, when the tide went out. Her fires are lit afresh and the engine tries to lift her, but the powerful screw only digs into the mud and mire and buries the keel deeper in the sand. By and by the tide comes in, and the boat is free. She has not changed her equipment, nor added an ounce to her motor-power. She has only found the level where she was meant to live, and with victory she moves to the open sea. Christian, caught in the meshes of the world, mired in the mud of materialism, struggling hopelessly with your cares, and crippling yourself with every struggle; get up into fellowship with Christ. That is the level you were made for. That will set you free. There you can live the life of victory. He is looking into your face and saying: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Believe it is true, and go out a conqueror!

GEORGE WASHINGTON, THE YOUNG SURVEYOR

THE FIRST PRESIDENTIAL MANSION
AT PEARL AND CHERRY STREETS, NEW YORK

EVERYONE is familiar with the George Washington who was "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen;" the man who was a brave soldier, a gallant officer, and a great statesman, and we all know the story of the hatchet and cherry tree; but there are years in Washington's life when neither strenuous army duties nor cares of state absorbed his attention.

There was a period of boyhood and young manhood, which was spent in such a healthy, wholesome way, as made possible the heroic proportions of the man who will never be forgotten.

Washington was a conqueror from his youth, always in a good cause, beginning when a mere schoolboy, earning to ride colt or horse, regardless of training, gait, or temper. He seldom went afoot, except to catch his nunt in the pasture. A robust and spirited lad, he knew where to find and how to take the roving game in the Virginia forests; nothing seemed to daunt the strong spirit within him—a legacy from both father and mother. After leaving school, which occurred when George was about sixteen, he joined his brother Lawrence at the latter's home. Then came a period of comradeship, which must have colored all the boy's after life.

Lads could be the companions of men in Virginia. The outdoor life of sport and adventure put them upon terms of equality with their elders, where spirit, courage, resource, and manliness, told for comradeship.

Among other men, George was thrown into an association with Lord Fairfax, who had an eye for capacity, and who saw in this athletic boy, a fearless woodsman, with calm and steady judgment shining from his gray eyes. Lord Fairfax commissioned the youth to perform a work of surveying, in order that his lordship should know how his lands lay; how bounded and disposed through the glades and upon the streams of the untrodden forests. In one month from the time George Washington started out with his little band of assistants, riding through many miles of wild and mountainous country, he returned with maps and figures, which showed Lord Fairfax very clearly where his lands lay upon the Shenandoah and Potomac.

INAUGURATION OF WASHINGTON

The young man was just out of school, and it was wild and perilous work; the rivers were swollen and dangerous with rains and melting snows from the mountains, and there was scarcely a lodging to be had in the miserable, stray cabins of the scattered settlers, so that the woodsmen spent many nights around their camp-fire in the open woods. Washington, however, seems to have had a strong relish for the experience, which is shown in a letter written to a comrade at the time, where he speaks of not having slept in a bed for three or four nights; but, after walking about all day, he lay down before the fire with the others, "like a parcel of dogs and cats—and happy is he who gets the berth nearest the fire."

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
AT THE BATTERY, NEW YORK, 1790

This first success in surveying brought him frequent employment in the profession, which he followed for three years, when the death of his brother Lawrence changed everything for George, who felt that he must now stand as his brother's representative. Lawrence had, a short time previous to his death, obtained for George—though he was but nineteen years of age—a military commission as district adjutant, and Lieutenant-Governor Dinwiddie added still further to the young soldier's responsibilities by reducing the military districts of the colony to four, and assigning to Washington one of the four, under a renewed commission as Major and Adjutant-General. So we find this wholesome, brave-hearted, manly youth, at the age of twenty, looking after the discipline and accoutrement of the militia of eleven counties, aiding his mother in her business, administering his brother's estate, and assuming on all sides the duties and responsibilities of a man of affairs.

Those were busy and happy days in the life of the future leader in his country's independence. Who shall say that he did not, at times, look back with joyous recollection to those youthful years, before the cares of state pressed so heavily upon him, and the penalty of greatness had been exacted—to the time when he—the greatest man of his day—was a care-free, happy young surveyor.

THE LURE OF DESOLATE LABRADOR *

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 135

berg to fetch some ice for "afternoon tea." Through our marine-glasses we watched the sailors' athletics on that berg—sprawling, slipping, righting themselves—and at last rowing back to our steamer with the ice load.

And now Nain is looming up! We drop anchor, lower our boats and go ashore. Mountains to the right, mountains to the left, and mountains in front of us. And looking at the streamlets and miniature waterfalls rushing madly in cascades over the rocks of ages, your eye perceives rows of Eskimo huts on an elevation along the shore. In their midst are the stately but modest Mission buildings. Upon our steamer being sighted, the entire population came, pell-mell, down the declivities, shouting and waving. The Eskimo children danced and waved and screamed as they saw our steamer running up the Newfoundland colors and the Union Jack. The chatter that greeted my ears that day was unlike any language I have ever heard, though I have been a student of twenty living tongues, and have held much commerce with the dead ones. Here is an example of an Eskimo phrase: Parngnanairsimavingmeningmik. I tried to increase my vocabulary, which had only consisted of Auksunai. This may be variously translated by "Good morning," and "Good evening," "How do you do," "Glad to see you," etc. This word has such a charm about it that it turns the sternest-looking Eskimo face into a countenance warm and beaming. The other word of my vocabulary had been Nakomik (Thank you). That same afternoon I enriched my vocabulary with the word kingmek (dog). Now the kingmek is not a wolf in sheep's clothing. He is a wolf as far as his appearance and appetite are concerned.

During my sojourn at Nain, I made a study of the peculiarities of the Eskimo kingmek. One thing I believe I have discovered, namely, that the Eskimo dog is neither more nor less ferocious than many of our own pet varieties of the canine species. Deprive the bull-dog, or any other dog, of food, and it will be as bad, or even worse, than the Eskimo dog. Poor kingmek! in addition to his famished condition, he is mercilessly treated. The Eskimo urchin throws stones at him and kicks him. Is it then strange that the famished kingmek should devour hymnals, or even attack a stray child when a good opportunity presents itself?

Nain is the principal Eskimo village, and there Bishop Martin, Superintendent of the Moravian Brethren, lives. The Rev. Bishop is the embodiment of the primitive missionary. He is a scholar, and a man of great executive ability, yet gentle as a child. He preaches in the Eskimo language like a native; writes hymns, translates, composes, attends to the physical and spiritual ailments of his flock, works in the garden and does carpentering and blacksmithing. He is a man in middle life, and looks hale and strong. His helpmeet is a typical German matron, a model woman. The little family of children have learned the three supreme virtues of youth—obedience, method, order. With the Bishop are two other "Brethren": the Rev. Charles Schmitt and A. Asbo. And there is a business manager of the Mission—Mr. P. Arnstadt. The Rev. Mr. Asbo is the "Housefather," assisted by the Rev. Mr. Schmitt. The latter is a preacher, printer, and expert in photography.

During a residence of a month at Nain, and in the household of Bishop Martin, I had an opportunity of studying Eskimo agriculture. If the Moravian brethren had done nothing else but transform the barren ground into fruitful and productive land, they would have accomplished much. The kitchen-gardens at Hopedale, Nain, and Okkak might serve as models even to the truck-producing farmers of our country. There are six kitchen-gardens at Nain, and these cover an area of only four or five acres; but they are wonderful accomplishments of pure labor. The missionaries have neither horses, cows, nor ploughs; nevertheless, they manage to till the ground to perfection. They raise potatoes, four or five varieties of cabbage, including kohl-rabi, cauliflowers, savoy cabbage, also turnips, lettuce, rhubarb, carrots, beet-root, etc. Their tiny flower-gardens are cultivated by the missionaries' wives, and contain native and foreign plants. During the night, they shelter the vegetables from the cold by covering them with sackcloth or thick canvass. But the Eskimos, in spite of their conversion, have not yet taken to cultivate the land on their own account. They content themselves with fishing and hunting.

From the Moravian Brethren in Nain we procured a whaleboat, and a tent and its equipments, and on August 20 we started farther north. After hard rowing against wind and tide, we arrived at an Eskimo encampment upon the island called Kikkartaujak, where we sighted Dr. Greenfell's steamer Strathcona. The Doctor kindly picked us up, and towed our boat to Black Island. Thence we were taken on board the Strathcona, and our whaleboat taken in tow to Okkak.

During my stay at Okkak, I one day climbed the hill that rises some hundred feet behind the village. I gathered a few wild flowers for my herbarium, and before very long was joined by all the members of our party. We wandered on, climbing hill after hill in the environs of Okkak. On one of the declivities we chanced upon two Eskimo tombs. One of them was intact. It was constructed above ground, and built of rough and unhewn slabs of stone, and was open in the centre. It contained human bones and a skull. I wandered on ahead of my party, gathering flowers and specimens of iron pyrites.

Among the boulders and thickets, my absence was not noted by my fellow-pedestrians. The day being warm and balmy, I stretched myself out upon the caribou mosses and fell asleep. When I awoke, the sun had already passed the meridian. It must have been between two or three o'clock in the afternoon. I decided to try to find my way back to Okkak. I climbed the mountain, only to find another hill confronting me; and on reaching the top of the second hill, I was dumbfounded to see an immense bluff, hundreds of feet in height, still ahead. I made the summit after a wearisome struggle, and saw ranges of mountains, and far away a bay, but not the bay of Okkak. I was lost on the wild Labrador hills, and when I tried to retrace my steps, fatigue and hunger brought me to the verge of collapse. I rested, gazed once more on the splendid scene from the summit, and then began the descent through pitfalls and undergrowth, crawling from boulder to boulder. It was a veritable jungle—a wilderness.

Sunset came, and darkness. I lighted a fire of dry branches and sticks, piled up the fuel to keep off any wild animals that might be near, for I had no weapon, and wolves and bears were by no means improbable visitors. I fell asleep at last—and there, upon the caribou mosses, slept until awakened by a pouring rain. Dawn came, and I again took up my pilgrimage down the mountain, and at the very foot, as if by a miracle, I stumbled upon Okkak.

More dead than alive, I arrived at the house. I believe they carried me in, and made a great fuss over me. They had given me up to the wolf or the bear, they said. They had shouted and yelled, and been upon the summit, but the silence of Labrador engulfed their cries.

Among my world-wide experiences, I place the night spent in the primeval wilderness of Labrador at the head of the list. I had heard the heart of Solitude beat.

CAMPING WITH MACEDONIAN REFUGEES

A Correspondent's Pathetic Story of His Experiences on the Border, with Eight Thousand Destitute Fugitives

ONE of the saddest chapters that has yet been told of the suffering in Macedonia and on the Bulgarian border, is related in the letter, printed below, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD received a few days ago. It is from Adrianopolis vilayet, and is written by one of the native Christian workers, who has been very active in the relief movement. He says:

"The villages of Malko-Tirnov, Kirk Klisse (Lozengrad—city of vineyards), and Vasilico, Kazas districts, were attacked and burned by Turkish troops, who butchered the innocent population, assaulted the women, and pillaged everywhere. Everyone was obliged to flee for his life, through woods and mountains, to free Bulgaria, chased by the infuriated Turks. Many mothers in their flight left their children. Many bands of refugees were overtaken by the Turks, and found their grave in mountain ravines.

"Last August I wrote you from Yambol, under my impressions of what I saw on the Turkish borders, about forty-five kilometers south of Bourgas. My guide took me to the camp of the newly arrived refugees on the border, in the Bulgarian territory. The woods around were all alive. There were about 8,000 refugees there—ragged and sorrowful refugees. All were dispersed in the woods in small bands. Many families lamented the loss of one or two of their dear ones, who had been killed or lost in the mountains. Here and there some sick refugees lay groaning. Children were born during this flight, and mothers suffered without the tender care of a doctor or nurse, not having even dry bread to eat. I begged in the camp some bread for one of them. Hungry children were crying for food, but there was none. Flour was brought, and a handful given to each person in a family, to last for twenty-four hours. The women at once spread pieces of cloth on the ground, and began mixing bread. In every direction were built fires, and soon small cakes were covered with hot ashes and coal to cook for the children, who were impatient to satisfy their hunger. The scene was very touching. I could not keep back my tears in view of such misery.

"New bands of refugees arrived constantly. Women loaded with clothing or with some dear child, were breathing laboriously. I saw numbers of four or five-year-old children walking, exceedingly tired, led by the hand, because the mother or the father were obliged to carry the younger brother or sister. Old women, bent double, were cursing the day and hour in which they were born. Every band of refugees was escorted by several armed elderly men, because the younger ones were either fighting with the enemy, or clearing the way for the escape of the defenceless population. I saw an eighty-year old woman with two sticks, and barefooted, who had walked about fifty or sixty kilometers to the boundary, and had to walk forty-five kilometers more to Bourgas. A young woman, without relatives and friends, was weeping as she walked, carrying one of her children about three years' old on her back, another, about six months' old, on one arm, and a third, five years' old, led by the hand.

"During the night, all slept in the open air around their fires. Here, and in this way they passed several days, till rested, and then went on to Bourgas.

"All the refugees from the Adrianopolis vilayet, as far as my knowledge goes, number about ten thousand. I saw myself about eight thousand come to Bourgas, and from that city they were sent to the neighboring towns and villages of southern Bulgaria. In Yambol and the villages of our district, we have 128 families, with more than 600 souls. The local Benevolent Committee takes care for the food. By the term 'food' must be understood only bread, because till now the refugees have been provided only with bread. Almost all the refugees are poorly clad. They have no bedding. The weather is quite cold. Our nation, being very poor, can house and feed them, but we cannot supply them with clothes. The Bulgarian National Congress voted 500,000 francs for the refugees, besides the many thousands given previously by the government; but the need is so great, that this help is almost imperceptible. Benevolent people from foreign countries have done much to relieve a good deal of suffering, but there is yet to be done tenfold more in order to meet even the most urgent needs. Mrs. Marriage Allen, a benevolent English friend, has visited personally Bourgas, Slevan and Yambol. To the refugees in the town of Yambol, she gave with her own hand some woollen cloth, shirting, and wool for knitting stockings. As her agent in our district, I have given one quilt to every family, to larger families two, to some families beds, to every on inquiry I found that she was from Tzer, a village 400 homes. It was burned in August, all except the houses. Some thirty to forty of its inhabitants were killed. The rest fled to the mountains, whence they afterwards returned, to the remaining houses, in which they are now packed, four or five families in a house. Others went to Manastir, a day's journey distant, and this woman was from among the latter. She told me with deep gratitude, of the good work the American Missionary, the Rev. Louis L. Bond, was doing in relieving the wants of the suffering refugees. This was the first report of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's relief work that greeted me on my arrival. That woman was on her way to Roumania, to join her only son, who had escaped from Macedonia two years ago.

Immediately on my arrival, I began making arrangements for the organizing and meeting of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Macedonian Relief Committee.* Yesterday I spent the forenoon in visiting the refugees in Sofia. They are provided with food, but are quartered in miserable dwelling places. One family of three, I found living in a small, narrow room adjoining a stable, where the atmosphere was very disagreeable. In the out of four places I visited I found sick children the result of bad surroundings and lack of sufficient clothing. Yesterday afternoon, I called on Prince Ferdinand's private secretary, Mr. Dobrovich. Having learned that the prince was much interested in my starting three months ago for America, on a mission to raise help for the Macedonian sufferers, I thought it would be well to inform him what THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers are doing in this line. The secretary promised to communicate my report. M. N. POPOV

Pastor Stephanoff, Kustendil, Bulgaria, writes that the relief work is hampered by lack of material help. Such help as is now afforded is collected chiefly from the people, who are poor, and they cannot help the refugees long. In the Kustendil district, there are now 4,000 refugees, the larger part women and children—widows and orphans—whose husbands and fathers have been killed by the Turks.

In a letter dated Manastir, Turkey, Jan. 21, the Rev. Lewis Bond writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"The relief list is constantly increasing, number now about 45,000, equally divided between the sexes. He adds that Mr. Brailsford (his associate in the work estimates that up to the end of March, $50,000 would be required; half of it in clothing for the refugees. Even with this, only one warm garment could be given to each family in the more miserable villages. In many of these, thus far, only one blanket has been given to families of a dozen persons, who must pass the winter in shelters of straw.

All contributions should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

*A cable dispatch published in our issue of two weeks ago, announced the organization of the Committee, with Rev. E. Haske as Chairman.

Thinks Encyclopedia Magnificent

Send Your premium of Calendar and Crown Encyclopedia received. I think encyclopedia magnificent. Yours with regards, Villisca, Iowa. SAMUEL MCG.

HOMELESS MACEDONIAN REFUGEES WAITING TO BE HOUSED AND FED

These are from the villages of Malko-Tirnov, and the Lozengrad district, Adrianopolis vilayet. Photographed for this journal just before they were dispersed to different villages. There are several native pastors among the figures.

family one-half kilogram of wool for knitting stockings, several metres of woollen cloth, some metres of shirting, two to three pieces of soap, about 120 padded jackets, etc. But all this is thrown into such a vast sea of distress that it is lost in the great need. Shoes, padded jackets, quilts, beds, and warm food at least once a day, are needed now, and abundantly, to keep the thousands alive who have not yet been helped.

"The refugees in the other districts are not in any better condition. I believe that the Christian people in America, who have willingly helped India, Russia, Cuba, and the Armenians in their time of great suffering, will not turn away their faces from the Macedonians and the Adrianopolians, who stretch forth their feeble hands for help."

Our Commissioner Begins Work

SOPIA, Jan. 23, 1904.

Starting from New York, on the 9th inst., at 9.30 A.M., I landed in the Sofia railway station, at 10.30 A.M. On the 20th inst. Here a goodly company of friends welcomed me back. From Belgrade to Sofia the conversation on the train was almost wholly about Macedonia. At Nisch, Servia, where the Macedonian train connects with that from Europe, three women from Manastir joined the company. One wore peasant costume, and

MOROCCO'S RULER HAS THE WORD

SULTAN MULEY AND THE BIBLE

HE MAY YET BECOME A CONVERT

SULTAN MULEY RIDES

WITH the passing of the acute stage of the rebellion in Morocco, there has come a better and more hopeful time for the Christian missionaries. From the Rev. Frederick Weiss, the well-known American missionary in Tangier, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received this cheering letter:

"TANGIER, Jan. 12, '04.
"We are glad to report from this field signs of awakening amongst the Mohammedans. In answer to the prayers that have been offered up for Morocco, blessings have come, souls are being saved in Tangier, and the missionaries are rejoicing over every Mohammedan who steps over the line, and takes Christ as hisaviour."

"We hear from points in the interior, where others are also taking a bold stand for Christ. Those of your readers who know what it means for a Mohammedan to announce the Prophet, will pray that those who have taken such a stand may continue steadfast in the faith; for it will mean much for them to live for Christ under this present government."

"At present all things seem quiet in the interior, with the exception of a few tribal troubles, which exist almost everywhere round in this disturbed land. The Sultan at present is in Fez. Bu Hamara somewhere in the Atlas Mountains; we do not hear much concerning him."

"There is room in this country for many more consecrated workers; for this field, so near to the coast of Europe, has been greatly neglected by the church. Some of the older missionaries have labored here ten and twelve years, and at no time have they seen such workings of the spirit of God on the hearts of the people as during the past month. This gives cause for rejoicing, for oftentimes we have heard it said that it was a waste of time to try to do anything in a Mohammedan country. But we praise the Lord and take courage! We know that there is nothing too hard for God to do."

"We earnestly ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to pray that the Kingdom of God may spread far and wide over these Mohammedan countries, and that many natives may rise up to carry the glad tidings of salvation even through the waste places of the Sahara desert, where many live on the oases, who have never heard the sound of Jesus' name."

"We are thankful for all the liberty the present Sultan gives to the foreigners, who are all known to the natives as Christians; but we regret that the example of many is still far from what it ought to be. The Sultan has a Bible in his palace, and we hope that he may become a convert to Christianity. It would no doubt cause a stir among the people; but hundreds, we believe, would follow him, if ever he became converted. We thank you for all the interest you have taken in our work here, and pray that you, with us, may yet see a mighty outpouring of God's Spirit all over North Africa, which I am sure is the only hope of bringing the Mohammedans to Jesus Christ. Amen.

IN THE PALACE GARDENS

FRED WEISS."

THE YOUNG SULTAN OF MOROCCO AND HIS PHYSICIAN, DR. VERDON
From a photograph procured specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Missionary Weiss

It is good news to learn that the present Sultan, Muley Abdul Azziz, has given considerable liberty to foreigners. It will be remembered by readers of this journal, that the Sultan's progressive views and his introduction of Western ideas in Morocco were among the inspiring causes of the rebellion. It would seem, from Missionary Weiss' letter, that the new movement, of which the Sultan is leader, is gaining ground. The fact that the ruler of Morocco has a Bible in his palace, which he may read, is of itself calculated to cause a great stir among his people, and the prospect of his conversion to the new faith must be viewed with apprehension by the Mohammedan priesthood. Were he to become a follower of the Cross, many thousands would doubtless follow his example.

One illustration (from a photograph forwarded by Mr. Weiss) shows the Sultan and his doctor in anything but a warlike attitude, sitting comfortably under the shade of big trees in the palace grounds. Another shows the ruler on horseback, while a third presents some of the beauties of the royal gardens of the palace. These are the only photographs of the kind that have ever been taken, so far as known.

AMONG THE EAGLES' NESTS

A Christmas Day Among the Mountaineers of Macedonia

By REV. E. B. HASKELL. AMERICAN MISSION, SALONICA, TURKEY

ONE of the wildest and most lawless districts in the world (not excepting Africa) is the district of Diber, to the northwest of Monastir. The dominant race there is the Albanian (Gheg division), whose scions proudly call themselves shkipetars, or "Eagle people." All the males are walking arsenals, and very commonly act on the motto, "a word and a blow—and the blow first." Not only do they blunder the Bulgarians of their own vicinity, but they keep the adjoining districts in constant terror, raiding them, "lifting" their live-stock, and generally disporting themselves as did the Doones of Blackmore's famous novel.

As agent of the Macedonian Relief Fund of London, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's and other funds from America, it was my lot this year to spend my Christmas among the great mountains on the borders of this robber domain.

My English companion, Mr. Graham, and I awoke in the city of Crutchevo, to the east of Diber, on Christmas morning. We wished each other a merry Christmas, and drank a cup of cacao, instead of coffee, to celebrate. Then we separated, he to the south and I to the west, to canvass the burned and looted villages, feeling that our Master would be better pleased at our spending his birthday thus than in idleness.

A few days previously some peasants of the Kopatch Valley (my allotted field), had sent word that the Diber brigands were in the forests above their villages, and that they feared for our safety, so the government gave me four guards, all Albanians themselves. Fortunately, the question who would have run and who would have stood was not brought to the test. After the first day, it was so misty that evil-doers could not have found us, unless we simply had chanced to meet on the trail.

What a great Christmas day that was! A Christmas among God's quiet, solemn mountains, soothing with their calm strength, the heart's soreness for "the tender grace of a day that is dead." After two hours of travel beside the swift Kopatch River, we began the steep climb to the village of Lahtchany. (In names "a" as in "far" and "h" aspirated.) In all my ten years scrambling over Macedonia, I never had seen such villages as this and Dooshagooibitza (literally "Soul-destructionville"). They are up, up, near the clouds and on such steep mountain sides, that they fairly seem to hang there like a hat on a nail. Looking over the intervening lower hills from Lahtchany, we see at an almost equal height across the valley, and several miles distant, the fair white walls of the great monastery of the Holy Mother of God, where Mr. Graham and his Bulgarian interpreter were royally entertained that night.

The village of Lahtchany was looted and burned last summer, although but one inhabitant was killed—the rest having fled. After the storm passed, they returned and built some huts, reclaimed part of their looted sheep and cattle, and began collecting cooking utensils, etc. But on Nov. 7, a band of the Diberites swooped down upon them and picked clean the bones of their substance, leaving them neither hide nor hoof of live-stock, nor anything else worth taking away. It was no new experience; but it came uncommonly hard this year.

In our relief work, it has been found wisest to have an agent visit each burned or looted village, that he may judge of its condition for himself. We call the villagers together, and make careful lists of families which have suffered, noting the number of souls in each; the number of children five years' old or under (as these receive half of an adult's food allowance); how long their own food will last them—if they have any. As it is the custom for the sons of a household to rear their families under the paternal roof, it often happens that there are fifteen or twenty people in a house. As regards bedding, it is necessary to note in how many groups they sleep; how many people to a group; and whether all are coverless, or whether they managed to save enough bedding to supply one or more of the groups. Doubtless we are deceived in some cases, just as people are who give aid to victims of fire or flood in America. But it is the best that can be done. Afterwards, tickets are issued, based upon these lists, and the people draw their supplies from a distributing depot in their nearest market town.

After thus enrolling the village of Lahtchany, we pushed along our wondrous trail. Turning a shoulder of the mountain, we found ourselves looking up to a mighty cliff, on the face of which yawned the black mouth of a great cave. A peasant who had overtaken us, said that it would accommodate thirty men. I asked him whether the Diberites hide there when they raid the district.

"No," said he, "they have no need to hide. They work openly. It is we who hide when they come."

In order to accomplish our canvass more quickly, so that the needed blankets might the more speedily reach these wintry heights, it was necessary sometimes to summon the people of certain villages to come to others, near at hand, to be enrolled. Thus, we told our peasant traveling companion to notify his fellow-villagers of Dooshagooibitza to come to Klenovetz that evening. The two are separated by a steep valley, Klenovetz standing on a cliff, at the foot of which is the spring of the Kopatch, which bubbles out of the rock and rushes away a full-grown mountain river.

That evening, after the Dooshagooibitza people had come and gone, and the Klenovetz people had been canvassed, as we sat on rush mats on the earthen floor of the hut, around the fire which blazed in the middle and sent a part of its smoke up through a hole in the thatched roof, I asked the children of the household whether they knew any Christmas hymns. As they did not, I sang the Bulgarian words of "Silent night, holy night," to the sweet German melody. Very silently they listened in the flickering firelight—little children, old men, and Mohammedan guards—all listened to the sweet song of "peace and good-will," which seems so far, far distant still from this distracted land.

Butterflies the Whole Year

The carrier brought to our office to-day a copy of your beautiful Butterfly Calendar for 1904, and a part of 1905. Surely the happy possessor of a copy of this calendar is sure of having butterflies the whole year. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD continues to fill a large place in our list of periodicals; is the best publication that comes to our home.

HENRY H. WEST.

For a Christmas Present

The Red Letter Bible reached me all right and in good condition. I chose this, as the most suitable on the list of your premiums, for my son's Christmas present. He had no Bible of his own; he is seventeen, and I am glad to tell you he appreciates it very highly.

JENNIE A. B.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available to the publisher. Registered post remittances.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date. It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

A Fable for "World-Powers"

THAT great Russian writer, Ivan Tourgueneff, in one of his most beautiful prose-poems, recites a dialogue between two Alpine summits—the Jungfrau and the Finsteraarhorn. Those colossi, towering amid their everlasting snows, interrogate each other. The Jungfrau asks the higher peak what it sees, and the other, unwilling to have its long repose broken, thunders back the news that impenetrable clouds veil the earth below. Thousands of years pass by in silence; then the mountains reawaken, and the query is repeated. The Finsteraarhorn now replies that it can discern waters, woods, dwellings, and strange creatures—men, the latter running against each other in apparent confusion. Another repose of ages, and the great peak, again replying, tells its comrade that now the waters are narrower, the forests thinner, the creatures fewer. Again centuries upon centuries of repose, and again the question. This time the great mountain answers that all is snow and ice beneath—clear, shining snow, pure white; no forests, no waters, no life. All is peace. The petty turmoil below is over, and the everlasting hills resume their sleep until the next great development of the Creator's purpose shall arouse them to gaze upon the valleys again.

Herein is a lesson, not only to Tourgueneff's own people, for whom this wonderful fable was written, but to the whole world, and especially to would-be "world-powers." In those masses of tiny, scrambling, wrangling insect creatures at the foot of the twin giants, the nations that are swayed by the vanity of worldly ambition and the lust of conquest and dominion, may see themselves as in a mirror. They come, they swarm, they vanish, and the earth knows them no more. Thus came and went Phœnicia, Assyria, Babylonia, Egypt, Persia, Rome, Greece—all the great African, Asian, and European races of old, most of which are now but as myths. Like the morning mist-wreaths or the motes that dance in the sunbeams, they were swept away at a breath, with all their pomp, their triumphs and their world-policies together. Whatsoever they did of good, that, and no more, is treasured up in the Divine chalices, because in that alone they glorified the Creator. All else was vanity. So it will be with all nations that are swayed by mere ambition, for it is an evil which carries within itself the seeds of its own destruction. Whether Saxon, Tartar, or Asiatic come to the surface now, matters but little. No world-power that is built upon force and slaughter, can endure.

In God's own way, and in his own good time, there will come the beneficent Power that is to redeem the world, and which, according as He hath promised, will set up "a kingdom that shall never be destroyed."

Providential Meetings

MARRIAGES, they say, are made in heaven. It is easy to believe it of conjugal unions that prove happy, and for the welfare of all concerned, that two persons, both being God's dear children, are so directed by an overruling Providence, that after each has passed over many windings, the two paths converge, and the two lives meet and melt into one. But, whether for joy or sorrow, it is true that all our meetings, of longer or shorter duration, and our partnerships less intimate than marriage, come under the same rule: that they are all under law to God.

And let us not doubt that the same might and the same wisdom have been at work to arrange a meeting wherever and whenever Christ is borne by one loving heart and received in faith by another thirsting for salvation.

It is said that in the Jardin des Plantes at Paris, a certain rare tree grew for many years without fruit. It was a thriving, mature plant; year by year it was covered with blossoms, and year by year the blossoms were shed to the ground, leaving no fruit behind. After every promise it remained barren. At last, one season, though nothing extraordinary had been observed, after the flower came the fruit. They sought and found the cause. Another tree of the same species, but having flowers the counterpart and complement of this one, had that season, for the first time, blossomed in a garden at some distance. The small white dust from the flowers of that other tree, necessary to make the flowers of this tree fruitful, had been borne on the feet of bees, or wafted by the wind, into their bosom, and forthwith they bore fruit.

What the all-wise God so beautifully and wondrously does in the natural world, he is continually doing in the kingdom of his grace. We have all seen it in many instances of surprising conversion. Here or there for many years stood the plant, full of grace and beauty in all things, except that it bore no fruit unto God. Ready it was, prepared by the Spirit of all love, waiting for the special influence, the particular event, or form of words adapted to the case. That influence came at last, perhaps in some way, wholly undesigned by human thought, and presently there was the putting forth, not of leaves and flowers only, but of precious fruit in repentance from sin, loving acceptance of Christ, and glad confession of his name before men.

"Than Honey and the Honeycomb"

SWEETER than honey and the honeycomb. The blessed words of the Scriptures, the testimonies of the Book of God, to those who search and love them. Is it so to us? Do we study, and memorize, and meditate, and pray, as the dear old chapters, the precious texts, come into our recollection? Do we read the Bible aloud for its melody and its music? Is it part of the family life, read at family worship, and repeated by the children, as they lay up golden texts for future use in the storehouse of their minds?

A pleasant Sunday morning exercise is for the household, fully gathered after breakfast, to read the Sunday School lesson of the day together. This may be accompanied by questions or comments, by the repetition in concert of the principal points, and by singing, the hymn or psalm selected of course being in accord with the central thought of the passage. As a preparation for the church services this is very helpful, as well as for the Sunday School hour, and those who are accustomed to this little study weekly, will find God's word sweeter than honey and the honeycomb.

Trust Better than Suspicion

CHRIST trusted men. He trusted Zaccheus when he said to him, "I am going home with you today." That electric appeal to the publican's better self transformed him. Such trust even from man to man has often produced the most remarkable results. We have all heard of the famous saying of the Rugby boys in the days of their great head-master: "We must not tell Arnold a lie, for he would believe us." And we know how in our own country the "honor system" has been found the most effective method of control in schools and colleges, in many instances entirely displacing the old force and spy system.

In the relations of business life, we might often prove the truth, if we would put the matter to the test, that confidence is more likely to secure fair-dealing than suspicion and distrust. Is it not true that your smart, suspicious man of business often outwits himself? You have heard such a one say, "I treat every man as a rascal until he proves himself honest." And what is the result? Every one who has dealings with him suspects him also, does his best to get the better of him in trade, and as a rule justifies his suspicion. You may think a preacher is a poor adviser when it comes to business principles and methods; but a preacher, nevertheless, ventures the opinion that men and women would less frequently have cause to complain that they have been cheated, if they would stand at the salesman's counter with less of suspicion in their words and manner; if they would show the same respect and confidence with which they themselves wish to be treated.

A well-known clergyman tells how a friend of his, wishing to buy a horse, went to a horse-dealer and described the kind of animal he wanted. The horse-dealer said, "I can get you exactly the horse you want; it will cost $150." The gentleman at once took out his check-book and wrote a check for the amount. "Here is the money," he said, "send me the horse as soon as you can." The dealer positively gasped for breath; he was bewildered—he began to perspire. At last gasped out, "But—but—you have never seen the horse." "Oh," said the other, "what of that? I know nothing about horses. You know everything. I trust you—you will do the best you can for me."

The man was visibly affected. Tears rose to his eyes. It was the first time in his life he had been trusted that way. The appeal to his better self was irresistible. He grasped the gentleman's hand: "Sir," he said, "will take good care that you have not trusted me vain," and he sent an admirable horse, that more than satisfied the description he had given.

Now, such a fact does not show that in every case similar course on the part of a purchaser would be wise and right. There are thieves and liars and swindlers the world, and the most generous and noble and trust are not always safe from loss and injury at their hands. But that deplorable fact must not, for those who would be Christ-like, obscure the beauty or diminish the value of the great Christian policy of overcoming evil with good, and trusting men rather than suspecting them.

The very first principle of Christ-likeness is the principle of divine charity, the principle that believes men; believes that there is something good in the worst of men; and whether in business, in social intercourse, in politics, or in the promotion of Christianity, appeals first and always to the best in men. Brownie has well said: "God be thanked, the meanest of creatures boasts two soul-sides."

The Divine Standard of Sacred Songs

Editor of "The Christian Herald":—I also am greatly interested in your efforts for true reform in "Sacred Songs" and the having of a collection of songs chosen strictly keeping with God's standard (not men's) of the character of the songs acceptable to him, having a consistent title, as suggested, whereby it can be universally used. Sacred songs it were, for the world.

In God's standard, it is written:

1. Sing forth the honor of his name. Make his praise glorious (Psalm 66: 2).
2. Be thou exalted, Lord, in thine own strength; so will we sing and praise thy power (Psalm 21: 13).
3. Sing unto him a new song. Play skilfully with harp, with psaltery and an instrument of ten strings (Psalm 33: 3).
4. Let the people praise thee, O God, let all the people praise thee (Psalm 67: 5).
5. O let the nations be glad and sing for joy (Psalm 67: 4).
6. They shall sing for the majesty of the Lord (Isaiah 24: 14).
7. Seraphim were standing around him, and one called unto other and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory.

I now suggest the preservation of the following tunes, which are all especially fine for both harmony and melody: Rathburn, to a "New Song." Mt. Blanc, Bera, Siloam, Do-nance, Belmont, Miriam, Von Weber, Bemerton, Henk-Carol and Zerah. These twelve, by suggestion of number also, Malvern, America, Alvan, Missionary Chant, Coronation, Zundel Song, Gratitude, Williams, Ernán, Warwick, Vigil, Braden, Nicæa, Moscow, Messiah.

Praying that this much-needed reform will be speedily made a reality.

ANNIE K. BAILEY, M.D.

Danbury, Conn.

Absurd Stories Contradicted

WE take pleasure in giving space to the following letter from Pastor C. H. Sheldon, concerning certain statements recently printed in some of the daily newspapers:

FEBRUARY 1, 1904

My Dear Dr. Klopsch:—The stories circulated about gymnastic performances in my pulpit are entirely false. I gave to a young people, one night, in a room not used for preaching service (on a week day, after a business session), a little exhibition of Indian club swinging, with a few harmless feats of sleight-of-hand to amuse the little children. I have had a class of boys in Indian club swinging, and it has been one way of reaching them and keeping them interested in clean physical habits. I need hardly say to you that this club swinging was not done on Sunday, in the pulpit, to attract an audience, as the newspaper reports sent me have all reported me doing.

The sacrilege of such an act is so impossible to my thought that I have not attempted any reply to these falsehoods. Not a single newspaper publisher, except yourself and one other, has written me to ascertain the truth; but scores of them have published these misrepresentations without any attempt, apparently, to secure the simple facts. I have had so many lies told about me, the papers, that I am not surprised at this. I have done nothing that I regret, nor anything to bring shame on the church or the ministry.

Very cordially yours,

CHARLES M. SHELDON

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

The Russo-Japanese Crisis

AFTER tedious interchange of notes between Russia and Japan, in which Russia has delayed her answers in order to gain time, the patience of Japan is exhausted, and she is apparently decided on war, if she has not, as some reports say, already commenced operations. The final demand which brought matters to a deadlock was that of Japan, that Russia should sign a treaty conceding the integrity of China and Japanese commercial rights in Manchuria, and her commercial rights and political preponderance in Korea. Russia, on her side, was willing to make verbal promises, which might have formed the basis of concessions, not absolutely satisfactory to Japan, but sufficiently so to avert the necessity of war, but she rejected to embodying them in the form of a treaty or to humiliate herself by giving guarantees. Japan distrusts Russia, and, therefore, insisted on a treaty. It is not surprising that she should do so, having kept her own promise of evacuating Manchuria, when she was in possession after the war with China, she now sees Russia disregarding the principle of the integrity of China, on which she then insisted, and making preparations for indefinite occupancy herself of Manchuria. In Korea, too, Russia protests against Japan erecting fortifications, or taking any measures for her own protection, save in the extreme south of the peninsula. While these negotiations were in progress, both sides were making preparations for the struggle which appears inevitable. Russia has concentrated twenty thousand troops on the Yalu, which is the boundary between Manchuria and Korea, ready to cross the river and invade Korea. She also planned the junction of her war fleet she had at Vladivostok with that she has at Port Arthur. When, however, the ships at Port Arthur emerged from the harbor, they found a line of sixty Japanese vessels stretched across the Yellow Sea, from Wei-hai-Wei almost to the Korean coast, thus barring their passage to unite with the other fleet. The Russian vessels, finding themselves outmaneuvered, then returned to Port Arthur. It is evident that Japan has skillful commanders, both of her navy and army, and that her nearness to the scene of conflict will go far, in the event of war, to make up for her inferiority of power, relatively, with her gigantic antagonist. The distance which Russian soldiers and supplies must traverse to reach the theatre of war, even with the aid of the trans-Siberian Railroad, will seriously embarrass the great Power, while Japan, with vast resources of men and money, will have the advantage of fighting near her base of supplies. The conflict, therefore, will not be so unequal as the relative size of the two nations implies. It must, however, involve great loss and suffering and may drag in other Powers. Both contestants may yet have cause to regret if they do not take the advice of the wise king, whose words are as true in our day as when they were written:

The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water; therefore leave off contention before it be meddled with (Prov. 17: 14).

Baltimore's Appalling Calamity

All sections of the country sympathize with the city of Baltimore, Md., in the shocking catastrophe which has fallen upon her. Not since the great fire of Chicago, in 1871, has any first-class American city been so stricken. An area a mile square in the heart of the business district was completely devastated by the fire, and property estimated at two hundred million dollars was destroyed. The fire started in the large store at the corner of Gorman Street and Hopkins Place, at eleven o'clock on Sunday morning, Feb. 7. A series of explosions rapidly followed, due probably to the fire reaching combustible goods in storage. A high wind was blowing, which carried burning fragments to the roofs of other buildings, setting them on fire. In less than an hour, there were a score of edifices in various parts of the city burning fiercely and becoming the centre of other conflagrations. The fire was seen to spread from one square to another in thirty minutes. Though the fire department worked heroically, it was powerless to check the progress of the flames. Though great buildings in their path were soaked with water before the fire reached them, the intense heat quickly dried them and they were soon burning fiercely. From Howard street to Jones' Falls, and from Baltimore street to the river front, the area was one mass of flames. The National Exchange Bank, the Hopkins Place Savings Bank, the Custom House, the great sympathy of the whole country in their distress, and that measures will be taken to relieve, as far as possible, the suffering that must be entailed. It will be a pleasure and a duty to fulfil to them the Scripture promise that was given to God's ancient people.

To give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning (Isa. 61: 3).

The Custis Bible

It has become known that the old family Bible belonging to the Custis family, which Martha Washington used at her devotions, has been traced. It was formerly in the possession of Gen. Robert E. Lee, but in 1861 the old Book was mislaid. It was not seen afterwards by any of the Lee family, but during a visit of one of the members recently to New York, news reached her that the treasurconsiderations which enhance the worth of this particular volume; but if the worth of a Bible were estimated by what men have derived from it, who could tell its value?

More to be desired are they than gold; yea, than much fine gold (Ps. 19: 10).

Unclean Money

The Congressional Committee on Banking and Currency gave a hearing a few days ago to Dr. Darlington, President of the New York Board of Health, who has been making an examination of the bills in circulation. It has been noticed that it is a frequent practice of car conductors, newsdealers, and other small vendors to place coins in the mouth and hold them so while making change; or to wet their thumbs or fingers on the tongue or lips in order to facilitate the handling of paper currency. The germs of diphtheria, pneumonia and a number of other diseases may in this manner be conveyed to others. Scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, small-pox, consumption and a host of contagious diseases, may be spread in many instances by the transfer of infected money, which has been handled by persons suffering from these maladies. Dr. Darlington told the Committee that he was formulating a plan for daily or weekly sterilization of both coins and bills in New York. It is well that such plans should be carried out, but even if they are not, there will be few persons who will be prevented, by fear of infection, from getting all the currency they can. Unhappily, many have no fear, either, of moral contagion. Money has become so necessary to our lives that the desire to get it is often greater than the care that it shall be righteously gotten.

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction (1. Tim. 6: 9).

Dead in Law

A well known lawyer of the Georgia bar, relates a curious instance of a man, whose actual presence in court, at Atlanta, was ignored by the judge, who persisted in treating him as dead, though his identity was fully established. The suit before the court was brought by a man who claimed a share in the estate of his father, who died some years ago in Georgia. After his death the estate was divided among the heirs, on the presumption that this son, who had long been absent and for many years had held no communication with his family, was dead. The plaintiff testified that he was in Texas when his father died, and he did not know of the death until he returned to Georgia, some years later. The judge dismissed his claim. He said that a man who absents himself from his home and severs all communication with his family, should not complain if they regard him as dead, and proceed on that assumption. Besides, though according to his own admission, when he did hear of his father's death, he suffered three years to elapse before he sued. The court, therefore, refused to entertain his claim. The decision shows how a man of common sense regards one who is remiss in attending to his own interests. Yet how many men of common sense neglect to avail themselves of the greatest blessing that could be offered to men, and do so from year to year until they come to die!

Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip (Heb. 2: 1).

BRIEF NOTES

In the German principality of Waldeck, a decree has been issued forbidding the granting of a license to marry to any person who is known to be of drunken habits.

The statement of the Baptist Missionary Union from April 1, to December 1, 1903, shows receipts of $181,890, an increase of $10,707 over the same period of the previous year.

The Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., president of the Society of Christian Endeavor, arrived at Honolulu, January 7, on his tour of the world. A reception was given him at the wharf.

GUARDED GATE OF A FOREIGN LEGATION IN SEOUL, KOREA

wholesale dry goods houses and office buildings and newspaper offices were swept away. Efforts were made to check the progress of the fire by desolating a swath across its path by dynamite, but the wind carried the blazing fragments far over it. Appeals for help were made to other cities, and New York immediately sent ten engines, and nearer cities also responded. Not until ten o'clock on Monday morning was the fire under control, and even then it was burning in many places. The loss of life is not known at the time of writing, but there is reason to fear it is serious, as there are hundreds of injured persons in the hospitals, including Mr. Geo. W. Horton, the Chief of the Fire Brigade, who was injured early in the outbreak by a live electric wire. It is sad to think of so much valuable property being destroyed and of the multitudes who will be ruined by the calamity. We may be quite sure that the people will have the hearty ed relic was in the hands of a well-known collector, who set great store by it. She wrote to him to ascertain on what terms he would dispose of it. He declined to part with it, as he contended that it rightly belonged to him. It had been bought and sold several times before, reaching the collector's hands, and had apparently been in the possession of persons who did not know its value. It was published in London in 1702, and on the fly-leaf between the Old and New Testament there is a record of births and marriages in the Custis family. The birth of George W. P. Custis, the adopted son of George Washington, is among the records. It is reported that if the Lee family cannot effect a purchase of the volume, a suit will be commenced to regain it. A suit for the possession of a Bible will be a novelty in the courts, where the prize at stake is usually accounted of far greater value. There are in this case sentimental

"LUNG BLOCK," and WHAT I SAW THERE

By LUCY CLEVELLAND

WAS it a stairway that went up to animals or to human beings? The stairway was absolutely black—not dark, but black. I was in "Lung Block," the greatest stronghold of consumption in New York. It is bounded by Cherry, Catharine, Hamilton and Market streets, and is not far from the East River. In stands in one of the most congested wards of the metropolis, and every year it is becoming more and more densely populated. Every tenement in the block is crowded with lodgers. Here are huddled together all nationalities—Irish, Italians, Jews, Turks, Danes, Swedes, Poles, Russians and Germans. "Lung Block" numbers four thousand people to the acre. Between 1890 and 1900 its population increased sixty-five per cent. In nine years this block has reported two hundred and sixty-five cases of phthisis, but many cases are not reported. The two hundred and sixty-five cases represent, it is believed, only half of the true number. If a family moves out, the new-comers take the "White Horror" from sleeping in the foul, germ-infected "closets." From these infected tenements, the worker goes out to handle fish in the market, to work in the sweat-shop, to handle, often, food for a city. The man goes back at night to his home on Lung Block. From Lung Block in the morning, he bears the deadly germ to his work.

Dr. Herman M. Biggs, of the Committee on Prevention of Tuberculosis, has estimated that the total loss to New York City from tuberculosis is twenty-three millions of dollars a year. It costs each patient several hundred dollars to die. The little family must be placed subsequently, on the charity list of the city.

The "White Horror," consumption, feeds on the foul rooms, the darkness, the absence of air. In Lung Block live families who never bathe. How can they? Where can they bathe? There are a thousand homes in Lung Block, and four hundred babies. The tenements are grimy. The air-shafts are sunless. The stairways are lined with dust and cobwebs. In these, tuberculosis germs fatten. Millions of germs, literally, are coughed up every day in Lung Block. Lying upon pavements, halls, in closet bed-rooms, in kitchens, these germs, drying, mingle with the very air—and the White Horror spreads. In these dark halls and on such stairways, the germs live two years. If you let in God's sunlight, they disappear.

I stood and waited on this stairway, and wondered. I was not afraid; but I was filled with awe—the stairway was so absolutely black. On such a stairway, a quick Italian stiletto-thrust, garroting—anything, could take place. I involuntarily repeated one of those eternal "shalt nots," the sixth verse of the ninety-first Psalm: "Thou shalt not be afraid of the pestilence that walketh in darkness." I went on, feeling the way on with my feet, for feet had to do the work of eyes.

Now there is a faint light ahead. It sifts from a narrow slit between two walls; the slit fully as wide as a coffin. It ran back to a window, which looked out upon filth. Directly to the left of the slit in the wall, that represented a passage-way for air and that only brought in foul smells, a reeking odor of garlic drenched what air there was. You heard the confused jabber of everybody talking all at once. These were Italian quarters, where the women were decked out a bit, and where a kind of a midday meal was progressing, amidst drink, tuberculosis and vice. I went on more quickly, along the half-light of this upper landing to which the black stairway led. I knocked at a door whose two windows gave on Cherry street. A feeble voice called, "Come in, please!"

Half-blinded by the steaming heat in the room, I perceived through its haze a stout woman sitting huddled up near the stove. The room was very small. A closet, called a bed-room, opened off it. Within this closet, consumption had fastened its white fangs upon a victim. The lodgers had made some feeble efforts towards tidiness in the outer room. The family consisted of a father and mother and two children. The mother was in the first stages of consumption. Her left lung was affected. She seemed to be sitting in a dazed kind of a way. Her patient eyes looked out at me as those of a hunted animal might look.

"We can't open the windows," the patient sufferer said, pointing to the small windows looking out on the street; "for the cold comes in, and that burns up all the coal we have. We darsn't open the windows never."

Never open the windows!

"Where is your husband?" I asked.

"In there!" pointing to the wretched little closet.

In this aperture in the wall, a closet six feet by eight, the husband was dying of consumption. In this one bed, heaped with old "comfortables," themselves filled with tuberculosis germs, the family of four slept—the father dying of consumption; the mother, whose left lung the disease had successfully grappled; and two children, one a boy of fourteen. This sleeping-closet had no window. There was not an atom of oxygen in it. Only foul odors exuding from decaying lungs.

"What did your husband get for his work when he was up and doing?" I asked the patient mother.

"A cent and a half apiece," she answered.

By dint of the most blinding toil, from five o'clock in the morning until seven at night, you can figure up what the family of four lived on. They lived on four dollars a week. The father, who had taken the White Horror and was slowly dying, worked on as long and as bravely as he could; for there is a tremendous pathos of "Hold on!" and "Hold out to the last!" among the tenement-dwellers in Lung Block. These seem to be the two mottoes of the dwellers there. The "pieces" that went to the sweat-shop daily from this diseased room, carried the germs in seam and gusset and band. No, this family will not long live on four dollars a week. The mother is slowly succumbing to the inevitable disease. Two children died in 1903—one of tubercular-meningitis, the other of croup. The patient, hunted look in the mother's eyes haunt me, as she said, "You will help us?"

ONE OF THE SIDES OF "LUNG BLOCK"

Yonder, living on Lung Block, is a young girl, the last of a family of seven, who have succumbed to the White Horror, and she is now coughing her way to the grave. Her father, disheartened and hopeless, with five little mouths to feed—that couldn't be fed—took to drink. And then he took consumption. Dissipation is the automobile-road to the White Horror. Will you see his home? A room reeking with smells, and bread

THE GROUND-PLAN OF "LUNG BLOCK"

The dark sections represent courts and air-shafts. Each letter represents one case of consumption reported to the Health Department since 1894. In some of the houses there have been numerous cases in the same year, thus, in No. 144 there were 4 cases (a) in 1894, 13 cases (b) in 1895, and 2 cases (e) in 1898.

and tea for supper; and cold, so cold the closet whose bed the seven must sleep. And out again for the Morning Star fades; and the mother's dy eyes looking at him all day, as his hands stagger on work faster at "piece work." He can't work fast with those tired hands. And so the father took to drink. He had a brave heart, till he saw the faces of his children grow more white and gaunt, and until the mother succumbed, for there is a royal courage in many of the filthy tenements. It lives on, and alongside of broth and unmentionable sin. But despair at last grappled the hungry head of the little family. And the brave daughter, who had flung off the insults of the evil man around the corner, opened the door of the family room one evening, to see her father reeling, and to hear him singing a song of the gutter.

She struggled on. She had ambitions. She went night school. She kept herself from the streets and fate of many poor girls. But when the coal famine came, and when she shivered all night under wretched bed-clothing, and rose at dawn to go to the factory where she must work that wearisome treadle all day till seven o'clock, her young spirit broke. The body strength gave out, under the ration of bread and tea for months. She, too, took consumption, now she is slowly dying. Whose the fault that those young ambitions died? I met an old, ragged, grizzled creature, as came down the foul stairway, a tenement on Lung Block. I could have infected a city. I was Russian. He had on a dirty verminous coat. He grinned hideously; and spat germs up wall and floor. He was a presumptive, chewing and leering his way to the grave. And a young woman, who go out daily to work, while it is yet dark, must meet, on the black stairway, such people as this.

"She lives in the rear house," the man across the way in the sausage-shop, said to me, as I inquired for a certain number on Lung Block. I went up some rickety stairs. The brawl that roared out from the top of the stairway warned me to go down and very quickly. It was a one-room tenement. At the foot of the steps I saw an alley-way that ran into darkness. "She lives there," yelled the shopkeeper. "You'll find the rear house through there."

The snow had drifted into the narrow, dark, abominable alley. I could dimly see patches of it. I groped forward. The walls were loaded—not lined—with filth. A sewer had burst, and the foul puddles had frozen. About forty feet ahead was the end of the alley, and I thought I was near my goal, the rear house where she lived, the poor consumptive I was seeking. But no; the alley led to a court where four outhouses had been planted directly under the back windows of the rear-house, whose frontage looked out some of the worst dens of crime in New York City. The only air that came into these windows where the poor consumptive lived, was a fetid stench. The court in which these outhouses were planted was itself a dung heap. Piles of old decaying stuff, too, had been cast from the windows of rooms where the victims of the White Horror had died. The prospect that is daily before the faces of the sufferers from the White Horror, as they look from the rear windows of this rear house in Lung Block, is a line of outhouses. The prospect from the front windows of this rear-house is a court filled with noises and stenches.

Philanthropy has done something for Lung Block. Civic agitation over this matter has bettered condition—somewhat only. For Lung Block still exists in this Year of our Saviour, 1904. It is a burning shame to the city's purse. Better housing must be found; playgrounds (as breathing spaces) must be made; public baths must be built; and in this crowded "East Side," air must be given now to these emaciated emblem of the White Horror. Sunlight must stream into these smelling rooms.

There are just four steps that lead into the White Horror on Lung Block. Darkness and Dirt; Despair and Drink. And the grewsome fattening of the tuberculosis-germ has begun.

You come back with a gasp into the light and laughter of decorous Broadway. You come back to civilization. But—is it civilization, O! men and women, who are known by Christ's dear name, when, only a stone's throw from you there goes up the groan to God from your brothers and sisters dying for help?

The Revolution of Molly

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

"TELL you, Molly, the house is well enough. It suits me. I have no money to throw away on fol-de-rols and foolishness; your mother never found fault with her home, and why should you? I won't hear another word."

"But, father," pleaded Molly, her dark eyes gathering misty look, as if the tears were near, but her quivering mouth held firm by an effort of girlish will, "it is ten years since we lost dear mother, and nothing has been done to the house since she died. The paper is ragged and faded, the paint is worn off, the carpets are threadbare, the furniture is shabby. I am ashamed to show my friends to the house. The home is not attractive for the boys. It wouldn't take so much to fix it up; it now looks like poverty flat. I can't stand it, father."

"I guess you'll have to," answered John Petrie, with an obstinate set of his jaw. The bull-dog look came out on his massive Scotch-Irish face. "All you say, Molly Petrie," he went on, "is the merest stuff and nonsense. If you are so silly as to feel ashamed of a good home, don't ask your friends here. As for the boys, what's good enough for their father is good enough for them, or ought to be. If it isn't, they're an ungrateful pack, and I'll not have them indulged. What under the copy you want, I can't see. There isn't a cellar in town as good as my cellar: dry, clean, well ventilated, cemented, in first-class condition, and the roof perfect."

"We don't live in the cellar nor on the roof, father."

"Don't be pert, Miss, I'll not stand at. Go about your Saturday's work, and waste no more time; and, understand me, this subject is dismissed for this year. I'll not paint, nor paper, nor furnish new things, to pamper folly and vanity in my children. That's settled."

Mr. Petrie put on his overcoat, removed his hat on his bald head, and stepped off to the machine-shop of which he was proprietor. He was angry with Molly, angry enough to shake her; but you couldn't shake a young woman twenty-three. For two months Molly had tormented him, renewing her efforts on every possible occasion, her heart being as resolutely set on making the shabby house and bare home presentable, as his was in letting it severely alone. Now, he felt that he had arrived at the end of his patience. Was he, John Petrie, fifty-five years old, elder in the church, superintendent of the Sunday School, and leading citizen of H—, to be dictated to by his family; by a girl of Molly's age? Not he, forsooth, he knew himself.

Mr. Petrie was prosperous. His bank account was satisfactory. His investments were shrewdly made and profitable. Furthermore, he was a good provider. His children were comfortably dressed and his table was generously spread. Only on two points was he miserly. He would not allow Molly to have hired help, not even with the washing and ironing, nor would he do anything towards furnishing and brightening a most ill-furnished and run-down-sto-paper-and-paint house.

As he entered his office, his pastor came to meet him, extending a cordial hand.

"Brother Petrie," he said, "I ventured to call that I might suggest some steps about raising money to introduce electric lights into the church. I know you will approve of the change. Our present lamps are so dim."

"I approve," said Mr. Petrie, at once bland and smiling, "of whatever will make our sanctuary beautiful. Put me down for a subscription of twenty dollars. I am always ready to put my hand in my pocket for the house of God."

The minister departed, beaming. He observed to his wife that day, that John Petrie was a most consecrated man, a vessel of sanctification, a true helper in the parish.

"Well," said Mrs. Minister, who was an observing little woman, "that may be, but I believe he does good that he may be advertised. I hold that man to be a sheet angel, Dan. He's harsh with his boys, and horrid to Molly. He'd better spend money on his own home, and let the church go."

"Ruth," the husband expostulated, "Ruth, my darling, restrain that tongue. It may get us into trouble."

"It never has yet, Dan, but to you I say what I think," rejoined the small, bright-eyed woman, with proper spirit. They had no children, and there was nobody to hear or repeat their confidences.

After her father left, Molly Petrie threw herself into a chair and had a good cry.

"Her Saturday's work!" For some unaccountable reason, she was extremely irritated at the phrase as it had fallen from her father's lips. When her mother had died, leaving her, a girl of thirteen, to care for the household and bring up her three younger brothers, a very heavy load had fallen upon her slender shoulders. She had then definitely left school—just as she was prepared to enter the high school. For five years, till Molly was eighteen, "a girl" had officiated in the kitchen; but she had then been dismissed, and Molly, without wages, had kept house unassisted.

"Monday's and Tuesday's and Wednesday's work, who does it all, if not I?" she exclaimed, talking aloud, so that Puss on the hearth heard, wondered, and came purring to her side, presently jumping up on her lap, a soft, furry friend, whose sympathy was a comfort.

Molly Petrie had a Scotch-Irish vein of stubbornness as well as her father. She did her Saturday's work was tucked a note. He read it with a puzzled frown.

DEAR FATHER: I have gone to town to spend a fortnight with Aunt Helen. She has been ill and needs me. As my return after that is a little uncertain, I have telegraphed to your cousin Ellen to come on Monday, and look after you and the boys. There is plenty for you all to eat, till Monday. Your affectionate daughter, MARY PETRIE.

Consternation reigned for a moment.

"How dared Molly go on a visit without leave?" stormed her father.

"Molly is of age," quietly declared John Junior, motioning his brothers to be silent. "It's hard," he added, "if she can never leave home for a day."

The meal was taken in glum silence. But the boys were on Molly's side, and they rejoiced in their tyrannical father's discomfiture. One by one they stole out softly after supper, leaving him alone. Not a man of them thought of washing the supper dishes.

Monday morning arrived, and with it Miss Ellen Petrie, a cousin several times removed, and a woman not in the least in awe of John. She took hold with a will, straightened up the house, and declared her intention of remaining as long as Molly wished to stay away.

"Sammy," she said to the youngest boy, on Tuesday, "who does the laundry work here?"

"Sister," he replied.

"I want to know! Well, you stop and send Mrs. McConnel here, quick as a wink."

Molly Petrie, at her Aunt Helen's, was in no hurry to go home. She had swiftly packed her trunk when she had decided to leave her father for awhile, and she had plenty of clothes to last her for a long visit. Her Aunt Helen, a younger sister of her mother, was only too glad to have Molly under her wing, and when Molly unfolded a bold plan, she abetted her.

"It isn't a love affair, dear, is it?" she asked anxiously.

"It is not. I shall never, never be in love," averred Molly. "I intend to keep my independence."

"Till the right man appears," laughed cheery Aunt Helen. "My dear, my dear, I don't wonder at the way you feel. Your father has alienated you from any thought of love or marriage."

"Molly is young and pretty, and life is all before her," said Great-Aunt Matilda. "She'll be all right if she does not meet a 'masterful man.'"

Molly's thought was this: She had worked so long without payment, and her father so ignored her wishes, and thwarted her at every turn, that she had concluded to try living where she could be paid for her services. With her Aunt Helen's approval and aid, she secured a place as chambermaid and waitress in a summer hotel. Good wages were offered and accepted, and then Molly wrote frankly and fully to her father.

She explained that she could not submit to be treated as a dependent, or as an idiot; that in the home she claimed the right of a grown-up woman to freedom of movement as to her comings and goings, and that she also felt that she was within her rights in requesting either to be given an allowance, or paid a salary for her housekeeping services. She did not seek to return. The boys were now men; her father in his prime, and no one needed her. She needed herself—needed room to grow, to become an all-round woman. If she did come back, she must have an environment in which she could be contented.

John Petrie fumed and raged when he read this letter. He tossed it across the table to John Junior, who gravely commented on it, saying: "Good for Molly! She is very reasonable!"

Cousin Ellen, stepping briskly about the house, observed: "I'm thankful Mary has some Petrie grit. I was afraid, seeing how she let herself be imposed on, John, that she was all Kirkwood. But she's like us, and she'll get through!"

It ended, finally, in John Senior hauling down his colors and surrendering unconditionally. Six months later, Molly came home to a freshly papered and painted house—a house renovated and brightened and properly equipped, between the good roof and the dry cellar, upstairs, downstairs and in my lady's chamber. And the minister's wife, when she went to call, kissed Molly with tears in her eyes, though she never said a word; and when she reached home, flew to the study, and gave her wondering husband a good, big hug.

"John Petrie's had a change of heart," she said.

THE WOOD GATHERER

The path so bleak and frozen she treadeth all alone;
But she heedeth not the sighing of Winter's monotone.
For every step she's taking brings home and mother nigher,
As sweet Elsa gathers fagots, for the cottage hearthstone fire.

thoroughly, cleaned the dingy house till it shone, baked bread and pies, prepared the baked beans, and the roast beef for the Sunday's meals. John Petrie and his sons came home for noonday dinner, and Molly presided over it with composure. It was a good and abundant meal. Mr. Petrie's crossness of the morning was laid aside, and he was disposed to be affable.

In his own secret soul, he was pleased that he had managed his daughter so successfully.

"Nothing like firmness and a tight rein with a woman," he said, as he strode downtown again, half-chuckling to himself. "She'd have the bit between her teeth in no time, if I were not firm."

When he came home to supper, the house was shining, but no Molly greeted him. The boys, returning home from work—big fellows all, who earned and paid their way—shouted her name, but there was no reply.

"Where can she be?" growled the father. "I won't have her gadding about."

"She's not given to gadding, father," answered John Junior, "and she's not a slave. Here, what's this?"

Just under the edge of Mr. Petrie's plate at the table

THE MOUNTAIN SERMON

Hearers and Doers of the Word

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEB. 29
MATT. 7: 21-29

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT--JAMES 1: 21:
BE YE DOERS OF THE WORD, AND NOT HEARERS ONLY

THE Mount of Beatitudes is a pulpit from which was preached the greatest sermon the world has ever heard, by the greatest preacher, Jesus Christ, the Son of God. What he preached from that pulpit is called the Sermon on the Mount. The pulpit was decorated with growing plants, blue anemones, scarlet lilies, purple hyssops, orange crocuses, and many more. The grass on the hillside provided for the people abundant cushions of softest grass. The beautiful summer sky was the roof overhead. The beautiful horizon, of which the lake of Galilee was a part, formed the walls of the temple in which the audience was gathered. The worshippers had come from the villages round about, and, some of them, even from Capernaum, seven miles away. They had come in family groups—fathers, mothers, and children. The lame and the sick were also there to be healed. Some Roman soldiers came to preserve the peace, in case any disturbance should arise. Gathered closest to the Preacher were twelve men, who had been almost his constant companions for a year or more: Simon Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew, James, Thaddeus, Simon and Judas. These were soon to be appointed apostles, and sent out to preach the Gospel, and heal all manner of sickness, even as their Master. This mountain discourse may have been intended for them alone, but the loving and tender Christ would not turn away others who came to hear him.

The sermon began with the ten Beatitudes, which have been called "the New Testament counterpart to the Ten Commandments of the Old Testament." "The Kingdom of God" was the main theme of the sermon. It is analyzed thus by Edersheim, who was familiar with Jewish thought: "First, the Kingdom of God cannot be circumscribed (Matt. 7: 1-5). Secondly, it cannot be extended, as you would do it by external means (v. 6), but comes to us from God (vs. 7-12), and is entered by personal determination and separation (vs. 13, 14). Thirdly, it is not preached, as is too often attempted, when the thoughts of it are merely of the external. Lastly, it is not manifested in life in the empty forms too common among religionists, but is very real, and true, and good in its effects (vs. 17-20). And this Kingdom, as received by each of us, is like a solid house on a solid foundation, which nothing from without can shake or destroy" (vs. 24-27).

The sermon is not alone for those to whom it was first spoken, but for the whole world, and we must pass it on with our lips and our lives and by our missionary gifts.

Illustration and Application

This lesson being an extract from the Sermon on the Mount, it would be well for all, except classes of young children, to study the sermon as a whole. There are four great characteristics that run through it, like river and valley and highway and mountain range. First, note the sympathy of Christ for nature, as the oldest testament; second, note the familiarity of Christ with the Old Testament, which was the Saviour's Bible; third, mark the emphasis he puts upon heart life; fourth, note the importance he gives to humanitarianism as applied Christianity.

I. Let us consider how Christ brought into this sermon, as into many others, the sweet odors of the fields. More than a score of natural objects are cited as illustrations in this outdoor sermon—the lilies that grow larger and more abundantly on the Mount of Beatitudes, even to-day than anywhere else in Palestine; the sparrows and ravens flying about; the clouds and the reddening sky. These suggest, by contrast, that religion to-day is too much an indoor matter, confined to one place and one day. We need to get our religion out among the flowers and fields by outdoor meetings whenever possible, and, by bringing nature into the church, in decoration and illustration, connecting God's Word and God's world. Here it is fitting to quote the words of Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis: "Christ's enthusiasm for nature was second only to his enthusiasm for man. He lived an outdoor life and loved the warm fields. His was the poet's vision, that exalts the commonplace and finds a tropic forest in every foot of turf. For the most part, his speech was drawn from the woods and fields. Not that he shunned the city or was blind to the wisdom of the street. Yet the genius of his life was far from the hot town, with its glare and fevered strife. The winds that blow through his pages carry the odors of the apple blossoms, the vineyards and the sedgy brook. While he speaks, the grass grows, the buds burst, the poppies redden against the ripened wheat; the air is full of birds and sweet with breath of vines; while for the ear, the 'musical, steaming, odoriferous south wind turns all the trees into wind harps.' Sitting on the grassy slope of the mountain side, Christ began his ministry and spake not of books, but of the world about him. Then the fluted blade of grass became a teacher of patience and humility; the sparrow in its flight and fall told of God's loving care; the wild lily proclaimed a providence more careful for man and his enrichment, than for the adornment of the flower stalk; the distant rain storm, sweeping slowly o'er the hills and bidding men seek some sheltering rock, urged them not to build upon the sand, but on foundations sure as the mountain on which their teacher sat. . . . What a thin pressed flower is to a bunch of dewy violets, a book is to his crisp, fresh speech. For him, each ordinary walk, was like a morning or an evening sacrifice. His thought had not far to climb from nature up to nature's God. . . . Nature is the genius of the infinite God rushing into visible sight for man's happiness and enrichment."

The Sermon on the Mount prompts us to find in nature a manifold revelation of God. A Christian living alone in a hard field got into doubt whether there was a God back of nature and history. While riding on horseback one day and struggling with these intruded doubts, his way lay along a thickly shaded path. It was the autumn time, and a beautiful leaf attracted his attention as it came tumbling down from its branch and alighted upon the pommel of his saddle. He picked it up, looked it over, and turned it round admiringly in the sun again and again, as the beams stole quietly through the trees. How delicate its veining, and what a marvelous lacework of beauty he saw in it; and he involuntarily exclaimed, "Yes, that little leaf tells me the Bible is true, tells me there is a God; for none but a wise, good, merciful, and powerful God could have made a leaf like that. I am sure it is all true." And he went on his way, having regained the old sweet joy of faith in the "Great Companion."

A gardener having caught a beautiful mole, sent in the dead body for Jack, his master's boy, to examine. "We can never catch 'em alive," said the old man, when Jack almost cried over the velvety black body, with its pink waistcoat and soft nose. "See his paddles, Master Jack. Isn't our Heavenly Father great and wonderful? He fits even the mole for his work. See, the forefeet are close to his shoulders, so that mole can get a wide sweep o' his hands. An' the fingers have such long, strong nails to 'em. The palms turned hindside forward, for mole has to get rid of the earth he scoops away, an' these back-handed paddles make it easy for him to burrow away. I tell ye, Master Jack, to understand the ways o' the Almighty, ye have to live as I do, seeing the worms, an' moles, and hedgehogs an' such things every day o' my life. Why, every one o' them little creatures is exactly fitted for his work. Paddles for mole, bristles for the hedgehog, scissors for a beetle, shells for snails." The homely words of the gardener mean the same as what a great man has said, "The laws of nature are the hands of God."

"WHEN HE WAS SET, HIS DISCIPLES CAME UNTO HIM"

II. The Sermon on the Mount shows not only Christ's great sympathy for nature, but also his familiarity with the Old Testament from which he quoted the very things in this sermon which neglecters of the Old Testament often cite to prove the superiority of the New to the Old. The Beatitudes, for instance, are all of them Old Testament bells which Christ has brought together into a chime. The Golden Rule, Christ himself said, is the substance of the law and the prophets. The very command to love our enemy is an Old Testament precept that Christ had learned in the Scriptures in his childhood. He gave to the old Law a deeper and loftier meaning, but he shows us that the loftiest principles of the Gospel were rooted in the Law.

III. A deeper characteristic of the sermon, however, than those thus far mentioned, is found in the key text of it: "Blessed are the pure in heart."

To be right in one's innermost nature this sermon teaches the great thing in life. Bishop J. H. Vincent recently sent to many friends in this country a New Year's message an impressive booklet entitled My Church: the Church the True Life. It tells how a farmer and his mother, living far from any church, came to feel that the Church is a life, a fellowship, not a method or a set of forms, and there in their farmhouse they realized the Bible term, "The church in thy house." In quiet Christian fellowship with God, they two and a few neighbors enjoyed the life of the Spirit, which is the heart of the true Church and without which the stately temple of the Pharisees and the heartless cathedrals, where form takes the place of faith, are but elegantly laid-out corpses.

Spurgeon started up one night in great fright. He had dreamed that his heart had stopped beating. His watch within reach, and, on looking at it, he discovered that it had stopped running, apparently at the very moment when he had the ugly dream. His own explanation, which is probably the correct one, was that the moment his watch stopped, his ear had noted the change, and brought on the dream. And the great preacher, with that readiness which always characterized him in using common things as illustrations of great truth, seized upon this incident, and said: "How I wish every Christian, whenever he feels the works of piety are not carried on by him, would start up in fright, and say: 'Has my heart stopped?' An servant man may discover in his very tones that his heart is out of order, through envy, or greed, or ill

It is not so much what you say,
As the manner in which you say it;
It is not so much the language you use,
As the tones in which you convey it.

For words but come from the mind,
And grow by study and art;
But the tones leap forth from the inner self,
And reveal the state of the heart.

IV. The crowning characteristic of the sermon is the outworking of faith in deeds, without which, as the lesson teaches, our creeds are houses built on sand.

"If I should die before I wake," sake Donny, kneeling at grandmother's knee. "If I should die before I wake"—"I pray"—prompted the gentle voice, "on, Donny." "Wait a minute," interposed a small boy, scrambling to his feet and hurrying away downstairs. In a moment he was back again, at dropping down in his place, took up his petition where he had left it. But when the little white-gowned form was safely tucked in bed, the grandmother questioned with loving rebuke concerning the interruption. "But I did not think what I was saying grandmother; that's why I had to stop. You see I'd upset Ted's menagerie, and stood all his wood soldiers on their heads, just to see how he'd react around in the morning. But, 'If I should die before I wake,' why—I didn't want him to find them that way, so I had to go down and fix 'em right. There's lots of things that seem funny if you are going to keep on living, but you don't want 'em that way, you should die before you wake." "That was right, dear, it was right," commended the grandmother's voice, with a tender quiver. "I imagine there are good many of our prayers that would not be hurt by stopping in the middle of them to undo a wrong Christianity manifests love to man in manifold forms, like a fruit-laden tree. The seed of the Gospel, as we have before said, is individual conversion—a heart right with God—but the full-grown Gospel is a Christianized social life. And here, it is important to note, what is very generally forgotten, that the humanitarianism of the Sermon on the Mount was not proclaimed in the beginning of Christ's ministry, as its place in the opening Matthew suggests. This sermon was preceded by the discourse on worship at Jacob's well; and that was preceded by the sermon to Nicodemus on regeneration; and that was preceded by the proclamation of atonement, in the words of John: "Behold, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Note God's order—atonement, regeneration, worship, humanitarianism. We should neither begin with humanitarianism nor end with worship.

Recently there appeared a symposium of replies to the suggestive question: "What was the kindest deed you ever saw?" It is a good question to raise in a Sunday School class by way of revealing the sandy foundation on which many a professedly Christian life rests. Such incidents brought to memory, will often, by contrast, show how little of kindness that costs there is in our life story.

In Perfect Condition

I received the Crown Encyclopedia in perfect condition also the beautiful Calendar. We are delighted with the books. I cannot understand how you can give such nice books for only three dollars. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD itself is a mine of information

M. J. B.

OUR MAIL BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

SPECIAL NOTICE

Letters for the "Mail-Bag" must contain name and address of the writer, not for publication, but so that an answer may be sent by mail if necessary.

Subscriber, Deposit, New York. Why is Jesus sometimes called Son of Man and sometimes Son of God?

It is supposed that Jesus, in applying to himself the title Son of Man, intended to emphasize his humanity and his representative character. The Jews were looking for a Messiah who would raise Israel to the head of the nations; Jesus wished to impress the disciples with the fact that he was representative of the whole human race and not of the Jews only. Then, too, to have spoken openly of himself as the Son of God would have been tantamount to exasperate the Jews and bring upon himself a charge of blasphemy, as in the end it did (See John 10:36). The title, Son of Man, was not open to that danger, as it was expressive of lowliness, humility and identification with humanity. In using it, however, Jesus did not withdraw his claim to be the Son of God. When the High Priest put him on his oath (See Matt. 26:63-65) he acknowledged that he was the Son of God.

There is a novel and pleasing suggestion in J. B., a reader, in Washington, D. C.

After a recent illness, I wondered what I could do to cheer others. I thought I would place a mantle in my room at the hospital, where I have suffered so much. "Our tears should be amulets for coming workers." Let us undertake such a little work for the Master. Place one in some hospital near you, or further away, as you may like. Would not this be glorifying the Master and making something out of trial?

Ed., Boston, Mass. Is not the Senator Burton, of Kansas, who has been indicted recently by a Federal jury at St. Louis, the same Senator to whom, a little over a year ago, the press attributed the extraordinary statement that our missionaries in Hawaii had persuaded the natives of that country to give them their lands, in return for certificates assuring them that "they would go to heaven when they died?"

They are one and the same individual; but it is only just to the Senator to state that he afterward removed the imputation from the missionaries by a denial, in which he said: "I do not remember ever to have said anything that could be interpreted as a statement relating to the missionaries; I positively know I have never said anything that reflected in any way upon the Christian missionaries." He also added, in the same explanation, that the statement attributed to him "is sometimes said in Hawaii as a joke." As the Senator went to Hawaii in an official capacity, his utterances on his return were naturally accepted seriously by the editors of his own State, who I do not attribute jocosity to him then, any more than they have done in connection with the events of his later career. The missionaries have forgiven him, long ago.

Sadie E. H., Upper Musquodaboit, N. S. We never heard of chameleon-lizards being used by American ladies as ornaments. 2. The first is the real name, the second a nom de plume. 3. Write to American Book Co., New York.

H., Hickory, N. C. Can a person who wears jewels on the hand be a Christian?

We ought to abstain from judging others as far as possible. Christ condemned the Pharisee (see Matt. 7:1-5). Paul, too, reminds us (Rom. 14:4), that we ought not to assume the right to condemn. "To his own Master standeth or falleth." Therefore, to tell a person that he is not a Christian, if he has a ring on his finger, is to assume a position to which we have no right. There may be a reason for his wearing it that we do not know, or it is the gift of some relative or friend, or a memorial, or some other reason. To be impressed with the urgent need that there is in the world for money for charity and religion, it would appear a duty to give all the money available to those causes and not to spend any of it on personal adornment. Arriving at such a conclusion, let him act upon it himself, but not hastily denounce others who have different ideas of their duty.

Mrs. Y., Mineral Wells, Tex., writes: Our nation, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, sent shiploads of corn to the famine sufferers of foreign lands. See how God pays us back. In the national crop report of 1903, there was over two billion bushels of corn alone produced, besides the vast treasures from other sources. God always pays back a hundredfold with interest.

J. F. B., Cologne, Va. 1. What laws governed the Antediluvians? How could they have known, if they had none, that they were sinning? 2. Do the Jews still practice the rite of circumcision?

1. The Bible does not say what laws were given. Evidently in some way God communicated with them and reproved them. Jude says (14) that Enoch warned them of their sin, and declared that God would punish them. Peter says (11. Peter 3:5) that Noah was "a preacher of righteousness," so that they must have known, by direct teaching as well as by their consciences, that what they were doing was wicked. 2. They do.

Reader, Des Moines, Ia. What was the cause of the recent "potato craze" in England, and what are the facts about it?

1903 was a disastrous potato year, crops having declined in quality and quantity, and the potatoes of that year were not considered fit to sow, to produce a crop this year. A few special types, however, did well, and the product of these special plantings brought almost fabulous figures. There was a corner in seed potatoes. Many sold at $50 for a single seed potato, and even higher. One man in Lincoln, England, is said to have paid $245 (or £49) for one magnificent tuber.

J. F. L., Augusta, Ga., writes:

In your issue of January 13, Theodore S., Bay City, Mich., asks, "How many soldiers took part in the Civil War on both sides, and how many were sacrificed, or died directly and indirectly through wounds or sickness?" Your reply furnished the information, except as to how many soldiers took part in the Civil War on both sides. May I supply that information? In the Union Army there were enlisted 494,000 foreigners and 186,017 negroes; from the seceded States, 317,714, and from the non-seceding States, about 2,000,000, making a total of 2,997,731. In the Confederate armies the enlistment was 600,000. Excess in enlistment in Union army, 2,397,731, or four times as many as in the Confederate army.

Subscriber, New Orleans, La. Can a person be saved through the faith of another?

The faith of one person may lead to another being awakened or enlightened, but salvation can come only through the faith of the saved person. It is he who exercises faith who is saved, not some friend of the believer. "He that cometh to God must believe." God has often honored the believing prayer of a pious mother for her son. The faith that trusts God for another, may lead to his forsaking sin, and through the influence of the Holy Spirit seeking Christ. But not until he believes for himself is the seeker successful in attaining peace.

Inquirer, Newport, R. I. 1. Ministers who dance, play cards and go to theatres, are not likely to be of much value as spiritual leaders of the flock over which they have charge.

There could be no real spiritual progress or uplift in a church where all the members—and especially the young—have such an example before them. 2. We are greatly overcrowded with MSS. at present.

Subscriber, Milford, Pa. 1. Is it true that Joseph the Patriarch had more than one wife? 2. Is there any fear of Smoot, the Mormon, getting office in the White House?

1. We are told of but one wife, whose name was Asenath. She was the daughter of the high-priest of Heliopolis, and she bore Joseph two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim. 2. His office as Senator has nothing to do with the White House.

E. E., Amsterdam, N. Y. What influence can the Woman's Christian Temperance Union or any kindred association have on initiating or promoting legislation?

Such associations can exert a potent influence by petition, or by addressing Senators and Congressmen individually. An association is entitled to more respect than individuals, and receives it. The fact that so large an organization desires a certain law, or is opposed to the enactment of some other law, must weigh with men who know that they cannot be re-elected, if there is a strong sentiment against them in their constituencies. It is true, that the women cannot vote, but they influence their husbands and sons, who can.

A.S.P., Kinsman, Ohio. 1. There are many things which our human philosophy fails to explain, dreams and visions being among them. Undoubtedly, some spiritual natures live closer to the borderland than the majority. 2. Joseph, the husband of Mary, is represented in the early Christian traditions as being an old man. Eusebius, Theophylact, Nicephorus, and others agree on this, while a few others differ.

C. L. N., Grant City, Mo. 1. What was the name of the Queen of Sheba, who visited King Solomon? 2. Is there any record of the hard questions with which she tested his wisdom?

1. Josephus says her name was Nikaule. From Herodotus it would appear that it was Nitokris. The Ethiopian tradition is that it was Makeda. The Arabs say it was Balkis. 2. There is no record, but there are traditions which cannot be verified at this late day. According to these traditions, the queen produced two bouquets, one of which was of natural flowers, and the other of artificial flowers, so excellent in imitation that an ordinary observer could not tell which was the natural. She challenged the king to distinguish without leaving his throne. He ordered his attendants to let bees into the room, and as they alighted on the natural flowers, he rightly indicated the bouquet. Another was the challenge to fill a cup with water that came neither from earth nor sky. This Solomon did by collecting the perspiration from a hard-driven horse. A third was to thread a jewel. This the king did by inducing a small worm to crawl through the minute perforation. Lastly, to decide which of two groups of children, dressed exactly alike, were boys, and which girls, Solomon ordered bowls of water to be placed before them that they might wash. He rightly decided by the way each group turned up their sleeves before washing. These are some of the questions tradition attributes to the queen.

Mrs. J. A. K., Pontiac, Ills., writes:

Let us appeal in prayer to the Power of powers in behalf of Macedonia. Go to the Fountain that never fails. No neutrality there. Oh, why do not the churches unite and spend a week in prayer for the Christians of Macedonia?

Mrs. L. S. (a homesteader's wife), Saline, N. Dak.

I am very much interested in the discussion on dancing and card-playing among church members. I do not believe a Christian will want to do either, nor will he go to such places of amusement. The Bible says, "If meat will cause our brother to offend we should eat no meat," and we have only to look around us to see the influence of such things. But do those members do any more harm, or as much, as those that go to church and make long prayers for the uplifting of humanity and the coming of the Kingdom, and then vote for the licensing of saloons?

We quite agree with "Homesteader's wife" that the one is as bad as the other—the latter probably the worse. A live Christian church will not rest in quietness while such burning questions affect its own membership and spiritual life.

The words and music of "The Starless Crown," which appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, should have been attributed to Grant Colfax Tullar, and I. H. Meredith.

E. C., Lenox Dale, Mass. 1. Is our Old Testament a correct translation of the one now in use among the Jews? 2. If so, why do they not perceive that the Messianic prophecies are fulfilled in Jesus Christ?

1. Yes, great care has been taken to make our English translation absolutely accurate. You will notice words in italics. These are not in the Hebrew Bible used by the Jews, but are inserted to make sense. The bulk of these the Jews accept. 2. They have several objections. One of these is that the records of the Gospels, of the events in the life of Jesus never took place, but were inserted later to make the life a fulfillment of prophecy. A second objection is that some of the passages do not refer to any man, but to the Jewish nation as a whole. A third is that some of the passages, especially those referring to "the Coming One" as a King, were not fulfilled by a plain villager, the son of a carpenter. Still another, held chiefly by the Reformed Jews, is that the prophecies are not inspired, and that such fulfillments, as we hold are furnished by the life of Christ, were mere coincidences. These objections have been repeatedly answered by Christian scholars, and some Jews have been convinced, but the number is relatively small.

Miscellaneous Questions

Mrs. M. J. K., Kansas City, Mo. In the U. S. there is a false conception of the word "servant." Practically, all who serve are servants. Incompatibility in the nature of employer and employed is oftener at fault than anything else, for a domestic comes in closer contact with the employer than in any other sphere. Incompetency, poor health, or innate bad nature, sometimes are the cause of infelicity. The larger number, however, who undertake domestic service, have receptive natures, and will, with loyal appreciation (or its opposite), give returns in kind. Some employers are chronic fault-finders; they follow their maids, as it were, with an evil eye, pounce down upon them for faults of a trifling nature, uninterruptedly, and make their life a burden to them.

Mrs. E. P. D., Tex. 1. If you find money buried on your own land, unless some one else can prove a legal title to the same, it will be yours to use as you see fit. We are not aware whether the State would make any claim in the matter, yet such a thing is possible, of course. 2. You would do well to let clairvoyants and all such pretenders alone. They are mostly arrant humbugs. 3. We have no opinion to express. If a work is of God, it will stand; if not, it will surely fall.

W. J. H., Fairfield, Me. 1. The arrangement with the Sultan of Sulu is regulated by treaty. 2. Write State Department, Washington, for the information desired. 3. The cases of Smoot and Roberts are essentially different. In Smoot's case there was no polygamy proved. 4. and 5. Hypothetical. 6. and 7. You will find both questions answered in any good Encyclopedia.

THE WASHINGTON BUST PRESENTED BY FRANCE

This photograph shows the new and striking bust of Washington, in bronze, lately presented by the French nation to the United States, and to be unveiled at the National Capitol, on February 22.

A NEW PRESIDENT

THE SWISS CONFEDERATION'S NEWLY ELECTED EXECUTIVE

FAR less strenuous and exciting than our own Presidential elections are those of the Republic of Switzerland, one of which has recently taken place. The successful candidate is Mr.

ROBERT COMTESSE
President of Switzerland

Robert Comtesse, whose portrait we give. He is a man of fifty-seven years, highly educated and experienced in the affairs of State. He has held several important offices, both State and Federal. In 1877 he was chief of the Departments of the Interior and of Agriculture in his own Canton of Neuenberg, and six years later he was elected to the Federal Congress. So marked was the ability he displayed, that in 1894 he was elected President of that body. He has now received the highest honor in the gift of the Swiss people, by being elected President of the Republic. A proof of his popularity is found in the fact, that of the 178 votes cast he received 165. He is a native of Neuchatel, and received his education in the Universities of Heidelberg and Paris. The term of the President is only one year.

The system of government in Switzerland differs from our own, though resembling it in some respects. There are twenty-two States, which are called Cantons. The legislative functions are vested in two chambers, consisting of an Assembly of 147 members elected for three years, and a Council of States of 44 members, similar to our Senate. These two chambers, which united are called the Federal Assembly, elect a Federal Council of seven members, who serve for three years. Each member must come from a different Canton from his colleagues, so that no Canton shall have more than one of its sons in this high office. The President of the Republic presides over this Council, and together with it is the executive. He is elected by the Federal Assembly, and none are eligible but the seven members of the Council. Thus, before a man can attain the highest office of President of the Republic, he must already be familiar with executive duties by his services on the Council. His salary is $3,600.

Panama as a Gospel Field

BY MISSIONARY
A. R. STARK

THE independence of the Isthmus of Panama and the ratification of the Canal Treaty with the United States, not only points to the dawn of a new era of industrial and social progress, but will be the greatest Protestant enterprise ever carried out in Latin America. The cause of the revolt of the Isthmian people was the denial or delay of the canal by the Colombian Government of Bogota. The Isthmian people, although only a small part of the entire population of Colombia, felt that they had a right to be considered in this great enterprise. When the Government of Bogota refused to sign the Canal Treaty, they simply cut off the future hope of the Panamanians, whose commerce was already paralyzed.

Colombia, whose population is almost entirely found in the interior of the country, is justly considered one of the most hopeless and backward countries in South America. Panama, on the contrary, is in continual touch with broader civilization and twentieth century progress. Only a year ago, a bloody revolution of three years' duration was terminated. Unfortunately, the peace treaty was more favorable to the clerical party, whose mediaeval character and spirit are everywhere known. It is the boast of Colombians from Bogota that Protestant missions have never been able to make progress in that country.

Panama looks out over the glorious Pacific, while Atlantic breezes blow over Colon. The whole scene on the Isthmus is a damp, tropical jungle, swarming with insects, snakes and alligators, and a hot-bed of malarial and yellow fever. Rain falls in cataracts; then, at night, begins that strange tropical chorus of frogs and insects. More terrible than the frog music is the mosquito invasion. Deadly as the Isthmus is by nature, the bad sanitary conditions of Panama make the climate still more disastrous for the traveler who chances to cross the railroad. But the vigor and energy of the United States are well able to devise and enforce curative and preventive sanitary regulations, not only in these two important cities, but on the whole line of the proposed canal.

The city of Panama, at the foot of a lovely hill, clothed with beautiful vegetation, its red-tile roofs and church towers overlooking the commodious bay, studded with lovely islands, forms a picturesque scene as the traveler sails up the Pacific. As we passed up, we could not but admire the fine fleet of American warships riding at anchor in the bay, along with one solitary British cruiser.

The railway which crosses the isthmus is 47 miles in length. On this short stretch, there are 22 stations. The train, which picks up passengers at all of them, takes three hours to make the journey. But the whole scene of luxuriant, tropical beauty—stately palms and plantains, oranges and bananas. For some distance, the road runs along the banks of the rapid Chagres River, which is to be deepened for the canal. Costly machinery sent out by the French Company for canal operations, now rusting and eroding, lies half-buried in jungle, forest and mud. Operations are now being pushed forward at the great Culebra cut—where the canal will sweep through the mountain range of the isthmus, before it bursts into the Pacific. At both Culebra and Paraiso, the Jamaican Baptists sustain preaching stations for the seven hundred workmen, and a school for children, under the capable management of Rev. Moss Loveridge, the pastor, who also dispenses medicines free, to hundreds of Jamaicans. Last year, he treated over 1,200 patients. This good work is hampered for the want of better premises and funds. During the canal operations, the moral atmosphere was more disastrous than the physical, and we cannot think things will be very different when the work begins again. Human vultures gathered from every continent of the world to divide the spoil—speculators, gamblers, card sharpers, and every form of moral degradation. The Christian church must have a strong and competent force to cope with the situation.

Jamaican Methodists and Anglicans are represented in both Colon and Panama, but their work is exclusively among the English-speaking folks. The two great Bible societies are circulating the Scriptures in both Spanish and English, and other languages. The Panamanians number about 280,000; but this population will be greatly increased. On every hand, the people are busy making preparations for the future. The Spanish-speaking element, which predominates, is entirely neglected by Protestant missionaries. It ought to be known that the leaders at Panama are determined to break away from the iron grasp of Romanism, by granting full religious liberty. The emancipation of Panama from the clerical government at Bogota was the first step. The fact that religious liberty will be granted makes the time opportune to press the claims of the Gospel of Christ on this strategic centre.

Send out the light.

A. R. STARK.

Should be in Every Home

The premium, How I Worked My Way Around the World, is perfectly fascinating, and very instructive. It shows what intelligence, tact and perseverance will accomplish. I wish it might be in every home.

Keene, N. H.

MRS. E. E. UPTON.

A quarter's worth of Ivory Soap will do more washing than you might suppose, and it may save more than one fine garment from ruin by preserving the color which cheap, impure soap would destroy.

Ivory Soap
99 ⁴⁴/₁₀₀ Per Cent. Pure.

Golden Grain

As a food product corn heads the list of grains in the nutritive elements, necessary to human sustenance. The processes of extracting and retaining these valuable food properties have made

Karo

CORN SYRUP

The Great Spread for Daily Bread

A golden syrup so good, pure and wholesome, that the infant, invalid or dyspeptic can eat it with safety.

It's a table delight for morning, noon or night. Coaxes the appetite and makes you eat. Sold at all grocers in airtight, friction-top tins. 10c, 25c and 50c.

CORN PRODUCTS CO.,
New York and Chicago.

TURKEY IN PROPHECY

EVENTS recorded in the daily press, as occurring in Europe, ought at this time to be carefully studied in connection with the prophecies of the Word of God, because the prophecies will surely come true, and it is instructive to notice how they are becoming history. A case in point is that of the disintegration of the Turkish Empire, province after province slipping from under the yoke of the Sultan and becoming independent, while Macedonia is now struggling to become free. In the short prophetic book of Obadiah, this very situation is described, although the prophet wrote above two thousand years ago. It will be useful in the present disturbed conditions in the East to see what the prophet had to say of this once mighty Power, which has been stripped of its possessions, and is now rapidly approaching its doom.

Verse 1, the subject of the prophecy is "Edom." We find from Gen. 36: 8, 9, that "Esau is Edom." Esau is also referred to, as "the father of the Edomites," in verse 11 of Obadiah, the government of Esau is mentioned, as one who will others, "cast lots upon Jerusalem;" Jerusalem is the objective point of the prophecy, as will be seen in verse 21 at the end of the chapter, where it is said, "Saviours shall come upon Mount Zion to save the Mount of Esau." Verse 2, shows the character of the nation, and will be readily recognized. "Behold, I have made thee small among the nations, thou art greatly despised," while verses 3, 6, show how vain will be all endeavours to preserve the integrity of the empire.

Verse 7, is a statement of the condition of Turkey at the present time—once a prophecy, and now rapidly becoming history. It is as though the Balkan States were mentioned by name. "All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee on hyrax even to the border." States that are thrown off authority, while others are in a very conflict for independence. In verses 8 and 9, the prophet says, "Shall I in that day, saith the Lord, destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the Mount of Esau? and the mighty men, O Teman, shall be disgraced, to the end that everyone may be cut from the Mount of Esau, by slaughter." How remarkably this agrees with the statement of a daily newspaper, written only a few days since, concerning Turkey as an enemy of civilization, and who is as follows:—"Abdul Hamid has been developed into a Frankenstein, a monster that cannot safely be assailed except by all civilization. He has removed from his capital most of his ablest and faithful servants. The position of those whom he permits to remain in Constantinople is no better. At an hour when he needs competent and reliable ministers they are not forthcoming."

The reason why the Turkish Empire is to be destroyed, is given in verse 10: "The violence done to thy brother Jacob shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off forever." In Ezekiel 25: 2-14, are these remarkable statements: "Because that Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah by taking vengeance, and hath greatly offended, and revenged himself upon them; therefore thus saith the Lord God, I will stretch out mine hand upon Edom and will cut off man and beast from it. . . . and I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel. . . . and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord God." Here not only the doom is pronounced, but the reason is again given—the spoliation of the Jews—and the very instrument of destruction, namely, by the hand of my people Israel."

After various warnings in verses 11-14, the time is indicated in verse 15, when the prophecy is to be fulfilled, "for the day of the Lord is near upon all the nations," and the punishment to be administered, "as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee; thy dealing shall return upon thine own head." In verse 17 we learn who shall be in possession of the land after the power of the house of Esau has come to an end, for there we have the specific statement that "the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions," which is none other than the house of Israel (the ten tribes), and the house of Judah (the Jews) reunited; for the name Jacob is a generic term, indicative of the whole house of Israel.

Verse 18 tells us who the people are that the Lord will use as a means of punishment, "and the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall burn among them and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the Lord hath spoken it." This is in harmony with the prophecy referred to above (Ezek. 25: 12-14), "and I will lay my vengeance upon Edom, by the hand of my people Israel."

It would be very interesting, if anything could be found in the prophecy concerning the present attitude of the Continental nations of Europe towards the Turkish Empire, but the trend of prophecy does not contemplate nations in their interrelated conditions, as to their ambitions or material interests, for it always will be concerning them, as we read in Deut. 32: 8, 9, "When the Most High gave to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the children of men, he set the bounds of the peoples according to the number of the children of Israel, for the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance."

This principle of interpretation prevails throughout the whole of the prophecy of Obadiah (and likewise all the prophecies), for while it specifically concerns the Turkish Empire, in a general way, it is also connected with the nations, as stated in verse 15, "For the day of the Lord is near upon all the nations," and if any mention of the present and future attitude of the nations is alluded to, we find it in verse 16, where, in speaking of the Turkish Empire as to its treatment of the house of Jacob, it says, "For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the nations drink continually; yea, they shall drink, and swallow down (or, as the margin reads, 'talk foolishly'), and shall be as though they had not been."

Parallel with these words of warning are other passages from the prophecies concerning Israel (the twelve tribes) and Edom (the Turkish empire). The prophet Ezekiel 35: 15, says: "As thou didst rejoice over the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Edom, even all of it; and they shall know that I am the Lord." And in Amos 9: 9-15, "for, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all the nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth. . . . in that day I will raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof, . . . that they may possess the remnant of Edom, which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this. . . . and I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; and they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them, and I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be plucked up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

In all of the prophecies quoted, we see that they apply not to the Jews alone, but to the whole house of Jacob. The other ten tribes are to share with the house of Judah in the coming triumph. The world easily recognizes the Jews, for representatives of the race are in all nations; but how astonished men will be when the ten tribes also are identified and recognized as descendants of Israel!

A. WADHAMS.

Could Not Do Without It

I am greatly pleased with How I Worked My Way Around the World. It will please both young and old. I could not do without the dear CHRISTIAN HERALD. I look for it as does the watchman for the morning.

MRS. C. M. WARREN.

AN EXTRAORDINARY BARGAIN

Six Hundred Special Ostermoor Mattresses

EXTRA WEIGHT AND THICKNESS—the exceptionally luxurious kind—recently completed by us under contract for a large apartment hotel at $25.00 each—will be sold at a sacrifice. Sudden destruction of hotel by fire delays delivery indefinitely—we need the room for regular stock—necessity, therefore, compels us to dispose of them at once, and we offer them, while they last, at the extraordinary price of $18.50 each.

The mattresses are all full double bed size, 4 feet 6 inches wide, 6 feet 4 inches long, in two parts, with round corners.

They are full five-inch border, with Imperial Double Rolled Edges, exactly like photographic illustration.

The filling is especially selected sheets of Ostermoor Patent Elastic Felt, all hand laid, and closed within ticking entirely by hand sewing. Mattresses weigh 60 lbs. each, 15 lbs. more than regular, and are naturally far softer and more luxuriously comfortable.

The covering is of the beautiful Mercerized French Art Twills, in pink, blue, or yellow, or stripes in linen effect; also plain, narrow blue and white. The mattresses are made up in the daintiest possible manner by our most expert specialists. They represent, in the very highest degree, the celebrated OSTERMOOR merit of Excellence, and are a rare bargain both in price and quality.

PRICE $18.50 EACH

We pay transportation charges anywhere in the United States

Only while they last; first come, first served.

The opportunity to secure same is limited.

Terms of sale: Cash in advance; none sent C. O. D.

NOTE:—Ostermoor Mattresses, regular stock, same size, two parts, cost $15.50 each. They have four inch border, weigh 45 lbs., and are covered with A. C. A. Ticking. These special Mattresses cost $30.00 each, finish nearly two inches thicker, weigh 15 lbs. more, have round corners—Imperial Stitched Edges—close diamond tufts—and beautiful Mercerized Art Twill covering—and are far softer and much more resilient. If you wish to know more about the "Ostermoor," send your name on a postal card for our free book, "The Test of Time."

OSTERMOOR & CO.

115 ELIZABETH STREET, NEW YORK

Canadian Agency: The Alaska Feather and Down Co., Ltd., Montreal.

When ordering please state first, second, and even third choice of color of covering, in case all you like are already sold, as there will be no time for correspondence.

Fleisher's Yarns

are made from selected wools, carefully spun, and have an even, lofty, elastic thread. Dyed in a full line of beautiful shades which can always be matched.

An article knitted or crocheted of Fleisher's Yarns will always hold its shape and yet be soft and elastic. Every skein of the genuine bears the trade-mark ticket.

Knitting Worsted, Germantown Zephyr, Dresden Saxony, Spanish, Shetland Floss, Ice Wool, etc.

New Knitting and Crocheting Manual mailed for four tickets from Fleisher's Yarns and 3 cents for postage. It contains directions for making the above garment and various kinds of sweaters and vests, as well as all the new style and staple garments.

S. B. & B. W. FLEISHER, Inc.
Department "B,"
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Pope Manufacturing Co. Famous Chainless Bicycles

Equipped with two-speed gear, coaster brake, and cushion frame.

All Standard Chain Models

Eastern Department
Hartford, Conn.

"COLUMBIA"
"TRIBUNE"
"CLEVELAND"
"CRAWFORD"

Western Department
Chicago, Ill.

"CRESCENT"
"MONARCH"
"RAMBLER"
"IMPERIAL"

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

HOME WORK FOR WOMEN

Our book, "Practical Ideas for Profitable Home Work," teaches women how to become independent without leaving home. It is clear and practical, covering many lines of work. The FINDING OF A MARKET for your goods is thoroughly discussed and valuable suggestions are given.

Book sent on receipt of Postal order for 5 cents.
Woman's Work Pub. Co., Amer. Trade Bldg., NEW YORK CITY.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick-room. Worn in rubber boots, absorbs perspiration. Made of knitted fabric lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail. See your Parker post-office Catalogue.

J. H. Parker, Dept. K 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

THE SABBATH TRANSFERRED

HOW THE LORD'S DAY SUPERSEDED THE JEWISH SABBATH AS A DAY OF WORSHIP IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

MANY Christians in various sections of the country have been disturbed by the fear, that in observing Sunday as the Lord's Day instead of Saturday as the Sabbath, they are disobeying one of God's commands. Persons, doubtless very conscientious and sincere, have told them that there is a peculiar sanctity about Saturday that does not attach to Sunday, and that it is consequently their duty to observe the former day rather than the latter. The motives of such advocates deserve all honor, because they are founded in a desire to obey strictly the divine commands; but they savor more of a puerile and slavish obedience rather than of an intelligent loyalty to the divine Founder of our faith. We may be very sure that He, to whom one day is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day, is pleased that his people should show their devotion to his Son, by celebrating as their weekly day of Christian service the day on which he rose from the dead. It may be useful, therefore, to mention briefly here some of the reasons why the general custom of Christendom should continue to be observed by all who love Christ and call themselves by his name.

The charge is made by the advocates of the Saturday Sabbath that it is of divine appointment, and that the change to Sunday was made by the Pope of Rome. As a matter of fact, no such assertion can be substantiated. It is clear from Ex. 12, that the Jewish Sabbath might fall on other days of the week than Saturday in certain years, and that it was not a particular day of the week, but a period of one day's rest, after six days of work, that was appointed. The change, under the Christian dispensation, was made by the voluntary action of the early church, and was legalized, not by the Pope, but by the Emperor Constantine in A. D. 321, who simply sanctioned and made general a practice that had been observed for fully two hundred years by pious people. Justin Martyr mentioned that in his time (A. D. 140), Sunday was the day observed by the Christians. In the newly discovered "Teaching of the Apostles," also, there is a reference to "The Lord's Day," which indicates that it was observed by the early church.

The change was logical and significant. The institution of the Sabbath, at first commemorated the rest of God at the Creation (See Ex. 20: 11). Afterwards it was to commemorate the deliverance from Egypt (See Deut. 5: 15). In the Christian dispensation, it commemorated the resurrection of Christ, when the seal was set to the work of redemption.

People like the advocates of the Seventh Day observance, evidently troubled the early church, which the Apostle Paul had worked so hard to deliver from the yoke of the law. He tells the Colossians to let no man judge them in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of a new moon, or the Sabbath. In Romans 14: 5, he says, that while one man esteems one day above another, another esteems every day alike, and bids every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.

It is remarkable that when the first great Council assembled in Jerusalem, to decide what parts of the Jewish law were binding on Gentile converts (see Acts 15: 5-29), no mention was made of the Sabbath. Neither are there directions anywhere else in the New Testament how the Sabbath is to be observed, except incidentally, when Christ was defending himself from the charge of breaking the day by his miracles of healing.

The early Christians, however, must have realized the need and the benefit of a seventh of their time being set apart for rest and worship. Accordingly we find (Acts 20: 7) these significant words implying that the custom of a weekly meeting had already been established: "Upon the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread," etc. There is another incidental reference to the day in I. Cor. 16: 2.

The advocates of the Seventh Day Sabbath must go back to the Old Testament for their authority. Even if they could prove that the Sabbath was always on a Saturday, which is impossible, they would have to admit that they do not observe the day according to the directions given. The kindling of a fire in the house was prohibited (See Ex. 35: 3). Traveling even on foot was unlawful (See Ex. 16: 29). All ordinary occupations were suspended, and in order to make the observance strictly binding, the Scribes and Pharisees drew up a list of forbidden acts, which, as they contended, were deduced from the Mosaic law. Thus the prohibition of kindling a fire included lighting a lamp, which is a species of fire; the killing of a flea, because it was practically hunting; the walking abroad, because a seed might be stepped upon, which would in effect be a kind of planting; the carrying of a handkerchief, because that would be bearing a burden. They even went so far as to forbid the setting of a broken bone on the Sabbath. It is no wonder that people spoke of the Sabbath as a burden. Yet if it is the old Sabbath that is to be observed, the authority requiring its observance is the authority regulating the manner of observance. From all such rigorous laws, Christ's coming set his people free. They no longer spend their holy day in idleness, but in service, working for the advancement of his kingdom.

CALLED HIGHER

Miss Franc A. Brooks, a lady devoted to Christian work, and long a reader of this paper, passed away lately in Chicago, at the age of seventy-one.

Mr. J. J. Mann, one of the oldest inhabitants of Oak Ridge, Va., and a most exemplary Christian, passed away Jan. 10th, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. He was a reader of this journal for many years. Eight children mourn his loss, his wife and four children having "gone on before."

Mrs. W. W. Seeley, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, recently passed to her heavenly home. The last conscious words she spoke was a prayer uttered, that God would guide and keep her. Her prayer was answered. A husband and two daughters survive her.

Mrs. Mary Holbrook Quirk, of Eureka Springs, Ark., who recently passed away, had been an invalid and a great sufferer, for a considerable time before her death. She was an exemplary Christian, and was greatly beloved and respected for her beautiful life. She had been a reader of this journal for many years.

Mrs. Amanda C. Howell, wife of Deacon Ephraim A. Howell, passed away at Fletcher, O., recently, at the age of sixty-five years. She became a member of the Baptist Church in Centerville when about sixteen years old, and lived a Christian life of very great usefulness. She leaves a husband and two sons. The funeral was one of the largest held in Fletcher for many years. "Aunt Amanda," was beloved by all, and the memory of her godly life is a precious legacy to all who knew her. For many years she had been a constant reader of this paper.

Through a sudden attack of heart disease, Calvin O. Diefenbacher, on Dec. 10, 1903, died at Mechanicsburg, Pa. He was the son of a minister, and was born in Woodstock, Va., in 1831. He entered the army at the opening of the Civil War, was taken prisoner, and spent one year in the prison at Andersonville. At the close of the war he took up his business of druggist, in Ogdensburg, N. Y. Having acquired a competence, he retired to Mechanicsburg, Pa., where he spent the remainder of his life. Always charitable and deeply interested in the extension of Christ's Kingdom, he left his property to be divided among half a dozen benevolent objects that had been dear to his heart for many years.

On January 14th, James Heffner, one of our country's Christian pioneers, passed away. He was born Dec. 16, 1823, in Hamilton County, Ohio; was married in Danville, Ky., and then removed to Shreveport, La., where he resided for thirty-five years. After the death of his wife, three years ago, he went to Montrose, Colorado, where he had a married daughter. He united with the Methodist Church at the early age of nine, and was a member of that church at the time of his death. He was always active in church work, and was at different times, choir leader, trustee, and class leader. There was always a family altar in his house. His favorite hymn, sang at his funeral, was, "Blessed be the name of the Lord," and less than twenty-four hours before he died, he raised his voice and sang that hymn.

Mail Orders Exclusively. No Branches or Agents.

Spring Suits $8 to $50.

MADE TO YOUR ORDER

We Guarantee to Fit You. Catalogue and Samples Free.

HERE are a few of the advantages in having your suits and skirts made to order by us:

First. We make every garment especially to order, thus insuring the perfection of fit and finish. We keep no ready-made goods.

Second. Our prices are lower than those charged by retail stores.

Third. Our materials are thoroughly sponged and shrunk.

Fourth. We pay express charges to any part of the United States.

Our Spring and Summer Catalogue illustrates 120 of the latest creations in ladies' tailor-made suits, travelling gowns and skirts for every occasion and for every figure, all of which have been designed expressly for our customers.

We carry in stock over 400 hands out of Spring fabrics, imported for this season's wear, including beautiful mixture effects never before shown, (tulle cloths and many seasonal novelties). We have a splendid line of etamines, voiles, mohairs, brilliantines, and other light-weight fabrics, particularly adapted for our Southern patrons, as well as slightly heavier materials for residing in cooler climates. We do not carry Wash Goods.

YOUR MONEY REFUNDED IF WE FAIL TO SATISFY YOU.

Our Spring Catalogue illustrates:

Tailored Suits	$8 to $
Handsome Skirts	$4 to $
Etamine Costumes	$10 to $
Mohair and Brilliantine Suits	$8 to $
Mohair Skirts	$4 to $
Spring Jackets	$7 to $

Walking Suits and Skirts, Rainy-Day Suits, Traveling Dresses, Rain Coats, etc.

Our Catalogue contains explicit directions taking measurements correctly.

We Guarantee to fit and please you. We do not return the garment promptly and will refund your money.

Catalogue and a large assortment of samples will be sent free to any part of the United States. Ask New Spring Catalogue No. 50. In request samples mention about the color you desire and will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York.
Established 15 years.

The long looked for hymn book Just issued.

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

By GEO. C. STEBBINS

For use in Evangelistic and Church Services, Conventions, Sunday Schools and all Prayer and Social Meetings of the Church and Home.

It contains a very large number of most useful and singable sacred songs, both new and old, among which

MANY of the favorite "Gospel Hymns" and "Sacred Songs."

MANY NEW SONGS soon to become FAVORITE.

MANY Church Hymns and tunes, new and old, from the best American and English composers.

MANY pieces especially useful for Evangelists and Convention Choirs, and many for Solo, and Quartet purposes.

Substantially bound in cloth, $25.00 per 100. 5c. each per copy extra by mail.

Before deciding on the new hymn book for your church you had better see

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

A returnable copy for examination sent free to earnest inquirer on application.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago

PRAYERS

For Public Worship Private Devotion a Personal Ministry.

By Abbie C. Morrow. A New and Priceless Help to Spiritual Life. Invaluable to Christians everywhere. Gives aid to person all ages wishing to take part in prayer in public, also in Meetings, Special Occasions, Young People's Societies, Far Prayers, Prayers in Sickness, in Sunday Schools, etc.; also Prayers of eminent Christians. A Complete Guide to Devotional Sent postpaid to any address. Fine cloth binding, gold stamp $1.00; Royal Purple cloth, silver stamps, silver edges, $1.50. Beautifully bound in leather, red-under-gold edges, $2.00.

M. E. Munson, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York

LYMYER BELL'S BELL

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOG TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati.

A FAMOUS CHURCH BURNED

THE Luther Memorial Church, situated at the junction of Vermont avenue, Fourteenth and N streets, Washington, D. C., partially destroyed by fire recently, was for nearly thirty years one of the ornaments, as well as one of the most conspicuous church properties at the National Capital. It was a church known throughout the country. The cornerstone was laid in 1870. The three towers were completed in 1883. The co-city this heroic figure is ever attractive, occupying as it does a triangular park in front of the main entrance.

The names of Luther, Calvin and Wesley were inscribed on the windows in the large tower, while those of Grant, Lee, Sumner, and others memorialized many pews.

The present pastor is the Rev. Dr. J. G. Butler, who came to Washington in 1849 as pastor of the St. Paul's Lutheran Church, of which the church just destroyed was an outgrowth. The membership has been nearly four hundred for several years. Its power for good was recognized on all sides, several churches and missions being among its energetic efforts.

The fire occurred while a reception to the pastor was being held. It originated from leaky gas pipes between the ceiling and the roof, so high up that the first attempts to extinguish the small blaze proved unsuccessful. By the time the engines arrived the blaze had spread to the main tower, where it burst from the windows, a brilliant sight from all parts of the city. Although the spire was destroyed and the roof considerably damaged, the building itself escaped with comparatively small loss. The large and valuable organ, however, was rendered practically worthless. The total loss is estimated to be about $25,000, and is fully covered by insurance.

C. H. C.

LUTHER MEMORIAL CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

onal statue of Martin Luther, which stands, uninjured, was projected in the latter year and unveiled the year following. Among the many statues of the

Princely Men

Modern Martyrs who have Perished in Missionary Service

WHEN people talk as if Christianity sapped the convert of his manliness, and robbed him of his moral and physical courage, they show that they are ignorant of the records of Christian work. Some of the most magnificent examples of heroic conduct in history have been those of men inspired by love of Christ, and by devotion to his cause among men. Nor are they so far away in the past, that they cannot be recalled. There are men now living who have faced deadly peril for Christ's sake, and there are others who have stood side by side with men who have actually perished in the cause. Dr. Paton, the apostle of the New Hebrides, modestly records many such experiences, not boasting, but as testimony to God's long care in the crisis of his life. Time again he has gone unarmed among fierce savages who were plotting to kill him, and feast on his body, and has been preserved, though he knows that in all probability he will eventually fall a victim to heathen ferocity. It is not more than the years ago that James Chalmers, who had encountered innumerable perils in the South Seas, perils of the ocean and of the climate, was clubbed to death by the men whom he went to save. In Africa, too, many men have gone patiently and triumphantly to their death. Bishop Henington was only one of many who died there in recent years in the effort to win souls for Christ in the Dark Continent. The events in China are too recent to need reminder of the number of missionaries—men and women—who fell victims to the fanaticism of the people. There is no lack of volunteers to take their places, men and women who know that, by disease or murder, they will probably come to the end of their earthly lives.

Why do men go so boldly so dauntlessly into perils so dire? They cannot look for gain, for the missionary's salary is but a bare living. Neither fame nor power can come to them from their work. There is no explanation other than that of sublime faith in the Saviour they go to preach, and ardent love, "the love that constraineth" for souls and for Him who died that men might live. Like their Master, they count not their lives dear unto them if only souls can be won.

Just Running In

THIS is the way we do in town. When the snow lies deep in the narrow street, When the wild northwester's bearing down, And we fare in the teeth of the freezing sleet. We send our visiting cards about: "Mrs Smith will offer you tea From four to six," 'twill be good, no doubt, And a crowd of folk at her house you'll see. Folk who come in carriage and sleigh, And folk who travel on Shanks' mare. They'll manage a call, though rough the way, And their very best clothes, they will surely wear.

This is the way the country friends Keep each other in happy thought. Just as the bleak day fades and ends, Enters a neighbor, with cheer unbought. She has wrapped herself in a blanket shawl, Or a cloak that defies the bitter cold. Little she heeds though the snow may fall, Old clothes and courage keep her bold. "I thought you'd be lonesome. I just ran in, I brought you a loaf of mother's cake; And you needn't take it out of the tin— Wait till your angel-cake you bake."

In homely phrases and merry chat, The little woman beguiles the time. By the fireside gently purrs the cat, And the kettle puffs to a singing rhyme, The country neighbor is dear and kind, And kind is somehow much like kin; Somehow, I'm very much inclined, To favor her habit of "running in."

KATHERINE BLAKE.

Premiums that Give Pleasure

I want to tell you how pleased I am with the Red Letter Testament, it is better than I expected. And the Butterfly Calendar, is a thing of beauty, to be enjoyed by all.

Malom, N. Y.

MRS. N. C. B.

YOU can't get the best effect unless you use our records. They are a necessary part of the Victor Talking Machine.

No other record will give you the actual living voices of the world's greatest artists in classical and popular music.

Our records are sold by over 25,000 dealers

Chicago—Talking Machine Co. Cincinnati—Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. Indianapolis—Carlin & Lemox. Kansas City—Schmeltzer & Sons Arms Co. New York—Victor Distrib. & Exp. Co. Brooklyn—American Talk. Mch. Co. New Haven—Henry Horton. New Orleans—Natl. Auto. Fire Alarm Co. Philadelphia—Western Electric Co. Buffalo—Walbridge & Co. Canton—Klein & Hefelman Co. Pittsburgh—Theo. F. Bente Co., Inc. St. Louis—Victor Talking Machine, Ltd. St. Paul—Kocher & Hinrichs. Boston—Eastern Talking Mch. Co. Columbus—Perry B. Whitsett Co. St. Paul—W. J. Dyer & Bro. Boston—John C. Haynes & Co. Duluth—Harger & Blush. San Francisco—Sherman, Clay & Co. Grand Rapids—Julius A. J. Friedrich, Syracuse—W. D. Andrews.

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE COMPANY, Philadelphia

COLD FEET

are banished Warm feet induce sleep The most comfortable thing you ever put foot into is

McFarlan's Slumber Slipper

Will keep the ankles warm. Worn in bed and out. Made of a handsome fleece-lined knit fabric; tops beautifully embroidered with silk. Dainty colorings. Send size of shoe. TWO PAIRS FOR 25c.—POSTPAID Different sizes if desired. For men, women, children. MCFARLAN MILLS, 40 Harvey Av. Amsterdam, N.Y.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAK JOINTS, VARICOSE ULCERS and LEG SWELLINGS Overcome by

OUR PATENT SEAMLESS HEEL

ELASTIC STOCKINGS.

We make all goods to measure of new elastic made by us and send by mail to any part of the world, and guarantee a fit. Free Catalogue tells how to measure, gives prices, etc. Send for one. We are the largest weavers of special elastic work in the United States.

CURTIS & SPINDELL CO., 54 Market Street, Lynn, Mass.

$10.95 NEW STEEL RANGE

FOR $10.95 we will sell this new, handsome nickel trimmed, 1904 model, square steel range (with reservoir or closet, as illustrated, a trifle extra). For full particulars, how we make our steel ranges thicker, heavier, stronger, handsomer and better than any other ranges made in the world; for our three months' free trial offer, safe delivery guarantee, pay after received terms; for picture of our foundry, the largest stove foundry in the world, cut out and return this ad. and our Free Stove Catalogue of everything in steel and cast iron stoves and ranges will be mailed at once. With our Free Stove Catalogue you get the most astonishing stove offer ever heard of. Address, SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., Chicago.

I SELL REAL ESTATE NO MATTER WHERE IT IS

Do you want to sell your real estate? Do you want to sell it quickly and with the least possible expense? Do you want to sell it at a reasonable price instead of a low price? Do you want to sell it without publicity? If there are any such things, I can tell you. I have been selling the same kind of property in every section of the country. The result is the largest real estate business in the world. I don't need proof that I have been fulfilling my claims and I don't need evidence that I can sell your property. Send down right now, and I will send you a description of your property, including your lowest cash price. I will tell you exactly what I can do for you and how and why I can do it. It doesn't matter what kind of property you have, where it is located, or what it is worth. Just send me a description, today. If you want to know a good thing about a property in any part of the country, tell me your requirements. I will guarantee to fill them promptly and save you some money at the same time.

W. M. OSTRANDER,

SUITE 161, NORTH AMERICAN BLDG., PHILADELPHIA.

Art Shirt Waist

HOW TO PRO-
CURE ONE FREE

ART WAISTINGS—in white grounds made of the finest quality cotton with mercerized stripes, checks and figures—are the latest Parisian novelty for the "Season of 1904," and make the ideal shirt waist; light as a zephyr, glossy as silk, yet durable, and launders easily without shrinking. This fabric retails at from 35 cents to 50 cents the yard. Three yards make a waist. For a two-cent stamp or a self-addressed and stamped envelope the manufacturers will send you forty different samples from which you may select. If your dealer cannot furnish you any of the patterns, we will supply you at the wholesale price and make you a great saving and deliver postpaid.

SPECIAL ADVERTISING OFFER

To the first lady giving the name of her dealer and asking for the samples, answering this advertisement before thirty days, from any town of not less than 2,000 or not more than 10,000 population; to the first five ladies answering from towns of not less than 10,000 or more than 50,000, and the first ten ladies answering from towns over 50,000, we will send free, a 3-yard waist pattern of Art Waistings.

ART FABRIC MILLS (Dress Goods Department)
44 White Street, New York, N. Y.

Unquestionably Safe Investments at . . . 5%

WRITE for particulars of our "Certificate Plan" for handling mail investment accounts—$25.00 upward. Will send you copies of many letters from clients showing that investment by mail is easy, SAFE and PROFITABLE.

Sums always withdrawable on 30 days' notice. 5 per cent. per annum earned for every day invested. Supervised by New York Banking Department.

Assets, $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, 175,000

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Beautiful Sofa Pillow Covers

Fab-Ri-Ko-Na Art Burlaps. Faultless in taste and texture. Exquisite in decorative design. Embroidery designs, 22 x 22 inches 50c prepaid. Price includes reverse side. Colored fabric suitable for embroidery, 20c extra. Our beautiful illustrated catalogue showing embroidery and poster designs sent free.

H. B. WIGGINS SONS CO.,
27 Arch Street, Bloomfield, N. J.

AGENTS WANTED—Permanent and profitable employment can be found by reliable men and women willing to devote time and attention to selling our goods to the consumer. Cash commission paid. Established 1880. 600 Agents now at work. Great Eastern Coffee & Tea Co., St. Louis, Mo.

AN UNEXPECTED VISITOR

BY JEANETTE McMILLAN

MR. BEECHAM was seated in his private office. Before him lay the loose sheets of a trial balance, which his bookkeeper had just brought him.

"H'm! H'm!" he soliloquized, a complacent look creeping over his face: "not a bad showing for the year. Five hundred thousand dollars clear and the prospect of a few thousands more this week. H'm! and not a chick or a child to spend it on. But, after all, it is much better to be able to save it; makes one feel quite easy to know they have enough laid by to take care of them when they get too old to zephyr. And I've earned it; I have a right to enjoy it all." And laying the sheets carefully in his desk, Mr. Beecham put on his overcoat and hat and started for home.

Jonathan Beecham was a bachelor of some sixty years, a fine-looking man, the striking feature of whose face was a pair of keen, piercing, gray eyes—eyes that his business associates said would look through an investment and tear it to tatters before ever a dollar went into it. His hair had turned gray early in life, prematurely he had always said, but really it was the result of hard thinking, as to what to do with his money.

He and his sister had lived alone for several years in the old Beecham mansion on the Park Slope, and after her death he had kept house by himself. He rarely entertained, and as his wants were not up to his income, the profits had accumulated and the business had grown, until now it was a source of worry, sometimes, as to what to invest the surplus in, safely.

He was noted for his honesty and his shrewdness, and his ability to make good investments; but he was decidedly close-fisted, in spite of the thousands lying by every year, untouched. He had, too, the reputation of being a little hard on his clerks, hardly paying them comfortable wages, and having very little patience with them when ill, never being ill himself. But, on the whole, he was a pretty good type of a highly moral, highly respectable man, always a regular attendant at church, and, as he thought, a liberal contributor to the church collections.

After finishing his solitary dinner that night, he lighted a cigar and settled himself before a glowing fire in the grate, a satisfied look creeping over his face as he thought of his business, past and prospective.

"I shall begin the season owing no man anything," he said out loud. "How some men can always be in debt I don't understand. I have no patience with them. Let them pay their bills as they go along."

"Makes you feel comfortable to think you are not in debt, hey? Haven't any patience with those who are, hey?"

Jonathan Beecham started. By the fireside sat a little, old, shriveled-up man, careworn, harassed, looking as though he had found the battle of life sorely against him.

"Why, where did you come from?" ejaculated Mr. Beecham. "Who let you in? I didn't hear the bell ring."

"Oh, didn't you?" whined the little, old man. "Well, no one else did either, for I didn't ring it. But you and I used to be old friends, Jonathan Beecham. Old friends, do you hear? I've come to collect my debts, too," he added.

"Why, I don't owe you anything," stammered Mr. Beecham. "Who are you, and what business do you have here, anyway? I'll have you put out; such impudence I— But here he paused abruptly. His visitor fastened a pair of eyes, strangely like Mr. Beecham's own, on his face, and giving a hoarse little laugh, said, "Oh, no you won't, Jonathan Beecham. As I said before, you and I are old friends, and I have a little account to settle with you to-night, and that's why I am here. You will not have me put out till I finish. Do you hear that?"

"My hearing is quite good, thank you," returned Mr. Beecham, attempting to speak stiffly, but utterly failing, as those piercing eyes seemed to look him through and through.

"Good thing it is," said his uncanny visitor, as he crossed his attenuated limbs and stretched his claw-like hands out to the blaze. "Ugh! but it's cold," he continued. "I am not as well filled out as I was when you and I first met, and I feel the cold, and you, Jonathan Beecham, are to blame for it."

"Me to blame!" echoed the startled man. "Yes, you. That is what you owe me, a well rounded out life, instead of a starved one."

"But I don't understand," protested Mr. Beecham, putting his hand out towards the bell-rope.

"Not so fast," said his visitor; "you will understand before I go. And so you think you owe nothing, Jonathan Beecham? Well, you are a poor, wretched man in spite of your thousands. But I must talk quick," he continued, gasping for breath, "for unless you pay your debt to me very quickly, I'll be dead." Mr. Beecham shivered nervously.

"Jonathan Beecham," continued the little old man, still fixing his eyes on his host's face, "how much regard have you shown for your employees this past year, have you done all you might when they were ill and in trouble? Quick, think it over and tell me."

Instantly, like a panorama came memory's pictures. "Well," he stammered, "I suppose I might have kept up my stenographer's salary a little longer when she was ill. I know they said she needed it, but you know it is one of my rules not to pay for sickness," in a half-way apologetic tone.

"Yes, yes," wheezed the old man hurriedly, "and what next?"

"Well, my engineer died, and some people said I was stingy that I didn't pay all the expenses of the sickness and funeral; but that was my business," in a haughty tone.

"Yes, I know, and left his poor widow with two little ones, suffering for the want of a few dollars; few to you. Go on!"

And, impelled by some strange power which he could not explain, Jonathan Beecham did go on, and enumerated some score of cases where a few of his many dollars would have helped some one on their way. It had not been so much through real selfishness, that the dollars had not gone, as a misunderstanding of the situation, that he really owed something to some one else. Even now, as he finished, he looked bored and annoyed at the persistency of his caller, and yet he could not have done otherwise than tell him what he wanted to know.

"So you do owe something after all, Jonathan," said the strange figure. "I knew it—you do owe all these debts. Will you pay them? Quick, will you? My life depends on your answer."

Hastily, Jonathan Beecham answered: "Yes, I will." Immediately the figure at the fireside seemed to look more cheerful and pleasing. He appeared to breathe easier, and his tone lost the hoarse wheeze it had at first. Jonathan Beecham noted it all with a start. What did it all mean? What hideous nightmare was this? But before he could utter a word asking for an explanation, his visitor arose, and with all his strength said: "And now, Jonathan Beecham, how much do you owe to your Lord? How much?"

At this question Mr. Beecham summoned all his self-control, and rising in his seat, confronted his visitor with a scornful look. "Nothing," he attempted to say in a very positive tone, but before he had fully uttered the word, his strange guest seemed to visibly shrink before his eyes.

"Nothing," it gasped, "get your pen and paper, quick. Now then, how much did you give your Lord last year? Write."

And again impelled by the same strange power, Mr. Beecham did as he was told. Pew rent, $200; church collections, $52; special at Christmas and Easter, $200; Mission offerings (he was not much at this kind of giving), $10 each; and outside collections—oh, well, probably about $50. Total, about $600.

"Have you finished?" queried the strange figure. "How much is it?"

Mechanically, Jonathan Beecham told him.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 151

At Meals and 'tween Meals

Is a delicious, invigorating food, far superior to tea or coffee as a beverage. A valuable addition to the dietary in case of impaired digestion and for those fatigued or run down. Recuperative during the close confinement of the winter months.

It is pure, rich milk, and an extract of selected malted grain, in powder form. It is prepared by simply stirring in water. So in tablet form, in either natural or chocolate flavor.

Our booklet tells of many other valuable uses. Follow with sample, free upon request.

At All Druggists.

Ask for HORLICK'S, the original. Others are imitations.

Horlick's Food Co., Racine, Wis., U. S. A.
34 Farrington Road, London, Eng. 25 St. Peter Street, N. Y. C.

Pocket Size, 10c ea. Family Size, 25c ea.
2 oz. Bottles, 50c ea.

AT THE DRUGGISTS, or we will mail a package anywhere in the United States on receipt of 50c.

DOUGLAS MFG. CO., Dept.
96-102 Church St., New York

Extra Fine Imported

56-piece
China Tea Set

FREE

with an order for 25 lbs. of New Crop, 60c., 70c., or 80c. Tea, or 25 lbs. Great American Baking Powder, 45c. a lb., or an assorted order Teas and Baking Powder, or 60 lbs. Bomo's Coffee, 33c. a lb. or 50-2 oz. Bottles of pure Extracts—Vanilla, Lemon, etc., or 25-lb. cans of Spice—any kind—absolutely pure, 50c. a can.

Address Mr. P. B., care of
The Great American Tea Co.
Box 289
31-33 Vesey Street, New York

A Good Position

is always open for a competent man. His difficulty is to find it. We have openings for high-grade men in all capacities—Executive, Technical, Clerical—paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. Write for plan and booklet.

HAPGOODS (Inc.),
Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York

PALMER PENMANSHIP

Taught by Mail. Six months course with individual weekly criticisms, now $5. Catalogue Free. Palmer School Est. 1881. P. O. Box 131, Cedar Rapids, Iowa

Continued from
preceding page

They used to say
"Woman's Work is never Done."

Deafness Overcome

A Device That Is Scientific, Simple, Direct, and Instantly Restores Hearing in Even the Oldest Person—Comfortable, Invisible, and Perfect Fitting.

190-Page Book Containing a History of the Discovery and Many Hundred Signed Testimonials From All Parts of the World—SENT FREE.

The True Story of the Invention of Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums Told by Geo. H. Wilson, the Inventor.

I was deaf from infancy. Eminent doctors, surgeons and ear specialists treated me at great expense, and yet did me no good. I tried all the artificial appliances that claimed to restore hearing, but they failed to benefit me in the least. I even went to the best specialists in the world, but their efforts were unavailing.

My case was pronounced incurable!

I grew desperate; my deafness tormented me. Daily I was becoming more of a recluse, avoiding the companionship of people because of the annoyance my deafness and sensitiveness caused me. Finally I began to experiment on myself, and after patient years of study, labor and personal expense I perfected something that I found took the place of the natural ear drums, and I called it Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums, which I now wear day and night with perfect comfort, and do not even have to remove them when washing. No one can tell I am wearing them, as they do not show, and, as they give no discomfort whatever, I scarcely know it myself.

With these drums I can now hear a whisper. I join in the general conversation and hear everything going on around me. I can hear a sermon or lecture from any part of a large church or hall. My general health is improved because of the great change my Ear Drums have made in my life. My spirits are bright and cheerful; I am a changed man.

Since my fortunate discovery it is no longer necessary for any deaf person to carry a trumpet, a tube or any other such old-fashioned makeshift. My Common Sense Ear Drum is built on the strictest scientific principles, contains no metal, wires or strings of any kind, and is entirely new and up to date in all respects. It is so small that no one can see it when in position, yet it collects all the sound waves and focuses them against the drum head, causing you to hear naturally and perfectly. It will do this even when the natural ear drums are partially or entirely destroyed, perforated, scarred, relaxed or thickened. It fits any ear from childhood to old age, male or female, and aside from the fact that it does not show, it never causes the least irritation, and can be used with comfort day and night without removal for any cause.

With my device I can overcome deafness in any person, no matter how acquired, whether from catarrh, scarlet fever, typhoid or brain fever, measles, whooping cough, gatherings in the ear, shocks from artillery or through accidents. My invention not only overcomes, but at once stops the progress of deafness and all roaring and buzzing noises. The greatest aural surgeons in the world recommend it, as well as physicians of all schools. It will do for you what no medicine or medical skill on earth can do.

I want to place my 190 page book on deafness in the hands of every deaf person in the world. I will gladly send it free to anyone whose name and address I can get. It describes and illustrates Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums and contains bona fide letters from numerous users in the United States, Canada, Mexico, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, India and the remotest islands. I have letters from people in every station of life—ministers, physicians, lawyers, merchants, society ladies, etc.—and tell the truth about the benefits to be derived from my wonderful little device. You will find the names of people in your own town and state, many whose names you know, and I am sure that all this will convince you that the remedy for deafness has at last been solved by my invention.

Don't delay; write for the free book to-day and address my firm—The Wilson Ear Drum Co., 1444 Todd Building, Louisville, Ky., U. S. A.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Prevention of Consumption

The Handbook on the Prevention of Tuberculosis, just published by the Committee on the Prevention of Tuberculosis, of the New York Charity Organization Society, is a timely contribution to the literature of a subject fast becoming one of universal interest. It is a volume of 388 pages, illustrated, and covers, in papers by well-known specialists, most of the phases of the subject about which everyone should be informed. The names of Diggs, Huddleston, Jacobi, Knopf, Loomis, Prudden, and Trudeau, are sufficient guarantee of the book's authority on the medical side, while de Forest, Devine, Folks, and others, by their membership in the Committee, or by contributions to the volume, vouch for its social value.

For the first time, an attempt has been made to supply those who are working to put an end "to the most deadly and most needless scourge with which humanity is afflicted" with something in the nature of a text-book. The first thirty pages give an account of the genesis of the New York Committee, its scope, the objects with which it was founded, and the problems it met with in the course of its first year. Following this is a report of the investigation made into the part played by various social factors in the prevalence of consumption, its relation to other social problems, the reduction already brought about in its ravages, and the indications of what returns may be expected from an intelligent grappling with the problem.

Price, 50 cents, published by the Charity Organization Society, 105 East Twenty-second street, New York City. Mail orders should include 15 cents for postage.

Finland's National Epic

The Kalevala, the Great Epic Poem of Finland, translated into English by John Martin Crawford, M.D. This new edition is the latest presentation, in English, of a poem which is destined to have as world-wide a host of readers as the Iliad, the Odyssey, or any of the great standard epics of the globe. It is fascinating from first to last, and proves that in the cold and bleak regions of the North there has lived and flourished a bard, or a series of bards, whose loftiness of themes, grandeur of expression, richness of fancy, rugged, majestic force and power to awaken the strongest emotions of the human heart, few even of the greatest poets can equal and still fewer surpass. The Kalevala is, to those who now read it for the first time, a new sensation in literature. In it we can see the mine where Longfellow delved for the originals of many characters and situations in Hiawatha. Two volumes, gilt top, cloth binding. Price $3. The Robert Clarke Co., 14-16 E. Fourth street, Cincinnati, publishers.

Books Received

Plutarch's Lives of Caesar, Brutus and Antony. (Pocket edition of the classics), cloth, 279 pages. Price 25 cents. The Macmillan Co., London and New York, publishers.

Holt of Heathfield, by Caroline Atwater Mason. An exceptionally charming story. Pp. 226, cloth covers. Price $1.50. Macmillan & Co., New York and London, publishers.

Hetty Wesley, by A. T. Quiller-Couch. A story of extraordinary interest, in which the members of the Wesley family are leading characters. Pp. 337, cloth covers. Price $1.50. The Macmillan Co., New York and London, publishers.

Soul-Winning Stories, by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D. A collection of pleasing stories of spiritual interest. A book that should prove helpful and inspiring. Pp. 223. Price $1.00. American Tract Society, New York, publishers.

The Heart of Rome; a Tale of the "Lost Water", by Francis Marion Crawford. A delightfully romantic and fascinating story in the well-known author's best style. Pp. 306. Price $1.50. The Macmillan Co., London and New York, publishers.

Victoria, Queen of Anglo-Israel, a prose epic, by Nellie Deans Taylor, illustrated. In this little volume the author has "adopted the style of old English used in the King James version of the Bible to mark the apparent unity of the history of Israel and Anglo-Israel." Pp. 48, cloth covers. Price $1. Neale Publishing Co., New York and Washington, publishers.

A Life of St. Paul, for the young. By George Ludington Weed. From the Acts of the Apostles and the personal references in the Epistles, Mr. Weed has woven a continuous narrative of the life of the great Apostle. The lessons drawn from it are such as appeal to boys of ten or twelve years, whom Mr. Weed specially had in mind. Pp. 230, copiously illustrated. Price, 75 cents. Published by W. W. Jacobs, Philadelphia.

Plain Thoughts on the Art of Living. Designed for young men and women by Washington Gladden. The name of the author is a sufficient guarantee that this book contains valuable advice, delicately and tactfully expressed. The promise is amply fulfilled. Among the chapters are the following: Work for Women; Dress; Manners; Conversation; Habits; Amusement, and Marriage. On these and other topics, Dr. Gladden gives sound practical advice. Pp. 236. Published by Porter & Coates, Philadelphia.

That Betty, by Harriet Prescott Spofford. A little story full of quaint interest, showing how "a citadel of fashion was stormed by sympathy for the unfortunate, and conquered by genial love." Pp. 200, cloth. Price $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

Character, a Moral Text-Book, for the use of preachers, Sunday School teachers, parents and others, by Henry Varnum. This is "a systematic grouping" of the accumulated wisdom of all time concerning character and morals. Nothing is of greater importance than foundation principles, and Mr. Varnum, in this Text-book has very ably, tersely and attractively set forth, in well-classified order, the various topics which it is desirable should be presented to the youthful mind, and which are calculated to make an enduring impression. Pp. 410, cloth binding. Price $1.50. Hinds & Noble, New York, publishers.

Our Own and Other Worlds, by Joseph Hamilton, author of The Starry Hosts, illustrated. A popular treatise on astronomy, in which the writer takes the ground that the planets are probably inhabited. Full of information and suggestion, and well suited to the popular need. Dr. Hamilton has invested the story of the stars with a new and beautiful interest and has, in the language of Prof. Potts of Victoria University, Toronto, "simplified the subtleties of astronomy to be most grateful and helpful." The book is one that will fascinate readers of every age and condition. 203 pages, cloth binding. Mailed for $1.25. Address Rev. J. Hamilton, Mimico, Canada.

Lomai of Lenakel: A Hero of the New Hebrides. By Frank H. L. Paton, B.D., for six years Resident Missionary on the West Coast of Tanna. A thrilling story of missionary work is this volume, from the pen of the son of the famous missionary, John G. Paton, the Apostle of the New Hebrides. It tells of the beginning of Gospel effort among the naked savages, the discouragements and disappointments, the patient toil and eventual success of the missionaries. Seldom has a book appeared, giving in so bright and vivid a form the characteristics of missionary life. It shows how the Gospel, simply and fervently taught, can win its way even in the most degraded communities. The change wrought in those savages in a few short years is a wonderful testimony to the power of the truth. Pp. 336, illustrated. Price $1.50. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago.

Missionary Principles and Practice. By Robert E. Speer. This volume might be appropriately styled a manifesto, for it not only states the attitude of the missionary societies, and vindicates them from the harsh and unsympathetic opinions of them, but it outlines the campaign of the future, and draws from the past encouragement for the workers. Mr. Speer devotes a whole division of his work to the situation in China, and the lessons of the sad martyrdoms which took place there recently. He is thoroughly familiar with the subject, and has presented it in a vigorous, lucid style. For persons who are accustomed to meet opponents or depreciators of foreign missions, Mr. Speer's volume is invaluable, as it shows how much has been already accomplished, and how bright is the hope of future success. Pp. 552. Price $1.50. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and Chicago.

Pale babies become rosy and pretty babies when fed on Mellin's Food. Mellin's Food strengthens.

70 beautifully printed pages of helpful hints about "The Care and Feeding of Infants," bound in cloth, will be sent you free if you ask for it.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

OIL-CAS-WONDERFUL NEW FUEL.
$125 to $250 a Month and Expenses

Men and women, Salesmen, managers, general agents for wonderful new invention—Harrison's Blue Flame Wickless Oil-Gas Stoves, for cooking, baking, heating. Wonderful seller. Big profits. Generates oil-gas fuel from kerosene oil. Hottest blue flame gas fire. No wick. Cheapest fuel. Absolutely safe. Gasoline is dangerous. Catalogue FREE. Write for special offer and new plan.

WORLD MFG. CO., 6577 WORLD BLOC., CINCINNATI, O.

BY MAIL Learn Dressmaking AT HOME

Make your own clothes—save money; dress twice as well for same money as now, wear richly in how. Also teach professional dressmaking. Book $5 and course of Miss Stevenson's course free. NAT. COL. SCHOOL OF DRESSMAKING, DES MOINES, IOWA.

7 SUTHERLAND SISTERS
Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner keep the hair and scalp in healthy condition.

LAMP-FITS.

How do you know what chimney fits your lamp? Your grocer tells you. How does he know? He don't. Do you then?

That's about how lamps are fitted with chimneys by people who don't use the Index; and they complain of bad chimneys! Lamp-Fits indeed! Do you want the Index? Free.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

1,000,000 NO IN

Which is overwhelming evidence that your household should have a

Boss Washing Machine

Will positive cleanse clothes in half the time required other washers. Guaranteed not to tear clothes. Saves labor, time and expense. You can easily earn one of these splendid labor-saving, economic machines free.

We have hundreds of letters like the following:

"I am using the Boss washer and will say it is handy. We used five others before I bought you but did not like any of them. The 'Boss' was clean and is so easy to run I have told the whole neighborhood about it."

MRS. JOHN MARSH, Walloomsac, N. Y.
"A friend told me about the Boss Washing Machine and I had to go ten miles to get one. It truly is the 'Boss.' I have tried a good many washers but yours is the best of them all."

MRS. E. C. DART, Richmond Centre, O.
Write for particulars and 1904 Souvenir.

BOSS WASHING MACHINE CO., Sta. H-2, Cincinnati.

Absolute Range Perfection

Sold for Cash or Monthly Payments
$10 to $20
Save

Clapp's Ideal Steel Range

is not 50 per cent. better than others. My superior on Lake Erie, where iron, steel, coal, freight and skilled labor are cheaper and best, enables me to fit a TOP NOTCH Steel Range at a clean saving of 25 to 50%. Send for free catalogues of all styles and sizes, with or without reservoir, for city, town or country use.

CHESTER D. CLAPP, 620 Summit Street, Toledo, O.
(PRACTICAL STOVE AND RANGE MAN.)

DEAF? Well, Listen

The deaf are immediately able to hear ordinary conversation by the Magnetic Otophone Sound Waves, which penetrate the ear, which restores hearing and banishes hearing noises. Guaranteed Invisible. Effective. Comfortable and Harmless. Not an ear drum or trumpet. Compare it with other devices, and be guided by your intelligence. Book FREE.

OTOPHONE CO.
1602 Arch Street, Dept. A, Philadelphia, Pa.

FREE TO LADIE

Send address of three friends who wear corsets, receive, absolutely free, our Boston Hygienic Pin for lengthening waist and holding skirt. Boston Hygienic Corset Co., 14 Winter St., Boston, M.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?
If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of drug and alcoholic addictions. Relief Guaranteed. HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.
We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R. 6, Lebanon, O.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight, Biscuit, and Doughnut Cutter, Apple Corer, and Strainer. 5 articles in one. Sells on sight. Large Catalogue. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N. H.

GOOD CAUSES HELPED

Good Cause	Amount
Lydia Benning	2.00
Ruthmayer	1.04
Brewer	50
Chas. H. Chas.	15
J. J. Butcher	15
Augustus Hull	50
Carroll	32
V. A. de Freest	15
J. Ples	50
McCartney	50
Ruthmayer	50
Anderson	1.00
Ayr, N. Dak.	5.00
C. H. Ashmore	2.00
Cate	50
Smith	1.00
Diane Bunn	50
W. Palmer	1.00
W. W. Swan	50
M. A. Bentley	50
Hofer	50
M. M. Quinlan	1.00
David Pitt	2.50
Isabella Kerr	2.00
Abbie Usher	1.00
Scott	50
M. B. Pa.	1.75
Logan	1.00
Linville, Ia.	1.00
Rowe	1.00
Broyles	1.00
Sands	1.00
Clark	1.00
Bowden	1.00
McWhinney	1.00
Riverall	1.00
Heidman	5.00
Knott	50
Stetzel	1.50
Joar	1.00
Shand	1.00
McDonald	1.00
McDonald	25
B. Tyler	50
M. D. Adam	35
W. Cramer	50
Brown	75
McGormick	50
Hunter	50
Johnson	2.00
Glenn	50
Door of Hope
Criley & Hunter	10.00
Missmann	2.00
Home Missions
M. W. Turner	1.00
Ball	1.00
Foreign Missions
Henry, for Weiss	1.00
Marlin	5.00
H. L. Hob	5.00
N. S. Sch. N. J. 12	46
B. Rodes	1.00
Washington D. C.
Rev. Z. C. Beals
na (house boat)	1.00
Pierce	2.00
Kappus	5.00
—	1.00
Lillie Jones	5.00
Miss Keskar
Mr. Murray	1.00
Miss Shattuck
Chang, Ch. N. H. 30	50
Flies B. Wells	10.00
School of Soul Winners
Erritt	1.00
Pearce	1.00
Salvation Army
G. Gutzner, Sr.	1.00
G. Gutzner, Jr.	1.00
M. A. Gutzner	50
M. Gutzner	50
Krause	25
P. rezinsk	50
Jo Williams	1.50
Volunteers' Dinner
G. Manchester	1.00
The Friends, N. J.	5.00
For Hospital, Manila
C. Slay & Hunter	3.00
J. McAuley Mission
M. A. Manypenny	1.00
M. E. Stewart	10.00
C. Slay & Hunter	10.00
Campbell	5.00
E. I. H. N. Goshen	3.00
Bird (good causes)
Stoye	3.00
Prack	5.00
Morrison	5.00
E. I. Bauer	4.00
Undita Ramabai
A. V. H. Taylor	1.00
Annie Lyons	1.00
C. Slay & Hunter	2.00
Will of Mary
Jillson	475.00
Ill House, Chicago
End, Duncan, Ariz	2.00
N. D. M. Eddy	1.00
F. E. Stewart	10.00

Wm Lyons	5.00
—, Dallas, Tex.	2.50
B. P. Fessler	1.00
J. B. Melvin, Mich.	5.00
Seaman's Mission
Crossley & Hunter	2.00
Dutch Leper Colony
Crossley & Hunter	3.00
Maria Beamer	4.00
Mrs. S. W. Muns	1.00
Very Little, Virginia	5.00
James F. Walton	1.00
Elizabeth Johnson	5.00
The White Door
Mr. & Mrs. J. H. Meads	2.00
Friend, Duncan, Ariz	2.00
Mary I. Stewart	10.00
Wm Lyons	5.00
—, Dallas, Texas	2.50
B. P. Fessler	1.00
J. B. Melvin, Mich.	5.00
Rev. N. Zamora, P. I.
B. P. Wampaca, Wis.	5.00
Steele Orphanage, Tenn
Friend, Duncan, Ariz	1.00
Mary E. Stewart	10.00
Mrs. D. M. Eddy	1.00
Wm Lyons	5.00
—, Dallas, Texas	5.00
King's Daughters' Set.
Mrs. S. R. Dinnick	2.00
Friend, Duncan, Ariz	2.00
Mary E. Stewart	10.00
Mrs. D. M. Eddy	1.00
Wm Lyons	5.00
—, Dallas, Texas	2.50
B. P. Fessler	1.50
Friend, Barton, Ark	2.50
J. B. Melvin, Mich.	1.25
E. Olsson, So. America
J. Irwin Wherry	1.00
H. Farnsworth	1.00
Jennie Kirk	1.00
Mrs. Alden, Sunshine
Jennie R. Nehls	1.00
In memory of Agnes
Lundgren	1.00
Rev. E. H. Richards, E. A. F.
Light St. German, M.
E. S. Seh. Miss Soc.
Baltimore, Md.	5.00
J. Irwin Wherry	1.00
Mrs. Maude Booth
E. Merritt	1.00
Christadora
Mary E. Stewart	10.00
Mrs. Bella Cook
Mary E. Stewart	10.00
Crossley & Hunter	2.00
Mrs. C. B. Abbott	50
N. V. Foreigners' Miss.
—, Tennessee	5.00
Jamaica, W. I. Sufferers
C. O. D. Pennsylvania	10.00
Mrs. Susan Sumner	1.00
G. W. Wedemeyer	1.00
B. Friedrich	1.00
A. W. Stubb	1.00
W. F. Root	1.00
Mrs. C. Simonds	5.00
Samuel Clelland	6.00
Miss L. A. Parker	75
E. W. Jones	1.00
I. H. N. Lanark, Ill.	10.00
L. Hobbs	1.00
—, Halifax, Can.	10.00
Miss Kate Franklin	1.00
Reader, Nema, O.	50
Mrs. M. Lane	50
Peoples' Bapt. Ch. S.
Sch. N. Y. City	15.00
Jerusalem Lepers
Crossley & Hunter	2.00
James Northey	1.00
American Bible Soc.
Crossley & Hunter	5.00
A. S. S. Missionary
Mrs. K. M. Anderson	3.00
Cremorne Mission
Crossley & Hunter	3.00
Pacific Garden Mission
Horace Martin	2.00
Bide-a-Wee Home
Mrs. Ida E. Tilson	25
Chicago Hebrew Miss.
Mrs. Chas. Walter	2.00
Mission Work in Syria
In memory of J. G. Pa.	50
Invalid Children's Home
Edna Hunt	2.50
Friend, Troy, N. H.	5.00
George Cretney	1.00
Mrs. F. H. Lockwood	3.00
John F. Pounds	6.00

crete would take the place of wood in building construction. Our houses would be poured into form. He did not tell how, but the methods are all simple. At present price of materials, bulk for bulk, concrete is cheaper than lumber. It is also stronger. All there is to prevent its immediate adoption is the people's lack of knowledge of these facts, and how to manipulate it at small cost. To those who know only the methods generally in use up to a year ago, Edison's prophecy is unfulfilled. To those who know the best and cheapest methods in concrete and concrete-and-wire construction, it is a wonder it is not in general use. This refers to no patent-controlled system. The patents of Robeling, Monier, and others have expired.

Tolono, Ill.

CHARLES B. LYON.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

MY PRAYER

ORD, let me not be too content
With life in trifling service spent,
Make me aspire.
When days with petty cares are filled,
Let me with fitting thoughts be thrilled
Of something higher.

Help me to long for mental grace,
To struggle with the commonplace
I daily find.
May little deeds not bring to fruit
A crop of little thoughts to suit
A shrivelled mind.

I do not ask for place among
Great thinkers, who have taught and sung,
And scorned to bend
Under the trifles of the hour.
I only would not lose the power
To comprehend.

A. R. L.

Reader, Fairfax. "I want to acknowledge the goodness of God to me in the past, in answering prayer."

Believer, N. Y. "God has lately wonderfully answered certain prayers of mine, especially two which had reference to two very dear ones. I give him the glory."

Mrs. R. G. M., Huntington, Ind. "I want to testify that during my whole life, the Lord has answered my prayers, times without number. I can never doubt him."

Alice B. Benkelman, Neb. "The Lord answered my prayer, and sent many more blessings with it that I had not prayed for."
Believer. "In the silent hours of the night, distressed by reason of affliction, I cried unto the Lord, and he heard and delivered me out of all my troubles. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

L. G. Forbes, Damascus, Ore. "I can testify to God's goodness in answering my prayer. He has lately answered my prayer when I was in trouble. Many times in years gone by has he answered my prayers."

Gratitude, Uniontown, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge answers to prayers, which I have received many times. He never fails to hear us."

K. S. H., Compton, Calif. "The Lord has wonderfully blessed me in answering my prayers. I can no longer doubt him, for he has proven to me that he desires us to ask and receive that our joy may be full."

Reader. "I was in great trouble, and I promised the Lord if he would help me, I would acknowledge it to the world. He answered, and now I redeem my promise. It is not the first time he has answered my prayers."

Reader, East Schodack. "I asked God two years ago to strive with our only son, that he might give his heart to the Saviour. Thank God, he has been converted and baptized. I am a firm believer in prayer."

H. B. R., Washington. "I wish to add my testimony to the many others in regard to answered prayers. I have had one answered recently, and believe all will be answered if we are sincere."

E. T., Washington, D. C. "I promised if God would send a wanderer home, I would acknowledge his goodness and mercy to all the world. He has heard and answered my prayer. Praise his name."

Mrs. J. L. R., Virginia Beach. "I promised that if my prayer was answered, I would make public acknowledgment. Several times I have had direct answers to prayers, and I can say, 'The Lord is an ever present help in time of need.'"

M. H., Pine Bank, Pa. "The dear Saviour has answered many prayers for me, and I promised if he answered this one, I would tell the world about it. Praise be to his holy name. He has heard."

Mrs. P. B. E., Georgia. "I recently bore a heavy burden that could not be removed, unless God came to my aid. He seemed far removed. I found myself at his feet, while his loving hand showered on me the blessings for which I cried, and my burden was rolled away."

Reader, Rahway, N. J. "I was in great trouble. I cried unto God to remove the great trial that menaced me. Blessed be his name, he heard and answered my prayer."

Mrs. F. R., LaCrosse, O. "I want to testify that I know God answers prayer. I want to thank him for saving my children and for reviving his work in this place, and for other blessings."

I. M. N., Firley. "I would like to add my testimony with others to answered prayers. I have had many answers to prayer and expect many more. 'Faithful is he who hath promised.'"

Letters acknowledging answers to prayers have also been received from a Reader, Schenectady, N. Y.; Mrs. J. D. Seward, Neb.; Mrs. C. E. D., a wife and mother, Plymouth, Ill.; Reader, Clayton, N. Y.; A. A. Bullard, Bath, N. Y.; Mrs. S. P. M., Palestine, Tex.; H. G. Huthinson, Hopeful, L. E. M., a Reader, Kansas; W. E. K., Dover, N. J.; Reader, Pennsylvania; Constant Reader; A. L. M., Phillips, Fla.; Mrs. J. C. E., St. Brides, Va.; J. E. K., Harrisburg, Va.; Mrs. H. L. F., Pennsylvania; E. M. M., Sea Breeze, Fla.

FARMS OR—

We can get a cash purchaser for your Real Estate, no matter where it is located or what it is worth.

Farms or city property, mansions or cottages—we can find cash customers for them all.

Our success is phenomenal, and the magnitude of our business is your best guarantee that we can make a quick cash sale for you.

United States Real Estate and Security Co.

Cash For All Kinds Of Real Estate

We'll Sell Your Farm

House Ranch
Timber Land Factory
Tenement House
Office Building
Business
Livery Stable
Creamery
Drug Store
Hardware Store
Laundry
Grocery Store
Milk Route
Restaurant
Hotel
Truck Farm
Plantation
Foundry
Mill
Printing Office
Newspaper
Magazine
Ship Barge
Steamer
Yacht
Horses
Carriage Automobile

Offices in the important cities, with over 1000 special representatives in other cities and towns. The whole strength of our organization is put into promptly effecting every sale.

What we do for others we can do for you. Our success depends on making your sale promptly.

Write us to-day a brief description of your property, and we will send at once, without cost to you, a plan for finding a cash purchaser.

We buy Endowment Insurance Policies for cash, and pay more than the Companies that issued them. We purchase annually more Insurance Policies than any other concern in the world.

Chicago
Cincinnati
Boston

1410 Real Estate Trust Bldg.,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Springfield
Hartford
Toronto, Can.

CITY PROPERTIES

No More Hair Rats THE COLVER PUFF POMPADOUR COMB

A cool and sanitary method of dressing the hair pompadour style without the aid of hair rats. No matter how thin the hair, the pompadour will look full and beautiful when the comb is used.

Price 25c Each, by Mail, Prepaid. Liberal Terms to Agents.

COLVER CO., 811 SCHILLER BLDG., CHICAGO

$1.50 SOLID GOLD FOUNTAIN PEN 60¢
AND THE NAME OF YOUR DEALER

THIS IS A RARE BARGAIN and won't last long. Think of it. The celebrated $1.50 Windsor Fountain Pen, made of finest quality Para Rubber, diamond point, 14 karat solid gold through and through, handsomely chased, together with filler and complete instructions for only 60 cents, prepaid to any address. When sending in your order do not fail to mention the name of your jeweler or your money will be returned to you. Not more than one Fountain Pen sold to any one person. We manufacture the very best Fountain Pens on market and leading jewelers everywhere sell our makes. Send in your order today. Stamps or coin can be sent safely through the mail.

RAYMOND & WHITE, Fountain Pen Manufacturers, Dept. M 65 Randolph St., CHICAGO.

MONEY BACK If PEN Fails to Please.

FURNACES at FIRST COST

Our free book tells how you can save dealers' profit by buying direct from the makers. Send for it. Hess Warming & Ventilating Co., Room 711, Tacoma Bldg Chicago

Are You Deaf?

We have 25 KINDS OF INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING Sent on approval. Write for catalogue. W. V. WILLIS & CO. 134 South 11th Street, Philadelphia

Corns A-Corn Salve takes corns out the way they ought to be taken out—roots and all. They stop growing because there's nothing more to grow. 15c. at your druggist's or by mail. Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

A Hint to House-Builders

The "ever-present peril" of fire will be largely eliminated from buildings, both business and residence, when once the people learn that buildings can be built with walls, floors, and partitions of fire-proof material, as cheap as they are erected of wood. This will read like fiction to many architects and builders, but that is only because they are not posted on the most economical methods of mixing, building and reinforcing concrete for building purposes. Some two years ago, Thomas Edison, in an interview, said that in the near future con-

EDS ARE THE BEST THAT CAN BE GROWN

Want the choicest vegetables or most beautiful flowers?
ANNUAL FOR 1904.—so well known
It is mailed FREE to all. Better send your order to BURPEE & CO., PHILADELPHIA.

HEARERS AND DOERS

Knowledge Without Obedience a Fatal Course

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

OUR Lord said, "Whosoever willeth to do his will, shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." (John 7:17, R. V.). It is a solemn declaration of our Lord: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven" (Mt. 7:21). How can men who read the Bible to criticise it instead of to obey it, not to know what is the will of God? There are many who seek in their own way to do good, and yet that which they do is not the will of God for them, because they do not put the first things in "Judgment, mercy, and truth," must be done.

Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, who built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, the floods came, and the winds blew, yet beat upon that house, and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock." After Jesus, before his death, repeated on the wilderness side of the Jordan the ten commandments which God had given to his people, Israel, he said, "Now, these are the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments which the Lord your God commanded, to teach you that ye might do them in the land whither ye go to possess it. . . Hear, therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee. . . And these words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart, in that thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." Whatever lack there may be in the education of our children, we do not have the greatest wrong if we do not give them a good knowledge of the Bible, and if their lives are not a doing of the Word.

It is a terrible thing when there is a lack of understanding of the Word of God, without the doing of it. There are many people who pin their faith to a man. They have their own ideas, and if the clergyman or minister comes up to that ideal, they do as he does, and risk the consequences. And in many instances it is a very awful and perilous thing. It is not by following any man, except the Man Christ Jesus, that we can have the will of God. Paul truly said, "Be ye followers of me," but he qualified it, "as I also am of Christ" (I. Cor. 11:1). That man would awake to the danger of practically giving up the keeping of his conscience to another. "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14:12). It is an absolutely individual thing. It will be a terrible and hopeless disappointment for some who have run this risk of following man, if they find at last that they have made a fatal mistake; and that, after all, the one in whom they trusted was not himself doing the will of God; and that he can in no way answer for them. Like the foolish man who built his house upon the sand, he sees all his hopes perish; and that will be the fall of them.

The apostle James says, "Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves" (James 1:22). Every Word of God which we learn, and do not carry into practice, becomes a curse to us and a stumbling-block to others. Some may say, "To will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not" (Rom. 7:18). Thank God, the Holy Spirit "worketh in us when we really will, and at the same time really trust God, 'to will and to do his good pleasure'" (Phil. 2:13). The power is never in us, but works in us as we really trust and obey. It is a very dangerous thing to study the Bible without much prayer and without recognizing God's dealings with us in our daily life or opportunities to put in practice what we learn. People who do not find out by daily experience the faithfulness of God to his own Word, are peculiarly open to the attacks of Satan on their faith.

If any be a hearer of the Word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass; for he beholdeth himself and goeth his way and forgetteth what manner of man he was."

At Factory Prices

Direct from our own Factory.

Why pay your dealer from $5 to $40 more for a stove or range, when you can buy direct from our factory

KALAMAZOO Stoves and Ranges

Approval Test

We are manufacturers, not "mail order" dealers. We make everything we sell and sell to the user exclusively. We make a complete line of stoves, ranges, heaters and make them right.

We ship all Kalamazoo freight prepaid, blacked and polished and any one can set them up. We guarantee satisfaction, or your money back.

saving all dealers' and middlemen's profits? We save you from 25% to 40% on every purchase and you run no risk for we give you 360 Days and a guarantee under a $20,000 bank bond. If a Kalamazoo does not satisfy you in every way, send it back and we return every cent you paid. We pay the freight. Can we make a fairer offer! We are selling thousands of both steel and cast iron stoves and ranges in all parts of the country, and can refer you to pleased customers in your own neighborhood. New patterns, large square ovens and guaranteed fire backs. All blacked and polished ready to set up. Send postal for Approval Offer and Catalog No. 103

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mrs. Kalamazoo, Mich.

We fit all our ranges and cook stoves with our patent oven thermometer which makes baking easy.

30 Day's Free Trial Standard Washer

We prepay all freight charges and deliver this direct to your door, absolutely free of charge. You try it thirty days, if you don't find it all and more than we claim, ship it back; we will pay return charges. This is different from any other washing machine ever made. Takes dirt out of wristbands, neckbands, collars, etc., thoroughly as it cleans blankets, sheets or pillow cases. Washday is a pleasure instead of a drudge. Don't delay but write at once and we will ship you a washer FREE by the next freight.

Don't Send Us a Cent, but drop a postal card to WIARD MFG. CO., 75 West Ave., East Avon, N. Y.

We Are Manufacturers Buy Direct From Us At Factory Prices.

We offer a greater variety of high class carriages, harness, etc., than can be found at any dealers, and save you 1/2 on your purchase. We refund money and pay freight both ways if goods are not satisfactory. Write for our free illustrated catalogue.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE & HARNESS CO. Columbus, Ohio.

200 Egg Incubator For $12.80

The simplest, most perfect incubator made in the world. This is a new one at a remarkably low price. It is an enlargement of the famous and made as thoroughly good as any incubator on the market. It will hatch every fertile egg, and stand up to regular usage as well as the most costly.

WOODEN HEN

Write for free catalogue with 14 colored views. GEO. H. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

ELECTRIC Metal Wheels

will give you a new wagon and a lifetime's service out of your old running gears. They are the modern, great service wheel. Made to fit any wagon, adapted to every duty. Straight or staggered oval steel spokes, broad tread, any height desired. You will be through with repairs and save money, fields and labor of horse and man. Write at once for our catalogue. It's free for the asking.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., BOX 136 Quincy, Illinois.

100 POINTS OF MERIT

Are to be found in the new 1904 SPLIT HICKORY SPECIAL TOP BUGGY $50

The best buggy in the world for the money. Can be furnished as you want it, is sold on 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL with an Iron-Clad 2 Year Guarantee. Send for our 168-Page Catalog illustrating this buggy, gotten up in twelve different ways and also illustrating and describing our full line of vehicles of all kinds and full line of harness, sold direct to user at rock bottom prices. The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co., 2948 Sixth St. Cincinnati, O. H. C. Phelps, President.

ROYAL INCUBATORS 30 Days Free Trial

Why pay for an incubator you have never seen when you can try the Royal 30 Days Free. If it was not a great success, we could not send it on trial. Send for trial offer. Incubator and Poultry Catalogue free, with poultry paper one year 10 cents.

Royal Incubator Co., Dept. 71, Des Moines, Ia.

Illustration of a box of X-Ray Stove Polish. Text: X-RAY Stove Polish. Is Guaranteed to go twice as far as paste or liquid polishes. X-RAY gives a quick, brilliant lustre and does not burn off. Sample sent free. Address Dept. "D," Lamont, Corliss & Co., Agents, 74 Hudson Street, New York City.

Illustration of a steel wheel. Text: STEEL WHEELS for your FARM WAGONS. Any size wanted, any width of tire. Hubs to fit any axle. No blacksmith's bills to pay. No tires to reset. Fit your old wagon with low steel wheels with wide tires at low price. Our catalogue tells you how to do it. Address Empire Mfg. Co., Box 98, Quincy, Ill.

RHEUMATISM Relieved Through the Feet. Thousands are relieved at home every month by MAGIC FOOT DRAFTS. Why not YOU? Try them—FREE. The drafts relieved Mrs. W. D. Harriman, wife of Judge Harriman, of Ann Arbor, Mich. They relieved H. C. Van Valkenburg, Providence, R. I., of an intensely painful case of muscular rheumatism. They relieved severe rheumatism of the arms, neck and back for T. C. Pendleton, Jackson, Mich. Mrs. Caspar Yahrdsorfer, Jackson, Michigan, 70 years old, was relieved in a few weeks, after suffering 30 years. The Drafts relieved James Gilbert, Locomotive Dept., Mich. Cent. R. R., Jackson, Mich., after 27 years of pain. Dr. Van Vleck, Jackson, Mich., writes that they relieved him and he is now using them in his practice.

Illustration of a hand holding a Magic Foot Draft. Text: They have relieved hundreds of cases probably just like yours. Isn't the chance worth taking? You try them free. Send us your name. We will send you by return mail a pair of Magic Foot Drafts—prepaid. If you are satisfied with the comfort they give you, send us One Dollar. If not, you send us nothing. You decide. Magic Foot Drafts are worn without the least inconvenience, and relieve rheumatism in every part of the body by stimulating expulsion of acid poisons through the great foot pores. Splendid booklet, illustrated in colors, free with the trial Drafts. Don't suffer, but write today to the Magic Foot Draft Co., R. A. 20 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich.

The Strongest Fence Made. To sell direct to the farmer the strongest fence in the world, we must not only use the best HIGH CARBON SPRING STEEL WIRE, heavily galvanized, but we must build so that the greatest textile strength of material is maintained. Sixteen years, spent in perfecting Coiled Spring Fence, each year showing an added degree of perfection, has brought us to a point where we can proclaim with a confidence born of attainment that OUR FENCE IS THE CHEAPEST AND BEST. Cheapest because the highest skill of the craft has been utilized to reduce the cost of manufacture, and this achievement, coupled with the largest output of the largest and best equipped plant in the United States devoted to fence manufacture, enables us to name you the VERY LOWEST PRICE AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT. Buy direct. We sell to you as cheap as dealers can buy. Put the dealer's profit in your own pocket. Examination permitted at your station; your money back if not as represented. Completion of sale rests wholly upon your judgment. Write us; we have something more to say to you. After correspondence is opened, you have your judgment to defend your interests at every advance of the deal. Our Catalogue is free, and is full of fence lore. COILED SPRING FENCE COMPANY, Winchester, Indiana, U. S. A. Box 47

PRESIDENT SUSPENDERS Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

YOU MAY MAKE

$16,000 a Year

THIS AGENT DID

Read His Letter Under Picture

AS THE largest real estate firm in the world we are undertaking the most important step in our history, and one which means the material prosperity of many people throughout the United States. We would therefore ask the careful attention of every man and woman who reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to see if this step does not contain an opportunity for you infinitely broader than any which is afforded in your own community.

Last year we sold more than $4,000,000 worth of New York City lots throughout the United States and the rest of the civilized world. We own and control more Brooklyn house lots than any firm or corporation in New York City, and we now propose to push our enterprises with the greatest energy everywhere. We intend to make our name and our reputation a household word throughout the country, and we desire a representative in every town and city in the United States.

If you are a man of character and energy, we have a plan by which you can partake of our prosperity and receive the direct benefits of our extensive advertising in building up a business

In Your Own Immediate Territory

We desire only representative men. Men who are successful in the work they are now undertaking. Men who can give the best of references. We do not want failures. We believe the man who is a good business man in a small community needs only the opportunity to make relatively greater success where his field is broader. Many of the best successes of the great cities are those men who have made successes in the small towns, and we propose to bring the opportunity of the great city right to your own door. Last year three of our salesmen averaged over $11,000 apiece by their own unaided efforts, and two of them while working in small cities. We have many salesmen making from $3,000 to $5,000 a year, and in nearly every instance they are men who are either conducting their own business in connection with our work or, because ours was so much more profitable and attractive, have given up their other occupation entirely. If you are energetic, if your reputation is clean, there is no reason, as Mr. Inge says, why you cannot do as well as he. We desire to select our general agents from those who manifest ability, and eventually to give exclusive territory to men who are competent to manage and develop it.

The Opportunity is Practically Unlimited in its Possibilities

New York is rapidly becoming the financial center of the world, as well as the center of the largest population. Her real estate constitutes the most conservative of investments, and is owned and being sought for over the wide world. When combined with life insurance and offered in the attractive form in which we place it before the public, our New York City house lots form an investment of most interest and attractiveness. We intend to give all who apply this year the opportunity of securing territory in which we will protect them and in which they can grow with us and share in the magnitude of our future business. We do not care to be bothered with triflers, but to those who are thoroughly in earnest we will give every assistance to establish themselves permanently and partake of the great future our business is destined to enjoy. For full particulars address

Agency Department B 20

WOOD, HARMON & COMPANY,

257 Broadway, New York

Z. M. P. INGE, Our Mobile Agent

MOBILE, ALA., September 15, 1903

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that fourteen months ago I accepted a position as Mobile agent for Wood, Harmon & Company's New York properties in connection with an active law practice. I did not, after an investigation extending over six months, convincing of the absolute responsibility of the firm and the remarkable character of their properties. My commissions in the past year amounted to $16,561, and this amount of money has been made without in the least neglecting a general law practice and other substantial work with which I am connected.

While it is possible that all persons who attempt to sell for Wood, Harmon & Company might not succeed, yet I can conceive how any man who will thoroughly acquaint himself with the facts, and put earnest and intelligent effort into his work, can fail to do handsomely for himself, nor can I see why there are not hundreds who are sufficiently well equipped to do at least as well as I. My faith in Wood, Harmon & Company and their properties may have been an important factor in my success, but it is the sale of New York real estate has been the easiest work for me.

Yours very truly, Z. M. P. INGE

Another agent made $9,747; another, $8,649 in the last year. Many are earning from $3,000 to $5,000 annually.

YOU
MAY DO AS WELL

RUSSELL SAGE, one of the world's greatest Investors and Financiers, recently said, in an interview in the New York World:

"A man who buys real estate in any of the five boroughs—of course exercising average good judgment—has a fortune before him. BROOKLYN is growing at the rate of 75,000 people a year."

MAGAZINE NUMBER

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
Published 52 Times a Year

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 24, 1904

VOL. 27—No. 8. PRICE 5 CENTS
Offices: Bible House, New York

Cheer Amid Storm—A Salvation Army Street Service in New York

POPE
MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Famous Chainless Bicycles
Equipped with two-speed gear, coaster brake, and cushion frame and All Standard Chain Models

Eastern Department, Hartford, Conn.

"Columbia" "Cleveland"
"Tribune" "Crawford"

Western Department, Chicago, Ill.

"Crescent" "Rambler"
"Monarch" "Imperial"

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

ESKAY'S FOOD

Made this Baby
Well &
Keeps Him So

"A healthy boy with rosy cheeks and as fat as can be"

Hobart E. Newman, Washington, D. C., at nine months, weighs 24 lbs.

His mother writes:—"My baby suffered terribly from acute indigestion. We tried every food and form of modified milk obtainable, but each only made him worse, and at 5½ months he weighed only 12 lbs.

"The first feeding of ESKAY'S FOOD put him into a quiet sleep and he has never had colic since. He is still thriving on it—a healthy boy with rosy cheeks, as fat as can be."

Every mother needs our helpful book, "HOW TO CARE FOR THE BABY." It is sent Free with samples of ESKAY'S FOOD. SMITH, KLINE & FRENCH COMPANY, 427 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CROSSING THE DELAWARE

You have a Delaware to cross every day.
The wheat-fed man wins out.

Pettijohn

is all wheat—nothing but wheat.

It contains all the strength—all the protein—of rich, golden wheat. It is not pre-digested but is easily digested by you.

Pettijohn is the food of energy and courage.

Not factory cooked but easily home cooked. Served hot, tempting and delicious.

$10,000 IN CASH PRIZES.

Read carefully the Cereta Coupon in Each Package.

The Policeman's Smile

This big Policeman used to frown,
As he stalked grandly up and down,
'Till Quaker Oats brought into town
The Smile that won't come off.

$10,000.00 in Prizes -- See the New Issue of Cereta Coupon
In Quaker Packages.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

FIGHTING THE FLAMES IN A BUSINESS BLOCK

GEO. W. HORTON, BALTIMORE'S FIRE CHIEF

COFFEE FOR THE WORN-OUT FIREMEN

THE FIRE-SWEPT MONUMENTAL CITY

SINCERE sympathy is felt throughout the country with the people of the stricken city of Baltimore, Md., in the calamity which destroyed so much of her wealth and has crippled so many of her industries. Severe, however, as the loss is, there are features of the catastrophe which are ground for congratulation. Chief among them, is the fact that in so extensive a fire, there should have been so small a loss of life. Though the firemen heroically fought the fire, without any regard for their personal safety, only one of them was killed. Had the fire broken out on any other day than Sunday, the factories and office buildings would have been crowded with people—and, so sudden and rapid was the progress of the conflagration, that many must have lost their lives—either in the flames, or in the panic that would undoubtedly have taken place. It is also a matter for thankfulness, that the fire was checked before it reached the residential quarter of the city, otherwise the homes of the poor and the rich would have been demolished, many lives would have been sacrificed, and thousands would have been rendered homeless. The value of all property destroyed is enormous—conservative estimates fix it at over a hundred million dollars—but the suffering it will directly entail is not nearly so great as would have been caused by the destruction of the tenement-house district, where the workingmen live. Even the rich, who suffered most, lost less than they might have done, for it has been found that the vaults in which the currency and securities were stored, when business closed on the evening before the fire, protected their contents, and we uninjured by the conflagration which raged above and around them. The buildings destroyed, too, were in most cases insured, so that a large sum—it is reported about ninety million dollars—will be obtained to rebuild the section.

Very little more is known of the origin of the fire than was known when the article, describing the main facts, was published in this journal last week. It was in five minutes the fire company was on the scene, but the flames had already spread through the building and a high wind from the bay was carrying them menacingly toward adjoining warehouses. A few minutes later, a loud explosion rent the air, followed at short intervals by two others, which sent a rain of cinders and fragments of blazing wood to the roofs of other buildings.

From that time onward, for eight and twenty hours, the fire raged on, unchecked. The heat from the burning buildings was so intense that again and again the gallant firemen were driven back, but only to return, as soon as they were able to do their work. Bravely they held their ground, but the towering structures burned fiercely and the wind carried the sparks and burning debris from one to another. Dynamite operators were set to work to destroy buildings in the path of the fire, but the flames leaped scornfully over the vacant spaces, eager for new prey. Thirty big warehouses were seen blazing fiercely at one time, and the flames were spreading, as from a centre, east, west, north and south. It seemed as if no power could check the conflagration as long as anything in the whole city was left to burn. The Continental Trust Building, the Equitable Building, a dozen Banks, the Pennsylvania Railroad offices, the Western Union, and Postal Telegraph offices, the Fayette Street Episcopal Church and all the newspaper offices, excepting those of the Baltimore World, were consumed, and the fire was leaping on toward the Court House, the City Hall and the Post Office, three substantial edifices, which stood almost alone, towering above an area of blackened ruins, nearly a mile square.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 168

SOLDIERS GUARDING THE BALTIMORE FIRE DISTRICT

about eleven o'clock on the morning of Sunday, February 7, that an automatic fire alarm in the establishment of Messrs. John E. Hearst & Co., wholesale dry-goods merchants, on the corner of German street and Hopkins place, gave notice of the beginning of the conflagration.

THE HEARST BUILDING, WHERE THE FIRE STARTED

SAVING AN IMPERILED BUILDING

RUINS ON THE CORNER OF FAYETTE STREET

The American Pulpit

:: Sermon by ::

Rev. Frank De Witt Calmage, D.D.

The Blessings of Lent

TEXT — JOEL 1: 14:

"Sanctify ye a fast, call a solemn assemblage"

THE Presbyterian Church has enrolled among its leaders many intellectual theologians. Entitled to a prominent place among them, by his learning, philosophic acumen, and sanctified common-sense, is Dr. Francis L. Patton, formerly President of Princeton University and now President of Princeton Theological Seminary. Many of his weighty utterances have impressed me, but none more than one he made on the value and usefulness of the Episcopal Church.

His words in substance were: "I believe the Episcopal Church is one of the most effective churches in existence to-day. I believe in its ritual; I believe in its teachings. If I were not a Presbyterian, I would certainly be an Episcopalian. But though I love and honor the Episcopalian Church, I also believe that the most absurd of monstrosities, is a Presbyterian in his form of worship trying to ape an Episcopalian. While we are Presbyterians, let us remain Presbyterians. When we want to become Episcopalians in our form of worship, in responsive readings, and in all that the Episcopalian service implies, let us become Episcopalians. But do not let us try to change the Presbyterian pulpit into a chancel, or the grand old simple service of the Presbyterian Church into a concert by a surpliced choir, and into the liturgy of the Episcopalian Church."

Amen, say I, to the sound advice of Dr. Patton. The simple doxology, the two or three congregational hymns, the chapter read from the Bible, the earnest prayers, and the doctrinal as well as practical sermon, can never be excelled as a service for the grand old church which the names of John Calvin, and John Knox, and Thomas Chalmers, and Thomas Guthrie, and Lowell Mason, and William Taylor, and John Hall, have made immortal. But, though I would not have the Presbyterian Church adopt a ritual, I still insist that the Episcopalian Church has not an exclusive title to all the good things she may hold dear. Especially do I affirm that she has not a sole right to her Spring Fast, which starts with Ash Wednesday and closes with Easter's dawn. 'Way back in Joel we read the command, "Sanctify ye a fast, call a solemn assemblage." If that divine command is still in force for us as for God's ancient people, is there a better time for its observance than the period preceding our commemoration of the passion and resurrection of our Lord? It was at this season of the year, too, that the Master withdrew to the desert before the beginning of his ministry, and there, fasting for forty days, prepared for the ordeal of his temptation. It will be well for Presbyterians, as for Episcopalians, to meditate on that experience of our Lord and draw near to him in our hearts.

We Must Have Self-Abnegation

for sin, before we can truly have closer union with God. Therefore, the purpose of this sermon is to show why the Episcopalian Lent should become a Presbyterian Lent, also why the "Spring Fast," which is the time of the "lengthening of days," should be observed all over the world, by all Christians, no matter to what individual churches they may belong.

The Episcopalian Lent, in the first place, calls a halt to the social dissipations now being practiced in all the large cities. It cries, "Peace, be still!" to the social whirlpool, which is gradually sucking down its many struggling victims, as Peter was once being drawn into the depths of the Galilean lake. It says to the women of the "Social abyss," "you have something higher to live for than a nightly round of receptions and parties, and a never-ending succession of afternoon teas." It says to the young men of the "Social abyss," who, under the power of stimulants, are trying to work in the store by day, and to dance almost every night until one or two o'clock in the morning, "Young man, you had better stop and consider to what purpose you are devoting the best energies of your life." It warns the social devotee of the spiritual danger of his course, as a noted New York capitalist warned him of the financial danger, when, sometime ago, he said, "The young men who will not succeed in business are those who, night after night, may be found in the ball-rooms, and the dance-halls, and at the city club-houses, drinking a little, playing cards a little, and eating expensive dinners. They are sometimes called the drones of society. This is a misnomer. Like some small insects that sport for a day in the summer sunshine, they are minute destructives. Their lives in the economy of social life make one of the petty agencies of degeneration."

Was not the capitalist right? Are not the ball-room, and the dance-hall and the club-house a continual menace to success in business? Can a young man go to a progressive euchre party and play cards until eleven o'clock, and sit down to a midnight banquet, and then be in the right physical and mental trim to sell goods in the store the next morning? Is not the social shrine also a very poor foundation upon which to build the altar of Jesus Christ? Is not most of its influence spiritually depleting? Some time ago I read a wonderful book, entitled, The Call of the Wild. The central figure of that story was a magnificent dog, a cross between a Saint Bernard and a Great Dane. He was stolen from his California home and sent far north, into the Klondyke regions, where he was compelled to drag the miners' sleds over the Alaskan snows. Jack London, the writer, with a master-hand traces him from a great, big, loving house-dog, down and down, until he is a dog-thief among dog-thieves. He traces his degeneracy down and down until at last the bayings of the wolves call him into the darkness of the northern forests, and "the call of the wild" is answered by "the response of the wild."

The Lenten Call

Is not society's call too often "the call of the wild?" In the social world, when you give a banquet, do you not, for the most part, ask only those in your own social set? Do you obey the divine command, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors, lest they also bid thee again and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee, but thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Is not society's call often "the call of the wild," because it is a call to selfishness, the call of only doing good to them who do good to you? Is it not often the call merely of wealth to associate with wealth, and social caste with social caste? Oh, ye worshipers at the social shrines, better heed to-day the Lenten call! Better snuff out the many lights of the ball-rooms and the banquet-halls! Know ye not that during the "Spring Fast" the lowly Nazarene is knocking at the door of your hearts, trying to get in.

'Tis true we cannot reach Christ's fortieth day,
Yet to go part of that religious way
Is better than no deed.
Neither ought other men's abuse of Lent,
Spoil the good use, lest by that argument
We forfeit all our creed.

The Episcopalian Lent, in the next place, is a protest against business absorption. It says to the merchant, the manufacturer, and the professional man: "You have a right to work. Indeed, you must work, and work hard, if you are to support your family, and meet the financial necessities which are yours. But, oh man, you have no right to make the acquisition of money the chief object of your life, any more than you have a right to live to eat. 'By the sweat of thy face, shalt thou eat bread.' But that sweat should not make thee indifferent to God, or to the higher purposes of life, for which thou wert created."

Pause in Business

But the great danger of money making is that the acquisition of wealth may become a passion. The calls of the money market become so great and urgent, that an average business man does not feel that he has time to stop and think about his relations to God. Amid the whirl of business activities, he feels a great deal as did Oliver Wendell Holmes during his trip through England. He said he went so fast he had time "to talk with lots of people, but he had time to have a true conversation with none." By that the poet Holmes meant, that he had time to drop here a word and there a word, but he went through Europe so quickly, he had no time to exchange heart-to-heart thoughts with great thinkers, as he did with Max Muller, when he lay in his house sick for nearly a week. But though the business world would demand all of a man's energies, the Lenten season comes into a busy merchant's life and says: "Oh, man, you should never be too busy to take time to think of your responsibilities to God." So the Episcopalian Lent sends its best men straight into the very heart of Wall street. In old Trinity Church, in the busiest part of the day, during the Lenten season, we hear the Christian preacher's voice calling, as do the Mohammedan priests from the minarets of the eastern mosques: "Oh, business men, come to prayers! Come to prayers! Oh, ye business men, come to prayers, come to prayers, come to prayers!"

The Lenten season pleads with business men for the higher life, as I once heard Robert Speer plead with a great audience of men for the higher life. "Men," said he, "I have always been ambitious. By that, I mean, I have always wanted to make the most out of my life. If I had thought I could have made more out of my life by entering the United States army, I certainly would have done so. Had I thought I would have made more out of my life by entering business, should have consecrated my energies to money-making. But I did think I could make most out of my life by being an evangelist of God. Therefore, men, I beg to plead with you, no matter who you are, to Live for the Higher Life

If you are a banker or a merchant, be a Christian merchant. If a lawyer, be a Christian lawyer. If a manufacturer, be a Christian manufacturer." Thus the Lenten season says, "Live for the higher life. Make your counter, oh man, a Christian counter. Make your mechanic's bench a Christian bench. Make your office a Christian office. Be like Paul, a Christian tanner, at the same time he was a Christian preacher. Oh business men, wherever you may be and whatever you may be doing, "Sanctify ye a fast, call a solemn assemblage." Come to the Lenten prayers!

The Episcopalian Lent, in the next place, is a time for spiritual house-cleaning. As the "Spring Fast" immediately succeeds the time when the business man takes an account of stock, we find the Spring Fast comes just before the days when the housewives are turning their houses upside down in their semi-annual attacks upon the dust and the moths. It is the time which we husbandmen dread, but it is the house-cleaning time, which every prudent wife declares is essential for the physical health of her family. It is absolutely necessary to keep physical dirt out of a house; yet, in spite of all precautions, it will keep creeping in everywhere. Although the workmen in the Philadelphia mint are as careful as they can be, the dirt and the fine particles of gold sift through the floor cracks. So great are these siftings, that every year the floor is taken up and the dirt is separated from the gold, and thousands of dollars worth of gold are thus collected for the United States Treasury. In spite of all our precautions the minute innumerable stains of sin will creep into the heart. Therefore, each year it is very desirable to obey the call to the Lenten Spring Fast.

Serious Self-Examination

Once a year is certainly not too often to take a spiritual accounting, and to conduct a serious self-examination. The call to a fast should reach the ear of every Christian. What does that mean? Shall our wives and mothers and sisters go to the grocer, and the butcher and the baker, and say, "We do not want any meat, or vegetables, or bread for the next forty days. Does it mean that all the members of a home shall without physical nutrition, as Dr. Tanner fasted forty days, and Leonard Thress fasted for fifty days, and Milton Rathburn fasted for thirty-six days, and Estella F. Kuenzel fasted for forty-one days? No. The habit of fasting, inspired by boastful feasting and the desire of seeing how long we can live without tasting food, is just as sinful as the opposite extreme of gluttony, to see how much one can eat, without uttering destroying the smooth workings of the digestive organs.

Spiritual house-cleaning does not mean complete abstinence from physical food. It does mean, emphatically, the reconsecration and the rededication of the domestic fireside to Jesus Christ, through self-abnegation. It means that we shall have prayers at the cradle, and that we shall have prayers in the bed-room; prayers in the parlor, and prayers in the sitting-room, and prayers in the kitchen, and have the dining-room spread with a Gospel banquet of the "Bread of Life." If next week you were to entertain the King of England, or the Emperor of Germany, you would turn your home upside down to make it attractive for the advantage of his Majesty. Shall we not, in the same way, by spiritual house-cleaning, prepare for the entertainment of our Heavenly King, by casting out of doors all sinful thoughts and desires which find lodgment in our hearts?

Welcome the Divine Guest

The Lenten season in the home means simply a spiritual preparation for Christ to visit the home. When Martin Farquhar Tupper, the famous English poet, came to visit us in Brooklyn, we gave to him the very best room in the house. We gathered together the most famous literary men of the city to meet him. At that party Horace Greeley came, and William Lennox Bryant came and read his Thanatopsis, and George William Curtis came, and I think John G. Whittier came. I well remember my mother giving to me Tupper's popular book, Proverbial Philosophy, and saying, "Read that book. You should know who Martin Farquhar Tupper is before he comes, and then you can honor him as he should be honored." In like manner, the Lenten

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

REV. W. C. DAVIDSON (U.P.)

REV. E. P. ELCOCK (PRESBY.)

REV. F. J. SAUBER (PRESBY.)

REV. J. M. HUGHES (PRESBY.)

REV. M. U. RAMSBURG (METH.)

REV. J. H. PRICE, D.D. (METH.)

EMPORIA'S GREAT REVIVAL

Dancing, Card-playing and Worldly Indulgences Given up by Many who Now Begin the Christian Life—A Wonderful Work of Grace

THE most remarkable revival in the history of Emporia, Kan., has just been brought to a close. These meetings were under the leadership of Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, and his singer, Mr. Harry Maxwell. From the first day to the close, it was one continual sweep of victory. A deep faith took the time for such an awakening had been taken hold of one of Emporia's ministers, and the Rev. Dr. Sauber, of the First Presbyterian Church, went up to the fall Synod with the purpose of seeing, if possible, the help of Evangelist Biederwolf for the work in mind. Mr. Biederwolf was at this Synod, urging the church to what he believed was to be the greatest year of evangelistic effort in the history of the State.

He called to Mr. Biederwolf was extended by six of the city's most prominent pastors, viz: the Rev. John H. Price, D.D., First M. E. Church; the Rev. Frederick J. Sauber, D.D., First Presbyterian Church; the Rev. M. U. Ramsburg, Grace M. E. Church; the Rev. John M. Hughes, Second Presbyterian Church; the Rev. W. C. Davidson, United Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. E. P. Elcock, of the Arundel Avenue Presbyterian Church. The whole city was so moved, that the meetings grew to such proportions, that the other pastors, with their people, came into the movement, and for twenty-two days the whole community was given up to this marvelous work of grace. The initial service was held on Jan. 3, in the First Presbyterian Church, in which can be crowded 1,500 people, in two or three days the building was filled to overflowing, and many were turned away who could not obtain entrance. On Sabbath evenings, both the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, holding in all over 3,000 people, were packed with eager listeners; Mr. Biederwolf preaching at both places, and Mr. Maxwell singing for each service. Three services for men only were held on the three successive Sabbaths, and at each more than 1,500 men attended, the last of these men's meetings being held in the Opera House, crowding it from pit to dome, while many were turned away.

At these meetings, men by the score came forward to confess Christ as their Saviour. The weekday afternoon meetings were just as remarkable for their attendance and interest. Nothing like it was ever seen in Emporia. At these meetings Mr. Biederwolf spoke to church members. The appeal was keen, thoughtful, and searching. Untold good was done: young people by the scores have banded themselves together in circles, solemnly promising to give up such questionable indulgences as have interfered with Christian life and church work. The same deep work was done in the evening meetings; hundreds began the new life in Christ, and God's children gave themselves with deeper consecration to the Master's service. All classes and ages were reached. Boys and girls in their teens confessed Christ; young men and women, with the fire of early life in their veins, renounced the dance and the card table, and took upon them the name of the Saviour; men and women in mature life, bearing the burdens of business and home, and aged men who had passed the three-score and ten limit, came forward and said they meant henceforth to live for God.

One of the most remarkable meetings of the series was a service held twenty minutes before sunrise, at which early hour hundreds came out to the house of God, to wait upon him in prayer for unsaved dear ones. From time to time, homes were thrown open, and on different mornings at an early hour, very nearly a half-hundred cottage prayer-meetings were held.

REV. W. E. BIEDERWOLF

PROF. HARRY MAXWELL

All social conditions, too, came under the influence of God's forgiving love. The work was wonderful for its far-reaching character. A prominent business man, at the close of the meetings, remarked that another who did not even attend the meetings, though he tried several times to get in, had, through their influence, been led to acknowledge his Lord, and was waiting now an opportunity to unite with the church. Men who have been altogether worldly, and who are still in the world, have become serious as never before, and promise hereafter to live better lives. Indeed so remarkable has been the influence of these meetings upon all classes that, on Wednesday, January 20, designated as "Merchants' Day in the Union Gospel Meetings," the stores, wholesale and retail, were closed, in order to give all the employees an opportunity to attend the afternoon meeting of that day. Such a thing, so far as is known by those who have lived in Emporia for twenty years, never before occurred in the city. An old man said that he had not seen such a meeting for sixty years.

People thought and talked about the Revival everywhere. One of the daily papers remarked that the men on the street corners talked religion as they used to discuss politics. Wives have been restored to their husbands, children to parents, brothers to sisters; friends estranged have been reconciled, and dear ones have seen many for whom they have been praying for years, brought to Christ and saved. It was indeed a touching sight to see loved ones pleading with their relatives and friends to join them on the march to the Heavenly City. Close on to 1,000 people professed faith in Christ.

Evangelist Biederwolf's sermons are brief, seldom over twenty-five or thirty minutes. He combines great power with remarkable pathos and tenderness. He leads and wins men. He was ably supported in this work by his singer, Mr. Harry Maxwell. The men who led these meetings are certainly men of wisdom as well as power. The work was thoughtful, earnest, deep, and won respect even from the world and brought honor upon the cause of Christ.

THE BLESSINGS OF LENT * Sermon by REV. FRANK DEWITT TALMAGE, D.D. Continued

Lent is a season in the home is an appropriate time for the spiritual preparation for Christ's coming to the home. Home friends should be told all about him, so that they also may come in and honor the divine guest. As we, in the Brooklyn home read and reread the writings of the English poet, in order to know what his thoughts might be, so to prepare for the advent of Christ in the home, we should read and reread the words which he spake to his disciples of old. We should prepare to greet Christ not as a stranger, but as a long-loved and anxiously awaited friend.

The Lenten season is an annual plea for the spiritualization of the Church. After Jesus Christ drove the money-changers out of the Temple, were the attempts to secularize the House of God into a place for literary, musical, and social, and financial enjoyment forever abandoned? Do not some of us, consciously or unconsciously, fall into the error of coming to church merely for account of the oratorical gifts of the preacher? Did thousands upon thousands of worshippers sit at the feet of a Beecher, a Cumming, a Rowland Hill and John Wesley—not because they were worshipping God but rather because they were worshipping a brilliant man? Do not thousands upon thousands of people go to the great cathedrals of Europe, in order to hear the music—just as those same musical lovers would sit at the feet of a Liszt, a Paderewski or a Damrosch? We know that the finest living musical composer of Italy leads the Vatican choir, and the finest organist of all London is master of St. Paul's famous organ, and that Plymouth Church was not more noted for the fact that it had one of the greatest of preachers, than that it had one of the greatest of musicians, who was able to make its organ pipes weep and sob, as well as sound a mighty hosanna. Are not some of our churches, on account of their wealth, being more and more secularized into mere social clubs? Do not many professional men go to church—not for the spiritual good they may get out of those churches—but that they may be able to come in touch with those who worship in those congregations? Is it not becoming more and more the custom for the members of the church boards of trustees to judge of the success or the failure of the church by the criterion of money—by the way that church, in its collections, is able to take in as well as give out wealth?

Oh, yes, my friends, the church members should heed the Lenten summons. They should heed the spiritual call, which soars above the discordant ones of the busy marts, even as the clear note of the thrush may be heard above the bedlam of the woods, sounding the reveille of the morning. They should hear the Lenten call, which says to the clergyman, "Oh ordained under-shepherd of the Christian pulpit, down on your knees and pray." Lent calls to the elders and deacons and Sunday School officers, "down on your knees and pray." It calls to the lay members, whether diamonded and in silks, or in humble homespun, "Down on your knees in prayer." Oh! that we might all heed the spiritual Lenten call, and make Christ's church a veritable "House of Prayer."

Thus, my friends, the Spring Fast calls to the men in the social world, and to the men in the business world, and to the men in the home, and to the men in the church, to come to prayers. It calls at this time because, on the coming Ash Wednesday, we shall celebrate the beginning of one of the most triumphant and yet saddest times of all Christ's earthly existence. The Jordanic baptism was just over. Christ was about to begin his divine mission. We know not how far the human nature he assumed, may have obscured for the time the divine attributes he possessed. It may be that in those forty days of solitary thought and prayer, he realized more clearly, than in his former years, the sublimity of his work and of his sacrifice. He saw what his work was to be. He saw how he must carry the burden of man's sins, and die for man, and be resurrected, before he could return to his Father's Throne.

May this coming Spring Fast of the Lenten season be to you also, a time of spiritual awakening. May it be a time when you will not only realize that God has a glorious earthly work for you to do, but a time when you can realize that, after work is done, you shall live on and on with Christ, and never die! May you, during the next coming forty days, be much in prayer, much in earnest beseechment. May you also feel and know, that the way you are to be best fitted for that earthly work is by the depth of your repentance as well as by the height of your glorious and triumphant faith. May God bless this Lenten season to us all!

JAPAN
VICTOR ON THE SEA

The Russo-Japanese War Begun

A GREAT BATTLE EXPECTED

LIKE a bolt from a clear sky, the news flashed over the cables on Tuesday, February 9, that the long-threatened conflict between Russia and Japan had at last begun, was a surprise to the capitals of the world. There had been a lingering hope that, even though diplomatic relations between the two nations had been severed, some means might still be found to avert war. With the news of the sudden opening of hostilities off Port Arthur and Chemulpho, the last hopes of peace were shattered. It was universally recognized that a struggle of the most far-reaching consequence had commenced, in which other nations might possibly become involved, before it reached the decisive stage.

Actual war was precipitated in advance of a formal declaration on either side. Russia's delay in answering Japan's final note in the prolonged series of diplomatic exchanges, was interpreted by Japan as a mere ruse to gain time for military and naval dispositions, and without the slightest intention of complying with Japan's demands. Accordingly, M. Kurino, the Japanese Min-

GEN. KOUROPATKIN
Russia's "Head of the Army"

GEN. PRINCE MIN-YUN HAN
Korea's Military Commander

GEN. TERAUCHI
Japan's Army Chief

Japanese shells struck the Russian ships and inflicted slight damage. The Russian shells fell short. In the second encounter the Russian battleship Poltava, and the cruisers Dia, Askold, and Novik were each damaged below the water-line, and the Sevastopol near her forward funnel. The fleet was slightly damaged.

Correspondents unite in declaring that the Russians were taken completely by surprise. "We did not expect the Japanese for three or four days yet" was the frank avowal of Admiral Alexieff's officers at Port Arthur. They had taken practically no precautions. Only one Russian ship was on patrol, and using searchlight leisurely. Nearly all torpedo boats were snugly berthed within the harbor basin. It was a rude awakening; and when it was over, the reminders of it lay in shape of three helpless hulks at the harbor entrance which had once been the pride of the Port Arthur fleet. The Retvizan was struck forward by a torpedo; the Tsarevitch aft. The Persiviet was found to be slightly damaged. It was noted, during of darkness. This fleet was commanded by Admiral Togo, and three of the imperial princes of Japan were with the squadron. The Russian fleet lay in the roadstead, unsuspecting of danger. Suddenly there was an explosion, the shock of which was felt by the fourteen

Russian warships in Port Arthur harbor, which immediately began to play their searchlights and to fire seaward. The land forts also fired at the invisible enemy. The whole town was awake and panting with excitement, and the streets were soon crowded. Other explosions followed, caused by more Japanese torpedoes. At 2 A.M., on Tuesday, two Russian battleships, the Retvizan and the Tsarevitch, and a cruiser, the Pallada, were seen to be disabled and beached near the harbor entrance. The first two are among the finest vessels in Russia's navy. A number of men were killed and wounded on the Russian ships and in the forts.

This whole episode came and passed so quickly that it was not until daylight that the full force of the blow inflicted by Japan was realized. The surprise of the fleet and the fortress was complete. So far as known, the enemy escaped with the loss of four men killed, and some fifty injured, their ships being absolutely unharmed. The Japanese fleet reappeared off Port Arthur a few hours later, on Tuesday forenoon. The Russian ships immediately gave chase, and many shots were exchanged, the forts also firing. Some of the second engagement especially, that the aim of the Japanese gunners was excellent. Their guns threw heavy shells, which emitted a yellow or a dense black smoke when a ship was struck. They steadily maintained perfect battle line formation, even when retiring; while the Russian ships constantly wheeled around, the cruisers forming the outer fighting line.

On the same day and almost at the same hour, another sea-fight was taking place further south where a Japanese squadron, under Admiral Uriu, countered and sank two Russian ships at Chemulpho. Perhaps the most succinct version of the Chemulpho fair is that furnished to our State Department

RUSSIAN CAVALRY MARCHING THROUGH A CHINESE CITY

CAVALRY SCOUTS OF THE JAPANESE ARMY

ister at St. Petersburg, was recalled, and diplomatic relations discontinued. Russia retaliated by the recall of Baron de Rosen, her ambassador at Tokio. Even at this critical stage, the Czar's government, true to its traditional slowness in diplomatic affairs, saw no reason for haste.

Japan took a totally different view of the situation. Regarding the withdrawal of her Minister as creating a state of war, she felt free to act without a moment's delay. A powerful Japanese fleet of some sixteen vessels, including five battleships, a number of cruisers, and a small flotilla of torpedo boats appeared off Port Arthur at midnight, Monday, February 8, and stole close in under cover

RUSSIA'S PORT ARTHUR SQUADRON, INCLUDING THE DAMAGED "TSAREVITCH," "RETVIZAN," "PALLADA" AND "PERSIVIET"

S. Minister Allen, at Seoul. He cabled that on the afternoon of February 9, a fleet of twenty-one Japanese warships arrived off Chemulpho, which is the port of the Korean capital. 2,500 Japanese troops were landed and proceeded to Seoul. Two Russian warships, the cruiser Variag and the gunboat Koriets, attempted to prevent the landing. Trouble was imminent, and vessels of her nationalities began to leave the harbor. The Variag and Koriets tried to escape, but in vain. Several shots were fired on either side, and the Variag was damaged. The Japanese commander then announced that an attack would be made at 4 p.m. At that hour the Koriets exploded, and sank. The Japanese ships kept up a fire upon the Variag, until she also sank. Some of the crews were made prisoners, while others escaped to British, Italian, and French warships in the harbor. Many Russians were killed or wounded, but the Japanese reported no casualties to men or ships. The Variag was American built, and was considered one of the finest and swiftest cruisers Russia possessed. A Russian transport, the Sungari, was also sunk in the fighting, but the troops were rescued from drowning by the foreign warships. Events now followed each other in rapid succession. Japan's brilliant successes during the opening hours of the war were the talk of all the European capitals, and was generally conceded that she had practically won control of the Korean channel. Soon came intelligence of the capture, near Fusan, of three Russian transports with 2,000 troops aboard, who were made prisoners by the Japanese. On one of the transports—the Ekaterinopolav, an auxiliary cruiser—were thirty rifled guns and a large number of recruits from Odessa. Several merchant vessels were also captured, including the Argun, Shieka, Manchuria, Sleipne, Mukden, and Antis. The Sleipner and Sentis were afterward released, as it was discovered that they were Norwegian vessels. Japanese warships are reported to have fired upon and sunk the Russian mail steamer Mongolia, bound for Dalny. Four Russian whalers were also taken as prizes. Japan's next step was to seize the Co-fabulous reports of great Russian victories were circulated in the capital and throughout the empire. Gradually the truth became known and jubilation gave way to anger, and a universal desire for revenge upon the Japanese. The government bestirred itself; the Czar issued a "Supreme Manifest," denouncing Japan for beginning the war, and announcing the determination to answer "the Japanese challenge with armed force." Hurried preparations were made to send the Russian Baltic fleet of fifteen warships through the Kiel Canal to the Far East. Three hundred new locomotives were tially destroyed. The Japanese merchant ships Zensho Maru and Nakonroua Maru were fired upon, and the latter sunk off the coast of Yezo, by warships supposed to be the armored cruisers Rurik, Gromoboi, Bogatyr and Rossia of the Vladivostok fleet. It is not considered probable that any attempt can now be successfully made to reinforce the Port Arthur fleet, either by the addition of the Vladivostok vessels, or from the Black Sea or Baltic fleets. All the indications point to the early storming of Port Arthur by the Japanese combined fleets.

THE EMPEROR AND CROWN PRINCE OF KOREA

The Japanese attempted on February 10, to land a force in several bays near the Russian fortress. Instantly the Russian guns opened with such fury that the invaders were compelled to retire to their ships. This movement by the Japanese, however, was probably a feint to draw the enemy's fire while a landing was effected elsewhere. That this seems to have been done successfully at some point north of the Talien-wan Isthmus, appears probable, from the fact that shortly afterward an important bridge on the Manchurian railway, between the head of Talien-wan Bay and New Chwang was blown up by Japanese, and thirty Russians were killed. It was thought to be the purpose of Japan to occupy the territory immediately north of Port Arthur, isolating that port, cutting off all communications and supplies, and then bombarding it at long range. Such a course would compel the Russian squadron to leave the harbor for the open sea, where they would encounter the main body of the Japanese fleet.

Russia's plan of land campaign develops slowly. Her military leaders all unite in the admission that Russia is not at her best as a naval power; but assert that in the field, she will assuredly hold her own against all comers. They look to the army to retrieve the naval losses. Prince Kouropatkin, who will have command of the military operations in the Far East, is regarded as a general of great skill and experience, and is one in whom the Russian soldiery have unbounded confidence. A great army has already been massed along the an port of Masampo, which she will occupy as a naval base. She also fully occupied Chemulpho, Seoul (the capital), and several points along the coast, with a view to future operations. The Korean Emperor took his quarters at the French legation in Seoul. Japan meanwhile kept actively pouring troops into Korea, until on February 13 it was estimated that she had not less than 80,000 soldiers in readiness there to face the Russian force which was advancing in the Yalu district. When news of the Port Arthur and Chemulpho engagements reached St. Petersburg, the situation can be better imagined than described. An attempt was made to conceal from the people the true state of affairs, and forwarded for use on the Trans-Siberian Railway, and sixty new field guns of the largest calibre and latest design were shipped to the East. Recruiting became exceedingly active, and patriotic demonstrations were held in the Russian cities. Bitter feeling was displayed against the United States and Great Britain, the Russian press denouncing the former especially for its open sympathy with Japan.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE THEATRE OF LAND AND NAVAL WAR OPERATIONS IN THE FAR EAST

Russia's Vladivostok fleet which had to force its way out of an ice-bound harbor, was now heard from. It was supposed to have had orders to harry the coasts of Northern Japan, and there was an unfounded report that the port of Hakodate had been shelled and par-

Yalu; over 90,000 troops having been sent thither from Mukden. In two days there were 60,000 arrivals. All the available Russian cavalry, 20,000 strong (largely Cossacks), is at Lin-Yen, on the Manchurian side of the Yalu. The opposing Japanese force of all arms is estimated at over 80,000. This army has poured in from Fusan, Gensan, Chemulpho, and Chinnampo, within a week, and is now concentrated north of Ping Yan, in the neighborhood of Wiju. News of a great battle is expected soon.

Should Russia be checked at the Yalu, her whole plan of campaign must be changed, for the great struggle for

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should always be sent to the nearest money order or bank draft office. Please to insert in remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year. Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends. Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

A Step Towards Peace

IN Tolstoi's great book, "War and Peace," that distinguished author describes, in his own eloquent and realistic way, the condition of a country that is torn by war and saddened by the horror and suffering that follow an invasion by a foreign foe. Farms and dwellings ruined; fields, orchards and gardens despoiled; cattle, crops, and belongings wrecked or stolen; homes in ashes, and helpless widows and orphans filling the air with lamentations. It is a book which carries on every page a powerful argument for peace, by showing the unspeakable horrors of war, and the misery it entails upon the innocent ones.

Japan and Russia are now in the thick of a struggle which must mean, for one of the combatants, subjugation. To the common people of both of those countries, and to the unfortunate Koreans, whose territory is the battlefield, it will mean also untold suffering for long years to come; besides the cruel wrenching of the heart over the loss of loved ones, there will be the evils of high taxes, onerous burdens, and official oppression. Whichever side wins will find the victory dear. If Japan emerges victorious from the war, it will be at the cost of a national bereavement that will be long remembered with sighs and tears in many a home. If Russia triumphs, even the shower of laurels and honors that will fall upon her military leaders will not suffice to hide the graves of those she must leave in alien soil, and nothing will bring back the smile to the faces of the peasant mothers and wives whose dear ones will nevermore march under the eagles.

History repeats itself, and the same Powers who deprived Japan of the fruits of her triumph over China may be moved, by insisting upon the absolute integrity and permanent neutrality of Chinese territory, to make the present war a fruitless one for both combatants. Japan will bow to such a decision, but Russia only if she must. Secretary Hay's note to the European governments, advocating united action to guarantee China's integrity and neutrality for the future, is on the line of international honor and good faith. Five European governments have already indicated their approval of the proposition, which was originally suggested by Germany. It is a step in the right direction—towards peace. Let us hope and trust that it may be urged to a successful conclusion.

Biblical Authority

PROMINENT secular journals in New York, and Roman Catholic journals in this country and in Europe, are taunting the Protestant Churches with abandoning the principle of the authority of the Bible, as the supreme standard of faith. The charge is based on the wide acceptance of the results of Biblical criticism by the ministers and the churches. We believe that the acceptance referred to, is not so general as these journals assume, but if it were so, it does not furnish a basis for the charge.

The criticism is really an effort to more thoroughly understand the circumstances under which the Bible was written. That so much time and labor has been given to it, is an evidence of the esteem there is for the Book, and also a realization of the importance of the subject. If, as the enemies of Protestantism would have us believe, Protestantism was tending towards the abandonment of the Bible, it is not likely that so strenuous an effort would be made by its leading scholars to have it made free from mechanical errors, and to insure its absolute accuracy as a translation from the original.

As an article on another page of this journal shows, a most minute and exhaustive examination of Hebrew idiom has been made, with the object of elucidating obscure passages and correcting mistakes which were made by the translators, at a time when there was no means of access to manuscripts of ancient date. The results are giving us clearer and more intelligent understanding of the Book, and are enhancing its value.

That some critics have been led away into wild speculation, and to the elaboration of theories of construction which are not tenable, in no way detracts from the value of the work as a whole. All these vagaries will be set aside, and the real benefits will be accepted. All who love and reverence the Bible will be unanimous in gratefully accepting every effort which tends to purge it from human error, whether of translation or transmission, and giving us the pure revelation as it was received from the Holy Spirit. No one need be afraid of honest efforts of that kind.

A Jewish Tribute

IT is gratifying to learn that a remarkable tribute to Christianity, written by so distinguished a Jewish scholar as Rabbi Kaufmann Kohler, will appear in the forthcoming volume of the Jewish Encyclopedia. As President of the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati, Dr. Kohler holds a representative position, and his words will have weight with intelligent Jewish thinkers. The Literary Digest, in giving a synopsis of Dr. Kohler's article, points out the importance of his conception of the mission of Christianity, as giving "to the great Gentile world Jewish truth in a form adapted to its psychic and intellectual capacities." Christianity did more than this, but we are glad to see that a Hebrew recognizes this part of its work. If he would take another step and perceive that God, who gave Judaism its truth and vigor, gave Christianity as its crown and flower, we could have nothing more to wish for from him. As the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews expresses it: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken to us by his Son."

Dr. Kohler accounts for the spread of Christianity on rationalistic grounds, but the Christian may naturally ask him whether the human mind could have conceived of such an adaptation as he recognizes in Christianity. Blemished and distorted, as it has been by the ignorance and fanaticism of some of its advocates, it is a religion so sublime, so inspiring and purifying, that to regard it as having a merely human origin is to ignore the limitation of man's intellect. The very fact of its survival, in spite of the weakness of its adherents and the might of its enemies, is an evidence of its divine origin. Dr. Kohler says: "Christianity, following the matchless ideal of its Christ, redeemed the despised and the outcast, and ennobled suffering . . . and it proclaimed the value of each human soul as a treasure in the eyes of God." That is a remarkable tribute for a Jew to pay to our Lord and his mission. We are glad to have it, and hope that such words, widely read, as they are sure to be by his Jewish brethren, may lead many among them to see in Jesus of Nazareth the light of the world.

Heart and Soul-Hunger

IT was associating with the stern old prophet Elijah that made Elisha so hungry for power, that sacred history has no tale so beautiful as his closing walk with his Master, that he might not be "taken up" without his hunger being satisfied. It must have been a tremendous gnawing at his heart to make him want twice as much as the man of Mount Carmel had, but he got it. Hunger like that is from heaven. Blessed want!

Many are hungry for gold; more for fun and folly; thousands thirst for fame. Oh, for a heart-hunger to be like Jesus! He is as far above Elijah as sun above sod. His power can work miracles that will save priests, instead of slaying them; that will flood the land with righteousness instead of rain; that will bring help to a thousand thousand widows, instead of one who happened to be hospitable.

Let the preacher get hungry for Christ and so will his hearers. Hunger is the soul of prayer. Starved people do not seek food like over-fed folk. There is piercing power in the cry of the famishing.

Let the Sunday School teacher get hungry for the soul of the scholars and there will be rejoicing in heaven. A sweeping revival of genuine power amongst the young people of the church would do more than all the legislation of Synod or Conference combined.

It is what one is that counts far more than what one does. To move amongst men and create a hunger for Christ and his life is better than to be a bishop.

Have faith, so that others, too, may grow hungry for the same.

Have such character in honesty that an ordinary thirst for it will permeate the very atmosphere in which you move.

Love and live in such a way as will make Christ as plain in your life as perfume tells the presence of roses.

Hunger on these lines is the need of the hour.

C. H. YATMAN.

A SALVATION ARMY STREET SERVICE

(See illustration on cover page)

NO matter how cold or how stormy the night at this inclement season, the good soldiers of the Salvation Army are to be found at their posts in our great cities, holding open-air services. No fair-weather Christians are they. All through the winter these meetings have been held in New York and elsewhere. At about eight o'clock in the evening, the members of the local corps form in line a march to some corner, not being too far away from headquarters, where they may return after a half-hour's out-door service of song, prayer and exhortation.

Herald Square, at the junction of Sixth Avenue and Broadway, New York, is a favorite place of meeting. Here there are many passers-by at this hour, and while the "madding crowd" hurry on upon their own business pleasure, there is always a crowd gathered around this group of devoted workers for souls. Sometimes a brass band adds to the interest of the occasion; and although one's sense of harmony may be a bit "jarred" when the leading corn strikes a note half a tone off, and the bass horn rumbles a grumble in a sort of steady growl, the earnest endeavor of the players and their evident enjoyment of the music, let the listener sufficient grace to almost enjoy the performance. When the band ceases from troubling and takes a musical rest, then the voices of the men and women take up a melody, and some of their voices are very sweet. They sing with spirit, heartiness and vim, and the tamborines keep perfect time in the hands of enthusiastic lassies, who, a few minutes later, will take turns in mounting a pile of dirty, reputable city snow, around which is now grouped an interested crowd, and tell, in their own simple way, how they are to know that Jesus is their friend, and that he will be everybody's friend who wants him. Then there is more playing by the band, and singing.

Earnest prayers are offered up from the snow-pile, "testimonies" are given, all with a sincerity and enthusiasm, which are characteristic of this great Army of earnest men and women, who are enlisted under the great Commander in this campaign for souls.

One very small man, who clashed the cymbals, bringing them together with a precision as to time that was as perfect as his belief that he was leader of the band, testified that blessed God that he had ever come in contact with the "good, noisy people."

A vast amount of good is being done by these open-air meetings, and many a poor soul, pausing to find out what crowd meant, has been struck to the heart by a chance word which brought comfort and salvation in its wake.

When the wind is so sharp and cutting that women huddled along, though wrapped in furs, and men rub their ears as they linger not; when the snow is falling or sleet driving, the little band of faithful ones is not afraid to venture forth in obedience to the Master's command to "go out into the highways and hedges, and constrain them to come in, that my house may be filled."

After the open-air meeting is over, the little detachment of the Army marches back to headquarters, in a side street where, though the surroundings and furnishings may be very humble, the spirit of comradeship and kindness prevails where hearts are as warm, and where the big stove is so generous of its heat that even the most benumbed have a chance to thaw out. Simple words, telling of the love of God and of free salvation, are sung to popular airs of the day. "Hiawatha" becomes tolerable, when sung with a will, such words as these:

I remember well the day, when I did stray, far away;
From my Father's home in sinfulness,
Wandering through this world of sin
And longing for release;
Then the Army came along, with a song
Showed my wrong,
And they told me Jesus died to save,
Pointing me to him to give me peace.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST R. E. JOHNSON, has just concluded a series of revival services at Manheim, Pa., with good results. is arranging for tent-meetings in the spring.

—MRS. B. A. LOVING, who conducts a mission work in Persimmon, Okla., writes, acknowledging many gifts of good literature from our readers in several States.

—REV. J. J. RINGER, with his Gospel singer, J. O. Long, and cornetist, Ira Long, has just concluded a series of successful evangelistic services in the Methodist Church, New Market, Va.

—EVANGELIST G. A. DE FLONE, of East St. Louis, has closed a very successful series of meetings at Liberal, Kan. Much good was accomplished.

—MRS. MARTHA J. ARMSTRONG, of Parkersburg, Pa., has been a teacher in the Presbyterian Sunday School there for fifty years. On her fiftieth anniversary of service, a late reception was held in her honor, and a valuable testimony presented.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Ancient Trial of the Dead

RECENT excavations in Egypt have brought to light evidence of a custom generally observed in ancient times. It is apparent, from the figures in the mural representation, that the body of a dead person, if of high rank, was brought before a court composed of forty-two judges, on whose decision the place of sepulture depended. The court was held on the banks of a river or lake and the judges sat in a semicircle. It was permitted for any person to lay an accusation against the departed before the court, and the judges at once proceeded to investigate the charge. If it was sustained, the right to burial in the tomb of his ancestors and to the elaborate rites of the Egyptian religion, was denied. If the charge was disproved, the accuser was severely punished, and the body of the man whose character had been vindicated was committed to the care of a boatman, whose barge was waiting near the place of judgment, and conveyed it to the embalmer's, whose duty it was to render it proof against decay. The feeling which led them to embalm the dead, probably arose from their belief in the union of the soul with the body, and their conviction that if the body decayed the soul would be always homeless. No embalmers in the world were so skilful as those of Egypt. There are now in our museums, and in those of Europe and in Egypt, bodies which were embalmed more than three thousand years ago. Among those which have been found is that of the Pharaoh Ameses II., who oppressed the Israelites in Egypt, the father of the Pharaoh Menephtah, who last let Moses and Aaron lead away the people. There is little doubt that the bodies of Jacob and Joseph might still be in existence, if they had not been disturbed, as the mention of them in the Bible implies that they were embalmed with royal rites. It is evident from the sculptures and the ancient books, that the right to such attention was dependent on the lives and conduct of the deceased. Thus, even in those early times, the people had a glimmering of the truth enunciated by the apostle:

Who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life (Rom. 2:6).

In Arbitration Grievance

A peculiar case of loss by the recent decision of the Alaska Boundary dispute, came before the United States Senate a few days ago. A certain company, whose offices are in New York, has been conducting the business of canning a species of salmon, and has erected canneries on Wales Island, over which the United States formerly exercised jurisdiction. Under the award of the Alaska Boundary Tribunal the island is transferred to Great Britain, and notice has been given that the land of the island will not be open to purchase by individuals, but will be reserved for the Crown. The company, being unable to dispose of its plant and unable to move it, now asks the United States to grant such relief as may be deemed equitable. Perhaps this company will obtain compensation, but the time will come when all such claims will be useless. Property and business interests will lose their value when this world passes into the hands of God for judgment, and only those who have treasure laid up in heaven will then be accounted rich.

Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life (I. Tim. 6: 19).

Protected in Duty

One of the most difficult questions for a jury to determine, is whether a person who is suing for compensation for injuries, was himself responsible for those injuries by not exercising proper care. A judge of a Massachusetts court has added another consideration to cases of that kind. The plaintiff had entered a house where he had never been before, and walked into the hall without knocking or ringing a bell. He found himself in dark-counters it in doing his will, but not the man who wilfully rushes into it.

Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation (Rev. 3: 10).

Almost Safe

A sad accident resulting in the loss of five lives, occurred recently at a colliery, near Mahanoy City, Pa. The miners were drilling a new shaft, and had worked hard all day driving holes and filling them with dynamite. Their work was finished, and they were ascending in the bucket to the mouth of the pit. Before they reached the surface, however, there was an explosion, and a cloud of flying debris was discharged from the shaft. The five men on the bucket were flung upward and then fell back to the foot of the shaft, three hundred feet below. It is conjectured that they must have had some surplus dynamite with them on the bucket, that they had taken down in the morning and had not used, and that this was exploded by the jarring of the bucket or by some accidental movement of the men's feet. All tery, instead of following the path around it, he decided to make a short cut through it. The night was dark, but the doctor knew the old ground well, and had often crossed it on similar hurry calls. On this evening, however, he stumbled and fell headlong into an open grave. His forehead struck with such force that he was stunned, and lay senseless for some time. When he recovered consciousness his dog was lying upon him, as if trying to warm him. He was unable to climb out of the grave, and his cries for help seemed stifled; but the dog easily leaped out and ran around, barking loudly. The noise attracted some persons near the cemetery, who came and helped the doctor out of the grave. Probably he will never be in a grave again until the time comes when no help, human or canine, can avail to deliver him. We may hope that when that emergency arrives, his soul will be safe in the keeping of Him who, if the doctor serves him in this life, will endow it with life eternal.

I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day (II. Timothy 1: 12).

Overcome by Gas

A clergyman of Orange, N.J., gives a description of the sensations of asphyxiation, which, he says, will prevent his assuming without good evidence, that persons who are found dead by illuminating gas are necessarily suicides. It appears that some workmen had turned off the gas, and had then turned it on again. He did not notice that they had done so, but sat at his desk absorbed in thought, waiting until he could again have the light. He says: "I did not notice the gas until seized by a deathly stupor, which it seemed impossible to throw off. I was seated at my desk. My sight grew dim. Every limb in my body felt as though weighted with lead. I tried to rise and had no power. I had the faintest sense of my heart fluttering and fast losing its power of pulsation. I had no specific pain, and felt only the weight of a heavy stupor, over which my will seemed to have no power.

I remember my mental state, and that I was sufficiently conscious to know and feel that the end was near, and that the cause was asphyxiation." With this came a desperate effort to rally. Happily it was successful. He still had no power to turn off the gas, which he knew was the right thing to do, but he staggered into the corridor, and lay there until he recovered in the fresh air. The most remarkable feature of this experience was the strange paralysis of the will. Though the clergyman knew what he ought to do, he could not do it at first. Perhaps he has had occasion to plead with men whom sin has similarly paralyzed; but happily he can tell them of a sure remedy in that case.

He giveth power to the faint: and to them that have no might he increaseth strength (Isa. 40: 29).

BRIEF NOTE

Rev. E. Payson Hammond's services at Marietta, O., and three other adjacent towns, have been signally blessed of God. Altogether fully five hundred persons, many of them young people, have made profession of faith. Mr. Hammond's most active helpers were some who were converted during a visit he paid to the city more than twenty years ago.

CEREMONY OF THE TRIAL OF THE DEAD IN ANCIENT EGYPT

ness, and instead of waiting where he was, and endeavoring to attract the attention of the family, or retreating, he chose to try to find his way, and while so doing, fell down the cellar stairs. As there had been other suits in which plaintiffs had recovered damages for injuries received under similar circumstances, the plaintiff in this case sued for damages. The judge, however, decided against him. He pointed out the difference in his case, from that of a policeman who was injured in the night, by falling down an unguarded elevator-well, on premises which the officer had entered in the discharge of his duty; and also that of a letter-carrier, who was similarly hurt in a building which he was compelled to visit in order to deliver letters. The voluntary visitor assumed the risk of pushing on through the darkness without inquiry, and was clearly chargeable with contributory negligence. When a man in doing his duty is called to go in danger, he is entitled to the protection that does not belong to a man who heedlessly or purposely exposes himself to danger. It is so with God's care in temptation. God protects the man who en-were killed, and the shaft was badly damaged. It is remarkable how familiarity with the use of dangerous explosives, seems to beget heedlessness rather than care. These men, having dynamite with them on the bucket, would naturally have been expected to be on their guard against an explosion. It is so with the sinner who escapes again and again from the consequences of his sin. He grows careless, expecting continued immunity.

Because sentence on an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil (Eccles. 8: 11).

Saved by a Dog

A physician in Brooklyn had a misadventure a few days ago that came near proving fatal to him. He was summoned, in the night, to a patient's house. Although it was not near, the doctor thought that he could reach it more quickly by walking than by waiting to call up his coachman. He accordingly set out at once, taking with him a remarkably faithful and intelligent dog. He walked quickly, and when he came to the entrance to an old ceme-

Another $10,000 for Macedonian Relief

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Work Welcomed by the Refugees, and its Readers' Generosity Widely Praised

WHEN this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches its readers, another remittance of $10,000, from the Fund raised by their generous contributions, will have been received by the missionaries in Macedonia, who are now engaged in the relief work among the refugees. That this will be welcome, goes without saying—for the urgent appeal cabled by Pastor Popoff, our Special Commissioner, supplemented by the letters received from missionaries Haskell, Bond, Clarke, Ostrander, Brailsford and others, all combine to show that a very widespread condition of suffering exists in Macedonia and along the Bulgarian border at the present time.

In an appeal issued by the Macedonian Ladies' Benevolent Society, imploring the pity of the world, it is stated, in conclusion, that "30,000 beings are to be clad and fed, and the winter has set in." That even this sad picture is only a partial statement of the whole truth, is quite certain. There are many remote points, away from the principal towns, where refugees have found their way, and are now subsisting precariously on the charity of the poor but good-hearted villagers. Pastor A. Hristoff, of Yambol, Bulgaria, estimates that from a single vilayet (Adrinopolis), not less than 10,000 Macedonian refugees have come, 8,000 of them now being in Bourgas and the neighboring towns and villages of Southern Bulgaria. Another correspondent writes that he has seen a list of 207 Christian villages that were destroyed by the Turks. These, of course, were depopulated, the unfortunate Macedonian peasants being scattered like chaff before their brutal oppressors, and compelled to flee as far as possible from the scenes of their misery and suffering.

Since our Interdenominational Committee for Macedonian Relief was organized by Pastor Popoff last month, the relief campaign has been pushed with redoubled energy. This second remittance of $10,000 will greatly strengthen the hands of the missionaries and their associates, and will enable them to extend the work to points in Macedonia and on the border, where no relief has yet been afforded, owing to the lack of means. Thus our readers will become instrumental in saving precious lives, and in alleviating much suffering.

From the Rev. E. B. Haskell, of Salonica, Chairman of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee, we have received this most interesting letter, giving a general statement of the situation at the moment of writing:

SALONICA, TURKEY, Jan. 19, 1904.
Dear Christian Herald:—Early in October the Macedonian Relief Fund of London began sending money to Rev. Lewis Bond, American missionary at Monastir. As there had been no insurrection in the Salonica province, save at Razlog, near the Bulgarian border, and as most of the sufferers there had fled across the border, there was no urgent call for relief work in this region, and the writer found himself able (at some sacrifice) to respond to Mr. Bond's earnest request for help in the distribution in the Monastir vilayet, or province.

Quite a quantity of flour and blankets had already been purchased when I arrived. By Inspector General Hilmi Pasha's kind permission, and with a guard furnished by his orders, I went to Resna, eighteen miles west of Monastir, October 15, and opened the first distributing depot there. After getting the work somewhat organized and under way there, I left it in charge of Mr. Tsiko, a Protestant Albanian, and returned to Monastir, where I met the British representatives of the Fund, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Brailsford, who came to distribute relief, and Messrs. Nevenson and Harris, who came to look over the ground and report on the needs to the British public.

Because of my knowledge of language and people it seemed best that I induct the Brailsfords into their new work. Hence, after they had secured their permission from Hilmi Pasha, I accompanied them to Ochrida, which is a kamitakluk, or seat of a governor. We found about 1,000 refugees from the neighboring villages in the city. The very efficient Bulgarian Archbishop, Metody (Methodius), had issued them bread for a time and had gathered a number of wounded into a temporary hospital; but his funds had run out before our arrival. The limited private resources of the citizens—it is a poor town—were about exhausted also, and gaunt famine was staring the hapless victims in the face. Getting excellent reports of the Archbishop's integrity and character from sources outside the Bulgarian community, as well as inside it, we decided to turn over to him the care of the refugees in the city. Mrs. Brailsford laid her gentle but efficient hand upon the forlorn apology for a hospital, and soon transformed it into something worthy of the name. Mr. Brailsford and I went out respectively to the sub-divisions of the Ochrida ("h" aspirated) kaza, called Malesia and Debutsa. My report on the condition of the latter district of seventeen or eighteen villages was given to the Associated Press, and published as "a canvass of the Monastir vilayet," of which it is really but a trifling part.

It was at Ochrida that I first received the welcome news that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD proposed opening a relief fund, and it brought great cheer to all our hearts.

Without continuing this narrative of the development of the relief work, it may be well to summarize its present condition. Mr. Bond acts as treasurer, at this end of the line, of the "Macedonian Relief Fund," Victoria street, London; of the "Macedonian Massacre Relief Fund," collected by the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society of England; of a private fund raised by Miss Muriel White, of the American Legation at London (chiefly devoted to furnishing wardrobes for newly arrived infants); of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's subscriptions for Monastir vilayet; and of the sums forwarded by Kidder, Peabody and Co., of Boston. Mr. Bond also oversees the central depot at Monastir, where the bulk of wholesale purchasing is done. Next under him at Monastir, is Mr. George D. Kyrias, Macedonian agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Several colporteurs of the same society are doing yeoman service, as assistants in relief work in various capacities, the society generously paying their time. I may add that the American Board contributes the salaries of Mr. Bond and myself to the relief cause. I believe that all the workers from England give their time without cost to the Fund, while several of them also pay all their ex-salt for the family. We give a smaller ration to those who receive it. The Government has also given a good deal of help towards making huts for the winter. Although the people complain that they cannot, with the five, ten, or fifteen dollars given by the Government, rebuild houses which cost $200 or more, yet the Government's dole has helped obtain nails and such materials, and has undoubtedly made it much easier for them to get through the winter. I said that the allowance of fifteen piasters a month, mentioned above, will be stopped at the end of March.

REFUGEES ON THE WAY FROM BELITSA TO RAZLOG

Having with me the tabulated results for only two districts, and being absent from the centre of distribution at Monastir, I cannot give absolutely accurate statistics of the amount of need. The following figures, however, will not be very wide of the mark. Total number of houses burned in Monastir Province (vilayet), 7,857, besides 600 thoroughly plundered. These represent 52,542 persons, of whom 45,000 are on the relief funds. On January 1, it was estimated that about $3,000 more would need to be spent for blankets. Then there will be needed regularly until next harvest (or for the next five months) about $17,500 a month simply for flour and grain, which is the staple food of the country, and the only kind we give, except to the sick. The numbers on the food lists are increasing all the time, as their own store become exhausted. If things are quiet in the spring, there will be great need of money to furnish seed to the farmers and also oxen for ploughing.

The writer's share in the canvassing of Resna, Ochrida, Crutchevo and Demir Hissar, has turned his thought an effort chiefly to the orphan children, possibly the more so because of the four motherless children in his own home. I many cases young children were left without either parent. I remember one case of a boy, four years old, with a baby sister a year old. Another little fellow, four or five years old, who lost both parents, has no near relatives living. He sleeps a few nights at one of the six unburned houses of the village, and then a few nights at another, as they may be willing to take him in.

Of course the instances where children lost one parent far more numerous. A pretty, pink-cheeked girl, nine years old, had her mother burned to death in the burning village this summer, while her father is in foreign parts. In Resna, Crutchevo and Demir Hissar, I found seventy-one orphan children, of whom twenty-eight are without either parent.

The numbers in Castoria and Presb must be much greater, as far more people were killed there. The American Girls' Boarding School at Monastir has already taken in ten or twelve orphan girls, from ten to fifteen years of age. But this is the limit of its capacity. A home adjoining it should be opened for the small children of both sexes. The Salonica Mission Station has a farm just outside the city, where some twenty of the larger boys can be placed learning to till the soil and to become useful citizens. It seems to me that as our British friends have provided most of the bedding needed in Monastir vilayet, and are also doing for the sick and wounded; and as the Bulgarians are devoting the energies to providing clothing, would be wise for the Americans to make a specialty of the care of orphans—although at the same time giving something towards the monthly $17,500 needed to feed the people, and bearing in mind the demand for ploughing-cattle which will arise in the spring. The home at Monastir and the farm at Salonica will take considerable money; but can it be better expended than in providing for the present needs of these hapless children and putting their feet in the pathway of future progress.

EDWARD B. HASKELL.

MACEDONIAN REFUGEES WHO HAVE FLED FROM PRILTEPE

penses from their own pockets. Nor should we forget the Roman Catholics working in the Florina district, nor their Sisters of Mercy, who nurse the sick and wounded in the Retreat at Castoria, all without remuneration from the relief funds. At present, Lady Thompson and Miss Kathleen Bruce, have charge of the general relief distribution at Castoria. Lady Thompson's late husband was Governor of St. Vincent, and she organized relief work there after the eruptions. Through her previous knowledge of Russian, she is getting hold of Bulgarian very rapidly. At Florina, the Monastir Roman Catholic Missionaries act as agents of the London Macedonian Relief Fund. At Resna, Miss Durham is in charge; at Krushevo, a Serbian colporteur (an Englishman or American may be associated with him soon); at Crutchevo, Mr. Graham; at Ochrida, Mrs. Brailsford and the Bulgarian Archbishop. Mr. Brailsford acts as general overseer, traveling from point to point.

At present, the English and American funds are chiefly used in furnishing flour and blankets, and in maintaining the retreats for sick and wounded at Ochrida and Castoria (the authorities object to their being called "hospitals," as the government provides all the hospitals needed).

The Bulgarian Bishop at Monastir has been furnished some $30,000 from Bulgaria with which he supplies clothing, socks, etc. The Turkish Government gives fifteen piasters (about sixty cents) a month to all members of families whose houses were burned, excepting the able-bodied men between the ages of fifteen and sixty. This buys soap and

In an appeal by the Macedonian Ladies' Benevolent Society, just received, the signers "implore the pity of all charitable persons, to help this nation, exposed to the most horrible atrocities and unheard-of sufferings." They draw a touching picture of the present conditions in Macedonia:

"Mothers, overcome by fatigue, abandoning their half dead babes on the lonely roads and high ways, while they themselves escape cruel death by passing the Bulgarian boundary with utmost difficulty Bulgaria has given a home and shelter to these refugees; but neither private benevolence, nor government donations will suffice any more. Our country is not rich. There are 30,000 souls to be clad and fed, and the winter has set in. Our eyes blinded with hot tears, we beg of you to help us."

All contributions should be addressed:

MACEDONIA RELIEF WORK,
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y.

Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and all will be forwarded to our missionaries in the field.

A Mother of the Tenements

By OWEN KILDARE

HELIOTROPE, carnation pink, new-mown hay, and other fragrances, telling of luxury, ease and worldliness, have many admirers, but the homelier smell, the fragrance of soap-suds also is its partisans, and if you, as I, are one of them, let me tell others the story of the Madonna of the wash-tub. Once in awhile a poet, whose soul tired from soaring Parnassian heights, gets closer to the ground, will sing an epic of the lowly, humbler folk, that finds an echo in the hearts of millions. But far too little has been sung and rhymed about the lady of the shawl and apron—our mother of the tenement. And these, our mothers, strive their way along, the monotone of it is one sacrifice, without a murmur or a sound of grumbling, with no reward but in their work well done. I shall never cease refuting those superficial men and women, who picture to you my own people, the lesser of the humble, as growling, grumbling malcontents.

"One of the ladies of the neighborhood calls" ere they that, I, for one, would not always be ready to fight for them with word of mouth or pen. One cannot fight an honest battle unless the cause is good. Poverty often breeds greedy selfishness, but it also brings out the very best that is in human nature, and ever seems more golden than when gilded by the diet, daily sacrifices of those first ladies of the land, the mothers of the tenements.

Ah, well do I know them! When a lad of the streets I loved them; when a youth they were my sweethearts. But they would not let me and went and got married; and even now, though they treated me so shamefully, I still love them, and more, respect them.

To meet them you need not make a special appointment. Their days are all alike and they are never away from home. Scores of them do not get beyond the boundaries of two or three blocks from their homes, and know as little about the "uptown world" as they know of the life therein.

So, if you would like to meet her, you may accompany me to call on Mrs. Mac.

Arrived at her door, we hear the peculiar "tschuck, tchuck" produced by the piano of the tenement—the wash-board—while Mrs. Mac herself hums lustily:

Now, Mrs. Farlane she weighed forty-four;
She'd weighed forty-five, then she'd weighed a pound more.
She does not hear us entering, and changes to her old favorite, "Young Paddy's Colleen."

Muah-ha-ha-hah!
Said the Colleen to Paddy
Muah-ha-ha-hah!
Then said Paddy to —

"I declare if it ain't—the top o' the mornin' to ye!"
So he had seen us at last, and what Paddy said to the Colleen did not become known.

"Now you sit right down here, and I'll have a cup o' tea for you in a twinkling." There is no declining her hospitality, and while she brews the cheering cup, she quietly demands that you inquire: "And how are the elder?"

"Ah, they're well, thank you kindly; and Jimmie's growing. Oh, my, but ain't he that! And I say—" Mrs. Mac looks about for eavesdroppers, not for fear of them, but from habit—"my Maggie is keeping company with—ah, I'm sure you'll never guess?"

"Not with Tim Malone, the truck driver?"

"Tim Malone, indeed! No, my Maggie is too good for the likes o' him. It's Frank Noonan that's my Maggie's fellow."

"Not Frank Noonan, the leader's son?"

"The very self-same, and I'll have you know my Maggie is fit for the very best o' them."

That, of course, cannot be denied, and while Mrs.

Mac—her name is McCarthy, but all who love her, which means all who know her, call her Mrs. Mac—is busy with the "tay," we look at her humble home.

The three rooms were permeated by the smell of soap-suds, coming from the tub standing beneath the one window in the front room, which was all-kitchen, living and dining-room, and even bed-room for Jimmie, the "young one." The two bed-rooms—the parental chamber and Maggie's boudoir—were dark, depending for their sole ventilation on the narrow slit in the masonry, called ironically "air shaft." But from the bed-clothes to the floor, a scrupulous cleanliness prevailed.

(Why are we always so ready to believe that poverty loves dirt?)

Facing the door from the hall was the cooking range, which also heated the apartment. In the corner to the right was the cupboard, which, on its gayly papered and fringed shelves, held all the household utensils and crockery of the family. In the corner to the left was the "old man's" rocker, the "bewraw," and a small table, which held a stack of colored newspaper supplements. Between the range and the lounge—Jimmie's couch—was the table, surrounded by four chairs, on which the meals were set, the son's lessons ground out and the women's sewing done.

True, it was all cheap; was tawdry from the green and red paper on the shelves to the "fashion plates" cut from different publications and gummed to the wall by Maggie, the "darter," but through it all there was the visible desire to give cheer and comfort to her family. The mother has to be all in all—housekeeper, friend, adviser, consoler, judge, executioner, tailor, dressmaker, chaperone, teacher, and everything else.

Tenement house existences have occasional variances, but unfortunately they are seldom of an agreeable nature. There are the deaths and the greedily expensive funerals, with their obligatory pomp; the only times when the poor ride in state—even if on credit to the undertaker. Illness, with the calls of the doctor, brings also a break in the monotony and gives the family temporary prominence in the neighborhood; but it is an expensive luxury. Then there are the disposessions, and is there a street with a stone in its pavement, on which, not once upon a time, the dingy lares and penates of a huddled family group cried their own tale to heaven? Also—and this is the most wonderful of all—times come, when the daughter, but lately grown up from a child, dazed and turned by the cheap flatteries of loaferish dandies at the balls and picnics, is missing from the humble place, which was a home to her and hers so long. Neither lastly or leastly are the "celebrations" of the men—usually on their pay-days, when money neither morally or ethically all their own, is spent in carousing and paid for by deprivation. And in all these instances, it is the mother, ever-patient, ever-tried, who has to bear the brunt of it, and straighten matters with kind words or righteous anger.

"She is constantly asked to tie a bow"

Mrs. McCarthy had had her share of it all, so, while at the wash-tub, or hanging the clothes on the line, or at her cooking fire, her thoughts ran in narrow compass to the past and the little incidents in the life of the block. As to her aspirations, they were not of the high-flown order. To see that the "old man" and the children had their meals and beds and clean clothes, were the ambitions of the mother. To hope that Maggie would marry a man who could give her a home at least as good as her own, and that Jimmie would grow up a smart young fellow, who could make a living more by his mental than his manual labor, were desires most natural. There was no future for her and the "old man," excepting a continuation of the present. She knew it could be nothing else, unless the health of herself or the "old man" should fail before Jimmie and the girl were provided, and then—but Mrs. McCarthy was too cheerful to let such thoughts stay with her long.

Mrs. Mac's alarm clock is the milkman, who comes, with his unearthly noise of tin cans and yells, at the break of day.

James McCarthy Sr., the "old man," is a driver, and has to be at the stable every morning at seven o'clock, to feed and clean his horses and harness. It takes him more than half an hour to get to the stable from his home. This entailed an early breakfast, and we find Mrs. McCarthy rising at five o'clock, to start the fire, cook the breakfast, and superintend the departure of her husband.

Maggie has reached the "young lady" age, which permits a certain independence; and still under the influence of her pleasant dreams, she eats her breakfast in

"She cannot resist the temptation of looking" haughty silence—and a few minutes, giving more time to her toilet of hair coiffure and ribbon finery. It should not be supposed that the mother is permitted to remain idle during this period, and watch her daughter's proceedings with reverent wonder. She is constantly asked to fasten buttons and hooks, or to tie a bow here and there.

Then, when it is seemingly finished, a final inspection generally ends with: "Say, ma, ain't the pink ribbon a little too loud on this sea-green waist?"

And "ma" has to weigh the matter with intense reflection before pronouncing her ultimatum.

The parting kiss is never forgotten, and before Maggie has descended the three flights of stairs to the street, the mother—summer or winter, rain or shine—leans from the window to get a last glimpse of her daughter, before she mingles with the crowd of workers hastening to their daily toil.

Shutting the window, "ma" looks towards the lounge, where her tousled and freckled boy is enjoying his last moments in slumberland. There is absolutely nothing angelic about the urchin, in fact, he is rather an ordinary kid; but to this plain woman, with her heart of gold, he is the only boy in this world, the centre point of her emotions, also the objective point of her maternal spankings.

Then it's "Jimmie, boy, don't you want no breakfast?"

And Jimmie? He rolls about lazily and growls, "Oh, leave me alone, ma; leave me alone."

But the mother caresses and tickles, until the boy, in high dudgeon, jumps from his couch and runs for his shoes.

In the meanwhile the mother heats the coffee and cuts more bread, and then puts that enormous tin affair, the wash-boiler, in commission. It's Monday—and wash day.

Jimmie, eyes only half open, is, nevertheless, sufficiently wide-awake to the main chance, which means to "beat washing his face." But in vain is all his diplomacy.

"Now, Jimmie, take your basin like a good boy, and give your face a good washing—heaven knows you need it."

The operation is not permitted to be performed out in the hall, "in under the sink," but must take place in the room, where "ma" watches with most unrelenting zeal that the neck and the ears are properly "lathered and scrubbed."

At last this torture is ended, and Jimmie, with shining nose, glowing cheeks and plastered hair, sits down to the table to eat his morning meal in company with his mother, who has deferred breaking her fast until now.

This meal is a very pleasant one to Mrs. McCarthy, and yet a tinge of regret is ever present.

"And what will you be learning to-day, Jimmie?" she will ask.

"Ah, language and joggraffy and all them things," come the answer, with the assurance of the scientist.

"Now, in joggraffy you learn all about the other countries, don't you, Jimmie?"

"Sure! All about Germany and France and Africa—but I ain't that far yet."

"Now, tell me, Jimmie, has the teacher been telling you anything about the auld country—about Ireland? Has he now?" and a wistful note whispers in her question.

"Naw! There ain't no such country, teacher says. They ain't got no king nor nothing, and they belong to England," answers Jimmie, without regard for his mother's feelings, she seeing in her mind's vision the picture of the long ago, when she sailed from the banks of the river Shannon, to land, a buxom lass, on these shores of the promised land.

Short is the day dream, for the hour is getting late, Jimmie has to be bundled off to school and there is much work to do.

But Mrs. McCarthy is a woman for all that, and while she rolls her sleeves back over the plump arms, she stands in front of the looking-glass and looks at herself. It's a pleasant reflection that greets her. The hair, the nose, and the eyes are unmistakably Irish; in other words, the hair is like gold when looked at in the shadow; the nose is ambitious and striving upwards, and the eyes—ah, the eyes, they are true and affectionate, and damp with a glorious dew. One more look does the plump little lady permit herself, and then it's "to work."

First, the bedding is pulled apart and shaken; then the floor is swept and dusted. This done, the dishes and cooking utensils are washed and dried, and after that the principal event of the day's programme—the washing—is begun in the proper spirit of energy. And for hours and hours there is no sound in the room excepting the "tschuck, tschuck" which we heard on our entrance, and perhaps, the snatch of a favorite song.

Little occurs during the day to interrupt Mrs. Mac, not even luncheon. Only when one of the ladies of the neighborhood calls is a somewhat ceremonial tea spread. At other times, a sip from her cup and a bite from a crust, taken while passing the range or the table, is all the food consumed. And this in spite of the fact that not one minute of the day is permitted to go to waste. Even during visits of neighbors the work is not stopped.

These visits are about the only recreation vouchsafed to these mothers of the tenements. Sure, it is nothing but gossip, but we should not forget how very small their world is, bounded by an almost immediate horizon. Also, it is not all praiseworthy that is discussed at these visits, and many reputations are dissected and sometimes condemned; but before condemning, let us remember the saying about people who live in glass houses. To offset the evil side of these chats it must be stated that they are the only channels through which the calamities of the district become known, and I know of occasions where two or three women, after discussing recent sicknesses or other ills which had befallen their neighbors, combined to alleviate the suffering, or misery they had talked about. It is a small, a very small, world in which they live, yet in it you will find, as elsewhere, many shortcomings and failings, and also, all noble sentiments made doubly worthy by their humble environment.

After the washing had been "hung out on the line," Mrs. Mac had not much time left for the mending and patching of her family's wearing apparel. Even if she were careless about her own eating she could not neglect the others, and with the arrival of the last of the family, the supper was ready and placed on the table.

It is the only time during the day that the entire family meets. However, great hilarity is not the order, as the meal is more of a labor than a pleasure, and is finished in a very short time.

One of the sad things of tenement house life is that the home circle is so little cultivated. There are several reasons for this, one being that mental activity is exceedingly limited. Another reason is that the quarters are generally so small that a comfortable gathering around the hearth is well nigh impossible.

In the case of the McCarthys, Jimmie lacked sufficient room for his boyish pranks; the "old man" missed his important political controversies, and Maggie—well, Frank Noonan, her "steady," was waiting downstairs. And so we find Mrs. Mac, even before the last dish is removed from the table, again deserted and devoted to her work, while her charges were following the different directions of their inclinations. But there is not a word of protest, for she is a mother of the tenement, and as such, cannot expect to be an exception.

The room once more set in order, Mrs. Mac reaches a very pleasant task in her routine. Fixing the fire and turning low the light, she leaves for the store to do her marketing. Every shop window on the way has been often scrutinized before, still she cannot resist the temptation of looking at many of the things, in which, by having longed for them so long, she has an almost proprietary right. And then the pricing at the store is another pastime. True, the grocer does not carry very many delicacies—they would remain unsold on his shelves; but the few he has for decorative purposes, are handled and bargained for, as if the women really meant to buy them.

Her modest purchases made, Mrs. Mac returns home, noting that her own daughter, Maggie, has an intensely interesting rendezvous with Frank Noonan at the door of the tenement. A wealth of faith has Mrs. Mac in her daughter, still she is only a simple young girl, and the maternal care is forever watching over her.

Nodding kindly to the young man, who doffs his hat with a cheery "Good evening, Mrs. McCarthy," the old lady climbs the stairs to her top floor, resting many times on the way, for indeed, her limbs are tired.

But now the schedule of the day is drawing to its close. This is indicated by getting the couch ready for Jimmie. He is the first victim to be sent to sleep, and is summoned in clarion tones by his mother from the window. And the stubby-nosed kid is undressed and tucked under his blankets with a care, the very essence of tenderness. Soon he is asleep, and then the thoughts of Mrs. Mac turn to the "old man" and hope for his early home coming.

She is not disappointed, for, ere long, the heavy tramp on the stairs tells his return, which is quickly followed by his going to bed. He, too, is made comfortable and easy, before the mother looks at the old clock—winding it at the same time—and thinks of the pair downstairs. All things must come to an end, and so the mother appoints herself love's rude awakener.

She descends to the street, winds the apron around her arms, and stepping through the doorway, she cruelly interrupts the cooing pair.

"It's a lovely evening, Frank Noonan," she says with natural diplomacy, and walks to the curb, looking at the sky and roofs of houses.

Now, I am sure you know it—it is well nigh impossible to talk love's language in the presence of a third person, and Frank Noonan suddenly awakes to the fact that it is very late. His good-night to Maggie is soft and whispered. Then to the mother—"Almost time to be in bed, Mrs. McCarthy. I guess I'll be going home."

"Are you going, Frank? Well, good night to you, boy, and may you have pleasant dreams."

"Thank you, Mrs. McCarthy, and the same to you. Good night to you both."

Mother and daughter ascend together in silence.

"Good night, ma"; the daughter retires, and again the mother is left alone.

The finale has come!

The fire receives the needed attention, Jimmie is once more covered with his blankets and the lamp extinguished. Now the mother's work is done.

So, first to rise and last to retire, the mother of the tenement goes to her well earned rest, from which she will waken to find the new-come day the twin of the one just passed.

That is the story of the mother of the tenement, and now, after reading it you may feel a slight disappointment. It is simply a chronicle of toil, the toil which you know so well, and not a legend romance of great and heroic deeds.

You, if you are a woman, may have had days exceeding the day of the mother the tenement in severe labor. Still, know that after a moment's reflection you will see the hardship of her lot.

There are many stanch-hearted women in the farmhouses of our country, who year in and year out, know naught of work from the lark's awakening to the firmament's greatest starry glory, and then at first glance might say, "Do I not work harder than that mother of the tenement?"

I know but little, too little, of the life of the farm and field, and it is not for me to decide that question. But I do know this one thing, that your reward, whether appreciated or not, is greater. Have you not God's green about you, and the smile of the hay, the madrigals of feathered choirs, and, above all, the heaven-perfumed dew-sprayed air of nature? Your life not spent in the radius of a few feet space, you have miles. And, if nothing else, you at least can always see before you the creation of the All One.

Have you ever had a peep into the yards of the tenements? It seems as if covered by a network—the lines of waiting day running from house to house. Follow these lines, and you will find women working and toiling, who have lost remembrance of flowers, to whom a life itself is as a mystery. You will see women, homely, yet loyal, bend their task with dull and duller growing hearts, because the beautiful of life is even a thing they have heard of.

While writing the preceding paragraph I have had come to my mind the picture of the "Man with the Hoe." Do as I can and draw the parallel. If he, the man coarser grain stands level with the ox there in nature's realm, how is it with a woman of a texture in which each fiber longs for love, affection and sympathy, who lives down here among my human folk, and never can inhale the moist smell of earth or faint odor of even the blades of grass?

Make it a personal question. You in the country, work, perhaps, for two hours longer than the woman the tenement, but would you exchange places with her? I hardly think so.

And even were I wrong, you will believe in my faith and respect for the women of our land, and, because of that, you will think less of me were I not loyal to the only mother I have known—the mother of the tenements.

THE FIRE-SWEPT MONUMENTAL CITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 159

WHERE THE HOPKINS BLOCK STOOD

LOOKING DOWN CHARLES STREET

RUINS IN BALTIMORE STREET

About this time the direction of the wind changed, and diverted the course of the fire toward the stream of water which separates the city proper from East Baltimore. If the flames could cross that barrier, they would reach the lumber yards, the shipping houses and the homes of the poor. The danger was well understood, but the firemen were worn out with their long fight, the fresh water was nearly exhausted, and some of the engines could not use salt water. The timely arrival of nine engines and fire companies from New York at this juncture, having made the run of one hundred and eighty miles on special trains, turned the tide of the battle. They took up a position on the water front and on the bridges, and the chief seized a tug boat, and, with a hose from an engine on the bridge, passed up and down the stream, throwing a flood of water right upon the heart of the burning section, along the water front. There the enemy was defeated, and after a few hours the fire was pronounced under control. The rest of the city was saved.

From New York and other cities, telegrams were sent to the Mayor of Baltimore, expressing sympathy, and assuring him that if assistance was needed, either of food or money, it would be promptly rendered. The Mayor, in reply, cordially thanked them for their offer, but said there was no immediate need, and he believed that none would arise that Baltimore herself could not supply. If, however, when the full extent of the disaster was known, such need should appear, he would avail himself of the offers so generously made.

AROUND THE HEARTH

By MARGARET E

SANGSTER

C. WARDE TRAVEL

The Wooden Wedding

FIVE years hurry by on wings, on the flying path of a dream. Comes the day of the wooden wedding, and the lovers who started out so joyously, speeded by the good wishes of friends and kinsfolk, accept the congratulations and gifts of their circle, at his gracious merrymaking, themselves visibly little altered. Any slight change in their looks and bearing has been for the better. The young matron is prettier, more dignified, has more poise and serenity than were she as a girl. Her husband is manlier. He means more to himself as a married man than he did as a bachelor, and he is worth infinitely more to the community. Probably the home has widened its doors, at the slight tap of baby fingers. One, two, perhaps three children in it, make the household rich, and fill the days with the joys of the mother with new interests, new joys and cares.

When the wooden wedding-day dawns, she and her husband have learned to know each other well. There may have been disillusion, but it has been succeeded by contentment. One enjoys the morning sunshine, though one misses the rose and petal of the dew-wet dawn. Just how to please, how to comfort, how to help (may I say it without offense), how to manage her husband, the wife has found out in these happy years; and, on his part, he has discovered, with a bit of whimsical amusement, that it is not always plain sailing with her; that he must reef and trim, though he loves her as wife far more than he did as sweetheart. The night when he heard the faint cry of his first-born, and thanked God from a full heart that the ordeal was over and his darling spared, was for him the distinct beginning of a new career—made him more devotedly his husband, that she was the mother of his child. People are always dwelling on the joy of motherhood. Fatherhood has its joys whereof the depth is too profound to be measured by any plummet but that of unselfish love. Strangely, babies do not always, welcome as they are, contribute to the every-day felicity of the everyday home.

For a while the mother is in seclusion. She must be in seclusion. She must spend her time regaining her strength, and in industry to the fragile life that floated into the harbor of her arms. The husband, lonely a bit in the first weeks, accepts the necessities of the situation; he may have a certain inward revolt of which he is ashamed, and which he sternly suppresses, and he is loveliness itself when allowed in his wife's domains, and servitude itself in the charmed kingdom of the child.

Later, when the baby becomes—so to speak—an old story, when the mother is released from the continual bondage that was inevitable in the earlier weeks of the small sovereign's rule, the husband grows a trifle weary of being a tolerated outsider.

Now is the wife's opportunity, which she does not always seize, to keep him as much her own as before. She makes a deadly mistake, if she can think and speak only of her baby. A domestic woman is admirable; but if she be limited to domesticity, she grows far from dull. I have known women who, in the role of mother, were adorable, but who were nothing else. They had no other role. They had lost the knack of dressing daintily, they gave up society, they forgot they had ever read a newspaper or looked into a book. Absorbed in the care of the growing family that claimed every thought, they ceased to grow mentally or spiritually, and while their souls were dwarfed and their intellectual development was arrested, their husbands went on and left them far in the rear. A baby needs continual oversight and unremitting devotion, and, above all, an atmosphere of quiet and of the tenderest love. But it should be in the back of the mother's mind, not on the front doorstep; in the background of her home, not on the centre of the stage. A husband has not ceased to have rights because he has become a father. A mother is not less a wife because she has a child as well as a husband to fill her heart.

The wooden wedding should find a youthful married pair allied in friendly social intercourse with other young people, who have a similar standing in the world, and similar outward circumstances. In a suburban village, whether naturally men on salaries and with moderate incomes trend, there are usually groups of homes that may fitly have much in common. Whatever brings these people together on designated evenings during a season, whether it be a reading-club, or an occasional outing and supper, it is in the line of wholesome living, and none should hold coldly aloof. Much social pleasure centres about the church in every small village and town. As iron

AFTER THE CHRISTENING

The sacred Name has been above him said,
The sacred drops bedewed his baby head,

Henceforth, dear Christ, this little one shall be Thy soldier and Thy servant, given to Thee.

sharpeneth iron, so in the friction of agreeable society, men and women keep young and bright, are saved from being stupid and frumpy, and find a sort of daily salvation. Though a tired man gird at putting on evening clothes and going to a party, it is to him a means of grace, beyond a pipe and slippers; not every evening, but on stated evenings. Though a woman hates to tuck her baby in and kiss it good-night, and leave it for an hour or two to the care of another, it is often the best thing she can do for it, for its present and its future. Babies grown to girlhood and boyhood delight in clever, beautiful, alert, keen-witted mothers. A mother must not break her alabaster box too soon, nor pour all her life's fragrance over the cribs where her wee ones sleep.

This is the lesson of the wooden wedding. Gifts made of wood, not metal; of living, not dead things. Gifts for use, for service; homely gifts for life's common days and common places. And two, who have been one long enough, to realize that life's purest joys are found only where two divide and share and keep a feast.

When a Boy Wants to Run Away

A MIDDLE-AGED man told me one day, that when he was a boy, he was possessed by a passionate desire to run away. His home was comfortable, he was well-clothed and well-fed, and was sent to a good school. "Mother," he said, "was an angel. No one could have been kinder and more devoted. Father was severe, but so were the fathers of the other boys. I was treated exactly like the rest of the lads in town, and though I had a whipping now and then, I soon forgot it, and I had a pretty good time. But when I was seventeen I ran away, and never went home till I was twenty-two. The folks thought I was dead. When I came back, they could hardly believe their eyes."

"Did you never send a letter or a word to let that good mother know where her wandering boy was, in those five long years?"

"Indeed no. It was cruel, I knew how cruel, when I saw how bent were her shoulders, how faded her eyes with weeping, and how white her hair had grown. It aged my father, too, aged him fearfully. I look at my little son," pointing to a youngster beating a drum outside the door, "and wonder how I could stand it, if he ever treated me as I treated my parents. At the time, I thought nothing about it. There was a cry in my soul that would not be satisfied. I was wild to see other places, to toss about on the ocean, to step on strange shores and to have adventures. Something inside me drove me on. In my day children never confided in their parents. I never dreamed of telling any one how I felt, and I don't much think any one would have listened if I had. Not even mother! She would have dismissed it as nonsense."

There are still parents who fail to win and hold the entire confidence of their children. The former strictness is very much relaxed, and discipline is very gentle in most of our households. Nevertheless, I have known a boy to run away and stay away for months, from a home in which he and his father had been comrades, and in which his mother had tucked him in bed every night from babyhood.

A boy sometimes does this, because his reading has not been guarded. Hairbreadth tales of pirates and robbers, of red-handed Dick and dare-devil Jack, have turned his brain. A touch of real hardship, of hunger, privation, cold and home-sickness may cure such a boy and send him home, repentant and humiliated, glad to stay there. But such reading has sent boys to Joliet and Sing-Sing and Dannemora. There are young men of good families serving long terms in prison, because, as boys, they read bad literature, ran away from home restraints, and committed foolish and wicked acts.

If a boy is bent on some senseless and silly expedition and his parents know it, they may cure him in one or two ways. A good plan is to further his scheme with enthusiasm. Put no obstacles in the way. Ship him before the mast, or get him entered on a school-ship, or let him join some company of travelers, who are going out on an exploring trip and may run into some perils. Another method is to equip him for a journey, not necessarily a very hard one, but one that will require some pluck and nerve, and send him on it, with, if possible, a legitimate errand and responsibility attached.

The roving drop in the blood may be a legacy from generations back of you and the boy. It is trying, but it is not the worst thing a boy can develop.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—MRS. A. I have never found it easy to make good gingerbread without sour cream. Try yours with it, instead of with sweet milk.

—MARY. It is very kind to accompany a friend to the front door, but very silly to stand chatting with her there. Finish your talk in the parlor.

—ELEANOR. Naphtha, gasoline, and all such volatile cleaning fluids must be used in the day-time only, and then, not near a stove. Have the garments cleansed in the open air and do not let them freeze.

—GRACE A. Your interesting letter is received. Please send me your girl friend's name. The man you mention is not worthy of confidence. He seems to be altogether to blame. A girl so young as you are should not have such complications.

WITH CHRIST AT SEA

Jesus Calms the Storm

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MARCH 6
MARK 4: 35-41

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT -- HE MAKETH THE STORM A CALM, SO THAT THE WAVES THEREOF ARE STILL. PSALM 107: 29.

EVEN the wind and the sea obey him. Why do they? Because he made them (John 1: 3). It is the evening hour. The afterglow of the sunset is reflected upon the sea of Galilee, and so smooth is it that it seems to be colored glass. Along this shore, toward Capernaum, a number of people are entering little boats. It is clearly their intention to follow a larger boat which has just started. And now the gloriously colored sea is dotted with white wings, the sails of the little ships. And why do they follow the larger ship? Because Jesus is crossing in it to the other side. And why do they follow him? Have they not been listening to his teaching all day? Oh, yes, they have heard the parable of the sower who went forth to sow; the parable of the enemy who sowed tares among the wheat; of the grain of mustard, the least of all seeds, that became a tree, in which the birds of the air came to lodge; of the leaven which the woman hid in three measures of meal; of the treasure hid in the field; of the pearl of great price, and of the net that was cast into the sea, and gathered fish of every kind. They had heard these things, and wanted to hear more, and so they followed on when they saw him embark, for they had heard him say to his twelve apostles: "Let us pass over unto the other side."

The way was rather long—from six to seven miles—and before they were half way over, darkness began to settle down. Jesus himself had lain down to sleep in the hinder part of the boat, his head upon the steersman's low seat for a pillow. A sudden tempest came on, and the waves rose like demons, which struck at the whole fleet. Fear took hold upon all save Jesus, who continued to sleep. "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" were the words with which his frightened apostles awoke him.

The storm had no terror for him, for he knew that he had power within himself to control it. But the eyes of all in the little ships were straining in the darkness to see if he were not going to do something for their deliverance. Jesus lifted his head from his hard pillow, and arose to his feet, and commanded: "Peace, be still." Both the wind and the sea knew their Master. The wind ceased, and the waves slunk down, and there was a great calm. The suddenness of their subsiding struck those in the little ships with astonishment, but they were not slow to recognize that it had been done through the power of Jesus. The apostles, who knew all of the circumstances, exclaimed: "What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obeyed him!" The storm of fear which the apostles had in their hearts was checked likewise by the rebuke of Jesus: "Why are ye fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" The morning found them all safely landed at Gergesa, eager to hear the wonderful words of Jesus, and to witness his works of healing.

Illustration and Application

They that go down to the sea in ships,
That do business in great waters;
These see the works of Jehovah, and his wonders in the deep (Ps. 107: 23).
Jesus, Saviour, pilot me,
Over life's tempestuous sea.

No thoughtful superintendent or teacher can fail to prepare the way for this lesson by reading Psalm 107: 23-31, the sea picture from which the Golden Text is taken; and the story should be framed at both ends, in such hymns as are quoted above and elsewhere. The natural theme is: The Voyage of Life. 1. Christlike sleeping. 2. Christlike awaking.

For centuries, men have spoken in prose and poetry of "The Voyage of Life." The analogies are so evident and so many that it is one of the oldest of similes, as it is one of the most impressive. At birth, life is launched by love on an unknown sea. The outfitting is the work of years. Parents, teachers and pastors prepare body, mind and heart for the voyage, of which the end of school is the "commencement." A ship, however well built, that goes forth upon the sea without a reliable pilot is destined to wreck, but not less so is the life that refuses to take the divine Pilot on board. He alone knows all dangerous hidden rocks, and the safe channel from youth out into manhood and beyond. For this world, as well as the other, they are safest who put the helm of life in his hand. That is what we call "consecration." Not alone religion, but good sense prompts us to take such a guide, since his way, not ours, is the safe, wise way. As once before, so now again, we commend to those starting out on the perilous voyage of life, the Breton boatman's prayer: "Keep me, my God, my boat is so small, and the ocean is so wide." Next to the necessity of a divine Pilot, to make life's voyage a success, is the necessity of keeping the water in its proper place, under the ship. As the ship must move in the water, so the Christian must live in the world; but if the ocean gets into the ship or the world fills the life, there is wreck and ruin. This is what it means to use the world as not abusing it, that is, not letting it abuse and corrupt us.

1. Christlike sleep and rest in the voyage of life, is one of the duties suggested by this lesson. One-third of life belongs to sleep; and yet, how little we have considered how and when and where a Christian should sleep. To sleep eight hours a day, is a duty as well as a privilege. To sleep more than that, when full-grown and in health, is hardly less than a sin. We may learn something from Christ on the benefit of sleeping out of doors, or at least where the out of doors oxygen can come abundantly to us. That Jesus was asleep amid the noise of the storm, assures us he had been hard at work the day before. That it is one of the compensations of hard work, that it brings such deep, sweet sleep, such as loungers and loafers seldom know. Christ's every day, whatever comes. When Christ was awaked in the story we are studying, he did not cease from rest though the spray was dashing in his face and the outcry of his affrighted disciples filled his ears. So by his life, even more than by his lips he taught that one may "rest" under the "yoke" and have peace in the very midst of battle (Matt. 11: 29).

II. Christlike awaking at the cry of others in fear and distress. This lesson also suggests to us our duty. Christ did not disregard his disciples' fears because they were so foolish. It seems to us amazing that men who had seen Christ calm the tempests in the hearts of demons and work so many other miracles that showed him the Master of nature's forces, could have feared anything while he was with them in the ship. But are our anxieties and worries any less foolish when we know he is as surely with us in the voyage of life? He hears our trembling prayers for comfort, despite their "little faith," and though they have even less of reason, and likewise we are bound to comfort others in their faithless fears and other needless sor-who think their light is so small that it hardly matters whether they shine or not, to see how necessary the little light is, to enable a sailor to make full use of the lighthouse."

Even a child may help in the voyage of life by being such a helpful "west wind." Charley was in the following story:

"See, mamma, I'm the wind," said Charley as he puffed out his cheeks and blew his hair about across the great Sea of Dishpan. "Well said busy mamma, 'if you are going to be wind, I hope you will be the clear, bright west wind, blowing away the clouds and fog. Never be a chilly, rainy, east wind.'" Charley liked the fancy, and now when the east wind is blowing out of doors, and people are d and a little cross, he tries to make sunshine indoors. He likes to hear mamma say "What bright weather my dear West Wind is making here in the house."

JESUS CALMS THE SEA AND SOUL

There was a great calm. The Spanish Bible translates this "a grand bonanza." Some poetic analogy, this word that signifies calm after storm, has come to be applied the miner's success after hard prospecting when a rich mine has at last been found which gives him ease after toil. And the calm after storm that Christ puts into the soul that cry to him is indeed a "grand bonanza," the supreme discovery, the most abiding wealth. A mind at peace, ready to live, die, what have the mines to compare to that? And if a man's own soul has not such a "bonanza" within, what comfort can any gold or silver "bonanza" bring to him? If his "bonanza" is within, no outward storm can break that inward calm.

Christ does not in these days calm the storms at sea by miracles, but he gives divine courage to meet them calmly, and to help others in the storm, as in these winter days we are often reminded by the stories of the brave life-savers of the coasts. Through mighty waves these heroes row at great peril and almost miraculously rescue imperiled crews. If the one-third of our population who are church members, were all life savers as they should all be, each would only need to save two others to rescue all our unsaved ones from the danger of soul shipwreck in both worlds. Have you saved your two?

A Missionary Illustration

Not to single souls alone, but to whole tribes, whose hearts were tossed with superstitious fears and oppressed with cruel customs, Christ has come to bring his wonder peace. The miracle Christ has wrought our day in Fiji, is greater than the stilling of the tempest on Galilee.

More than sixty years ago, there set forth from London a little band of missionaries. Many of their friends prophesied that they would never return, for their destination was the Fiji Islands. Not one of the Fijians had heard the name of Jesus. They were naked heathens and cannibals of the most degraded kind. In the midst of these poor benighted savages, there landed this little company of God's servants. "Sight sees giants; faith sees God." Mark the results. Some ten years ago a Fiji chief was talking to an Englishman, who, I grieve to say, scoffed at the Gospel, saying he didn't believe in it. After listening to his arguments, the native said: "You come from the land of blessedness and light, but you speak like an idiot, sir. We know what the religion of Jesus has done for us, and it has done something for you, too. 'What do you mean?' asked the Englishman. 'I will explain where you would have been now, if we had not been Christians. I should say: 'Take out this white man here; kill him and cook him. And, when he is nicely done, bring him in.' Look here," pointing to open mouth and throat, "you would be going down there fast. If we did not see the Lord Jesus, I should be eating you now!"

Into that region of darkness and death, God indeed "commanded the light to shine." Not every Sunday, in 1,300 villages in Fiji, the Bible is read and explained. Over 185,000 copies of God's Word have been eagerly bought by those one-time cannibals. A many of those converted Fijians have gone forth to New Guinea, New Britain and island two thousand miles from their homes, to tell of the Saviour who has given them and the people such "light, gladness and joy."

The end of the voyage we shall reach safety if our life is hid with Christ in God.

Into the harbor of heaven now we glide,
We're home at last,
Softly we drift on the bright silver tide,
We're home at last.
Glory to God, all our days are o'er,
We stand secure on the glorified shore;
Glory to God, we will shout evermore,
We're home at last, home at last.

"HE SAID UNTO THE SEA, 'PEACE, BE STILL'"

sleep, speaks also of trust in God. He knew well how suddenly a storm leaps like a panther out of the gorges at the north of the Lake of Galilee, but he laid him down to sleep in the little sail-boat without a fear. A sailor, who had the same habit of trust, was calm amid a perilous storm at sea, and said to those who wondered that his soul was not tossed with tempest, like others about him: "If we should be wrecked, I should only sink into the hollow of my Father's hand, for he holds all of the waters there."

My bark is wafted on the strand
By breath divine;
And on the helm there rests a hand
Other than mine.
One who was known in storms to sail,
I have on board;
Above the roaring of the gale
I hear my Lord.
He holds me when the billows smite;
I shall not fall.
If sharp, 'tis short; if long, 'tis light—
He tempers all.
Safe to the land! safe to the land!
The end is this;
And then with him go hand in hand
Far into bliss. DEAN ALFORD.

While one should sleep but eight hours a day, he should rest in God twenty-four hours rows. Very much of a true life's awaking efforts is given to helping men out of needless trouble—the doubts they should have cast aside, the poverty or sickness or failure they have brought on themselves. If Christ had helped only those whose troubles were not mostly their own fault, we ourselves should have been passed by.

We can not help others out of trouble as Jesus did, by a miracle, but we can all help in some way. Near a big lighthouse a visitor saw a small black iron pillar.

"It is a light bearer too," said Mr. Hanson, the lighthouse keeper, "and in that iron basket that you see at the top, a fire is kept burning when the fishing boats are expected home." "But surely," said Mr. May, the visitor, "it is not necessary to have a small, insignificant light like that, when you have the powerful lights in the lighthouse so near." "It may seem strange to you," said Mr. Hanson, "but that little light not only throws light over the dark waters, but it also helps to make even the lighthouse itself more useful. When the fishermen are coming in to shore, they look out for the little light, and when it is in a line with the bright light of the lighthouse, they know they are steering straight for home, and will soon reach it in safety. I have often thought it might encourage young Christians

The Man who was Down and Out

A BOWERY MISSION AUTOBIOGRAPHY

NO, I have not the excuse so many men give for having wasted their years. I am not a product of the Bowery or its environs. I was born west of the Mississippi. I came of good stock, and was reared in a country town noted for its high moral tone and educational advantages.

At twenty, I began to feel that I had outgrown my environment, that the town was "pokey," and that if I stayed there much longer, I should be "pokey" also, so I bade home, mother and the old town good-bye, and started for Chicago.

There was rather more of the city than I had imagined, but I managed to conceal my surprise. I rented a room, bought a restaurant meal-ticket, and started on a hunt for employment, which I was fortunate in finding at the first place to which I applied. I was so pleased at the prospect that I did not stop to ask how much I was to receive for my work; but I hoped it would be enough to pay my living expenses. I can say, at this late day, that I was clever at the business, and I made a hit, resulting in my earning more money in a week than I had ever before received in a month. I wrote a jubilant and rather patronizing letter home to my mother, and enclosed so much of my week's pay that she wrote me, anxiously inquiring if I was sure that all this money had "come right," fearing some mistake.

I began to feel that I was of importance in the world. I was addressed as "Mr." at the office (I was now in charge of a department). My judgment was invited in certain lines of the business; not only asked, but acted upon. Of course my head swelled with pride and vanity, and now was the beginning of the end!

I had always attended church; but I now gave it up, and spent my Sundays in pleasuring. At first I was miserable, as I had been when I drank my first glass of wine. I felt guilty, and I didn't enjoy it. Ah! the beginning of the end, but I didn't know it. I wrote mother, and told her the text of the sermon I did not hear, and gave a brief summary of the sermon and service, copied from a newspaper. It was a lie of course—a mean, sneaking lie—but I argued that I did not want to worry her; she was a dear sweet mother, but a bit old-fashioned and a little narrow in some things. I did not wonder at this, living as she did in that little town.

And then I thought how much she was to be congratulated upon having such a smart son; I was getting on, and doing her and the old town credit. Oh yes! I was getting on, much faster than I realized; getting on in the path which leads to misery and degradation; but I did not know it, or would not acknowledge it.

I now began to live more in keeping with my improved circumstances, and it took a good deal of money to supply my needs. I had taken to cocktails and billiards, but I did not let my conviviality interfere with my business.

Two years had passed since I left home, and how all was changed. I was wearing clothes made by the best tailor in Chicago, and as I was given a month's vacation, I concluded to spend it at home, with mother. And what a proud and happy mother she was! I was proud, too; but my pride was as a grain of mustard-seed to a mountain, compared with hers.

As I walked to church with her, she stepped as sprightly as a girl, in spite of her sixty years. And after the service I went to the communion table.

Wicked? Yes; wicked, unspeakably so. I knew I was totally unworthy, but my mother's clear, brown eyes were upon me. She loved and trusted me so; and I felt I must, though bread choke and wine strangle.

It was five years after I had taken my first drink, before I became aroused to the fact that the habit had fastened itself upon me. Then began the losing fight, which so many men have made against rum.

For ten long years I struggled, resolved; did all in my power—and failed. I lost the fight so many other men are losing to-day; men on the road from "respectable drunkenness" to where they join the wretched throng, which, hopeless and utterly miserable, drags out its worthless existence. Well might my loved ones have said of me.

Dead while he liveth! God pity us all. Who thus o'er the living must spread the pall, And watch the slow ravages of sin's deep blight, But never can bury our dead out of sight.

At last I have reached the Bowery, where so many other derelicts are drifting about. I was there, but not yet entirely hopeless. I thought I could "brace up." I was always going to "do better to-morrow"; but that to-morrow never came.

I was going down, down; surely "down and out," but I did not realize it. I became less careful of my appearance and dress, and I had ceased to care who saw me going into the pawn-shop.

Pride, ambition and hope had departed. I was no better than the crowd; still I made my associates of men who had once been gentlemen. I was not at home on the Bowery, any more than thousands of other homeless, penniless and helpless men who are now wandering up and down that sad thoroughfare of lost hopes.

One morning, I awoke and found myself in the upper berth of a "double-decker" in a miserable ten-cent Bowery lodging-house. Beneath me, in the lower berth, lay a savage dog. I was fearfully sick, and I knew if my head should drop down, that awful brute would surely rend it with his savage fangs.

I tried to get up—idle thought! I could not lift my head from the miserable pad under it. I thought that the plastering was about to fall, and the dreadful dog was watching now from the floor. The bed-maker came in and helped me up, and I staggered out. I don't know how the day passed. One of the gang on the street told me of an opening of a saloon, and we started to find it. That vicious dog was sneaking at my heels all the way, though no one could see him but me!

We came to a place where there was light and music, I know now that it was the Bowery Mission; but I was too sick then to know or care. We went in; a cold sweat of agony, known only to a drunkard bordering on delirium, covered me. I had not been in a place of worship for years. I thought I was in a church. They were singing, I knew not what; I was suffocating; I tried to get out, and rushed away with the melody of that song of salvation ringing in my ears and pleading with my heart.

The next I remember, I was in Bellevue, in a cot, and that red-eyed remorseless dog was under it, ready to spring at my throat at the first chance. A man next me was tied down. Oh, if they should tie me down, that would be the dog's chance—I must not sleep—I must not cry out, and I did not. I felt that I was going to die, and I was glad of it. I had played the game of life and lost. I was glad to quit.

But God had his workers there, and what they saw, lying on that cot, was not a miserable rum-soaked wretch, but a soul for whom Jesus died.

I was told of a better life—God knows I had almost forgotten it, so far away had I strayed. I found peace on that hospital cot—the peace that passeth understanding.

When I left the hospital I had not a cent, and my clothes a second-hand man would not have bought at any price. I had not a friend on earth. I did not deserve any. And in all that great city there was no one who cared whether I lived or died. I was far from well, but with the little intellect which alcohol had left me, I was looking to God.

I went to the Bowery Mission, where, in my degradation and misery, I had heard that song. In testimony meeting I told, as I had promised God I would, the story of my redemption. When the meeting was over, the leader took me by the arm, as I was on my way out, and asked:

"What can we do for you?"
"Pray for me," I replied, "I'll do the rest." But they knew best, and in Memorial House I found the environment, the help I so much needed.

For me God has raised up friends. I have found them in my extremity, and as I write these words to-day, I am no longer the hopeless outcast of a few months ago. I thank God for a regenerated spirit, strengthened body and clear mind. I thank him for the grace that saved a sinner like me, and that still keeps me.

What took me to the Bowery?
Rum? No! no! Sin wrecked my life, and made many years of it worse than a blank. Rum was a result; sin was the cause.

So it is with many men who become drunkards; they say "It's the drink that does it." I once thought so too. It is sin, sin, sin! If a young man starts out with the grace of God in his heart, he need not fear the drink evil, or any other evil. If he does not have that grace, he is in danger from them all. I am as sure of this as I am of salvation, that, had I begun by giving God my heart, and by yielding reasonable service, instead of wasting my years, I might have been of use in the world, instead of a parasite. It is useless to dwell on the past. I have much to do to right many wrongs I have done; but, between God and me all is clear. The curtain has fallen on that part of my life. I have lifted it a little way with reluctant hand, in the hope that it may warn some other boy. It has been a heart-breaking task, and I pray God he will not require me to repeat it. I have lived over the scenes that I have here touched so lightly, with an agony of remorse that I have not felt since my conversion.

If the words I have penned will induce one boy to think of results in the beginning, instead of at the end, as I must think of them, I will have an eternity in which to thank God for it.

HEALTH is the Most Important

The manufacturers of Royal Baking Powder have had 40 years of scientific experience.

Every method of bread-and-cake raising has been exhaustively studied in this country and abroad.

The result is a perfect product in Royal Baking Powder. There is no substitute for it. The purity and efficiency of Royal Baking Powder have been commended by the highest authorities of the world.

These facts mean two important things to all housekeepers:

First: that Royal Baking Powder is healthful and makes wholesome food.

Second: that Royal Baking Powder makes food good to taste.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
ABSOLUTELY PURE

Ivers & Pond PIANOS.

Every part of the Ivers & Pond Piano, even the minutest detail, is as nearly perfect as intelligent effort, ingenuity and long experience can make it. The case designs are the daintiest pieces of piano architecture imaginable, and the finish is superlatively fine. But the pure, rich tone of surpassing sweetness and volume is the chief attraction of these superior instruments, and individualizes them from all other makes. They stand all climates.

HOW TO BUY.

If we have no dealer near you we will quote factory prices, sell on easy payments, ship pianos for trial in your own home, to be returned at our expense for railroad freights both ways if unsatisfactory, and make it just as easy for you to buy as if you lived in Boston. We take old pianos in exchange. Catalogue with pictures of our latest styles and a personal letter with valuable information mailed promptly if you will write us.

Ivers & Pond Piano Company,
125 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

Individual Communion Outfits. Send for FREE catalogue and list of users. SANITARY COMMUNION OF LIT CO. Box 7, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Globe-Wernicke Elastic Bookcase

A good library is collected piecemeal book here, another there, as our tastes dictate. It's a growing proposition. So should the bookcase be; it should grow, unit by unit, as the books increase, like the "Elastic" Bookcase. The original, handsomest, and only perfect sectional bookcase made. Base finished with or without drawers. Carried in stock by dealers in principal cities, or direct from factory, freight paid. Send for Catalog 101-A.

The Globe-Wernicke Co.
CINCINNATI
CHICAGO.

Canadian Factory Stratford, Ont.

"But the genius of the Oneida Community was a very simple one and might be described in a single word: Agreement."—From "Sketch of the Oneida Community."

Sent free on request. Address MANAGER, Oneida Community, Oneida, N. Y.

Oneida Community Silver

has been used on our Community Table for more than five and twenty years.

Main "Triple-plus" only (more than triple). Guaranteed for twenty-five years.

Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.50

Beautiful and at the same time, patterns woven, the rug and through, can be worn on either side. All colors, and more. See extra color than more costly carpets. Sent by express post paid. Your money back if you want it.

See catalog showing rugs in actual colors sent free. L. A. IMPORTING CO., 6874 Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia.

Keep the whole house warm

Colds and their resultant ills are oftenest caused by the unevenly distributed heat of old fashioned warming methods.

Water or Steam perfectly distribute the heat—every room alike—day and night—temperature always under control.

AMERICAN & IDEAL RADIATORS BOILERS

ensure the highest degree of comfort and home healthfulness. They pay for themselves in fuel and labor saving, in cleanliness, absence from repairs—while they also protect the family health.

They require less care-taking than does a parlor stove—because automatically operated. Can be erected in mid-winter without disturbing old heating methods until ready to start fire in the new. Advise us size and kind of building you wish to heat and receive valuable information and booklet free.

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY

Dept. 29

CHICAGO

Extra Fine Imported

56-piece China Tea Set

FREE

with an order for 25 lbs. of New Crop, 60c., 70c., or 80c. Tea, or 25 lbs. Great American Baking Powder, 45c. a lb., or an assorted order Teas and Baking Powder, or 60 lbs. Bona Fide Coffee, 33c. a lb., or 50-2 oz. Bottles of pure Extracts—Vanilla, Lemon, etc., or 25-lb. cans of Spice—any kind—absolutely pure, 50c. a can.

Address Mr. P. H., care of
The Great American Tea Co.
Box 289
31-33 Vesey Street, New York

Learn to Knit

YOU can do it easily with the Columbia Book of Yarns, which shows how to make any garment, and also shows (with pictures) the simplest stitches.

15 CENTS at your dealer's, or send to us. Worth a dollar, but 15 cents because we want to advertise COLUMBIA YARNS, which are the finest, and also the cheapest considering cost of garment yarns in the world.

Mrs. Columbia Yarns, Philadelphia

ENTERTAINMENTS

CHURCH SCHOOL

MAGIC LANTERNS, STEREOPTICONS for illustrating sermons, giving entertainments, illustrating hymns. Finest collection of slides. Large catalogue FREE. MFG. OPTICIAN, McALLISTER 48 Nassau St. New York.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

SPECIAL NOTICE

All letters for the "Mail-Bag" must contain the name and address of the writer, not for publication, but so that an answer may be sent by mail if necessary.

W. H. P., Harrington, Me. Can a consistent Christian write romances for financial gain?

Romance is often truth in muffin. Some of the finest books the world has ever known have been romances, full of Christian spirit and inspiring to the reader. Imagination is a divine gift. To exclude it would be to deny to mankind some of the highest and purest pleasures. Put to a good use it ennobles; to a bad one, it degrades.

W. J. C., Philadelphia, Pa. What are in the briefest form the chief differences between Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists and Methodists?

There are differences in church government. The Episcopal Church is under the control of Bishops; the Presbyterian has the Presbytery, the Synod and General Assembly, the decisions of which govern the church; at any time, subject to the discharge of any liability incurred by him as such member, prior to his resignation. 2. A "charter member," is one who signs his name as such in the certificate of incorporation. Attendance at meetings is immaterial.

Member, Scrotoville, O. An irreligious, card-playing, drinking, dancing and frivolous choir is a menace to the spiritual life of a church. We do not know the circumstances of the case, but even if they are as you state, they are subject to regulation by the board of officers, on the matter being properly presented.

S. O. F., Carbondale, Tenn. Does the language in Gen. 4: 23, imply that Lamech had actually committed murder?

It is impossible to determine whether Lamech was describing an actual occurrence, or merely stating what he would do in a certain contingency. In the Septuagint, Syriac and Vulgate versions of Genesis, it would appear from this passage that Lamech had avenged himself on some young descendant of Cain, who had injured him. Many commentators,

MR. CARSON AND HIS COBDEN STREET BAPTIST MISSION SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS

WE constantly receive many pleasant letters from all parts of the country, expressing the satisfaction and delight of the writers on receiving their CHRISTIAN HERALD premiums. The letter printed below, from a subscriber in Pittsburgh, Pa., is one of special interest, as the writer has been so fortunate as to give genuine pleasure to many others by his premium selections. He writes:

"Dear Dr. Klopsch.—In regard to the books, The Art of Home Making, which I received from you. I am very well pleased with them, as I could not have found a more suitable present, had I looked in all the book stores in Pittsburgh. You will, no doubt, recollect my sending for those books to be used as a Christmas gift for my Sunday School class, and presenting one to each of them, of which they speak very highly, and recommend them as a useful book. I send a picture of our Cobden St. Baptist Mission, and also of some of my scholars—all who could be present at that time. They are standing, holding the book in their hands. My own picture, as their Sunday School teacher, is included. This was taken on Christmas morning.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

WM. CARSON."

the Methodist has Bishops, but is more directly under the control of the General Conference, and the churches have only a limited freedom in the selection of their ministers. The Baptists and Congregationalists are under no control from a central body. Each church is a little republic governing itself. There are also differences of creed and practice. The Episcopalian Church uses a liturgy, and its creed is comprised in thirty-nine articles. The Presbyterian Church is Calvinistic, emphasizing the doctrines of election, Divine sovereignty, etc., while the Methodist Church is Arminian, emphasizing the doctrine of Free Will. The distinguishing characteristic of the Baptist Church is that of Baptism by immersion, and that not of infants, but of believers on profession of faith. In doctrine, Baptists practically agree with Presbyterians.

Mrs. I. H. B., Goleta, Calif. 1. Can a charter member of a club or other organization withdraw? 2. Can a person who sends in his name when a society is being organized, be considered a charter member, if he is not present for several meetings after the society is organized?

The foregoing has been submitted to Lawyer G. H. Crawford, of New York, who replies as follows: 1. A "charter member" of a club or other similar organization, may resign however, regard Lamech's speech as a boast or menace, that he would inflict upon an enemy a severer punishment than God imposed upon Cain. Still another interpretation is based upon the legend that Lamech slew Cain and Tubal-Cain. He shot Cain with an arrow, accidentally mistaking him in the thicket for a wild beast, and he then slew his son for being privy to the deed. His wives refused to associate with him, and he excuses himself by saying that he slew the youth, avenging Cain sevenfold, and avenging his own wrong much more, as the slain was his own flesh and blood. Still another explanation is that Lamech was the introducer of human sacrifices for sins.

Referring to a recent question in THE MAIL-BAG from a reader in Scenery Hill, Pa., concerning the delivery of milk on Sunday, M. H. S., Montclair, N. J., writes:

There is very little milk delivered in this town on Sunday. About twenty years ago a man in the

CONTINUED ON PAGE 173

No Substitute

not even the best raw cream, equals Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream for tea, coffee, chocolate, cereals and general household cooking. It is the result of forty-five years experience in the growing, buying, handling and preserving of milk by Borden's Condensed Milk Co.

Mail Orders Exclusively. No Branches or Agents.

Spring Suits

MADE TO ORDER $8 to $50

OUR new Spring Catalogue mailed free to any address in the United States, illustrates and describes 120 of the latest creations in ladies' tailor-made suits, traveling gowns, walking and dress skirts; in fact, costumes and skirts for every occasion, and for every figure, all of which have been designed exclusively for our customers.

We carry in stock over 400 handsome Spring fabrics, imported for this season's wear, including beautiful mixture effects never before shown, twine cloths, and many seasonable novelties. We have a splendid line of etamines, voiles, mohairs, brilliantines, and other light-weight fabrics, particularly adapted for our Southern patrons, as well as slightly heavier materials for those residing in cooler climates. We do not carry Wash Goods.

Four money refunded if we fail to satisfy.

Our Catalogue illustrates:

Tailored Suits	$8 to $50
Handsome Skirts	$4 to $20
Etamine Costumes	$10 to $40
Mohair and Brilliantine Suits	$8 to $40
Mohair Skirts	$4 to $15
Spring Jackets	$7 to $30

Walking Suits and Skirts, Rainy-Day Suits, Evening Dresses, Rain Coats, etc.

We prepay Express Charges to any part of the United States.

We Keep Nothing Ready Made, but Make Every Garment TO ORDER

We Guarantee to fit and please you. If we do not, return the garment promptly: we will refund your money. In requesting samples, mention about the order you desire and we will send a full line of catalogues No. 50.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY, 119 and 121 West 23d St., New York

Established 15 years.

BECOME A NURSE

NO occupation open to women can compare with that of the trained nurse. It is elegant, enjoyable work—graduates command $15 to $30 a week. We teach the profession by mail. An interesting booklet which clearly defines the scope of our courses and the expense of our work will be sent to interested readers.

Address
CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING,
241 Main Street, Jamestown, N.Y.

FARNHAM'S

ALWAYS CUTS BIAS OR STRAIGHT FOLDS ACCURATELY

PERFECT ABSOLUTELY GUARANTEED

Shears sent on 5 days FREE trial. If they please you, otherwise return them. Address REED MFG. CO., 109 Randolph, Pittsburgh, Pa.

100 VISITING CARDS

Post paid

Correct styles and sizes. Order filled day received. "Card Style" Free! Also business, professional and internal cards. We have cuts of emblems for all. E. J. SCHUSTER PTG. & ENG. CO., Dept. 56, St. Louis.

Our Mail-Bag

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 172

business here decided he would not deliver milk Sunday, and from that time until now he has not done it. He was then delivering sixty quarts a day and now he is delivering four thousand. The milk for Sunday use is delivered in the afternoon and evening of Saturday. In this town all milk for the day's use is delivered between 4 and 8 A.M., and on Saturday afternoon the delivery of the morning milk begins at 4 P.M., and the afternoon milk is delivered after 8 o'clock. In the vicinity all milk is kept at a low temperature, so that it is in no danger of changing. The Jordan Company make a double delivery on Saturday morning, making only one delivery a day. Your correspondent can easily plan out a way to avoid Sunday deliveries if he handles his milk accordingly.

C. H. L., East Middlebury, Vt. To what extent do the unclean spirits, mentioned Mark 1: 24, know Christ? Did they know of his love as well as of his power?

Is possible that they might have known of it. There are many human beings who know of both, yet never avail themselves of the knowledge. James says that the devils believe (James 2: 19). The very consciousness of the goodness of Jesus, of his holiness, gentleness, and purity, would arouse hatred in a bad nature. There have been instances of good women being hated with passionate intensity by men, who have lost some victim, through those good women's efforts. Their virtue and beauty of character is fully recognized, but the bad men, like the unclean spirits mentioned in the Gospel, dislike them all the more for being so unlike themselves.

Scriber and A. H. M., Luton, Ia. Send would copies to the nearest mission, hospital, or prison. They will be gladly received.

F. S. San Francisco. Is the Vatican of Rome really a building, the Pope's residence, or is it territory on the outskirts? How much ground does it cover? Is it absolutely under the temporal authority of the Pope?

The Vatican is the Papal palace in Rome, located from its situation on the Mons Vaticanus, at the extreme northwestern part of the city. It is an immense pile of buildings, constructed at different periods, with extensive gardens and courts, and many palaces. There are within the Vatican a number of famous chapels, libraries and museums. With these grounds the authority of the Papal government is acknowledged. In speaking or writing of the Papal government, it is customary to refer to it as "The Vatican."

V. H., Western Neb. 1. What is meant by making in unknown tongues (I. Cor. 14: 5)? Have the preachers who declare themselves lovers of Joseph Smith, but repudiate Mormonism as practiced in Utah, any right to say that they are the only true church and that all others will be lost?

2. Was a kind of hysterical outbreak which has had its parallel in the Irvingites of modern times. You can see by Paul's remarks, that while he would not directly condemn it, he saw very little utility in it. If there was some one who could interpret what Paul said, it might be useful, but otherwise not. He had far rather that they prophesied, than preached. 2. They have no such right. Mormonism is true in Mormonism is not new, but is the common property of all the churches of the world; what is new in Mormonism is not true. It is amazing that such silly nonsense as Joseph Smith talked, should find believers among people of ordinary sense and education. The whole movement would probably have died out before this, if it had not provided a way for the gratification of the passions of men who had become tired of their wives and wanted to marry younger women.

E. L., Bethlehem, Pa. 1. Is a child born to American parents, in any foreign land, a natural-born American? 2. Is there any difference, to its citizenship, where a child is born of American parents at the residence of the American Consul, or on the ocean, outside the three-mile limit? 3. If such persons are natural-born Americans, are they eligible to the office of President? 4. What is the proper definition of the following: (a) Native-born American citizen? (b) Natural-born American citizen?

2. The child born of American parents temporarily sojourning in a foreign country, is an American citizen. This would not be, necessarily, the child born abroad of a U. S. Minister or Consul. Birth of the child in the Consular or Ambassadorial residence would not make the case any stronger. It would be the same in the case of a child born on the ocean. 3. Opinions differ as to whether a child born abroad of American parents temporarily sojourning there, is eligible to the office of President. The question has not arisen. The U. S. Courts would probably hold him to be a "natural-born citizen." The object of the constitutional provision was to prevent a "foreigner" from becoming President, and the case supposed is not the case of a "foreigner." Mr. Chase's child, born in London while he is Ambassador to England, could not be considered as foreign-born. 4. Citizens are either "born" in the United States or "naturalized" there. By judicial construction, the phrase "born" citizens, has been declared to include cases above referred to, except the case of a President, which has never arisen. The Constitution speaks of "born" citizens (fourteenth Amendment), and (in case of President), "natural-born" citizens. I should consider "native-born" and "natural-born" as equivalent phrases, describing persons born in the United States, or born abroad of parents temporarily sojourning there. What a man receives at his birth is received from his parents, and not from the spot of earth where first he happens to see the light. If his parents are Americans, he is "American born," "native-born" and "natural-born," so far as he can be influenced by pre-natal causes, no matter where his birth takes place.

G. H. CRAWFORD.

L. A. V., Toledo, O. What was the "thorn in the flesh" mentioned by Paul in II. Cor. 12: 7-9?

The question cannot be answered positively, because Paul, who alone could have told us, does not describe it more fully than in the passage you mention. Various conjectures have been made. The most probable is that it was a disease of the eyes, which caused him serious inconvenience in his studies and in his journeys. His incidental reference in Gal. 4: 15 to the devotion of the people of that church, who, he said, would, if it had been possible, have plucked out their own eyes and given them to him, seems to imply that his own eyes were defective. Another remark (Gal. 6: 11) about his writing the epistle with his own hand, as if that was an unusual thing with him, may be taken as agreeing with this suggestion. And this is more emphatic in the Revised Version, which shows that he spoke in the same passage of the size of the letters, which would be natural if he was almost blind. On the whole, the supposition that the "thorn" was defective eyesight, is the one most likely to be correct.

Mrs. E. E., Rankin, Ill. Why did Marian Evans style herself "George Eliot"?

Mrs. J. W. Cross (nee Marian Evans) used "George Eliot" as a pen-name, for the reason that she believed men commanded more consideration in literature than women, in the days in which she wrote. Besides, her cast of thought and literary form were masculine rather than feminine, and the signature was therefore most suitable.

Miscellaneous Questions

Subscriber, Brownsville, Pa. The question of Sunday labor was discussed in THE MAIL-BAG recently.

Forest P., Marietta, J. T. Certainly not, if you deal honestly and justly.

M. M. E., Chicago, Ill. This page is not intended for controversy, but to give information and advice. The answer already given, states our view of the subject. You are entitled to reject it, if in your opinion it is not sound; but to adequately defend it, would require more space than we can afford to devote to it.

F. E. F., Seaboard, N. C. We have no means of knowing. Address Medical Record, New York City.

H. McM., Detroit, Mich. Of course, there are two sides to every question. Very few differences arise between nations in which all the good is on one side exclusively. This view applies equally to the Boer war, the Filipino war, and the Panama trouble. War, under any condition, is barbarism, no matter what nation engages in it, and in the present condition of the world, nations that go to war are usually prepared, without much scruple, to do things that are wrong. We have always tried to set forth fairly both sides in such matters, and to give the facts as they arise.

S. R. A., Colfax, Wash. Doubtless there have been, and there are to-day, many good Christian people in the theatrical profession. It is, however, one that is full of peculiar temptations.

H. M. R., Woodmere, Mich. Horse-racing, turf gambling and theatre-going are among the things which Christians should avoid, both for the effect upon their own natures and the influence of their acts upon others.

"Conversations With Christ"

A FEW COPIES LEFT

Three weeks ago, we announced that we had on hand a limited number of copies of Bishop Newman's great book, Conversations with Christ, which we would sell at the low price of Fifty Cents Each, postage prepaid. The book is neatly bound in cloth, contains 268 pages, and was formerly sold at one dollar, with postage extra. We have still a few copies left, but you must act quickly to secure one. Send Fifty Cents To-day to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Book Department, Bible House, New York.

WING PIANO

Have You a Good Piano?

If not, and you see or hear one, you will always want a first-class Piano, no matter what instrument you may have. Read this carefully, for

HERE'S AN OPPORTUNITY to have one—a standard piano for thirty-six years—sent to your home at no expense to you. Forty-five of the latest styles to select from.

FREE ON TRIAL

We Pay the Freight

You do not pay one cent. There is absolutely no expense to you. We will send any Wing Piano to any part of the United States on trial. We pay the freight in advance, not asking you for one cent.

KEEP IT twenty days. If you do not want to buy it, or exchange it for your old one, we take it back entirely at our own expense. We make this offer, for if you want a piano, and will give it a fair trial, you will surely buy a Wing Piano, and we will make very easy terms for you to pay for it. SMALL, EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS. In thirty-six years over 36,000 pianos sold without local dealer's profit and salesman's expenses.

Direct From the Factory

Saving You $150 to $250

We make the Wing Piano and sell it ourselves. It goes direct from our factory to your home. We do not employ any agents or salesmen, and do not sell through dealers or retail stores. When you buy the Wing Piano you pay the actual cost of making it and our one small wholesale profit. This profit is small because we sell thousands of pianos yearly. Most retail stores sell no more than twelve to twenty pianos yearly, and must charge from $100 to $200 profit on each. Think for yourself; they cannot help it.

Instrumental Attachment, if you wish it, at no extra expense, imitates perfectly the tones of the mandolin, guitar, harp, zither and banjo. Music written for these instruments with and without piano accompaniment can be played just as perfectly by a single player on the piano as though rendered by an orchestra. The original instrumental attachment has been patented by us, and it cannot be had in any other piano. Beware of imitations.

Prominent Purchasers United States Governor Sayres, of Texas, Governor Longino of Mississippi, Governor Bliss of Michigan, United States Senator Cameron, General W. R. Miles, Supreme Court Justice Dare, are among those who endorse the Wing Piano.

Prof. Dana of Dana's Musical Institute, Prof. Nunnally of Southern Female College, Prof. Peterson of Humboldt College, are among those who have used the Wing Piano, in addition to prominent musicians, music teachers and orchestra leaders throughout the United States.

A Book You Need—Sent FREE

If you intend to buy a piano. A book—not a catalogue—that gives you all the information possessed by experts. It makes the selection of a piano easy. If read carefully, it will make you a judge of tone, action, workmanship and finish; will tell you how to know good from bad. It describes the materials used; gives pictures of all the different parts, and tells how they should be made and put together. It is the only book of its kind ever published. It contains 116 pages, and is named "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos." We send it free to anyone wishing to buy a piano. Write for it.

Wing Organs

are made with the same care and sold under the same guarantee as Wing Pianos. Sent on trial to any part of the United States, freight paid in advance by us, without any advance payment or deposit being made. Sold on easy monthly payments. Separate Organ catalogue sent on request.

WING & SON, 352-364 W. 13th St., New York City 1868—THIRTY-SIXTH YEAR—1904

"All's Well"
cries out the Watchman.

Dueber-Hampden
Watches

They are complete and
"Accurate-to-the-Second"

There can be no doubt in the mind of the owner of a Dueber-Hampden Watch. The movement and the case are both made and guaranteed by the largest factory in the world making a complete high-grade watch.

Dueber
Solid Gold Cases are stamped with an honest
mark.

Send for free book, "Light from the Watchman," It will give you important information, and tell you what to ask your dealer for.

DUEBER-HAMPDEN WATCH WORKS,
124 South Street, Canton, O.

The Wm. McKinley is the greatest watch in the world for Men—thin model, 16 size, lever set. "Accurate-to-the-Second"

Small Investments
That PAY . . . 5%

HOW the SMALL investor, distant from growing cities, can put his money into THE BEST SUBURBAN REAL ESTATE SECURITIES on equal terms with large operators, is a question perfectly solved by our "Certificate Plan" for handling mail accounts. Write for strong testimonials and complete information.

Safe, profitable, withdrawable investments, paying 5 per cent. per annum for every day invested. Supervised by New York Banking Dept.

Assets, $1,750,000
Surplus and Profits, . . . 175,000

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO.
1131 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

ZOBO

The Musical Wonder
Solid metal (brass finish)
Sample sent prepaid for 25c.

You Can Play it on Sight Without Being Taught
Entertains Everybody Everywhere

Free Zobo Entertainments for home, church and Sunday school sent on receipt of name and address.
Strauss Mfg. Co., 395 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

LEARN DRESSMAKING

Make your own clothes; it saves time and bother. Take a course in dressmaking and you'll save the expense on the first dress you make; or become a professional dressmaker and be sure of a good living always. We teach Mine, Stevenson's system; it is famous among dressmakers throughout the U. S. Individual personal attention for each pupil. Send names and addresses of two lady friends who might wish to learn dressmaking and we'll send you a SYNOPSIS of the course FREE.

NATION'L CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF DRESSMAKING
Box 122, Des Moines, Iowa.

STRANGE THINGS IN THE BIBLE

Suggested Explanation of Some of the Difficulties of the Ordinary Reader : :

EFFORTS to solve Bible problems are more likely to be successful, when they are made by people who are convinced that no real contradiction or inconsistency exists, than when they are made by people who have little reverence for the sacred Book, and would be rather pleased than otherwise, to prove that it contains errors. In an article published in this journal recently, one fact was mentioned which sheds some light on the difficulties which have puzzled the honest student. This was the love of imagery and figurative expression which characterizes the Bible writers, in common with other Orientals. This fact should never be forgotten by the Bible reader, because it enables him to recognize the beauty and force of expressions which, when taken literally, excite the incredulity of the scoffer.

There is another fact, of a different character, which should also be borne in mind, because of the effect it has on our translation. This is, that the sacred books were, for many generations, copied by hand. Before the invention of printing there was no other method of preserving them. The utmost care was taken that it should be done with absolute accuracy, and only men were employed on the task who were specially trained for it; but there can be no reasonable doubt that in some unimportant instances the copyist did make an error, or rather, perhaps, that his writing was not so distinct as to prevent his readers misunderstanding what he wrote. A comparison of the most ancient manuscripts proves that there were such errors, and shows how they occurred. The most prolific cause is the similarity there is between certain pairs of Hebrew letters. There are five of these pairs. They are the letters representing Y and W, the only difference between which is that the tail of the one is a little longer than that of the other. The letter corresponding with our R resembles that corresponding with our D, with the sole difference that the upper angle is more rounded in the former than the latter. So, again, K closely resembles B; G is very like N; H differs but slightly from Ch.

As a rule, the context shows which letter it is, even when it is not distinct; but there are instances in which the resemblance has caused errors. Thus in one, cited by Dr. J. Paterson Smyth, in his valuable work on The Old Documents, David is represented (II. Sam. 8: 13), as smiting Syria in the Valley of Salt. The sceptic points out that the Valley of Salt was far away from Syria, and it would be unlikely that any Syrians would be found there. He declares the Bible history false. But when we turn to the ancient manuscript we find that the word Syria and the word Edom are both represented in Hebrew by three letters, one of which is one of the pairs above mentioned. The copyist did not make that letter quite clear, and so the word Syria appears in our translation instead of Edom. If the manuscript had been read correctly, it would have appeared that David smote Edom in the Valley of Salt. Proof that this is the correct rendering, is found in the heading of Psalm 60, which mentions the battle, and places the Valley of Salt in Edom, where it belongs.

Another instance of the confusion caused by these mischievous literary twins is found in one ancient Bible, which mislabeled Josephus, but was detected by our translators. It occurs in I. Samuel 19: 13. In our version, David's wife, Michal, concealed her husband's flight, by putting goat's hair on his pillow, so that Saul's searchers, seeing the hair, thought he was in bed. But the Hebrew word for "hair" differs from the word for "liver," only by one of those peculiar letters. So in one manuscript, the one used by Josephus, it was misread, and Michal is represented as putting a goat's liver in the bed, and the historian ingeniously explains that the liver, still throbbing with life, gave the appearance of a man breathing.

One other illustration of the like error still confuses Bible readers. In II. Kings: 24: 8, it is stated that Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign. In II. Chron. 36: 9, it is stated that he was eight years old. "A self-evident contradiction," says the critic. Not so; the Hebrews used letters to indicate numbers, and it so happened that the letter indicating eight, has a twin for which it was misread, thus the letter indicating eighteen was used.

Elhanan . . . slew Goliath (II. Samuel 21: 19). This passage is another illustration of the mistakes which have been caused by the peculiarities of the Hebrew language. We all know that it was David who slew Goliath, yet here the triumph is credited to Elhanan, the son of Jaare Oregim, a Bethlehemite. The difficulty disappears when the Hebrew manuscript is examined. There we find, that the man Elhanan slew, was named Lahmi. That name being in the objective case, its place in the sentence is indicated by the prefix "Eth;" and it would appear as "Eth-Lhmi;" and the omission of the smallest of Hebrew letters, would change the relation of it to Goliath. The copyist evidently thought Eth-Lhmi was a contraction of Bethlehemite, and overlooked the small letter before Goliath. But there is no Bethlehemite in the passage in the most ancient manuscript. Its proper rendering is that Elhanan, the son of Jaare-Oregim, slew Lahmi, the brother of Goliath, the Gittite. In this case, as in some others, it is clear that the history does not contradict itself; the apparent contradiction is due to a mistake, and a patient examination shows how the mistake occurred.

And not increased the joy (Isa. 9: 3). Bible readers are often puzzled by this passage, which does not seem in harmony with the other parts of the anthem. Dr. Smyth gives an ingenious explanation, which is doubtless correct. The Hebrew word for "not," in this case is "Lo." But if there is an apostrophe between the two letters, it does not mean, "not," but, "to it." Now the one word might easily be mistaken for the other, and if we adopt the alternative we obtain the more harmonious rendering, "Thou hast multiplied the nation; thou hast increased to it the joy."

Leah said a troop cometh (Gen. 30: 11). This is a peculiar expression for a mother to use. The Revisers studied it, and they came to the conclusion that the rendering of our Authorized Version was wrong. Leah's exclamation was "Gad," so naming her new-born son. The word has more than one meaning, like many in our own language—the word "case," for example. It may mean a coming troop; but it also means good fortune, or fortunate, which is doubtless the meaning that Leah had in mind.

Among other passages affected by the peculiarities of Hebrew letters and modes of writing, which have been found by the modern examination of ancient manuscripts, are the following: Ex. 2: 11, "He spied an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew . . . and he slew the Egyptian." The Hebrew word is not clear in this place as to what occurred, but it is the same in both cases. Moses, therefore, did to the Egyptian the same thing that the Egyptian did to the Hebrew, and as he hid the body in the sand there can be no doubt that he killed him, and that the Egyptian had previously killed the Hebrew. Ps. 90: 9, "We spend our years as a tale that is told," should read, "We bring our years to an end as a sigh." Isa. 59: 19, "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him," would be more correctly rendered, "He shall come as a rushing stream which the breath of Jehovah driveth." Job 9: 33, "The daysman betwixt us," means "the umpire between us." Hosea 4: 18, "Her rulers with shame do love, give ye," does not convey a distinct meaning, but it is clear when properly translated, "Her rulers are in love with shame."

These are a few specimens of what scholarship and painstaking research by learned men have done to shed light on obscure passages, and vindicate the Bible of the charges brought against it by its enemies.

Not The Sticky Sort

Kingsford's Silver Gloss
Starch does not stick and burn under the iron. It goes in—fills up the pores of the good and responds to the ironing with a whiteness and smoothness of finish that is surprisingly fine.

Kingsford's
OSWEGO
Silver Gloss STARCH

is elegant for fine laces, curtains, linens and muslins. Gives a freshness, delicacy and newness that is charming. A starch that never varies, hence never disappoints. Goes furthest because purest.

Sold everywhere.
OSWEGO STARCH FACTORY,
Oswego,
N. Y.

Best Sheet Music

Popular Standard and Classical Sheet Music. Full size, Best Paper. Handsome Printing. Any of the 60c and 75c musics named below sent postpaid for 10c. Our large catalog contains over a thousand equally good pieces per copy. Why not buy all your music at 10c a piece? Cut Out This Ad, mark with an X any piece you wish, enclose 10c, and we will send by return mail. You will also receive free catalog. If you wish only, send advertisement without any money. . . . Mocking Bird, Variations. . . . regular price 75c. . . . Old Black Joe, Variations. . . . 75c. . . . Nearer, My God, to Thee, Var. . . . 75c. . . . Old Folks at Home, Variations. . . . 75c. . . . Rock of Ages. . . . 75c. . . . Way Down South in Dixie. . . . 75c. . . . My Rosary. . . . Vocal. . . . 75c. . . . Beside Still Waters (sacred). . . . 75c. . . . Faithful as the Stars Above. . . . 75c. . . . SPECIAL—"The Burning Iroquois," price (reg. price 50c) beautiful and pathetic memorial. Cover has full page picture of the Iroquois. FREE—To anyone buying one or more of the above pieces, who will send in addition the names and addresses of ten persons who play or sing and would be interested in our catalog, we will send an additional piece without charge. Names of music teachers are particularly requested. Write names plainly. MCKINLEY MUSIC CO., 381 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO. Please send me your Free Catalogue, also marked X in this ad. (Enclose 10c for each copy wanted, except "Burning Iroquois," which is . . .)

Name State Town

LORD'S PRAYER
Bangle Ring. Smallest Ever made. Or any Initial engraved Free. Rolled Gold. Warranted 9 years. 10c for either or 15c for both. COOKS Mfg. Co., 46 Western Av., COVINGTON, KY.

The Russo-Japanese War Begun

Continued from Page 163

the supremacy of the East must be fought out upon Manchurian soil. Japan, it is said, has provided for such an eventuality by organizing and arming the Mongolian who, 20,000 strong, are ready to attack the Russians north of the Yalu. Another force of 10,000 is reported to be ready to attack the Manchurian railway garrisons. Both forces are well drilled and armed, and have a sufficient "stiffening" of Japanese in their ranks to make them formidable in an emergency. These, and similar stories now current, indicate the extent of Japan's forethought and planning. The essential point, however, is that the great land battle which seems almost inevitable between Pyong Yang and the Yalu, will, to a very great extent, decide the future campaign plans of both contestants. A sweeping Russian triumph would put Japan on the defensive, and if, followed up vigorously, would go very far toward retrieving Russia's losses. On the other hand, a Japanese victory on the Yalu would carry the whole tide of war out of the Korean peninsula into a region where the Mikado's troops would quickly find a multitude of eager allies. From the very first stage of the campaign, Japan has apparently proceeded in accordance with well-defined plans. The Mikado directs the war personally from his palace in Tokio, where he labors at his desk many hours daily and far into the night, holding frequent consultations with his ministers and being in touch with all commanders afloat and ashore. He has been calmly confident of the success of his fleet from the outset, and received the news of the victories quietly. Tokio, however, went wild with joy, and all the Japanese cities held carnival over the news. Everything seems to have been thought out by Japan in advance of the event, and all her preparations for contingencies have been most complete, even to the smallest detail. Our own State Department has recently been sounding official opinion abroad on the proposition for a union of the powers, the United States included, for the purpose of inducing Japan and Russia to localize hostilities and also to secure guarantees of China's integrity and her permanent neutrality.

Russia and Japan Present their Case

WITH Russia and Japan, in self-justification, have presented their cases to the world. Russia's statement recites that Japan, ostensibly for the purpose of establishing the balance of power and a settlement of things on the Pacific, proposed a revision of existing treaties with Korea. Russia agreed. At first the exchange of views was of a friendly character, but gradually the Japanese people addressed, with the co-operation of the foreign press, attempted to create a popular ferment and to drive the Japanese government into conflict with Russia. The Tokio Cabinet, under this belligerent influence, increased its demands and began to prepare for war. Russia was therefore compelled to make similar preparations. To preserve peace in the Far East, however, Russia declared her readiness to recognize Japan's privileged commercial and economic position in Korea under right to protect it by military force, necessary in consequence of disturbance in that country. Korea's independence and integrity were guaranteed by reciprocal understandings with Japan and Russia. (1) That this principle should be mutually guaranteed by Japan and Russia. (2) That both should agree to use no part of Korea for strategic purposes. (3) That the freedom of the straits of Korea for navigation should be preserved. This was satisfactory to Japan, and the latter agreed to accept the conditions as to guarantee of Korean independence, and simultaneously raised the question of Manchuria. The latter Russia could not do, as Russia's position in Manchuria concerned, first, China, and next all the powers having an interest in China. Russia, therefore, saw no reason to include in its treaty concerning Korea any provision concerning territory occupied by Russian troops. It did not refuse, so long as it recognized Manchuria, to recognize Chinese sovereignty, and also the treaty rights of the Powers, and it had made a declaration that effect to the foreign cabinets. Now of all these facts, Russia, when it is asked to its representative at Tokio its reply to Japan, felt justified in executing the Japanese Cabinet to appreciate Russia's desire for a peaceful understanding; but Japan, without even waiting the presentation of the reply, refused negotiations and suspended diplomatic relations. Russia, therefore, lays upon Japan the responsibility for the war. Japan's authoritative statement opens with the declaration that it is indispensable for the welfare and safety of Japan, and the independence and territorial integrity of Korea be maintained. On the other hand, Russia, notwithstanding the solemn treaty with China, and her assurances to the Powers, still continues her occupation of Manchuria, and has taken aggressive steps in Korea. Should Manchuria be annexed to Russia, the independence of Korea would naturally be impossible. Japan, desiring to secure permanent peace for Eastern Asia, and to establish a friendly adjustment of mutual interests in Manchuria and Korea, where their interests meet, opened negotiations with Russia in July last. It proposed to Russia, as the basis of an agreement—(1) That both should respect the independence and territorial integrity of China and Korea. (2) They should mutually maintain the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce of all nations with those countries—i. e., the "open door." (3) Reciprocal recognition of Japan's preponderating interests in Korea, and Russia's special interests in Manchuria, and mutual recognition of Japan's right to protect her interests in Korea. (4) Recognition by Russia of Japan's exclusive right to give advice and assistance to Korea in governmental affairs. (5) Russia not to oppose the ultimate extension of the Korean railway to Manchuria, to connect with Chinese railway lines. Japan desired a conference at St. Petersburg on these matters, but the Czar's Government refused. Oct. 3, Russia presented counter-proposals, in which she declined to agree regarding China's sovereignty and territorial integrity, but consented to equal commercial opportunities for all nations. She also asked Japan to declare Manchuria and its littoral as outside of Japan's sphere of interest. She refused to concede Japan's right to use any part of Korea for strategic purposes. She also proposed the establishment of a neutral zone in Korea. Japan could not understand why Russia, which professed no intention of absorbing Manchuria, should hesitate to admit the sovereignty and territorial integrity of China. For this reason, and because of Japan's commercial interests in Manchuria, and because of Manchuria's political relation to Korea, Japan rejected Russia's proposal in this particular regard. She submitted amendments to the counter-proposals with regard to the suggested neutral zone, favoring its location on either side of the Manchuria-Korean boundary line. Her note on these matters was submitted to Russia Oct. 30th. Russia's reply was delivered Dec. 11th. It suppressed all the clauses relating to Manchuria, and made the proposed treaty apply to Korea only, at the same time maintaining Russia's original demands in regard to the non-employment of Korean soil for strategic uses, and as to the neutral zone. Japan requested Russia to reconsider her reply, and suggested the entire elimination of the neutral zone portion of the proposals, and the removal of the restrictions against the strategic use of Korean soil. Russia replied Jan. 6, again proposing the insertion of a clause under which Japan admitted Manchuria to be outside of her sphere of interest, Russia, however, agreeing not to impede the exercise of treaty rights there. Russia also renewed her proposition for a neutral zone, and other essential points of her earlier notes. Japan concludes: It must be self-evident to everybody that the engagement now proposed by Russia would be impractical in value so long as it was uncompromised by a definite stipulation regarding the territorial integrity of China in Manchuria, since treaty rights are only co-existing with sovereignty. Eventually, absorption of Manchuria by Russia would annul at once those rights and privileges,

Would these famous masters of music and the stage give such high praise of anything but a perfect musical instrument?

"It seemed as if the artists were actually singing in my salons."

ADELINA PATTI.

"THE VICTOR TALKING MACHINE is really wonderful."

COQUELIN.

"I thought I was listening not to the echo of Calvé, but to Calvé herself."

SARA BERNHARDT.

"The Victor is all right."

SOUZA.

"Reproduces the human voice to perfection."

JEAN DE RESZKE.

Chicago—Talking Machine Co.
Chicago—Lyons & Healy
New York—Victor Talking Machine Co.
New York—Columbia & Co.
Philadelphia—Western Electric Co.
Philadelphia—Penn. Phonograph Co.
Boston—Eastern Talking Machine Co.
Boston—John J. Hayes & Co.
San Francisco—Sherman, Clay & Co.
Atlanta—Phillips & Co.
Baltimore—H. R. Eisenbrandt Sons.
Brooklyn—A. V. Loring Talking Machine Co.
Buffalo—A. Powers & Watbridge & Co.
Canton—Klein & Hoffman Co.

Cincinnati—Rudolph Wurlitzer Co.
Cleveland—Cleveland Talking Machine Co.
Columbus—Peter B. Whitist Co.
Denver—Denver Music Co.
Detroit—Grinnell Bros.
Dubuque—Harger & Bish.
Grand Rapids—J. A. J. Friedrich.
Indianapolis—Carlin & Lennet.
Jacksonville—Met. Talking Machine Co.
Kansas City—Schmeltzer & Sons A. Co.
Lincoln—Wittmann Co.
New Haven—Henry Horton.
New Orleans—National Automatic Fire Alarm Co.

Omaha—A. Hooper.
Pittsburg—T. F. Rentel Co., Inc.
Rochester—J. B. Miller.
St. Louis—Victor Talking Machine Co., Limited.
St. Paul—Kuebler & Hinrichs.
Scranton—A. J. J. Lutz.
Schenectady—J. A. Richard & Co.
Syracuse—W. D. Andrews.
Washington—S. Kamm, Sons & Co.
Washington—J. F. Ellis & Co.
West Superior—Brunswick Co.
City of Mexico—V. Schmitt.
Honolulu—Hergstrom Music Co.

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA.

THE NEW HYMN BOOK!

BY THREE FAMOUS COMPOSERS
DOANE, KIRKPATRICK AND MAIN.
256 pages. 276 hymns with music.
One-half new songs that will never grow old.
One-half old songs that will always be new.
If you need a new hymn book you had better see
DEVOTIONAL SONGS
before making your choice.
Substantially bound in cloth, $25 per 100.

THE BOOK ITSELF IS ITS BEST ADVERTISEMENT.
Returnable copies for examination mailed on request.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York—Chicago.
CHURCH FURNITURE. Pews, Assembly Chairs, Pulpits, S. S. Seating.
Largest Line, Latest Styles. Free Catalogue. Mfg. at GRAND RAPIDS SCHOOL FURNITURE WORKS.
Salesroom, 22 West 19th Street, New York.

AN INHALATION FOR
Whooping Cough,
Croup,
Bronchitis,
Coughs,
Grip,
Hay Fever,
Diphtheria,
Scarlet Fever,

Don't fail to use CRESOLENE for the distressing and often fatal affections for which it is recommended. For more than twenty years we have had the most conclusive assurances that there is nothing better. Ask your physician about it.
An interesting descriptive booklet is sent free, which gives the highest testimonials as to its value.
ALL DRUGGISTS.
VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 180 Fulton Street, New York.

BOUND BOOKS at SHEET PRICE Sent on 7 Days' Approval, Small Monthly Payments

In cleaning up our stock we find a few slightly "RUBBED" SETS, and rather than rebind such a small lot we will dispose of them at what the sheets are worth to us unbound, and on small monthly payments.

If you'd like to possess the only world's history that reads like a story-book—yet is recognized by such men as William McKinley, Benjamin Harrison, Dr. Cuyler, Bishop Vincent and thousands more as a standard authority and the greatest historical reference work in existence, SEND FOR FREE SPECIMEN BOOK TODAY. That specimen book will give you all facts and details—why YOU need it—how YOU can secure a slightly "rubbed" set at the value of the unbound sheets—the volume—11 inches tall, 8 inches wide, 680 pages—4000 illustrations and color plates. Complete set is sent at once.
Space here is costly; our free sample book tells everything.
If you mention Christian Herald you need not cut the coupon.
Name.....
Address.....
MERRILL & BAKER, 9 E 16th Street, New York
Send me free RIDPATH'S "A People's History of the World," by William McKinley, Benjamin Harrison, Dr. Cuyler, Bishop Vincent and thousands more as a standard authority and the greatest historical reference work in existence. I will send you a slightly "rubbed" set at the value of the unbound sheets—the volume—11 inches tall, 8 inches wide, 680 pages—4000 illustrations and color plates. Complete set is sent at once.
Christian Herald, Feb. 24, 1904.

Seven Sutherland Sisters HAIR GROWER AND SCALP CLEANER

WILL not grow hair on a billiard-ball; but where there exists a particle of life in a hair root, they will surely bring forth a strong, healthy hair. For nearly a quarter of a century they have been performing this noble work with increasing success.

The Scalp Cleaner makes a delightful, creamy, cleansing, purifying lather, which is far superior and quite as economical as good soap.

The Hair Grower is an ideal tonic. It destroys microbes, and completely eradicates dandruff. It restores the decaying hair roots, stops hair falling out, and keeps it healthful, soft and lustrous.

The only hair preparation that can be found in nearly every drug and department store in the United States.

Over 28,000 dealers sell them. Why?

Permit us to again say

"It's the Hair--Not the Hat"
that makes a woman attractive

We are Going to the Christian Endeavor Hotel, World's Fair, St. Louis

Because it will be the headquarters during the Exposition for Christian Endeavorers, Baptist Young People, Sunday Schools, Educators, etc. Adjoining the Fair Grounds with street cars direct from Union Station to hotel. Built for perfect safety and comfort. Capacity, 3,000 daily; Auditorium 3,000. Backed by men of highest standing; endorsed by St. Louis Clergy. Charter Certificates, series A, issued on receipt of $1.00, entitle holders to reduced rate of $1.00 per day for lodging, or $2.00 per day for lodging and board. For full particulars, address at once,

Christian Endeavor Hotel and Auditorium Co.,
CHEMICAL BUILDING, ST. LOUIS, MO.

FREE TO LADIES

Send address of three friends who wear corsets, and receive, absolutely free, our Boston Hygienic Dip! For lengthening waist and holding skirt.

Boston Hygienic Corset Co., 14 Winter St., Boston, Mass.

NEW-Home-IDEAS
NEW BOOKLET, 24 Designs and Plans for 10c Silver. Send plan ideas, will develop on approval. D. S. HOPKINS, Dept. G Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE SOLDIER'S DEATH

Soldier, rest--thy warfare's o'er;
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking!
Dream of battled fields no more,
Days of danger--nights of waking.
SIR WALTER SCOTT.

HARK! hark! the shrill trumpet that sounds the recall,
How sweet its long note is to friend and to foe!
The onsets of horses no longer appal,
The last charging squadron has struck the last blow.

Far o'er the torn heath lie the valiant and slain;
In the close sodid ranks their places are filled;
Life, honor and pride, now alike are as vain
And coldly impassive as blood that is spilled.

And he who led foremost the charge in the morning,
In helmet and gauntlet, bright corselet and vest;
No more with his beauty the proud field adorning,
His crimson-tide mocks the red clouds in the West.

Art longing, oh! warrior, for battle once more,
To revel again in the midst of thy foes?
See! victory is thine, and the fierce fight is o'er,
And level'd those ranks that so solidly rose.

Soldier, thou diest!--'tis well! it is best!
Commended to God and thy Saviour thou'lt be.
Thy brothers shall seek thee, but find thee at rest,
When the morning drum loudly shall beat reveille.

Farewell! then farewell!--for the tears will be falling,
Proud hearts shall mourn ever and bright eyes will weep;
Soon--soon will be heard the Trumpet recalling,
And the Archangel's shout shall awake thee from sleep.

New York. MAJOR JOHN B. KETCHUM.

Books Received

Steps Christward: Counsels for Young Christians, by Howard Allen Bridgman, cloth, pp. 178. The Pilgrim Press, Boston and Chicago, publishers.

The Spanish in the Southwest (Eclectic School Readings) by Rosa V. Winterburn, illustrated. American Book Co., New York, Cincinnati and Chicago, publishers.

Their Child, by Robert Herrick. This is a realistic "short story" of two lives that were nearly wrecked by a blunder. Mr. Herrick "paints life exactly as he sees it, in its joy, its beauty, its somberness and its sorrow alike," and this little tale is an excellent illustration of his literary methods and power. 95 pp., cloth cover, illustrated. Price 50 cents. Macmillan Co., London and New York, publishers.

Elsieville, a Tale of Yesterday, by Charles B. Holmes. This is a capital rural story, full of narrative and dealing with country life in a small farming community. It has many quaint and original characters, and is full of humor and romance. It deals in a free and generous way with some of the leading religious questions of the day. Pp. 183, cloth covers. Price $1. Charles B. Holmes, 132 Nassau street, New York, publishers.

The Pope Manufacturing Company's Memoranda Calendar for 1904 is a unique and clever publication. Every day in the year is marked by some sentiment or expression of opinion regarding the value of the bicycle from college presidents, doctors, clergymen, statesmen and others, and in each case the sentiment appears on the birthday of the writer. Pope Manufacturing Company, New York City and Hartford, Ct., publishers.

Getting a Living; the Problem of Wealth and Poverty, of Profits, Wages and Trades Unionism, by George L. Bolen. This is a comprehensive and instructive work, covering the broad field of economic literature. It is the most complete yet compact presentation of the subject that has yet come to hand, and should prove a valuable manual of reference. Pp. 769, cloth binding. Price $2. The Macmillan Co., London and New York, publishers.

The Church and its Social Mission, by John Marshall Lang, D.D. No more important subject could be discussed in the present day than that examined by Dr. Lang in this volume. Essentially the same in our own land as in Great Britain, the problem of poverty, of labor, and the duty of the church therein must be taken up. Dr. Lang has studied the situation across the Atlantic, and the results embodied in this work are of the utmost value to thinking men here. They show the rocks in the channel that the ship of the church must enter sooner or later. Pp. 364. Price $1.60. Published by T. Whittaker, Bible House, New York.

The Heart of John Wesley's Journal, with an introduction by Hugh Price Hughes, M.A. Edited by Percy Livingstone Parker. The four volumes in which Wesley's journal has hitherto appeared, full as they are of interest, have in these busy days repelled many readers, who shrink from voluminous works. In this volume is the essence of that great book. The selections have been made with discrimination, and so as to give continuity to the narrative. It is John Wesley who speaks throughout, and it is thus a brief autobiography. The illustrations are excellent. Pp. 512. Price $1.50. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, etc.

RARE COINS
Etc. Large Greek silver coin, 336 B. C., $1.75. Colymbian 4 or 1 dollar, 1892, each 75c. C. S. A. $5, $10, and $20, set 20c. 10 choice foreign coins in 3 metals, diff., 20c. Buying list 10c. Selling list of 25,000 coins, etc., free.
T. L. ELDER, Dept. Z, Station A, Pittsburg, Pa.

Bear Brand YARNS

Discouraged about your crocheted things?
Ever really look for the REASON of your failures?
In nine cases out of ten it's faulty, heavy, stringy yarn.
Don't trust to appearance. Insist on the BRAND.
BEAR Brand.

Bear Brand Yarns come in Shetland Floss German Knitting
Zephyr Germantown Shetland Wool
4 Fold and 8 Fold Crimped Fairy Floss
Saxony Yarn Zephyr
2, 3, and 4 Fold 2, 4, and 6 Fold
Spanish Yarn German Cashmere

Interesting literature and valuable patterns FREE.

The Bear Brand Yarn Manufacturers
Dept. U New York

12 of Your Friends

WANT TO GIVE YOU THIS SOLID OAK ROCKER

Free. They all want one of our Holdfast Skirt Supporters--and will pay you 25c each for them. YOU SEND NO MONEY--just your name and address. We will send you 12 Supporters by mail prepaid. You deliver one each to your 12 friends. Send us the $3.00 and your chair is shipped at once. Nothing could be easier. The chair is of solid oak (not stained) with a highly polished antique finish, handsomely carved and turned, and an embossed leather (cobbler's) seat. It is large and very strong; will last a lifetime. You take no risk. Your friends want the supporters. You want the chair. We want the business. So send today. Over three million Holdfast Belts have been sold. You can earn the chair in an hour. We take back any you cannot sell. Large list of other premiums sent with every order.

COLVER CO., Dept. 31, 811 Schiller Bldg., Chicago.

Priscilla

the heroine among the Pilgrims, lived at Elder Brewster's. The Story of Plymouth Rock a thrilling account of the settlement of Plymouth, tells of her strange experiences.

Send 6 cents in stamps for postage and get this beautiful story of the Pilgrims, and a full pint sample, free, of the celebrated

PLYMOUTH ROCK (Phosphated) GELATINE

Or, send 15 cents in stamps and get this handsome book and a full-sized Package of the Gelatine. Address Dept. 4.

Plymouth Rock Gelatine Co., Boston, Mass.

NEW INVENTION!

Write for new booklet. Special Offer this month. Our new Quaker Eating Water Bath Cabinets, finest produced. Everybody delighted. Enjoy at home for 3c each all the marvelous cleansing, invigorating, curative effects of the famous Turkish Baths. Open the 5,000,000 skin pores, purifies the entire system. Beats Hot Springs. Prevents disease. Saves Dr. bills. Benefits thousands. Nature's drugless remedy for colds, grip, rheumatism, aches, pains, blood and skin diseases, kidney trouble, children's diseases and female ills. Guaranteed. Sent on 30 days' trial. $1.00 to $3.00 managers, general agents, 100% profit. a month, salesmen.

WORLD MFG. CO., 82 World Building, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

PALMER PENMANSHIP

Taught by Mail. Learn a good business hand; it may be worth $5 every week in added salary at once and in the future. Palmer Method is used to-day in hundreds of schools throughout the U. S.; teachers send work of over 100,000 pupils regularly to Cedar Rapids for criticism. We also teach penmanship at your home; copy of Palmer's Penmanship Budget (price $1.00) and six months course of individual weekly criticism now $5. Diplomas to graduates. Catalogue Free.

PALMER SCHOOL EST. 1881 P.O. Box 132, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

ADDICTED TO THE DRUG HABIT?

If so, you can be relieved. Our Sanatorium was established in 1875, for the treatment of Drug and Alcohol Addictions. Relief Guaranteed.

HOME TREATMENT IF DESIRED.

We have relieved thousands that have failed elsewhere. The Dr. J. L. Stephens Co., Dept. R-5, Lebanon, Ohio.

No More Marble

"LEST WE FORGET"

Woodlawn Cemetery, New York, Brooklyn, Cemetery, Boston, some others, now use the use of marble. Why? Because MARBLE HAS PROVED A FAILURE from the point of view of beauty. Is there any reason why it will not just as much fail as marble? Whatever the reason, erect a monument to prevent Show your gressiveness erecting a WHITE BRONZE MONUMENT which is more than 10 times as beautiful as marble at the time it is purchased.

Before ordering a memorial, large or small, without putting you under any obligations. Dismiss no obstacle. We deal direct and deliver every Write at once.

BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS

SPECIAL INDUCEMENTS ON WINTER ORDER

AGENTS WANTED

Address:
The Monumental Bronze Co.
70-90 Howard Ave., BRIDGEPORT, CT.

PETER MOLLER'S COD LIVER OIL is scientifically prepared under most improved method, insuring cleanliness in every detail of manufacture, and consequently is

PURE--SWEET--DIGESTIBLE.

No disagreeable taste or odor

Always Produces Satisfactory Results

Sold only in flat, oval bottles, bearing name of Schieffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents.

HIGH GRADE HAIR SWITCHES

FINEST HUMAN HAIR, ORDINARY COLOR

2 oz. 20 inches, $0.90	3 oz. 24 inches, 25
2 oz. 22 inches, 1.25	3 1/2 oz. 26 inches, 35
2 1/2 oz. 22 inches, 1.40	4 oz. 28 inches, 40

Remit five cents for postage. All short stem, three strands. Send sample and we will match perfectly. SWITCHES mail on approval, to be paid for when returned satisfactory; if unsatisfactory return to us. Money returned if desired. All orders carefully filled. Illustrated Catalogue of WIGS, Curis, Bangs, Pompadours, Waves, etc., FREE. ROBERTS SPECIALTY CO., 113 & 114 Dearborn St., CHICAGO. THE OLD RELIABLE HAIR GOODS HOUSE

GLUTEN FLOUR

SPECIAL DIABETIC FLOUR.
K. C. WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR.

Unlike all other goods. Ask Grocers. For book or sample write Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

MEN AND WOMEN OF MONEY

Write for my FREE BOOK about Missionary wealth, laws, and 5 per cent. Farm Mortgage printed in colors--profusely illustrated. FREE.

WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 5 Wardell Bldg., MACON, GA.

SENSATIONAL
FLOWER SEED NOVELTY

ANDERSON'S EVER-BLOOMING HOLLYHOCKS

FLOWER
THE FIRST SEASON FROM SEED!

Blooming continuously and profusely from July until frozen. Every garden may now be enriched with its stately Queen of Flowers. Grown as easily and flowering as quickly as any garden annual.

GRAND COMBINATION MIXTURE.
Doubles, Semi-doubles and Singles. In many colors. Packet, 25c.

Our 1904 Catalogue,
"EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN,"
the most superb publication of its kind ever issued—sent free to all purchasers of "Ever-blooming Hollyhock" seed who name this paper.

PETER HENDERSON & Co.
37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK.

SEED POTATOES
100,000 BUSHELS
FOR SALE CHEAP

Largest seed potato growers in the world!
Elegant stock. Tremendous yields.
From 400 to 1000 bushels per acre.

FOR 10 CENTS
and this notice we send you lots of farm seed samples and big catalogue, telling about Teosinte, Speltz, Peas, Aerial and Barley, Macaroni Wheat, Bromus, Earliest Cane, etc. Send for same today.

JOHN A. SALZER.
SEED CO. LA CROSSE, WIS.

"Once Grown Always Grown"
The Maule motto for more than 25 years. My new

SEED
BOOK for 1904

Cost over $50,000 to publish. If you have a garden you can have a copy for the asking. Send a postal for it to

Wm. Henry Maule, Philadelphia, Pa.

Have Hundreds of Car Loads of Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Shrubs, Roses, Plants, Bulbs, Seeds, choicest new and old. Mail size postpaid, with arrival and satisfaction guaranteed, larger by express or freight. The best are cheapest. Try us. Elegant 168-page catalogue free. Send for it, and see what value we give for your money. 50 years, 4 greenhouses, 1,000 acres.

HE STORRS & HARRISON CO.,
BOX 195, PAINESVILLE, OHIO.

OUR LORD, THE CREATOR, THE FATHER, THE SON

A Hymn by Gen. Oliver Otis Howard

WHO did reveal thee,
The Creator: "I Am"?
Jehovah Jireh; see
The first boon to man!
Who did present Him
To the regions below?
The Son—He translates Him,
And his image we know.
Who didst command me:
"Do thou—Do thou not?"
Jehovah Jireh, 'tis He
Who determined my lot;
For I broke from control.
A Redeemer, I hear,
With pardon my soul
And save me from fear.

That Redeemer who liveth—
That Son—He red-eth
By his wounding He cleanseth;
By his kindness He winneth;
By his Spirit he infuseth
Our veins with his love.
By his power He upraiseth
Our courage from above;
Where He dwelleth in light
Nigh the throne! He's the Master
Who hath banished all night,
Who preventeth disaster,
For aye and for aye!
So, we'll lift up our voices
And make them ascend,
With hosannas to our choicest
Redeemer and Friend!

OLIVER OTIS HOWARD.
Burlington, Vt., 1904.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

R. M. F. Curryville, Mo. "God has answered my prayers many times. Praise his holy name."

Mrs. E. L. Sayre, Pa. "I wish to add my testimony to say God has been so good to me. I know he will hear our prayers, if we will only have faith and believe in him."

A Friend, Winchester, Va. "God has heard and answered many prayers for me, has given more than I asked for. I know his children never ask in vain. Praise his holy name."

Mrs. N. R. S. W. Sidney, Me. "I have been praying several years for a burden to be removed. I waited patiently for the Lord I trust, and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry." All praise to him."

A Reader. "I have had many direct answers to my prayers, and through my faith in answer to prayer I have learned to take the minutest thing to God in prayer. I find that to be the key that unlocks God's storehouse."

A Reader. "I want to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering many prayers for me. I have been a Christian fifty years, my prayers have often been answered, and I have been comforted by prayers many, many times."

D. J. F. Onancock, Va. "I have been a skeptical doubter, but in sickness and trouble called upon the Lord, and want to acknowledge to the glory of his name and the encouragement of others that he graciously heard and answered."

A Cat and Bird Incident

A lady living in Brooklyn, N. Y., had two pets—one a large cat, with a beautiful striped fur coat, gray eyes, white face, and elegant whiskers; the other, a small canary bird. Antagonistic by nature, yet being raised together, they became true friends. The cat enjoyed the singing, and watched the movements of Dick, as he jumped from perch to perch, with the greatest interest. One warm day, the lady raised the window to admit the balmy air of spring, when the cage had not been properly fastened. Birdie sought its freedom, and instantly flew, landing on the grass plot. Quick as thought the cat sprang for it, spreading her large paw so as not to hurt it; held it until her mistress (myself), who was lame, came down a flight of stairs to the relief of both. When Dick was in his cage, safe and sound, a happier trio could not be found than mistress, cat, and bird.

ALABAMA.

A Surprising Book

I was surprised at the size and finish of How I Worked My Way Around the World. It is truly a beautiful book; and, when I began reading, I was filled with surprise and admiration, and could hardly lay it down to do my work. I admire it much, for I am very fond of bold adventures, and certainly Mr. Morrison had plenty of pluck and perseverance. I am thankful to possess the book.

Tunkhannock, Pa. H. M. SIMKINS.

"A Thing of Beauty"

I received the lovely Calendar and am delighted with it. I thank you for it. It is an unparalleled premium. It is a thing of beauty, and will be a joy for more than two years. It is an attractive ornament, worthy of a place in any room. The brilliant colors of the butterflies, also the flowers above the childish faces, are wonderfully true to nature. For usefulness and value THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's premiums are better than those given by any other journal. Your paper is a favorite, as it has always been, in our home.

Burlingham, N. Y. C. H. VAN KENREN.

BURPEE'S Farm Annual

"THE LEADING AMERICAN SEED CATALOGUE," is now more "a leader" than ever before. Thoroughly revised and greatly improved, it tells not only THE PLAIN TRUTH about seeds, but has also many new features for 1904.

An elegant book of 178 pages, it contains hundreds of illustrations from nature and six superb lithographic colored plates. It shows in natural colors thirteen "true and tried" new Vegetables of sterling merit, three new Nasturtiums (of a distinct type), and seven Superb Sweet Peas,—all painted from nature, by New York's leading artist, at our famous FORDHOOK FARMS. It presents also twenty-one faithful photographs of America's Largest Mail-order Seed Trade,—views in both town and country. Altogether it is pronounced the

Best Seed Catalogue Ever Published

And it's Free! provided you will ask for it now. It will cost YOU one cent to mail your address on a postal card to us. It will cost us four cents postage—plus eight cents for the catalogue,—just twelve cents to respond to your request. We are willing to bear this risk—twelve for one! If you will only read

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1904

we feel quite sure that you will favor us with at least a trial order, and this is all we ask, as BURPEE'S SEEDS will tell their own story in your garden and fields.

Better send for this catalogue to-day! One cent spent by you insures twelve cents spent by us, and this should be sufficient to convince you that we have faith in BURPEE'S SEEDS and also in our ability to persuade you to try Burpee's Seeds, if you will only read BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL. Are you willing to spend that cent? Shall we hear from you? If not, You will miss an opportunity to become acquainted with the very BEST SEEDS that can be grown!

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

Buy Miss White's Exceptional
SEEDS

A WOMAN is content with small profits. A personally conducted business like mine cannot afford big expense for advertising. My prices are modest, and my patrons pleased and loyal. Send a postal to-day for my pretty Catalog, or, if you like, 6c and two names of others who grow flowers, and receive my Surprise. Packet of 20 varieties of choice flowers (400 seeds) and complimentary entry to valuable prize contest. My catalog gives particulars.

Miss Emma V. White, Seedswoman, 818 Nicollet Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

DO IT YOURSELF.

We have made plenty of money in the poultry business and have grown from year to year until our Millbrook Farm is now the largest pure bred poultry establishment in the country. Our new year book "Poultry for Profit" will start you right. All about breeding, feeding, etc. Cuts of fowls with prices; eggs in season. Look has cost too much money and experience to be given away, but we will it for 10 cents.

THE J. W. MILLER CO., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.

D. and C. Roses

are the best. Always on their own roots. Plants mailed to any point in the United States. Safe arrival guaranteed. 50 years' experience. Flower and Vegetable Seeds a specialty. A premium with every order. Write for

New Guide to Rose Culture for 1904—the leading rose catalogue of America. 148 pages. Mailed free. Over 1,000 varieties. Tells how to grow them and all other desirable flowers. Est. 1850, 70 greenhouses.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., West Grove, Pa.

MISS LIPPINCOTT'S FLOWER SEEDS

Nasturtiums, 20 Varieties
Royal Show Pansy, 100 Colors
Sweet Peas, 40 Varieties
Asters, Mixed, all kinds
These Four Packets (25c value) for 8c and names of two flower loving friends.
My 12th annual catalog and book, "Floral Culture," FREE.
MISS C. H. LIPPINCOTT,
Minneapolis, Minn.

MILK and WINE
LILY

Flowers bell-shaped, very large, showy and deliciously fragrant. A sparkling white, striped with carmine. Fine blooming-size bulbs, wrapped in long strands of lovely Spanish Moss, sent postpaid for only 20c each with a copy of our Catalogue of Rare Florida Flowers and Fruits, offering Palms, Ferns, Amaryllis, pot Oranges, etc., at lowest prices. Catalogue FREE to applicants. IRSSANIAN GARDENS, Jacksonville, Florida.

Don't Buy Seeds

until you see my new Seed Catalogue for 1904. Great offers in Seeds, Plants and Premiums. Mammoth Poultry Farm. 18 breeds. Shetland Ponies given away. Colored plates, many new specialties. Catalogue mailed free to all.

F. B. MILLS, Seedsman, Box 29, Rose Hill, N. Y.

HEALTHY TREES

Free from disease. Honest in quality. Grafted Apples, 50c; Budded Peaches, 5c; Budded Cherries, 20c; good varieties. Concord Grapes, $3. per 100. 1000 Ash $1.20. B. and H. L. West, Rus. Mulberry, &c. Low price. We pay freight. Catalog free. Calbraith Nurseries, Box 82 Fairbury, Neb.

DON'T SET HENS

the same old way while a 200 Egg Natural Hen Incubator Costs But $35, other sizes equally as low. Over 125,000 in use. Indispensable to anyone who keeps hens. Our Patent protected against infringement. Agents wanted everywhere, either as a new experience necessary Catalogue sent for 1 cent and 25c list Formula FREE if you write today.

NATURAL HEN INCUBATOR CO., 884, Columbus, Nebraska.

FREE TO AGENTS

Flat iron knife cuts losses perfect order. $2 Outfit free Exp. prepaid. Dept. T. HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, Chicago, Ill., or Buffalo, N. Y.

STARK TREES

best by Test—78 Years LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN. PAY Weekly. STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc.

FLOWERS

Park's Floral Magazine, trial, Park's Floral Guide, 1904, and Park's Seed Pkg., 100 sorts, for a big bed that will surprise you with new flowers every day all summer. All for stamp. Geo. W. Park, B52, La Park, Pa.

"A little farm well tilled."

THE GARDEN OF THE GODS.

This is one of the most curious works of nature to be found on this continent. It is midway between Colorado Springs and the village of Manitou, and is well worth a visit. It can be reached best by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL LINES,

which, upon inquiry, you will find, will take you to all the great resorts of America

A copy of "America's Winter Resorts," will be sent free on receipt of a two-cent stamp by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, Grand Central Station, New York.

DON'T SHOUT!

The "Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. No case of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E,
19 South 16th St., Philadelphia

The "Best" Light

is a portable 100 candle power light, costing only 2 cts. per week. Makes and burns its own gas. Brighter than electricity or acetylene, and cheaper than kerosene. No Dirt. No Grease. No Odor. Over 100 styles. Lighted instantly with a match. Every lamp warranted. Agents Wanted Everywhere.

THE "BEST" LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th Street, CANTON, OHIO.

$1,000 IN CASH

$10,000 IN PREMIUMS given by "WHY" during next ten months for a trifling amount of congenial work among friends. Send 2c. stamp for particulars. Why Pub. Co., Room B, 253 B'way, N. Y.

Save one-third on carriages by buying direct from the maker. Send for our free illustrated catalogue.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE & HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio.

RUBIFOAM

FOR THE TEETH

from a Sparkling RUBY Liquid to a Fragrant Pearly Foam

The use of RUBIFOAM is a delight. Its beauty and fragrance charm, while its cleansing and healthful qualities make it the ideal dentifrice.

25 cents at Druggists. Sample Bottle Free.

Address,
E. W. HOYT & Co., Lowell, Mass.

1,000,000 NOW IN USE

Which is overwhelming evidence that your home should have a

Boss Washing Machine

Will positively cleanse clothes in half the time required by other washers. Guaranteed not to tear the clothes. Saves labor, time and expense. You can easily earn one of these splendid labor-saving, economic machines free.

We have hundreds of letters like the following:

"I am using the Boss washer and will say it is a dandy. We used five others before I bought yours, but did not like any of them. The 'Boss' washes clean and is so easy to run I have told the whole neighborhood about it."

MRS. JOHN MARSH, Walloomsac, N. Y.

"A friend told me about the Boss Washing Machine and I had to go ten miles to get one. It is truly the 'Boss.' I have tried a good many washers, but yours is the best of them all."

MRS. E. C. DART, Richmond Centre, O.

Write for particulars and 1904 Souvenir.

BOSS WASHING MACHINE CO., Sta. H-2, Cincinnati, O.

LEADER FURNACE

SOLD BY MAIL

We're selling Leader Steel Furnaces all over this continent—even in Alaska. We ship them complete with pipe, registers, dampers, etc. Send dimensions of rooms to heat and get our free estimates of cost. We plan the work—draft full instructions; ship the complete equipment and we pay the freight. Anyone can set it—we guarantee success. We save you 30 to 50 per cent on the dealer's price. Write for free booklet telling of the man who "saved many a dollar."

Hess Warming and Ventilating Co.,
Room 711 Tacoma Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

A Position Is Open

Do you know where it is? We do. We have openings for high-grade men of all kinds—Executive, Technical, Clerical—paying from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. High grade exclusively. Write for plan and booklet.

HAPGOODS (Inc.),
Suite 507, 309 Broadway, New York.

Stewart Harkness

All America knows the HARTSHORN
Shade Roller

is the best. But look out for counterfeits. The genuine has the signature on the label as above. Get the improved.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE

of Standard bred poultry for 1904, printed in colors, fine chromo, suitable for framing, illustrates and describes 60 varieties. Gives reasonable prices for stock and eggs, tells all about poultry, their diseases, lice, etc. This book only 10 cents.

B. H. GREIDER, RHEIMS, PA.

VIGOROUS CHICKS

are the results of Petaluma Incubators.

They maintain Nature's conditions. They have no accidents, make no failures. Catalogue free.

PETALUMA INCUBATOR COMPANY,
Box 61, Petaluma, Cal. Box 14, Indianapolis, Ind.

Reduced Rates on Household from Colorado, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Beckins Household Shipping Co., 95-P Washington St., Chicago

THE STORMS OF LIFE*

How Christ Tranquilizes and Protects His People in Time of Trial

VERY familiar is the phrase on the lips of people who do not think much of God's control of events, "a run of ill-luck." It has passed into a proverb that misfortunes rarely come alone. There are periods when sickness, financial loss, and bereavement, fall upon a man at the same time. Or it may be some other two or three of the ills that flesh is heir to, appear to have formed a combination, and the blows fall heavily and rapidly. The ship of life toils through a heaving sea, the rains descend and the winds blow, the sun is obscured and the steering gear is out of order. It may be that sins committed long ago and almost forgotten by the sinner, suddenly come to fruition, and the consequences come in a desolating blow. Few lives escape without some such tempests. The good and the wicked experience them, and for a time life seems scarcely worth living. The impatient man and the coward throw it off, and make an end of their earthly troubles by suicide; the brave man makes a fight and meets the storm with a valiant heart; the Christian appeals to his God, and receives strength to bear and to act and tries to learn the lesson that God designs the storm to teach. Patient waiting, confident trust in Christ's love, unshaken faith in God's wisdom and care—these support the sufferer, and though the storm may rage long, and he may suffer heavily, he enjoys in his soul the peace that passes understanding.

These see the works of the Lord (Ps. 107: 24). "I could never bear such trouble as yours," said a prosperous Christian merchant, condoling with a friend whose misfortunes had driven him into bankruptcy. The reply was, "You might bear it if God gave you his grace sufficient for the trial." "No," said the prosperous man, "I know I should collapse." A few years later, having suffered by a fire, by the dishonesty of a trusted employe, and by the failure of a relative for whom he had made himself financially responsible, he discovered that he was insolvent and must become a bankrupt. Did he collapse as he had expected? No, instead of that, he became a stronger Christian. He learned in his trial to his amazement, that the grace of God was more potent than he had supposed. It was sufficient for him. He learned by experience that it could do for him that which, before, he had believed to be impossible.

He raiseth the stormy wind (Ps. 107: 25). It is an important thing for the Christian to know that it is God whose hand is trying him. The discipline is easier to bear when it comes from a loving hand. A man who was sorely tried, went to a Bishop in France for consolation. "God does not love me, I fear," said the poor man, "otherwise he would not let these difficulties beset me." The Bishop said: "The King of France wanted a commander for the castle of Montleberri, and another for the castle of La Rochelle. Now you know that Montleberri is a place of ease and safety; but La Rochelle is exposed to the attacks of the enemy. The commander of La Rochelle needs to be an able, alert, resourceful man. Does the officer appointed by the king to that post think that his master has no respect or love for him? Does it not rather show his confidence and appreciation? Go home, my man, and do your duty in your trial. God is honoring you."

He maketh the storm a calm (Ps. 107: 29). Sometimes God does this by hushing the winds; but more frequently by giving an inward peace that is unruffled by the storm outside. Sometimes he does it by removing his child after he has made a brave fight. When Bishop Ridley was condemned to be burned for being a Protestant, he was quite tranquil. A friend offered to sit up with him on the night before his execution, but Ridley said there was no need. He would go to bed as usual and expected to sleep as soundly as ever he did in his life, and so he did. At the stake, when the flames were kindled, he said to Latimer, who was to be burned with him: "Be of good cheer, Brother, for God will either assuage the fury of the flames or give us strength to endure them."

*Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union, for March 6, Ps. 107: 23-31.

MELLIN'S

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

FOOD

Baby's bright eyes, rosy cheeks, firm flesh and sound limbs are the results of using Mellin's Food.

You will be glad that you sent for a sample of Mellin's Food when you see how eagerly baby takes it.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS

OUR 31 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

and continued success is a guarantee to you of good quality and fair dealing. WE HAVE NO AGENTS anywhere but sell direct to you, thus saving you the agent's and dealer's profit. We are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling on this plan exclusively. We ship for examination guaranteeing safe delivery. You are out nothing if not satisfied. Our large illustrated catalogue is free. Send for it.

No. 726—Spindle Seat Driving Wagon. Price complete $38. As good as sells for $25 more.

No. 637—Fancy Painted and Trimmed Top Buggy. Price complete $52.50. As good as sells for $25 more.

No. 335—Canopy Top Surrey, with removable rear seat. Price complete $73. As good as sells for $30 more.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MFG. CO.
ELKHART, IND.

The CORNELL

patented system of temperature regulation, and perfected system of ventilation. The Cornell ventilates in Nature's way. Gets the proper moisture lines at the right time—in any locality—under all conditions and at any season of the year. Result: Healthiest and most vigorous chicks ever obtained by artificial incubation. Cabinet construction. Compound door. Table top. Gold Medal: Highest Award at Buffalo Pan American Exposition.

Peep-O'-Day Brooders are the brooders that are used exclusively by the largest and most successful poultrymen. On the market 12 years. Thousands of testimonials. Our very large, finely illustrated catalogue contains valuable information. Copy mailed free for the asking. Poultry and Pet Stock supplies of all kinds.

Cornell Incubator Mfg. Company,
Box 83, Ithaca, N. Y.

Auburn, Me., June 24, 1903.
Cornell Incubator Mfg. Co.,
Ithaca, New York.
Gentlemen: The four Peep-O'-Day Brooders purchased from you this spring have given the best of satisfaction. Are easy to clean and operate. Have lost no chickens, and am confident it is the best brooder made.
Yours sincerely,
B. A. WALKER.

GEM Incubators

AND BROODERS SAVE ONE HALF
Guaranteed to equal the work of any. Fine, healthy chicks assured. New catalog contains convincing evidence. It is free. Be fair to yourself and send for it today.
GEM INCUBATOR CO., Drawer W, Dayton O.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Grocers and Churches. Address COILED SPRING FENCE CO.
Box D. Winchester, Ind.

Deafness Overcome

A Device That Is Scientific, Simple, Direct, and Instantly Restores Hearing in Even the Oldest Person—Comfortable, Invisible and Perfect Fitting.

190 Page Book Containing a History of Discovery and Many Hundred Signed Testimonials from All Parts of the World—SENT FREE.

The True Story of The Invention of Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums by George H. Wilson, the Inventor.

I was deaf from infancy. Eminent doctors, surgeons and ear specialists treated me at great expense and did me no good. I tried all the artificial appliances that claimed to restore hearing, but they failed to fit me in the least. I even went to the best specialists in the world, but their efforts were unavailing.

My case was pronounced incurable! I grew desperate; my deafness tormented me. I was becoming more of a recluse, avoiding the companionship of people because of the annoyance deafness and sensitiveness caused me. Finally I began to experiment on myself, and after patient year study, labor and personal expense, I perfected a thing that I found took the place of the natural drums, and I called it Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drum, which I now wear day and night with perfect comfort, and do not even have to remove them when washing. No one can tell I am wearing them, as do not show, and as they give no discomfort whatever scarcely know it myself.

With these drums I can now hear a whisper. I in the general conversation and hear everything around me. I can hear a sermon or lecture from part of a large church or hall. My general health improved because of the great change my Ear Drums have made in my life. My spirits are bright and cheerful. I am a relieved, changed man.

Since my fortunate discovery it is no longer necessary for any deaf person to carry a trumpet, a tube, or other such old-fashioned makeshift. My Common Sense Ear Drum is built on the strictest scientific principles, contains no metal, wires, or strings of any kind, and is entirely new and up to date in respects. It is so small that no one can see it in position, yet it collects all the sound waves focuses them against the drum head, causing to hear naturally and perfectly. It will do this when the natural ear drums are partially or entirely destroyed, perforated, scarred, relaxed, or thickened. It fits any ear from childhood to old age, male, female, and aside from the fact that it does not irritate never causes the least irritation, and can be worn with comfort day and night without removal for any cause.

With my device I can overcome deafness in person, no matter how acquired, whether from catarrh, scarlet fever, typhoid or brain fever, measles, whooping cough, gatherings in the ear, shocks from artillery or through accidents. My invention not only comes, but at once stops the progress of deafness all roaring and buzzing noises. The greatest surgeons in the world recommend it, as well as physicians of all schools. It will do for you what no medicine or medical skill on earth can do.

I want to place my 190-page book on deafness in the hands of every deaf person in the world. I will gladly send it free to anyone whose name and address I get. It describes and illustrates Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums and contains bona fide letters of numerous users in the United States, Canada, Mexico, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, India, and the remotest islands. I have letters from people in every station of life: ministers, physicians, lawyers, merchants, social ladies, etc.—and tell the truth about the benefits derived from my wonderful little device. You find the names of people in your own town and state many whose names you know, and I am sure that this will convince you that the remedy for deafness at last has been solved by my invention.

Don't delay; write for the free book to-day address my firm—The Wilson Ear Drum Co., 144 T Building, Louisville, Ky., U. S. A.

Christ in the Ship
Safety and Blessing for Those Who Trust
BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

In the life of every one of us storms come. The enemy has his part in it, and so arranges circumstances that everything seems at one and the same time to go wrong. But there are storms which God sends: as in the case of Jonah, to hinder his children from some line of action which is wrong and displeasing to him. But there are other occasions in which he lets the enemy do his worst, as in the case of Job, when he lost all: children, camels, asses, sheep, cattle, crops, servants—all swept away in a day; and afterwards himself smitten with a painful and loathsome sickness. God had a great purpose in this storm. Job knew God, but God would make it possible for him to know him, in a way he had never conceived; so that at the end of his trial he could say, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye see thee; therefore, I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes" (Job. 42: 5). God never wastes his discipline; he does not deal thus with one who is not a perfect man and an upright, one that fears God and eschews evil (Job 1: 1). He educates such as prize his education.

It there are few—perhaps not one—who can learn to understand him without being put to the test in storms of untoward circumstances. How often, after a time of calm, some violent storm will be permitted to break out in a Christian family! It may be that sickness and death may come upon one member after another, and this can never again settle down as before it may be that some yet greater calamity may come—dishonor, disgrace, through the wrongdoing of some member or, again, it may be the loss of property or difficult and unforeseen business complications. But where his children are here is he; "Lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the consummation of the age" (Matt. 28: 20, R. V. margin). And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8: 28). If he is in the ship though he may seem to sleep, all is under his control and all is working together for our good. It cannot be otherwise.

Jesus was in the boat. This was a matter of the first importance, as we see from the result. Dear, tried child of God, is Jesus in the boat with you? In the midst of the storm, are you quite sure he is with you? You may not hear him, feel him, or see him for the darkness, but do you know he is there? If so, speak to him. He cannot, will not, refuse to answer. "But," you say, "things are getting worse and worse; all seems more and more hopeless." Then, all the sooner, make your definite appeal to him, but do it with an absolute certainty that he does hear and does care about everything that touches you. You may say, "It is too far gone, nothing can be done now." But you have to do with Almightyness, and nothing is too hard for the Lord. The disciples cried, "Lord, save us, we perish"; they did not dictate as to how the deliverance should come. "Save us," was their one request: he knew how.

And he did it. Creation owned its Lord; the waves calmed and wind stilled under the word of him who had called them into being. He can do as much for you. But he taught them the lesson: "Why are ye fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" And the ignorant disciples transferred the fear of the elements to fear of him. "They feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of Man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?" It is a good thing, in the midst of the storms which overtake us, to consider: What has God permitted this? What has he taught me? The lives of some of us, besides the great storms from time to time, have a perpetually "choppy" sea; there is seldom a day of real calm. But is not this a proof of the jealous will of Him who is educating us, day by day, that he may accomplish his work in us in conforming us to his image? A master who finds some of his pupils making great progress, will give them extra lessons, that they may move on and more do him credit. Oh, to do credit to his workmanship! (Eph. 2: 10).

REAL ESTATE WANTED
.. AND FOR SALE ..

To the Man who wants to BUY

IF YOU want to buy any kind of real estate in any part of the country, I will guarantee to promptly fill your requirements and save you some money at the same time. It doesn't matter what kind of a property you want, or how much or how little money you want to pay, you will get the best possible service regardless of the size of the transaction. Write to-day for full particulars concerning any of the following properties, or tell me just what kind of a property you want.

To the Man who wants to SELL

IF YOU want to sell any kind of real estate, no matter where it is or what it is worth, send for my plan for converting property into cash. It's free. Eight years' experience, offices in principal cities, hundreds of representatives and an expenditure of over $100,000 a year in advertising, give me better facilities for quickly selling your property than any other broker anywhere. Send description and price of your property to-day.

- Ariz., Tucson, good 6-r. house and lot.
- Ark., Booneville, 3-r. house and 5 A.
- Ark., Lee Co., 200 A. impd. corn and cotton land.
- Cal., Napa Co., 72 A. expd. farm.
- Cal., Oakland, mod. 8-r. house and lot.
- Cal., San Bernardino Co., 10 A. impd. orange grove.
- Cal., Lake Co., 320 A. and impts.
- Cal., Orange Co., 21 A.; 7 A. bearing walnuts.
- Cal., Los Angeles Co., 10 A. planted to prunes and almonds.
- Cal., Oakland, store, flat and lot.
- Cal., Shasta Co., 160 A. and impts.
- Can., N. S., Wolfville, 11-room res. and lot.
- Can., Assa., 640 A. grain land.
- Colo., Colo. Springs, good house and grounds.
- Colo., Kit Carson Co., 641 A. and impts.
- Colo., Powers Co., 200 A. farm, finest irrigation.
- Colo., Larimer Co., fine 35 A. farm.
- Denver, 2 bldg. lots, Highlands Place.
- Colo., Otero Co., 640 A. leased land and impts.
- Colo., Douglas Co., 120 A. and impts.
- Colo., Boulder, 3 lots, 8th and Euclid Ave.
- Colo., Cripple Creek, good house and lot.
- Conn., Windham Co., 175 A. and impts.
- Conn., on Sound between New London and Watch Hill, magnificent res. prop., 3 A., boats, carriages, wagons, etc.
- Conn., Danbury, 3 excellent bus. bldgs.
- Main and Library Sts., containing stores and offices, 2 fine 3-family res. blocks, 2 vacant lots; valued at $100,000. Must be sold quickly. Price, $36,000.
- Conn., Bakerville, good 10-room res. 1 1/2 A.
- Fla., Orange Co., 10 A. orange grove.
- Fla., Bartow, res. and 1/4 A. choice fruit.
- Fla., Florahome, 7 A. impd. fruit and truck land.
- Fla., Dade Co., 100 A. and impts. on Biscayne Bay. Fine winter hotel site.
- Ill., Lodi, 7-r. house and 1 1/2 A.
- Chicago, 4 fine bldg. lots Drake ave.
- Ill., Clark Co., good farm 187 A.
- Chicago, West Highlands near Blue Island, 2 bldg. lots.
- Chicago, Grossdale, good res. and lot.
- Ill., Jasper Co., fine farm 210 A.
- Chicago, Harvey, 2 lots 210 Ave. bkn. 154th and 155th Sts.
- Ind., Fountain Co., finely improved farm, 226 A.
- Ia., Allamakee Co., 120 A. and impts.
- Ia., Marshall Co., 243 A. and impts.
- Kans., Barber Co., 320 A. and impts.
- Ky., Covington, good house and lot.
- Ky., Meade Co., 140 A. fruit and impts.
- Me., Saco, furnished seashore cottage and 1 A.
- Mich., Dorchester Co., fine farm 130 A.; impts.
- Mich., Westminister, fine mod. res. and lot.
- Mass., Fitchburg, 13-r. res. and lot.
- Mass., Malden, 8-r. res. and grounds.
- Boston, 3 fine lots Evelyn St., Bluehill Ave.
- Mass., Cordville, 16-r. house.
- Mass., Chappaquiddac Island, opposite Edgartown, 52 bldg. lots, fine summer res. sites.
- Mass., Hampshire Co., 40 A. dairy farm.
- Mich., Allegan Co., 48 A. and impts. located in fruit belt.
- Mich., Antrim Co., 80 A. and impts.
- Detroit, good 12-room res. and lot. Grand River Ave.
- Minn., Hubbard Co., 320 A. and impts.
- Mo., Harrison Co., impd. fruit farm, 37 A.
- Mo., near Licking, 320 A. mostly timber.
- Mo., Crawford Co., 320 A. timberland.
- Mont., Madison Co., finely expd. stock ranch 2,700 A. deeded; 3,000 A. leased; well watered.
- Mont., Yellowstone Co., 260 A. and impts.; 130 A. alfalfa.
- Nebr., Banner Co., 160 A. land.
- Nebr., Cheyenne Co., hay and grazing ranch, 2,503 A. deeded; 640 A. school land.
- Nebr., Garfield Co., 800 A. expd. farm; also 800 A. relinquishments; 5,000 A. free range.
- N. J., near Pleasant Plains, 10 1/2 A. and impts.
- N. J., Lyndhurst, factory site 4 1/4 A. on Lackawanna R. R.
- N. J., near Trenton, fine country estate 80 A. Colonial res. 16-r.; 2 baths; numerous outbldgs.
- N. Y., 6 mi. from Ithaca, 60 A. and impts.
- N. Y., Seneca Co., 105 A. fruit farm and impts.; all thoroughly underdrained.
- N. Y., Albion, 40 A. highly cultivated.
- N. Y., Townsendsville, 8-r. res. and 1 A.
- N. Y., Kenmore, good lot, Hazeltine Ave.
- N. Y., Ulster Co., 163 A. and impts.
- N. Y., Warren Co., 142 A. and impts.
- N. Y., Steuben Co., 134 A. and impts.
- N. Y., Schenectady, Bellevue res. and lot.
- N. Y., Albany Co., 128 A. and impts.
- N. Y., 4 mi. from Catskill, 57 A. farm; excellent location for country res. or boarding house.
- L. I., near Port Jefferson, 10 A. land.
- N. Y., Columbia Co., fine farm 175 A.
- N. Y., Mt. Vernon, fine mod. 20-r. res.
- N. Y., City, Fordham Heights, 2 bldg. lots.
- N. Y., Rochester, 7-r. cottage and lot.
- N. D., Tower City, 160 A. land.
- N. D., Burleigh Co., splendidly located townsite; at junction of 2 railroads; locality building up rapidly.
- N. D., Cass Co., 160 A. good land.
- Ohio, Kent, good 10-r. res. and lot.
- Ohio, near Ashtabula, 42 A. fine 12-r. res.
- Ohio, Martin's Ferry, 7-r. res. and lot.
- Ohio, Erie Co., fine farm 140 A. and impts.
- Ohio, Guernsey Co., 150 A. and impts.
- Ohio, Georgetown, The Gen'l Grant Homestead.
- Okl., Logan Co., 160 A. and impts.
- Okl., Kingfisher, 8 A. orchard and res. site.
- Pa., Reading, mod. 14-r. store and res. prop.; cigar factory in rear.
- Pa., Johnstown, mod. cor. res. and lot.
- Pa., Bradford Co., 132 A. and impts.
- Pa., Bryn Mawr, 2 frame stores and dwellings, and 1 brick store and dwelling; lot 84 x 211 feet.
- Pa., near Doylestown, country res., 40 A.
- Pa., Wayne Co., 214 A. and impts.
- Pa., Columbia Co., 11 A.; impts.; near Bloomsburg.
- Pa., Venango Co., 100 A. and impts.
- Pa., Potter Co., 70 A. and impts.
- Pa., Easton, 10 A. suitable for bldg. lots.
- R. I., Warwick, 8 mi. from Providence; 600 fine bldg. lots; valuable either for investment or market gardening.
- S. D., Sioux Falls, modern res.; 3 lots.
- Tex., Grayson Co., 110 A. and impts.
- Tex., San Antonio, 2 modern res.
- Tex., Brazoria Co., 300 A. good rice land.
- Vt., Randolph Centre, fine large res. and 4 A. suitable for club or sanitarium.
- Vt., Rutland Co., 29 A. and impts.
- Vt., Wallingford, 11-r. res. and grounds.
- Wash., Douglas Co., 160 A. and impts.
- Wash., Vashon Island, King Co., 40 A., 2nd growth timberland.
- Wash., King Co., 160 A. and impts.
- Wash., Clallam Co., 80 A. timberland.
- Wis., Milwaukee, 9-r. res. and lot.
- Wis., Waukesha Co., 288 A. and impts.
- Wis., Clark Co., 40 A. timberland.

W. M. OSTRANDER, Suite 161, North American Building, Philadelphia

Spinal Curvature Corrected in Your Own Home

We offer a certain relief to all who suffer from this terrible affliction. Throw away the cumbersome and expensive leather and plaster Paris jackets and try our Scientific Spinal Appliance.

It does not encase the body like a vise, but allows perfect freedom of movement. It weighs ounces where others weigh pounds. It is 10 per cent cheaper than the old methods and 100 per cent better. It conforms to the shape of the body so that no one would notice it. It can be worn by the smallest child or the oldest adult with perfect ease and comfort. It will give permanent relief in any case of spinal curvature. They are not made up in large quantities, but each one is made to measure, to meet the individual case, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. If you or any of your friends suffer from any form of Spinal Trouble, write us at once and we will give you full particulars as to how your curvature may be corrected, without inconvenience or discomfort, and Without Leaving Your Own Home. Address, PHILCO BURT MFG. CO., 30 Second St., JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM

Relieved Without Medicine

An external remedy so sure that the makers send it FREE ON APPROVAL. Try it.

Send your name and address to the makers of Magic Foot Drafts, the great Michigan remedy for every kind of rheumatism—Chronic or Acute, Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter where located or how severe. You'll get a pair of the Drafts by return mail—prepaid—free on approval. If they give relief, send them a dollar; if not, keep your money. You decide.

Magic Foot Drafts are worn without inconvenience and relieve rheumatism in every part of the body by drawing out the poisonous acids in the blood through the great foot pores. You can see that this offer is proof of their merit, for hundreds of thousands of persons answer these advertisements, and only those who are satisfied with the benefit they receive, send any money. Write to-day to Magic Foot Draft Co., R. A., 27 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a trial pair and be relieved. A valuable illustrated book on rheumatism also sent free.

SOLID INVESTMENT

Our new illustrated booklet No. 18 "Solid Investment," "Saving Made Easy," "Banking by Mail," Etc., should be in the hands of every person seeking a safe and profitable investment—whether $10.00 or $10,000. Send to-day for a copy

PITTSBURGH BANK FOR SAVINGS
SMITHFIELD ST. 4TH AVENUE
ESTABLISHED 1862 PITTSBURGH PA.

Farmers' Handy Wagon

With 4-Inch Tire Steel Wheels

Low and handy. Saves labor. Wide tires, avoid cutting farm into ruts. Will hold up any two-horse load. We also furnish Steel Wheels to fit any axle. Any size wheel, any width of tire. Catalogue free. EMPIRE MANUFACTURING CO., Box 98, Quincy, Ill.

RESIDENT SUSPENDERS
Comfort and service. Guaranteed—"All breaks made good." 50c and $1.00. Any shop or by mail. C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO., Box 209, Shirley, Mass.

When you think of FLOUR
Think of GOLD MEDAL

"FOR GOODNESS SAKE"

Washburn-Crosby Co.
MINNEAPOLIS

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SEE PAGE 185

New York's Underground Railway---One of the 49 Subway Stations

FUN FOR THE CHILDREN

This Book of Jingles

Illustrated by PETER NEWELL

FREE to Readers of The Christian Herald

We are giving away this book to introduce our brand of PURE BORAX. And after you have used Borax once, you won't require any inducement to buy a second box. This book is an intensely funny story in clever jingles and contains 12 full-page drawings by the inimitable Peter Newell---reproduced in colors. It is beautifully printed on fine paper and bound in board covers. It is, in short, an admirable piece of book-making as well as a very funny book. It is a book that will delight every child and in fact every body who has a sense of humor. It has been pronounced by some, one of Mr. Newell's funniest productions. To those who send us a box top from a lb. package of 20-MULE-TEAM BORAX which may be bought at any grocery or drug store---(and 4 cents in stamps to cover postage) we will send carefully wrapped, a copy of this Book. As the edition is limited, requests should be made promptly. Address "Dept. A, Pacific Coast Borax Co., N. Y. City."

A WORD ABOUT BORAX

Everyone who values cleanliness and sweetness should use BORAX. IT is the best thing that nature or science has given us to wash with. In the toilet, bath, laundry, kitchen---in every cleansing process of the home, BORAX should be used. You will be astonished to find how much more delightful and really cleansing it makes the bath; how much easier and cleaner you can wash things by adding a little BORAX to the water. But care should be taken to get PURE Borax as imitations are worthless and often injurious. Ask for 20-MULE-TEAM BRAND---it is ABSOLUTELY PURE. For sale by druggists and grocers everywhere.

PACIFIC COAST BORAX CO.,

NEW YORK

CHICAGO

Largest Miners and Refiners of Pure Borax in the World

SAN FRANCISCO

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY MAGAZINE

TWO SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS

THE COLLEGE IN THE MOUNTAINS, SHAWANEE VILLAGE IN DISTANCE

KENTUCKY MOUNTAINEERS

LINCOLN'S NOBLEST MEMORIAL

It is the College at Cumberland Gap, where the Mountain Youth are Now Educated and Trained—A Promising Outlook

By GEN. O. O. HOWARD

YOUR readers are so familiar with the industrial educational work at Tuskegee, Alabama, that I need give nothing but a simple reference to it, to illustrate a similar institution for Southern white boys and girls. It provides instruction necessary to a common business life; also everything that pertains to the normal school, with a view to training the pupils for teaching; but mainly that institution rests upon an industrial basis.

Now, as Booker T. Washington and his friends are working successfully in industrial lines of every description among the colored people of Alabama, and also through them extending their efforts to other States; so my associates and myself, several years ago, began an educational enterprise, named Lincoln Memorial University, at the best centre we could select in the mountain country, for the benefit of the youth of the mountains near the famous Cumberland Gap. There is not so much romance connected with these mountains, because their folk were white and have never been slaves. Their ancestors came for the most part from the highlands of Scotland, parts of England and Ireland.

I need not stop to tell you that they have been left behind in every advantage that pertains to our present educational and industrial development. As nine-tenths of them were always loyal to the flag and to the country, and especially so in the late Civil War, it has hitherto operated in a manner unfavorable to them. But the war feuds are now over. The sons and daughters of both sides are in absolute harmony at our Lincoln Memorial, as are the members of our board of teachers and managers. There are scarcely any colored people in the mountains. Last summer, in my long rides through three mountain counties of Kentucky, along the upper waters of the Kentucky River and its branches, I did not see one negro until I returned to Jackson, which is a small city of some two thousand inhabitants, situated high up in the mountain country. There I found a small settlement of colored people.

Our Grant-Lee Hall is situated on the old "Four Seasons" estate. It was left there when the Four Seasons Hotel was demolished by wreckers, because of the failure of the hotel corporation. We bought in the hotel property, raising the money little by little. Mr. Andrew Carnegie helped me to pay off the last mortgage in the sum of thirty-three hundred dollars, saying to me as he did so:

"General, let me pay the mortgage now. Is it possible that there are descendants of Scotch people who can not read and write? I will consider your interests further by and by." Mr. Elisha S. Converse, of Boston, also aided us very much in running expenses, giving me besides a conditional promise of $10,000 if I would raise enough to make the endowment $200,000. I sent this proposition to Mr. Carnegie when he was in Skibo, Scotland. He wrote promptly that he would duplicate Mr. Converse's offer. We kept on, aided by one friend and another, till we had secured subscriptions to the additional wing, which we call "The Domestic Science Department." Here the young women will be taught practical work, as in the Pratt Institute of Brooklyn. They will here learn what belongs to domestic economy, which they could not learn in their small, two-roomed houses in the mountains.

Our industrial enterprises include a saw-mill, a shingle mill, and a planing and grist mill. The students are divided into small detachments, for work a part of each day. Some put in the crops and take care of them (each year we have had over a hundred acres of grain crops); some attend to the ten acres of gardening; some have been making brick, doing carpenter work or other trade labor; some are at work in the printing office; and others, both young men and young women, are engaged in stenography, type-writing and photography. Grant-Lee Hall is a hive of industry.

I will say of the results of our enterprise thus far, that we have sent out forty-eight teachers, fairly well trained, into as many different districts of the mountains, and they have been thoroughly acceptable to the people. In some of the districts I have seen such wonderful changes in the manner of living, housekeeping, cooking, policing and other things that pertain to the preservation of health and comfort, that I have been surprised at the rapidity of the teachers' successful operations; and, what is to the purpose, these changes are welcome to the residents.

Our charter is broad enough to cover university privileges. Thus far we have had in our academic department merely the ordinary grades, from kindergarten to high school; adapting ourselves to the necessities of the young people, who come to us often with very little, if any, "book knowledge." In our normal department, we have planned a good normal course. The student teachers, getting what preparation they can after their winter or summer schools, will return to us to continue their studies. When a pupil finally graduates in the normal department, he or she will be thoroughly prepared for teaching. In the Industrial Department, we have had a supervisor of farming and gardening. We also have had a supervisor of building, who teaches brick-making, stone-cutting and carpentering; a supervisor of the mills—which are not only self-supporting but productive of income. The large farm itself—over six hundred acres—is partly wooded, but very much of it is capable of thorough cultivation.

Dr. J. H. Larry, our President, supervises all for a very small salary. He has about a dozen assistants.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 185

A GROUP OF THE GRANT-LEE COLLEGE WORKERS

amount required. As this endowment cannot be touched, we shall need money for running expenses during this year.

One log house of ours, not far from Harrow Hall, was once a little church, from the front of which Henry Clay addressed thousands of mountain people, who came down by the horse trails from every side to hear him speak. It was when he was canvassing the State of Tennessee in political campaigns.

Avary Hall, our girls' dormitory, which is now completed, will hold over one hundred girls, and has an

The American Pulpit

HUNGER SATISFIED

A Sermon by REV. D. C. EGGLESTON

Pastor of the First Congregational Church, Greenwich, Conn.

TEXT—LUKE 14: 17: "Come, for all things are now ready"

Great suppers imply great hungers. Man is measured by his hungers; they are the gauge of life. The degree of hunger indicates the extent of the vital processes going on between man and his environment. As a bricklayer's call for more materials is an indication that he is at work, so hunger is a sign of activity and the production of energy. It signifies upbuilding and enlargement. An unfed vital system, like an unfueled engine, is powerless. As the voltage is determined by the metre in connection with the dynamo, so the life power of a man is as the hungers that indicate the vitality being produced. Slight appetite indicates the production of little physical vitality; a little craving for the truth means a small result in mentality, and a meagre desire for affection means spiritual inactivity.

There are two ways of satisfying hungers. One is inactivity, the calling of a strike of vital processes. There's no demand for materials where there is nothing doing. Shiftlessness, apathy and indifference will take the keen edge out of all hungers. The other way is to provide supplies according to the demand, in order that all normal functions may go on. Humanity has the appearance of having tried the experiment of combining the two methods with unsatisfactory results. There is a lack of proportion and balance in life. Judged by any worthy ideal of manhood and womanhood the experiment is a failure, and ought to be abandoned as soon as possible.

Poor Feeding Causes Low Vitality

There are many conditions of deformity and lack of development that religious science says ought to be corrected. Children are born with weak germinal elements and forces, because the parents were ill-fed. There is weak-mindedness from lack of mental nourishment. The instincts, intuitions and aspirations are like sickly plants, while the moral attributes have either never been awakened or have been hushed to sleep by some anæsthetic. Eyes are dim of vision, and ears of hearing, while hands hang down in helplessness, because of a lack of vigorous application in the work of life. A great family of famine-stricken members of the "lean-kine" kind, in need of seven years of plenty, are on every side. Then, there are the sin-scourged, husked, prodigal kind in need of the "father's house, where there is bread enough and to spare." Altogether, in a large sense, man is essentially ill-fed.

The parable of the great supper from which the text is taken, suggests that the trouble does not come from a lack at the base of supplies, but that it is a matter of indisposition. When one of them who sat at meat with Jesus heard the things of interest concerning the kingdom of God, he said unto him, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." Jesus immediately followed with the parable of the supper, setting forth the fact that notwithstanding the seeming desirability of so eating the bread of the kingdom, people were not clamoring for seats at the table, and that very pressing invitations were receiving very scant courtesy.

In considering the question of hungers and their satisfactions, we need to recognize that the providential preparation of supplies is equal to all demands. There is oxygen, hydrogen and nitrogen enough for the needs of every living thing. Sunlight is lavishly poured out, and all basic elements entering into vital processes are fully adequate to all possible demands. In every stage of creation, the supplies were ready for that which was to follow.

Supply for Every Need

As man appears and develops, every supply is ready in the fulness of the time of the demands. There are pastures and herds for primitive needs, and the soil and seeds are ready for the early harvests. Man finds fuel for fires, fibres for clothing, seas and winds for ships, streams for water-wheels, and metals for the arts. There is mathematics for Kepler, gravitation for Newton, steam for Watt, electricity for Morse, and systems of celestial objects for Copernicus. The hunger of the Hebrews for moral law; of the Greeks for lines of grace and beauty of form; and of the Romans for ideas of organization, are all provided for in the inherent nature of things. Nature can satisfy Titian's hunger for color, or Beethoven's cravings for harmonies. The spiritual message is ready for Isaiah, and man's everlasting hunger for oneness with the infinite Creator and Father is supplied in Jesus. For the satisfaction of the hunger for the consciousness of the ever-present God abiding in every secret place, the Holy Spirit is abundantly poured out. There is not a conceivable hunger in all the range of man's appetites, faculties, or attributes that is not provided for in the supplies of creation and revelation.

Preparation implies invitation. The invitation is as all-inclusive as the preparation. As the dew-drop is a miniature reflection of the sun, so the text, "Come, for all things are now ready," is an epitome of

The Universal Invitation

that is an essential and inherent fact of the preparation. Invitation is in the nature of God, and is repeated in everything he has done and said. It is the heart of the law of the higher order seeking the lower, that appears even in inanimate nature. There is an evolution of invitation. It is a developing, inherent element that is never absent. The law of crystallization invites chaotic matter to accept conditions of character and become distinguished by a definite and reliable order of existence. Just so, the acorn invites the inorganic elements to receive its laws and potencies, and enter into the structure and life of the oak. The bird invites the seed and berry to become plumage, song and flight, and God invites man to come into his image, to bear his nature and character, and to be one with himself; and so, Creation ends in Redemption. The universe and revelation are searching for every faculty and attribute of man, no matter how latent or obscure; inviting them to activity in research; to higher stages of development, and to nobler service.

REV. D. C. EGGLESTON

Preparation and invitation of such scope anticipate a magnanimous acceptance. Hungers so varied, supplies so ample, and invitations so general and urgent, ought to issue in a united and complete responsiveness of man's nature. Alas for the results as indicated by the excuses which are made that indicate lack of hunger. Limited ranges of hunger show a narrow type of life. The invitation meant more than things for the senses; it meant hospitality of spirit and generosity of deed; it was a call away from isolation and sordid pursuits; there was offered an Opportunity of Appreciation and rich fellowships. It is said that Dickens in one of his stories tells of a woman who had withdrawn into a life of selfishness. In order to find her you had to enter a dark, winding passage, go through a subterranean way, and finally climb a narrow stairway, at the head of which was a small door on which was the word "woman." Here was one who had excused herself from the feast that nourishes all noble qualities, and had devoted her energies to a narrow, sensuous life, until she was shrunken and almost lost to all worthy purposes. It is a picture of the soul's retreat and failure. Indifference to, and neglect of, the higher ideals, rob us of beauty, tenderness and love.

The temptation to occupy the time in turning stones into bread comes to all men. The appetites seek to get the monopoly of life, and absorb the rights of the mental faculties, and of the spiritual attributes; but the temptation is to be resisted, even as Christ resisted. Those who excuse themselves from the finer issues of life, often appear satisfied with their commonplace pursuits and pleasures, but they are missing their possibilities, and are not at peace. They are hungry for happiness, and are seeking it with the swiftness of the wings of the morning; but they are seeking it on the plane of life where it does not adequately develop.

A man recently said to a wealthy acquaintance: "see you are enjoying automobiling." He replied: "O well, it is the latest diversion." Diversion is only temporal and superficial enjoyment at best.

The Law of Life is that all the lower elements shall be taken up in the higher experiences or forms of life. Failure in this means degradation. As food only distresses a person when the digestive system does not change into living tissue, so the material and superficial things of life only bring dissatisfaction to those who have no power of spiritual assimilation. To change the figure of the soul is the die that characterizes the worth of things of sense, even as the character of a government determines the value of its currency. The inner intelligence and affection is the measure of all values, apart from these, the universe would be as nothing.

God only knows the real value of creation, because he alone has the perfect mind. The way of values, lands and oxen is like-mindedness with God. The treasures of the world would be as clay, were it not for the soul that estimates enduring qualities, and appreciates excellence and beauty. It is jokingly said that Boston is not a place, but a state of mind; but in seriousness, it may be said that Boston, and every other place of interest, is what it is because of a state of mind to know and appreciate it. Marion Crawford says, "that the novel that simply discovers the surface of things, the pageant, the armor, and the feasting, poor art; it must endeavor to paint the thoughts and feelings to be worthy." No limited or cramped nature can enter into great passions or experiences.

Men need relations with environment that are the conditions of spiritual development and force. I cause they have material supplies or have outwardly kept the law, they say what lack I yet? Jesus judged that such people lacked almost everything, and made his mission to awaken them to an inner consciousness of the deeper realities. A few supplies for the body multiply exceedingly under the transforming power of Christ, and a plain bill-of-fare for the appetites of the senses when the soul becomes a "treasury of knowledge and an inner sanctuary of hope," is all sufficient. When Dore was asked why he did not build a chateau, he replied: "Let my patrons do that, why should I who have no need of it; my chateau is here behind my forehead." Dore, like the Divine Master, had "meat that they know not of." He feasted with men of insight, in palaces of beauty, among the noblest inspirations and ideas. What justice or honor is there in gratifying the low desires, and denying freedom and opportunity to the only faculties that are appointed to have control and guidance?

Spiritual Food

It is a form of suicide to decline to accept of growth for that which is immortal. The great men of history are not those who have made excuses and have turned away from the storehouse of all good. They are the men who have felt the eloquence and tenderness of the soul's needs, and the persuasions that have come to them, and have responded with all of the passion of the natures.

The results of such responsiveness have been most satisfying. Moses accepted the invitation to come into the mount and be with God, and the law of life being was engraven in his nature. Paul was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, and he became a great and good apostle. Washington was not seeking, but sought the ideal for man, and is remembered as the "Father of his Country." Jesus surrendered himself to become the Bread and Water of life, and became the soul's everlasting strength and salvation. Every possible yearning and outreach of man may find its fulfilment in the nature of God. He gives himself his energy, his mind, his love, through the universe a revelation in order that we may become partakers of his nature and become one with him in purpose and love. Who dares to aspire to this fulness of life, let him "Come, for all things are now ready."

LINCOLN'S NOBLEST MEMORIAL

Continued from page 183

MOUNTAIN GIRLS FROM FOUR DIFFERENT STATES

rule, they take no newspapers, and they have no books. They do respond, when good people take them by the hand and teach them the way. They are naturally as intelligent as any of our mountain people in Vermont, in New Hampshire and in Maine, and all they need is that we should give them a good start in the race of life.

There is a peculiar sensitiveness on the part of these people, and those who have homes no better than Abraham Lincoln had when a boy, are not pleased to have their poverty exposed to the public gaze. I do not wonder at this, and I would not give you samples of the rougher dwellings, which we find all through the mountain country, as a rule from a half-mile to a mile apart, and filled with growing children. I assume that there are as an average, seven children to each family throughout those counties of Kentucky and East Tennessee, which I have penetrated.

I do not think that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could find anywhere a project more meritorious or deserving of support than the Lincoln Memorial University.

I quote from a letter from President Larry, who writes:

One of our girl students went out and taught in a distant district for twelve weeks, a school of eighty-three pupils. She has now returned to increase her knowledge. The branch school started at Shawanee, now numbers about fifty pupils, and our effort there is being very kindly received. Their advanced students are now coming to Grant-Lee University.

Thus our undenominational institution in the very centre of the great mountains, from which you can is good wife has thus far given her time most effectively, without compensation, to the care and guidance of the girls of the University. We have also an excellent woman immediately in charge of the girls' working department.

THE SEWING CLASS AT LINCOLN UNIVERSITY

This institution is one hundred and ten miles south of Berea College. My associates and I have worked it for the last five years, to make it a thorough object-lesson, where people can see and realize what is accomplished, and where the students receive practical assistance toward their life-work.

Some say to me, "Why not let the folks of the mountains do this themselves?" They simply cannot do

I am asked, "Why not influence them through public meetings and through the press and through good books?" My answer is, they have almost no villages throughout vast regions of the mountain country. As a see fifty miles in nearly every direction, is doing its part in raising up teachers of the right kind to occupy the districts where such teachers are needed, and where they go there is a wonderful uplifting in everything that pertains to the welfare of the people. All the old feuds will give way when enlightenment enters. Good roads and good schools will react upon family management and discipline, so that family disturbances and neighborhood quarrels will be replaced by something higher and better.

The University is now on a solid basis, and if anyone gives to strengthen and develop it, he does a great deal better thing than to send out people to talk about it in the South.

OLIVER O. HOWARD,
Major General U. S. Army (Retired), President
Board of Directors L. M. U.

NEW YORK'S UNDERGROUND RAILROAD

SEE PICTURE ON FIRST PAGE

A LINE of rapid transit, unequalled anywhere else in the world, will be completed in New York City, and opened to the public in the near future. Then vast multitudes of people who have been dangling from raps, been elbowed and pushed by crowds of seeming barbarians—who are quiet and inoffensive citizens anywhere else, except on crowded surface or elevated cars—will know the blessedness of a trip from City Hall to Harlem in fifteen minutes.

This journey will be made in vestibuled cars, with sliding doors, and all sorts of devices for running the trains with safety, and for making accidents impossible, by automatic signals, and cut-offs of the deadly current. The cars are built of asbestos and metal, and are fireproof, and as the power and illuminating circuits are separated, an accident to one does not affect the other. There are forty-nine stations on the line, and as to convenience and style they compare very favorably with any in the world. Passengers who are entering will not be interfered with by those leaving, as the modes of access and egress are numerous.

Separate stairways for arriving and departing passengers, prevent discomfort and dangerous crowding during "rush" hours. The stairways are broad, and lead to platforms twenty to forty feet wide, and two hundred feet long. "Bull's-eyes," most as numerous as the stars in the sky, are let into the ceilings of the stations, through which the daylight filters. But range to say of any place in New York City, the noise of the tumult overhead does not penetrate, and the subway is quiet, except for the sounds made by its own traffic.

Each station has its own color, and its own figure or letter, with various other devices indicative and typical of the neighborhood; so that a passenger residing in any particular district, will recognize his station by its color. Thus, white and blue are the predominant colors of the Columbia University station, while the coat-of-arms of the college is seen at intervals upon the walls of the station. The general decorations are a feature, the stations being lined with glazed brick, white and olive green in tint, with terra cotta friezes along the roof.

The immensity of work involved in building this underground railroad can scarcely be estimated, the obstacles encountered were such as could be found tions not to be found in any other city. It cost over $3,000,000 to take care of these." The power house is the largest ever built for any single operation in the world, and is twice as large as the Madison Square Garden.

The road as now constructed, consists of a four-track line from Broadway and Park Row to 104th St. and Broadway. The ceremony of breaking ground was held on March 24, 1900, and it is very gratifying to Contractor McDonald, as well as to a long-suffering public, to know that the road is so near completion, and that the time is very near when it will be open for general travel. Not long ago, Mayor McClellan and a party of city officials made an experimental trip underground on hand-cars. There was not an unfavorable comment from anyone. Contractor McDonald, who was one of the party, was the recipient of many congratulations. The amount of money expended to date on the subway enterprise, is $30,000,000.

Our illustration shows the Mayor's exploring party, Contractor McDonald on the left, as the car faces one; Comptroller Grout next; then Mr. Alex. S. Orr, Chairman of the Rapid Transit Commission, and Mayor McClellan on the right. Dr. Darlington, the Health Commissioner, would have been one of the party, but arriving a little late, he exclaimed, "Well, I at least have the distinction of being the first man to miss catching my subway train."

The party had every chance to observe the temperature, and the general atmosphere of the subway, and the travelers were a unit in expressing their satisfaction. There is nothing to remind one of the old-time gloomy and sulphurous railroad tunnels, dark, and full of foul gases, which nearly choke the half-suffocated passengers, as both motive and lighting power are electric.

When once the underground railroad is open to the New York public, the people will wonder how the city ever got along without it.

THE FIRST PASSENGER CAR IN NEW YORK'S UNDERGROUND RAILWAY

only in a city like New York. Mr. John B. McDonald, the contractor, says, in speaking of the natural and artificial difficulties encountered by the workmen in the subway: "One part is sand and another part is rock, while the streets are bisected by a network of sewers, water and gas mains, with their house connections; the surface railways, with their yokes and vaults, the steam-heating pipes, pneumatic tubes, electric ducts, for power, light and telephone uses, man-holes, and catch-basins, and the elevated railway columns, make condi-

RELIEF WORK GOES BRAVELY ON

Our Macedonian Committee Energetically Urging it Forward at Every Available Point to Save the Refugee

Specially photographed for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S INTERDENOMINATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR MACEDONIAN RELIEF

1. Rev. Urdan Iconomoff
2. Mr. Demeter Angelieff
3. Mr. Lazar Dimitroff

4. Mr. Constantine T. Boyadjieff
5. Mr. Stoyan K. Vatralsky
6. Rev. Leroy F. Ostrander

7. Mr. Vassil P. Karaivanoff
8. Rev. Constantine J. Pachedjieff
9. Mr. Vulko J. Shopoff

10. Dr. Todor Gateff
11. Miss Elizabeth Clarke
12. Rev. Edward B. Haskell

13. Mrs. Mareeka M. Popova
14. Rev. Marco N. Popoff
15. Mr. Michael Monedjicoff

Other members of the Committee not included in this group are given below.

FROM our Commissioner in Macedonia, Pastor M. N. Popoff, comes the following interesting letter, which describes in detail the personnel and functions of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Interdenominational Relief Committee. That Committee, as our readers will observe, is a most representative one. Its Chairman is an American missionary, known and loved throughout Turkey and Bulgaria, and there are four other American missionaries among his associates. Mr. Popoff's letter follows:

SOFIA, January 28.

On the 25th of January, as I have already informed you by cable, a goodly company of representative men and women met in Miss Clark's commodious headquarters in Sofia, and organized the Interdenominational CHRISTIAN HERALD Macedonian Relief Committee. Of the twenty-two missionaries and pastors invited, fifteen were present in person, and appear in the photograph. Four were represented by letter, being unable to be present. Three had not had time to communicate, on account of the slowness of the Turkish mails.

Rev. Edward B. Haskell, an honored American missionary, of Salonic, and a most efficient relief worker in Macedonia, was elected Chairman of the Committee. Of all the missionaries in Turkey, Mr. Haskell is the best acquainted with the condition of the sufferers in Macedonia.

Judge Michael Monedjicoff, of Sofia, a devout Protestant, honored not only by the Protestants, but by all the citizens of Sofia, both as one of the best judges that Bulgaria has, and as a most upright man, was chosen Secretary of the Committee. By his counsels he will be one of the most useful members of the Committee. Messrs. Constantine T. Boyadjieff and Lazar Dimitroff represent the Y. M. C. A., the former being president of the Sofia Association, and an official in the Bulgarian National Bank, while the latter is a rising, energetic business man. They are both Macedonians.

Other members of the Committee, residents of Sofia, are the following: Miss Elizabeth Clarke, a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M., who is at the head of the Mission kindergarten in Sofia, and Mrs. Mareeka M. Popova, your delegate's wife. These two ladies have done much in collecting and preparing clothing for the refugees. Mr. S. K. Vatralsky is a graduate of Harvard, and is an efficient helper in every good work. Representing the national Orthodox Church are the following four: Dr. Todor Gateff, a prominent lawyer and vice-president of the National Assembly (Sobranje); Mr. Demeter Angelieff, a prominent business man, and one of the most active members of the Sofia Local Macedonian Relief Committee; the Rev. Apostol Georgioff, the only priest of the National Church in Sofia who preaches regularly every Sunday; Madam Petroff-Chomacova is an honorary lady of the palace, and a great friend of the late Princess Maria Louisa. Mr. Vulko J. Shopoff, of Philippopolis, ex-Commissioner to the World's Fair of Chicago, and a deputy to the present National Assembly, is one of the prominent men in the industrial development of Bulgaria. He represents on the Committee the Stanimaca district, where the refugees seem to have been most neglected. Rev. Leroy F. Ostrander, already known to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is the youngest missionary in Samokov. He was delegated by the Samokov Mission Station to inquire into the particulars of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD plan, and if he found it a good one, to fall in line with it. I am glad to report that Mr. Ostrander consented to be a member of the Committee. He is a member of a Macedonian Relief Committee in Samokov, and has kept the accounts of the expenditure of the sums sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Samokov.

Another resident of Samokov on the Committee, is Prof. D. Gulumanoff, one of the most active relief workers in the villages of Samokov district. Mr. A. S. Tzanoff, the leading Bulgarian Protestant writer and editor of the Zornitza, represents the Philippopolis district. Rev. U. Iconomoff is of the Methodist Mission, north of the Balkan Mountains. In the field occupied by that Mission there are refugees in Varna, Shumla, and surrounding villages. Rev. Constantine J. Pachedjieff represents the Bourgas district, where there are over 12,000 refugees from the Adrianople district. Mr. Vassil P. Karaivanoff has much experience in relief work, and is now, as lay preacher in Dubnitz, actively engaged in such work in that city.

The following were elected members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD committee, but have not yet been heard from as to whether they consent to act: Dr. James Clarke, the oldest American Missionary in Bulgaria; Dr. George D. Marsh, of Philippopolis, who is now engaged in distributing $2,000 of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund money in Kazul Agach district, and probably for this reason could not attend the meeting or communicate; and Rev. A. Hristoff, for a number of years past of the leading church in Macedonia, viz., in Banja, who represents the Yambol district. Last among members of the committee is your representative.

There are no less than one hundred thousand Macedonians settled in Bulgaria. These have given a warm welcome to many of the refugees who escaped from Macedonia last fall, and have supported them thus far, not allowing them to depend on public charity. At present, as means have become exhausted, such refugees make their claim on public charity, so that the number of dependents is constantly swelled.

Wretched indeed are the refugees in Bourgas district. The greatest need now in Bulgaria is of upper clothing and bedding. Rev. L. F. Ostrander has sent a detailed description of the condition of relief work in Samokov.

Rev. Edward Haskell reports 50,000 sufferers in Monastir, Macedonia. English relief agencies have distributed there about £22,000. The Turkish Government is giving to all under twenty and above sixty years of age, fifteen piasters per month (about sixty cents). THE CHRISTIAN HERALD money has been given largely for clothing. An orphan asylum is badly needed to take care of children who have lost both parents. There are many such. Mr. Haskell is ready to start such an orphanage in Salonica if money could be provided for help and food. Will not some be willing to designate their gifts for such an orphanage?

Rev. K. Pachedjieff, of Bourgas, reports: In Kula Azach there are 709 refugees who receive only bread; in Yambol, 472; Slivna, 231; Karnobat, 770; Aitos, 1,770; Anehialo, 933; in villages, 6,706; Bourgas, 381.

These receive only bread from Government appropriation. There are from two to three thousand who have received no aid. They are badly in need. Many have received clothing, a shirt and bed covering. None have received upper garments, of which they are in need. There is a great need of upper garments and bed coverings. Only about 1,500 uргans (quilts) have been distributed, while all are in need of them in this cold weather. An uргan can be obtained here for $1.50. Will not many of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers be willing to supply some of these people with uргans and save them from further exposure to the cold?

M. N. POPOFF

Rev. A. Hristoff

Dr. G. D. Marsh

Prof. D. Gulumanoff

A. S. Tzanoff

WINTER HALTS THE WAR IN THE FAR EAST

From copyright stereographs by Underwood & Underwood

RUSSIANS RESTING ON CHINESE SOIL

JAPANESE TROOPS AT DRILL

RUSSIAN CAVALRY AWAITING TRANSPORTATION

JAPAN has not entered this war without due preparation," said an American long resident in Tokio, to the writer, lately. "Foreseeing that a struggle with Russia must be the outcome of that nation's steady encroachments in Manchuria and the borders of Corea, Japan has been preparing, these four years past, for the emergency that has now arrived. Her army is as efficient as her navy, and her commissariat and medical departments are perfect. Moreover, the Japanese themselves are confident that they will succeed. They are an unconquered nation, of indomitable courage and intensely patriotic. They hold their own country to be impregnable. The opinion of unbiased foreigners in Japan is that they will win."

As a contrast to this view, is the opinion of an American who has traveled much in European and Asiatic Russia, from the White Sea coasts to Vladivostok. "Russia," he says, "is unquestionably the greatest power on earth to-day. The rest of mankind does not understand and appreciate the true character of Russia and its people. They are loyal and energetic. Russia has expended over $300,000,000 in Manchuria, and wherever she goes she civilizes and improves the country. Japan may score the initial triumphs of the present war, but cannot stand a protracted campaign; whereas Russia, with her ample resources, her vast population, and her gigantic military establishment, could carry on half a dozen campaigns simultaneously."

Whichever way opinion may go, the fact remains that little Japan is steadily added to her list of initial successes, in a way and with a persistency that seems to puzzle many of the military critics. Last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, it was stated that Japan's operations near the Talienan Isthmus would probably result in the isolation of Port Arthur. On February 16, General Plueg, the Russian Chief of Staff in Manchuria, announced in a despatch to the Government at St. Petersburg, that the Japanese troops had already landed, or were preparing to land in force, at Thien-huang-Thai, twelve miles north of the Liao River in the Gulf of Liau-Tung. Mounted Japanese patrols were reported as having been seen at Sin-Min-Thun, northwest of Mukden. Almost simultaneously with these news, came the intelligence that a strong fleet of Japanese warships had appeared in the Gulf of Liau-Tung, and seized an island there as a base of supplies, and that a Japanese army had already obtained a foothold on anchurian soil. Unofficial cablegrams reported several attempts by Japanese warships to land forces at different points along the peninsula and in the vicinity of Port Arthur, but these were defeated by the Russians. In one attempt, a force of 2,500 Japanese, already wounded, were attacked by Cossacks, who sabred hundreds of the invaders and compelled the survivors to turn to their ships. Port Arthur dispatches report several similar attempts, all of which, the Russians claim, were discomfited.

Russia's forces in the Liau-Tung peninsula early in February were estimated at 30,000 men. Troops began pouring in from the north to reinforce the Port Arthur and Dalny garrisons, and to strengthen exposed points along the coast. Japan, however, seemed resolved to spare no effort to capture the peninsula, and a Japanese force, estimated at 100,000, was dispatched from Nagasaki, Kobe and Maji for a secret destination, supposed to be the Liau-Tung gulf, or some point near Port Arthur; the apparent intention being to force a landing on both sides of the peninsula. On Sunday, Feb. 14, another attack was made by Japanese torpedo boats on the Port Arthur fleet, during a blinding snowstorm, the result being that two more of the Czar's warships were torpedoed, viz., the cruiser Boyarin, which was sunk, with the loss of nearly 200 men, and the volunteer transport Kherson, the loss of life upon which was not ascertained.

Great secrecy surrounds the Russian operations. In addition to her large army in Corea along the Yalu, it is reported that she has probably 300,000 troops in Manchuria and the peninsula. In view of the possibility of Port Arthur being isolated, Viceroy Alexieff the Japanese had placed their front along a line south of the Yalu and that their forces were so disposed as to be strategically available over a wide area, extending hundreds of miles. This line reached from Chongyu to Kilju, practically across Corea, and a second line, estimated at 20,000, is ranged north of Seoul, with that city as headquarters. Twenty thousand more garrison the Korean coast towns, principally Chemulpho, Masampho and Mokpho.

On the north of the Yalu the Russian troops, it was said, had made strong entrenchments, and were busy night and day constructing earthworks, in anticipation of an attack. Their advance column had occupied Wiju and fortified it, and had penetrated to Pyeng Yang, unopposed. The only contact between the opposing forces in Corea up to the 18th, was a trifling skirmish between outposts, in which the Russians were successful. As the movements of the armies, both in Corea and Manchuria, are kept secret, and as no dispatches are permitted to be sent by the correspondents, the news from the field is largely conjectural. Neither Russia nor Japan will allow their plans to be divulged by correspondents, and all letters and cablegrams from the front are subjected to a rigid censorship.

Russia is encountering the usual winter difficulties in the transportation of troops and supplies. While crossing lake Baikal on the ice, a large body of several thousand soldiers were caught in a blizzard, and 600 are said to have perished of cold. Later, there was an unconfirmed report that a train with three regiments had dropped through the ice to the lake's bottom. Many stations on the Siberian railroad are pyramided with supplies and war munitions, which cannot be forwarded except very slowly. There are ample indications that the commissariat and supply departments are in a bad state, chiefly owing to interruptions in the railway service. Winter storms of unusual severity, both in Manchuria and Northern Corea, appear to be the principal cause of the present delay in military operations by both armies.

Notes of the War

China has declared her neutrality in the Russo-Japanese war.

It is gratifying to know that the foreign missionaries in Seoul are safe and well. It is not believed that they will be in any serious danger, for the present at least. Those stationed at Fusan, Pyeng-Yang, Taiku, and Sven Chyun have also been heard from, and were well and unapprehensive of danger at last reports.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the London Express cables the story, that after the Russian disaster at Port Arthur, Viceroy Alexieff summoned the officers whose negligence was the main cause of the defeat, and after cross-examining them as to their conduct, Alexieff, convinced of the guilt of a lieutenant, is declared to have drawn a revolver and shot the young officer dead in front of his comrades. The lieutenant is stated to have taken a party of officers ashore in his torpedo boat, instead of remaining on guard."

A rumor comes from Hong-Kong by cable, that Dowager Empress Tsi-An-Hsi, of China, is dead. It is probably untrue, as a similar story has frequently been circulated in late years. She was born in 1834, and has been practically supreme ruler of the Middle Kingdom since 1861, when Emperor I-tchou died. Tsi-An is a woman of strong, masculine qualities, shrewd, cruel and ambitious. She has frequently proved more than a match for the foreign diplomats. She was largely responsible for the Boxer troubles. In the Chinese Embassy at Washington, the report of her death is discredited.

ON THE YALU RIVER, COREA, NEAR THE RUSSIAN FRONT

decided to remove his military headquarters to Harbin, 600 miles inland, and at the Port Arthur and Vladivostok junction of the Siberian Railroad. This important city, occupying a strong position and with an abundance of supplies, would be the natural base of operations in conducting a campaign in Manchuria. There is a general stampede of the population from the peninsula toward Harbin, the majority being eager to reach Western Russia, out of the region of conflict.

At Vladivostok (off which the Russian fleet of warships is still cruising, in the Sea of Japan), the military authorities, by order of Viceroy Alexieff, have removed the departmental headquarters to Nikolsko, and the Russian bank to Khabarovk, both inland. There were many rumors current concerning the Vladivostok fleet, some affirming that it had been sunk or captured; others that it was successfully destroying Japan's commerce on the sea and had sunk several ships. None of these reports could be substantiated.

Meanwhile the campaign on the Yalu River makes very slow progress. On Feb. 18, it was estimated that Japan had 120,000 men in Corea, and Russia probably a still larger force. There were flying rumors of fighting having already begun, but these were wholly sensational. From Chemulpho the intelligence came that

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

B. J. FERNIE, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

G. H. SANDISON, ASSOCIATE EDITOR

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date. It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscriptions.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—Give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at the Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter.

Lenten Observance

EVERY Christian must rejoice to see at this season of the year, the increasing numbers who are found in the churches, and are testifying by their social conduct, to their recognition of the purpose of the Lenten observance. It is a good thing, whatsoever the cause, that men should realize the spiritual in life, and perceive that the scramble for material wealth is not all that they should live for. The suspension of gaiety and pleasures for a time, and the effort to draw nearer to God and to fix the mind on divine things, is laudable, and may be of the highest spiritual benefit. It would be well if all life was a Lenten season, in that sense, and if the spirit which rightly observes Lent, pervaded all our days. Then we should not see, as too often happens, the season treated as a period of penance, preceded and followed by unusual indulgence. The carnival excesses are a poor result of Lenten abstinence, and show that the heart has not been in the Lenten observance.

Nor should the strict observance of Lent lead to Pharisaical pride. God is not honored by an observance which is regarded as an affliction. If the heart is really hankering for worldly pleasure, and the restraint is only in deference to public opinion, there is a tendency to feel that the seven weeks of abstinence gives a claim on God and establishes a certain degree of merit. Important as conduct is, God looks below it to the motive inspiring it, and will not accept a temporary period of good behavior as a compromise for heart purity. There ought never to be in any soul a trust in the observance as a means of salvation, or an idea that it can be an atonement for the indulgences of the remainder of the year.

The true benefit of the Lenten observance consists in the opportunity it affords to draw nearer to Christ by the withdrawal from worldly concerns, to meditate on his life and love and self sacrifice, and to consecrate anew the spirit and the deeds to his service, so that the world may know by the lives of his followers, the power and the joy of his salvation.

Winter and War

EVENTS now taking place in the Far East will furnish to students of history a striking reminder of similar events which occurred ninety years ago, when the Napoleonic star had reached its zenith and begun to decline. The great Emperor had resolved to force Russia to bow to his will, and he had invaded her territory with his Grand Army of upwards of 400,000 men. From the beginning of this climacteric campaign, everything went wrong with the invaders. Napoleon had expected that the enemy would melt before his host and would quickly sue for peace; but instead, defeat followed defeat; disaster trod upon the heels of disaster. Winter came on—the terrible Russian winter. His troops, poorly fed and illy equipped, were totally unprepared for such an experience. "Their sufferings," the historians tell us, "were intense. Thousands were frozen to death. The spot of each bivouac was marked by the circle of dead around the watch-fires. Sometimes in a single night hundreds perished." "General Winter," the soldiers grimly said, was their bitterest foe. They could face the enemy's guns, but not the marrow-freezing blasts. The whole world knows the result of that disastrous campaign, in which "the world-conqueror" lost upwards of 250,000 brave soldiers, sacrificed to his ambition and to the lust for conquest. It was followed by the "War of Liberation," in which all those nations whom the conqueror had oppressed, rose and made common cause against him, and ultimately destroyed him, and pulled down the fabric of power which he had built at the cost of countless human lives.

Though Russia has no Napoleon, its armies are led by the invisible spectre of Peter the Great, whose policy of conquest and expansion has animated it for over two centuries. It has reached out and grasped Mongolia and Manchuria, and planned the conquest of Corea and the territory which bounds the shores of the Yellow Sea. In its last and greatest campaign for the mastery of Asia, involving the disruption of both China and Corea, it has met with reverses that were as unexpected as those that halted the Napoleonic legions ninety years ago. Its huge armies, poorly prepared for a winter campaign in Manchuria, find in the arctic winds and heavy snows of that region, a foe more to be dreaded than the Japanese. "General Winter" is in the field again, with his unconquerable host. It will be a stroke of remarkable good fortune if the Russian troops do not suffer more heavily from a wretched commissariat, and from exposure to cold and the diseases it entails, than from the operations of the enemy. The recent disaster on Lake Baikal, where hundreds of poor fellows in the Czar's army were frozen to death, is probably but one of many instances of the terrible sufferings the soldiers of Russia are forced to endure. It is a frightful glimpse of the horrors of war.

Should Russia fail in the present campaign, her internal troubles may instantly become acute, like those of Napoleon after his disastrous invasion of the Northern empire. There are already ominous signs of coming trouble in such an event. Those races that have been subjugated, and whose nationality has been suppressed "by the strong hand," would naturally welcome any opportunity for successfully reconquering their independence. All the tributary races that had been conquered by Napoleon broke away from him when the great crisis of his career arrived. May history not repeat itself in the case of Russia?

Cheerful Workers

THE beauty of all helping, all serving for God or for man, is it not cheeriness, freshness, gladness in the doing? You know people, doubtless, whom you dislike to call on for their fair share of work about the house or store or shop, because they have always such a persecuted look when asked to bear a hand; and you would almost rather they should never do anything for you, because when they do it they are sure in some way to make you feel that it was done at a sacrifice.

A man met a boy in the road carrying a basket of blackberries and said to him, "Where did you get such nice berries, my boy?" "Over there, sir, in that briar patch." "Well, won't your mother be glad to see you come home with a basket full of such nice fruit?" "Yes, sir," said the brave little fellow, "she always seems very glad when I hold up the berries, and I don't tell her anything about the briars in my feet."

It is the people who hold up the berries and say nothing about the briars in their feet that we like to come up with on our journey through this world, and these are the ones we like to work with in the vineyard. Christ, be sure, has the same feeling about the matter. He does expect us to do things for him that cost us dear; to bring him baskets of fruit of loving service, even though they have to be gathered sometimes amidst briars of opposition or ridicule, or bodily discomfort, or disappointment, or heart-breaking sorrow, but even then to come with a smiling heart.

Seasonable Opportunities

WINTER is a season of joyous life and pleasant work, and we ought to make the most of it. There is the prayer-meeting! When the evening comes, that summons us to its friendly circle, let us go to it with light hearts and exultant faces. Far too often our piety is a sombre thing, shadowy, grave, over-accentuated with seriousness and gloom. Why should religion ever be associated in any mind with dullness or morbidness? The Bible as one reads it, is resonant with songs of praise, with the glory and the gladness of those who lift the shout of victory. We can think of basement-rooms, damp, dark, cryptic, where God's saints have met for prayer. Everything in the minor key. Everything plaintive, everything halting and shivering on the brink of some dread abyss! No wonder young people avoid prayer-meetings of that order, in those places. Verily, the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light, for every saloon has its glitter and its pomp of lamps aflame, and its promise to the wayfarer of genial warmth, while too often our chapels are dimly illumined, and our fires smoke disconsolately.

Some of us are learning that we must not try to present religion in its lower, but in its higher aspects! We are finding out that God has a right to our best, that we should not offer him second-best. In the Hebrew economy Jehovah demanded the firstling of the flock!

Let our prayer-services in winter be attuned to the loftiest joy. Let us "praise God, from whom all blessings flow," in a cheery environment, with cheerful faces.

Then our social gatherings, our book clubs, our parties, our lecture courses, our ponds like sheets of shining glass, our rinks like plates of burnished silver, our love-making, where the old husband and the old wife sit together in the sweet confidence of a long life of work and wages shared, or where the young man courts the girl he longs to marry; all these scenes, emblems, hopes, and dreams belong to the joyous side of winter. Summer scatters us, winter draws us close together. Blessed are the bright opportunities of the wintry days!

Lincoln's Mother

IN the course of a sermon preached in New York in memory of President Lincoln, recently, the preacher made a disparaging reference to Nancy Hanks, the mother of President Lincoln. There can be no question of the bad taste of such remarks, especially from a Christian pulpit, even if they were deserved; but it would appear from historical documents, that there was no ground for the innuendo uttered by the preacher. There is still in existence, not only the certificate of the marriage of Lincoln's parents, which took place on June 12, 1806, three years before the birth of Abraham Lincoln, but the marriage bond between Thomas Lincoln and Richard Berry, the uncle and guardian of Nancy Hanks, duly recorded under the marriage law of Kentucky.

Testimony has been given also from personal knowledge as to the character of Lincoln's mother. As Hon. Isaac N. Arnold, who knew her well, wrote: "She was a woman of deep religious feeling, of the most exemplary character, and most tenderly and affectionately devoted to her family." Lincoln, himself, who was only nine years old when she died, carried into maturity the deepest reverence for her and a profound sense of obligation to her. "All that I am," he said, "or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother." Such an impression, produced on so young a boy, and retained through so many eventful years, could not have been made by any but a pure-minded, high-souled woman.

The character of Lincoln needs no adventitious grounds for eulogy, nor can its splendor be enhanced by reflecting on his origin. It was therefore unpardonable, not to say cruel and unjust, that the preacher should have so failed to remember his Lord's injunction, "Judge not that ye be not judged," as to unnecessarily, and it would appear, unwarrantably, go on of his way to asperse the character of a woman, to whom, according to her son's own testimony, the country was deeply indebted. Good, however, may come out of evil, if the facts as above stated serve, now that alumnus has led to their publication, to set at rest a charge which may have found lodgment in other minds.

"Had no use for Testaments!"

WHO can estimate the power, or set limits to the influence of God's Word upon the hearts of men? It is "mighty to save."

A worker in a press-room in New York City was long without Christ. He was a profane man, totally irreverent, and given to dissipation. One day, on account of neglecting his work because of his dissipated habits, he was discharged. Some friend wishing to help him to a better life, had persuaded him to subscribe to a religious paper. He used THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and with it there came as a premium a Red Letter New Testament. He flung it impatiently on the table—he had no use for Testaments! He read the paper; read a little more, and presently became interested in the simple Gospel it set forth, and in the object lesson in practical Christianity which he found on almost every page. "After a while," he said, "I found I had use for the Testament after all." Within its pages he found the Way of life, and as if by a miracle, he saw the causes of his own failure and the Divine remedy. His own life became transformed. He is now an exemplary Christian, a member of the Reformed Church, and the teacher of a Bible Class. He has taken up in earnest, the gracious and blessed work of leading others out of the darkness into the light.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Panama's First President

NEWS comes from Panama that the little republic has passed through its first Presidential election, and has unanimously chosen Dr. Manuel Amador for that office. As was to be expected, Dr. Amador was one of the leaders in the recent movement, which issued in the separation of Panama from Colombia. His administration, therefore, will be in full accord with the national spirit on this, the most important of all questions for the young nation. Three Vice Presidents, or Designados, as they are called, were chosen at the same time. They are Dr. Pablo Rosemena, Domingo Obaldia, and Dr. Carlos Menzies. The day set for the inauguration, when the dispatch announcing the election was sent, was February 20, and preparations were then being made to make the ceremony as imposing as possible. It is gratifying to learn that all the European nations, with the two unimportant exceptions of Spain and Turkey, have fallen into line in respect to the new government, and have granted full recognition to the sovereignty of the republic. The United States Senate has not taken action to give effect to the purpose of the revolution. A bill has been introduced authorizing the payment to Panama of the ten million dollars agreed upon in the treaty, as the amount due for territorial rights. Another bill is in preparation to regulate the legal status of the inhabitants of the five-mile strip bordering the canal, and measures are being taken to insure, as far as is possible in that region, the health of the officers and men who will be employed in the construction of the canal. It would appear, therefore, that the pessimistic predictions of trouble on the Isthmus will not be fulfilled, as the difficulties there, as well as in our own Capital, have been overcome. The material difficulties in the way of the canal have now to be encountered, but there is every reason to hope that the skill and ingenuity of American engineers will suffice to surmount them also. There is now, therefore, a good prospect that the work, which will be so clear an advantage to the marine traffic of the world, will soon be an accomplished fact. Hasten up, prepare the way, take up the stumbling-block out of the path of my people (Isa. 57: 14).

Photo by Scherzer, N. Y.

DR. MANUEL AMADOR
First President of Panama

The Pennsylvania's Tunnel

In the course of an address given in New York a few days ago, by the President of a railroad, the speaker vividly described the method adopted by the Pennsylvania Railroad to overcome the difficulties connected with the construction of the tunnel under the North River, by which its trains are to enter New York City. He said that the most novel and interesting feature of the task was the system of screw piles, or piers, which, after a year's experimentation, had been adopted as the basis on which the two great tunnel tubes are to rest. While a tube resting unsupported in the silt, might be tilted which would carry ordinary trolley traffic, it was another matter when it came to a traffic consisting of hundred-ton engines and eighty-ton Pullman sleepers. The problem before the engineer was to make a support for the tubes, when the bed rock of the river was from 100 to 150 feet below the water. He solved the matter with the screw piles. These piles will be driven by means of a steel hydraulic screw-driver of terrific power, which will seize the pile at the top and twist and bend and force it down through the silt until the bottom of it reaches bed rock. These piers are iron tubes seven feet eight inches in diameter, except at the screw end, which is of steel, and for a number of feet from the bottom has a diameter of four feet eight inches, with screw flanges nearly a foot in breadth. The piers will be about fifteen feet apart all the way across the silt bed in the river bed, and on them the tunnel will rest. The constructors of the tunnel are wisely determined to have it founded on bed rock. It would be easier and cheaper, and less expensive not to go so deep, but in the end might be disastrous. In the building of character, as Christ warned us, the same plan must be adopted to insure safety.

The rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock (Matt. 7: 25).

An Eviction in Zero Weather

The tenants on a whole block in New York City had a disagreeable experience two weeks ago, while the thermometer was registering only one degree above zero. Title to the block has been acquired for the purpose of erecting an armory, and early in January the occupiers of the houses fronting on both the avenues and the two streets to the north and south of it, were notified that they must quit within a month. Apparently they were in doubt whether the notice was genuine or, if it was, whether it would be promptly executed. Few among them sought new residences. There was an impression that owing to litigation, or to the proverbial slowness of public bodies to begin operations, a few weeks' delay might be expected. To the general surprise, however, they received notice on the day the earlier notice expired, to give up possession in twenty-four hours. A panic ensued. Some disposed of their effects by auction and others hurriedly sought new quarters. There were some even then, who made no move; but these were convinced of the necessity for prompt action, when contractors arrived to begin, in the bitter cold, to strip off the roofs and tear out the windows. The occupiers would have saved themselves from loss and the inconvenience of moving in severe weather, had they heeded the first notice; but the tendency to put off the evil day and the hope that it may never come, is common with others besides them. Unhappily, many yield to it in a matter so important as their eternal safety. To the warnings of the preacher they turn a deaf ear.

The vision that he seeth is for many days to come; he prophesieth of times that are far off (Ezek. 12: 27).

To Anchor Sand Dunes

An attempt has been made by the State of Massachusetts to anchor the sand dunes, which form a large part of the Province Lands on Cape Cod, as the dunes, useless in themselves, are a menace to adjacent cultivated land. It has been found that sand is readily bound together by grass roots, and that if sturdy varieties of grass, suitable for sandy soils, are planted, and cared for while obtaining a foothold and maturing, they will gradually cover large areas, transforming them from shifting, worthless lands, into veritable fertile, cultivable fields. Many years of forestry work in Europe have shown that after the grasses have made a start, trees can be successfully raised on these erstwhile sand piles. The State has, therefore, gone to considerable expense in the work, and the Bureau of Forestry has set aside a strip of land on the Columbia River, in Washington, to experiment on the lines adopted by Massachusetts. The same principle has sometimes effected a transformation when applied to character. The drifting, useless man, who is a menace to others, is changed when the love of some woman or child spreads its fibres through his nature. Better still, when the love of Christ takes possession of him and brings forth the fruits of the Spirit.

He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit (John 15: 5).

A Tree's Life Story

A Californian letter recently published, describes a strange record revealed by a tree of the Sequoias species, which has been felled after attaining the enormous size of fifteen feet diameter. The tree is believed, from the rings in it, to have been over two thousand years old. It bears evidence of having survived more than one great forest fire, from which it suffered centuries ago. This tree when felled had an enormous surface burn on one side, thirty feet in height and occupying eighteen feet of the circumference of the tree: this was found to have been due to a fire occurring in A. D. 1797. The tree had already occupied itself for 103 years in its efforts to repair this injury, its method being the ingrowing of the new tissue from each margin of the great black wound. When the tree was cut the records of three other fires were revealed. It is to be noted, that in each of the three older burns, there was a thin cavity occupied by the charcoal of burned surface, but the wounds were finally fully covered and the new tissue above was full, even continuous, and showed no sign of distortion or of the old wound. But when the tree was cut down the old wounds were discovered. The fire had left its marks, though the tree had covered them. It is so, frequently, with human lives. No one knows from a man's appearance what he has passed through. But at the last God, who knows all things, will see and take account.

Henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus (Gal. 6: 17).

Three Months Unburied

The body of a well-known citizen who died last November, has been lying in the receiving vault of a New York cemetery awaiting the decision of the courts as to its place of burial. The question came into litigation through a dispute between the widow and the eldest son of the deceased citizen. The son wishes to bury it in Greenwood Cemetery, according to the rites of the Protestant Episcopal Church. There the deceased's first wife, who was the son's mother, is buried, and the son says that his father often visited her grave, and expressed a wish that when he died he should be buried there. The widow, however, who was the deceased

Copyright, 1904, by Underwood & Underwood

U. S. OFFICIALS AND LEADERS OF THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA
1. Hon. F. V. de La Espinosa. 2. Hon. Mr. Guler, U. S. Consul General. 3. Hon. C. Shaler.
4. Hon. Frederico Boyd. 5. U. S. Minister Buchanan. 6. Hon. J. A. Arango. 7. Hon. Thos. Ardo.

man's second wife, is a Roman Catholic, and she pleads that as her husband was received into the Catholic Church before his death, he ought to be buried in a Catholic cemetery. The court, after hearing the arguments on both sides, has ordered that the body shall remain in the receiving vault in which it has been temporarily deposited until a decision is given. Happily, it is of no concern to the dead man where they lay his body. The one momentous matter for him is whether his soul has the habitation assured those who have trusted in Christ.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (II. Cor. 5: 1).

A Great Evangelistic Campaign in England

DR. R. A. TORREY

Over 3,000 Declare for Christ—A Drunkard's Midnight Meeting in Birmingham

FROM A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR

THE evangelistic campaign which Dr. R. A. Torrey and Mr. Charles Alexander, both of America, are now conducting in England, is being attended with extraordinary success. At the present time they are holding meetings in Birmingham, and in no city which they have yet visited has the enthusiasm been greater or the result more encouraging. The gatherings are held in the largest meeting-place in the city—Bingley Hall, a great square building, capable of accommodating between 8,000 and 10,000 people, and with a platform on which is seated a choir of 1,500 members. Night after night the great hall is packed with men and women, and on several occasions the rush has been so strong that several thousand persons were turned away. At the time of writing, the month's campaign in Birmingham is only half-way through, yet already the conversions number considerably over 3,000.

Perhaps the most remarkable gathering which the city ever witnessed took place at midnight on Saturday. The evangelists, anxious to reach all classes, and, if possible, to get at those in the deepest degradation and sin, arranged for a midnight meeting, when it was hoped to get in the outcast, the drunkard and the fallen, who usually frequent the streets at that hour. As early as 7:30 bands of Christian workers—seven companies in all—went out to scour the streets, visiting the saloons and pressing the people they found in there to come to the meeting.

In addition to this personal work, carried on so heartily by men and women alike, three brass bands went out to assist in gathering together the people.

The workers had evidently done their part well, and on entering the hall, close on eleven o'clock, the scene was a remarkable one. The bands were assembled on the platform with the choir, while in the hall below a motley throng streamed in. They were most of them men—poor, dirty, ragged, while here and there one noticed the refined features and thoughtful face of a man whose poor attire bespoke his altered circumstances. The women who came in—though they were not nearly so many as the men—were poor and wretched, most of them with shawls on their heads, and some with no head-covering at all, save their own tangled hair. As soon as Mr. Alexander mounted the dais, a half-drunken man in the front seat sprang forward, shouting hoarsely, "Sing us the Glory Song." The service began with a hymn, which Mr. Alexander said he wanted them to sing, so that it might take them all back to their mother's knee—"What a Friend we Have in Jesus!" This hymn ended, the man in front again vigorously interposed, demanding "The Glory Song. Alexander, sing us it." Turning to the massed choir and the bands, Mr. Alexander gave the word, and the mighty chorus struck up:

Oh! that will be glory for me, glory for me, glory for me,
When by his grace I shall look on his face,
That will be glory, be glory for me!

And it was sung, too! Mr. Alexander, with all the energy of his long arms and supple form, conducted them, using no baton, but waving his hands first to one side and then to the other, and flinging his arms out to command a pause; then swinging quickly round to the audience he led them through the chorus, only to turn round again and lead on the band, every nerve strained and his whole being seeming to be possessed for the time, with the spirit of the music.

The singing over, Dr. Torrey got up to speak.

"I can sympathize with you men," he said, "and I feel at home to-night. It looks like one of my Chicago audiences." Then, quiet in some measure being established, he said, "Before we talk, Mr. Alexander is going to do whatever he likes."

Instinctively, Mr. Alexander seemed to know just what to say and do, and—a thing which does not occur at the other meetings—loud clapping greeted both his appearance and Dr. Torrey's.

Having succeeded in quieting down his hearers, he said to them, "I'm going to sing you a song, entitled, 'Tell Mother I'll be There.'" This announcement was again greeted with applause and shouts from many in the audience.

"Now, men," he said, "I want to take you back to your mother's knee to-night, before you ever drank a drop of whisky, when she used to get you down on your knees right at her feet, and pray with you. The Lord bless you, men. We love you, or we would not be up this time of night trying to help you."

Dr. Torrey then began a talk, not a sermon. He talked straight to them as a man and a brother; he showed them that even the guiltiest might be saved from his sin. He was constantly interrupted. No sooner did he mention his Bible, "a wonderful Bible" he said it was, "the strangest Bible ever seen; and the strangest part consisted in the names in the front—many of the men whose names were written there, had been drinking men, but were now deacons in his church," than a man at the back of the Hall started up shouting, "Genesis, Exodus," in a loud, noisy voice. "You just keep still there," was the quick retort of Dr. Torrey, "and you'll be in Revelation in a minute."

Another man in particular would not remain quiet. At length, so much did he disturb the meeting that a worker went down to him, and then indeed a miracle was wrought; and returning to his seat some short time after, he said: "The Lord has sobered that poor man. I have been having prayer with him, and he is quite sober now, and listening quietly," and looking in the direction in which he pointed, I saw the man in question, sitting, his face turned toward Dr. Torrey, listening eagerly and intently to every word he had to say. The talk was a brief one, and at its close a startling announcement was made. "Every man in this building who was once a drunkard, and whom Jesus Christ has saved, stand up," said Dr. Torrey, and in a moment, men, young and old, all over the building, rose to their feet. "Praise God," said Dr. Torrey. "Now, every man that is a drunkard and who wants to be saved to-night, stand up." The words were scarcely uttered before the very man who had at the first caused so much disturbance, and was so strangely sobered, jumped up, and running to the front of the platform, immediately in front of Dr. Torrey, cried out: "I want to be saved to-night." "God bless you, brother," was the quick response.

"Now, men," said Dr. Torrey, "every one of you who wants to be saved to-night, come up here to the platform and take me by the hand," and passing quickly to the head of the steps he waited there, and at once there was a rush to the platform. The second to come forward was the poor drunkard already mentioned, who even then had to be helped up the steps, but Dr. Torrey with a brotherly hand on his shoulder, passed him on to a worker to help him on his way. It was a wonderful sight! For fifteen minutes men came up these steps to the platform, and as they came they were passed on to a worker to be dealt with. All that time Dr. Torrey stood there receiving them as they came forward, and quickly passing them on. They were of all ages, of men, middle-aged, youths and boys, women in middle life, and girls on the threshold of womanhood.

Mr. Alexander meanwhile started the chorus, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" It was sung, and sung again, and again, and yet again; and many times as he tried to change it for another hymn, was it taken up again. No sooner was there a pause than those in the audience down below took it up again; the voices were broken and tuneless, but it was evident that was what reached them most, and seeing it to be so, Mr. Alexander gave up the attempt to introduce another hymn and over and over again the refrain went up, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" And while they sang the converts, the anxious, the seekers still came pressing up the steps. It was a sight to break any heart. Surely if Christ wept over Jerusalem, how would he have wept over the multitudes in Bingley Hall that night?

All this time, the workers in different parts of the hall were doing their best to lead the undecided and the hesitating to surrender themselves to Jesus Christ.

At length, though the people were loth to go, having satisfied another urgent demand for the "Glory Song" from some men in the front, Mr. Alexander closed the meeting with prayer.

Long after the meeting was dispersed, and preacher and singer had left, the people remained, and again and again they raised the chorus as well as they could. "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" And as we took our way home through the streets, on every side the echoes of the "Glory Song" resounded through the midnight air. Truly Birmingham is awakening, and the hand of the Lord is laid upon the city!

A cablegram from Birmingham, received since the foregoing letter came, says that 7,000 persons (including children), have professed conversion in Birmingham since the meetings started on January 17th.

PROF. ALEXANDER

REFORM IN SACRED SONG

READERS WRITE IN FAVOR OF A UNION HYMNAL FOR GENERAL USE IN CHRISTIAN CHURCHES, SUITED TO ALL OCCASIONS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S publication of the suggestion for a uniform Hymnal for general use in Protestant Churches and religious gatherings, has elicited a very large number of responses. The writers of these letters are unanimous and enthusiastic in their approval of the plan. It is impracticable, for

An Important Step Towards Church Union

As a lover of good church music and hymns, I am deeply interested in the discussion at present in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of the question of reform in this class of music. The suggestion by Mr. Sykes of a uniform hymnal is an excellent one, and commends itself to my judgment as a practical step towards church union. Music is the language of the soul, and consequently common to all people. Let us have more of it in our churches; more good hearty congregational singing, and a more abundant use of the old hymns.

Waterloo, Ont., Can.

J. R. STRICKLAND.

Why Present Hymnals Fail to Satisfy.

THE suggestion of your correspondent for a "Uniform Hymnal" is a good one, I think, providing a committee can be selected capable of doing the work justice. Many of the tunes in the present-day hymnals and Gospel song books are useless, for various reasons, namely: devoid of melody; too wide a range for congregational singing; faulty in harmony; lacking in spiritual thought and fervor. Some have a "jing-a-ling catchy air and movement, which pleases the untrained ear for a while, but, failing to awaken religious feelings, soon die out and pass into disuse. Outside of a few standard tunes, there is little in the books to educate the masses to an appreciation of a better and more devotional class of religious hymns. It is high time that the churches return to the old standard hymns and tunes. There is more religion in a half dozen of the good old hymns than in a whole present-day collection of devotional ditties. Much of the quartette and solo singing in our churches to-day is more of an exhibition of vocal frills and trills than soul singing.

Dixon, Ill.

GEO. E. KRINBILL.

Why Not a Uniform Hymnal?

IS it not a glorious thing that there exists an international system of uniform Sunday School lessons? And now, if the churches could but have a uniform hymnal, would it not be another step towards that oneness for which Christ prayed? It is interesting to note that already there is a movement on foot to secure a common hymnal for the Methodist Church, North, and the Methodist Church, South. Though the denominations may seem to believe somewhat differently, yet they pray alike and sing alike. Wesley and Toplady held heated controversy, each with the other; yet both could sing Toplady's immortal hymn, "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me." Of course, to carry out the grand idea of uniformity in sacred song will be difficult, want of space, to print all of these letters, but those that are given below will furnish a fair idea of the tone and character of the whole. Among the writers are pastors, musicians, choir and class leaders, and active Christian workers of all denominations.

but surely not impracticable. A committee with skill amounting almost to genius will be needed, but doubtless can be found. If the common hymnal be at last attained, the singing by the church below will seem a prelude to that song above described by John in the Apocalypse, Rev. 5:11-14.

Bedford, N. Y.

AMELIA HOYT.

A Class Teacher's View of It.

I HAVE been a music-class teacher and leader of church and prayer-meeting singing for two score years or more. Various notions as to what constitutes proper music for a church hymnal seem to prevail. Tunes familiar in certain localities only: new faddings of tunes, by some ambitious young composer as yet untried; tunes of weird and chromatic harmonization by modern English writers; heavy German chorals; adaptations of popular and sentimental songs, as well as tried and true old specimens of church music known and loved throughout the country, all find their places in one or other of our hymnals. In some books we have an assortment of all these, in the effort to create a work of the widest demand and salability.

The question is not what the artistic musician, who is surfeited with music in its commoner forms, and who is impatient with that which the people at large can sing and enjoy, would be satisfied with, but what for the mass of the congregation would best answer the purposes of devotion in the singing of the church. It is probable that most congregations use no more than fifty or sixty tunes while our hymnals contain often as many as five or six hundred of all sorts.

Medfield, Mass.

W. S. TILDEN.

Letters on the subject have also been received from—Rev. C. C. Hart, J. H. Tenney, S. Elliott, J. F. Stout, S. Thraette, W. H. Hawkin, John Walter, Mrs. Elizabeth Spencer, A. M. Watebury, H. C. Weaver, Annie M. Stuart, Frankl. Frederico, H. P. Rising, M. A. Prichard, M. Carey, Wayne V. Fuller, Ella J. Downing, A. Co. stant Reader, Geo. H. Kurtz, Thomas Freeman, W. Jones, James Gleason, B. Hale, T. Y. McClure, Ena M. Reed, A. O. Nysewander, Mrs. M. Croach, Charles E. Hauxhurst, C. O. Morris, Flomerfelt, D. B. Stoup, Mrs. S. A. B., Mrs. N. Emery, H. S. Elliott, Mrs. Martha V. Sharp, W. S. McGee, Jennie E. Hussey, Mrs. A. S. Coops, James W. Wright, M. Stryker, Miss Emma Wei Myron H. Dean, Chas. A. Glover, L. W. Babylo A. M. Eldred, Reverence, Mrs. M. C. R., J. White, F. G. Shaw, Mrs. L. E. Dodd, Mrs. August Turner, James Little, B. W. Broughton, All MacInnis, Wm. H. Puffer, L. C. Carpenter, Loui Hanes, Mrs. A. M. Warburton, Flora Hayner, M. Jno. Stanley, N. Brisbin, Mrs. E. A. Palmer, M. I. Hulbert, Monroe A. Weik, Abram Stull, Dav Magow, Helen Atkins, Mrs. Ann H. Bennett, Old Subscriber, W. J. Haine, Mrs. L. O. Steva John H. Stanley, Sadie E. Squires, Elizabeth I graham, and others.

THE WONDERS AND BEAUTIES OF THE SNOW

"Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail?" JOB 38: 22 By WILSON A. BENTLEY

ONE of the purest and most satisfying of pleasures, is the study of the beautiful in Nature, the marvels wrought by the wonderful laws of the Creator. A peculiarly fascinating branch of this so-called nature study, is that of the snow crystals. Perhaps no natural phenomena occurring upon the earth, is more of an object lesson, and portrays more fully both the power and majesty, and the gentleness of the Creator, than does a widespread snowstorm, or blizzard. The wind within such storms, blowing spirally inward toward the storm centre near the earth, and upward and outward above, exert a force compared to which that of the volcano is indeed puny. Yet, though the winds exert their power over vast areas, in bringing together the material, the water, vapors, etc., out of which the snow crystals are built, up aloft, in obedience to omnipotent laws, the irresistible forces of the blizzard unite, and, with infinite care and gentleness, assist in the building of those tiny, frail, snow crystals, that come to us when the skies are dark and winter reigns.

It is said that it was born in the skies above.

At pressure, etc., practically identical throughout their development, the cloud crystals (snow) are born and come to us from the skies above. Their home is among the dark cloud legions of the storm, where since reigns supreme, where frost is king. There, far above the turmoil of earth, in thinnest air, their only sport the uprushing winds, they live and have their being, and the strange, mysterious forces of the earth at air hover over them, and mold them into those wondrous forms of beauty that we call snow.

How wonderful, how very complex, must be the processes going on up above at such times. Could we but sit upward with those wonderful water molecules, and see the snow crystals form, atom by atom, spangle by spangle, how absorbingly interesting would be the experience, and what wondrous secrets and hidden processes we might witness.

While at times the crystals doubtless fall directly toward earth immediately after birth, at other times, when uprushing winds are strong, they do not. Many of them, indeed, must lead truly nomadic lives, one of unrest and ceaseless change. For so very light are many of them, especially before completion, that the upward and outward flowing cloud-laden winds of the mighty blizzard often waft them repeatedly upward through realms of frost and thinnest air, before they become heavy enough to fall down through the uprushing air. Doubtless the winds lead many of them downward, and far away from their place of birth before the earth draws them to her bosom; and during these wanderings in cloud and crystal land, the varying conditions of air pressure, degree of cold, and humidity, of different state of the air, etc., etc., that they encounter at different points of their wanderings, each impress their special conditions upon them, and often while passing

It is said that it was born in the skies above.

From the foregoing, it will be seen that the crystals, or, at least, most of them, do not come to us with outlines such as they, at one time and another possessed within the clouds. Doubtless, many of them were far more beautiful in outline, while winging their way through the cloud ocean above, than when they reach us, and vice versa. Through a wonderful provision of nature, as yet but imperfectly understood, each of these new outporth as they form upon and around the nuclei, do so in such a manner that they bridge over and imprison a minute quantity of air. The wall spaces of these minute air tubes and compartments, cause a refraction and dispersion of the rays of light that enter the crystals, take place, thus causing them to appear as dark lines and shadings within the crystals.

... ..

MANY WRITE OF ANSWERED PRAYERS

A Reader, Gouverneur, N. Y. "God has wonderfully answered my prayers. I was in great distress and trouble, not long ago, and I eyed earnestly that God would help me in removing the trouble, and my prayer was answered in a way that it has seemed wonderful to me."

A Subscriber in Va. "I have had many prayers answered, but one especially have I been praying for years, and at last he has had a bright vision. I want to ask all to pray for him that he may never turn back into the old way. God answers in his own good time."

George S. K. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God in hearing and answering prayer. It is not always by our way, but in his own good way and he will surely answer the prayer of the Lord. The Lord is an ever present help in time of need."

Mrs. H. J., Portsmouth, Vt. "I thank God that I have the blessed privilege of acknowledging his kindness in answering many of my prayers, and especially recently he has answered so kindly."

Artesian, S. Dakota. "I have been praying for twenty-five years. Oh, how many times God has answered my prayers in that time. I praise his holy name for it."

Constant Reader, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge the many prayers God has answered. I simply cast the burden upon Jesus and trust him, and he has helped us many times."

From an Old Subscriber. "After reading the answered prayers, I feel that I must add my testimony that the good Lord has lately answered one of my prayers. I was in deep trouble and took it to my Saviour in prayer; he has heard and answered my humble petition."

A Reader, St. Johnsville, N. Y. "Realizing as I do God's clearly manifested care over me in my life, and the many times he has saved me from great moral and spiritual dangers, I wish to acknowledge that merciful, fatherly care to the world; that others may be led to trust in him whose love is infinite, and which passeth understanding."

A Believer, Reedsville, Pa. "Having proved the efficacy of prayer, I wish to add my testimony to the many answers published in the HERALD. He has verified his promise, 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.'"

Thus, in this remarkable manner, the pre-existing outlines of the crystals while in cloudland are partly or wholly revealed to us. All that wealth of beauty within them, each line and dot and softest shading, means something—tells a story of its own, can we but interpret it. How wonderful and how fortunate, moreover, that each crystal should in this remarkable manner, through the mute and eloquent language of those strange and beautiful hieroglyphic characters; of those lines and dots and dashes and fairy-like tracery engraved within them, bring down with it its own autobiography—a record not only of its own life history, but also a record of the conditions existing wherein each transposition of form took place!

Truly was ever life history written in so unique a manner, or penned in characters more beautiful and fairy-like! Perhaps, partly, because it is rarely the case that any two of the crystals encounter the same conditions and pursue the same identical paths in cloudland, the diversity of form of the snow crystals is all but infinite. This feature, indeed, is the most marvelous thing about them, and gives to the study of them a peculiar fascination.

So all but infinite is the number of individual crystals produced by a single widespread rainstorm, and so limitless the variety of form and structure of these gems from Nature's laboratory, that doubtless for all time, so long as eyes shall see and kindle at the beautiful in

A wealth of beauty in every glittering line

Nature, new and choice snow designs will come from cloud and crystal land to delight the eye of those who seek for them.

Think of it and marvel at it!

Over one thousand of the largest-sized snow crystals to a cubic inch of snow, and over ten thousand to the inch of those of medium size. How small the chance, indeed, that any one has as yet, or ever will have, to find and look upon the transcendent loveliness of the few pre-eminently beautiful and perfect snow crystals that we may be certain each storm fashions. But not only do the individual snow crystals of a given storm vary one with another, those of different storms vary also. Perhaps partly because the same identical segments of a great storm rarely pass over any one locality, the crystals of each succeeding storm in general, individually as collectively, differ one from another.

The crystals of one storm may be noted for remarkable symmetry, or for imperfections of form, or bold or delicate designs; of another for the thickness, thinness, or large or diminutive size of its crystals, and yet others by the plainness or paucity of details within them or the amazing complexity of these same details. The crystals of some storms are almost wholly granular, of others, all of one type, or exhibit a remarkable variety of distinct types.

Occasionally an unusual number of odd, rare, crystalline monstrosities, is the distinguishing feature of the crystals of a given storm. Usually there is a marked difference between the crystals of a local and a general storm. Commonly, the majority of the crystals of a given storm are imperfect in form, due to fractures and unfavorable conditions. The great majority of the more perfect and beautiful crystals, originate in the western, northwestern, or southwestern segments of great widespread storms and blizzards.

The wonders and beauties of snow are so manifold, that space forbids mention of but a few of them. Our knowledge regarding them is as yet fragmentary, in complete, and the charm of unsolved mysteries still shrouds them. Moreover, the life of a snow crystal is so brief; they evaporate or melt so quickly, even during intense cold, that the messages they bring down with them often fade before they are imparted to us. We can but wish in the words of the poet:

We wish we could but petrify
A few, as keepsakes from on high.

We can but wonder and marvel, as we look out upon the world after a snowstorm, and see the glittering host covering field, hillside and mountain, why so much beauty comes to us but to fade; to dissolve so quickly. But the mission of the snow crystals is a composite one, and perhaps they come to us not only to reveal the wondrous beauty of the minute in Nature, but to teach us that all earthly beauty is transient and must soon fade away. But though the beauty of the snow is evanescent, like the beauties of the autumn, as of the evening sky, it fades but to come again.

One of the royal tataras of the snow

Mr. Bentley, who is a pioneer in these photographic studies, is the author of Statistics Among the Snow Crystals, Winter 1902, containing 255 beautiful photographic reproductions of the crystals. This has been issued at cost as a bulletin of the Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C. Mr. Bentley reaping no benefit from the sale of it, as it is his contribution to the fund of universal knowledge. The crystals in the article on this page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD were photographed by Mr. Bentley, chiefly during the great snowstorm of January 10, 1904.

... ..

A Constant Reader, Newville, Pa. "I want to fulfill my promise to our dear Heavenly Father. I promised I would acknowledge in your paper of his ever willingness to answer prayer. He is a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God."

A. L. V., Idaho Springs, Colo. "Answered prayers are full of interest to me, and my heart is burdened with desire which I hope I may yet declare as answered. The dear HERALD is a great comfort to me. God bless you."

Mrs. W. T. W., Walling, Ala. "I want to tell to all the world how good God has been to me. He has heard and answered my prayers since I was a little child."

A Constant Reader, Tiro, O. "May I publicly acknowledge a direct answer to prayer. Something I desired with all my heart and prayed for earnestly has come to me, and I am truly grateful."

Mrs. S. S., Stillwater, Okla. "I am sure God hears and answers prayer, if we pray in faith, believing. He is ever able and willing to hear us and help us. He has often answered my prayers, and I wish to acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

Mrs. M. S., Aurora, Ore. "I know God answers prayers and know he has helped and strengthened me."

Mrs. G. E. H. "I promised the Lord if he would answer my prayer I would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I am still in trouble, but I believe he will help me out. He has answered many prayers for me. I enjoy reading answered prayers."

Letters acknowledging answers to prayer have also been received from Mrs. M. E. S., Sunderland, Ill.; Miss M. O., Petersburg, Ind.; Mrs. Henry S., Kurville, Minn.; W. B., Rockford, Ill.; Reader, Ohio; Reader, New York; Friend, Allegheny City, Pa.; Mrs. S. J. S., Zanes Mills; Mrs. E. H. E., Pontiac, Mich.; Mrs. A. E. M., Pittsfield, Ill.; Constant Reader; Mrs. Ida S., Waco, Texas; Mrs. A. E. H., Linden, Ia.; Friend, Essex, N. Y.; S. E. R., Greenfield, Ia.; Mother, Eutaw, Ala.; Miss Lillie H., Fellowsville, W. Va.; Subscriber, Stockholm, Wis.; Mrs. M. R., 437 Chestnut street, Butler, Pa.; Reader, Glenn's Ferry, Idaho; W. W., Washington; Mrs. J. H., Wyoming, Ill.; Subscriber, Otego, N. Y.; Mrs. Sarah E. W., Dublin Shore, N. S.; "Happy Heart," E. S. H., Penn's Grove, N. J.

COURAGE or REMORSE

Death of John the Baptist

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MARCH 13
MATT. 14: 1-12

By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

GOLDEN TEXT -- BE THOU FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH, AND I WILL GIVE THEE A CROWN OF LIFE. REV. 2: 10.

THE execution of John the Baptist tells us the dreadful story. "You would hardly look for pity in the heart of a Roman soldier, rather you would expect to find us like the stiff, hard armor which we wear. But we are human, and sometimes almost rebellious against the cruel deeds we are called upon to do. Such a time came to me when I was ordered by Herod, the Tetrach, to behead John the Baptist.

"The command was given me as I stood on guard in the banquet hall on the occasion of the king's birthday feast. My feet almost refused to take me to the prison where I should find John. My hand almost refused to take my sword from its sheath, as I looked upon his young head with its crown of dark hair. And when the earnest eyes looked into mine, I was almost paralyzed by the thought of what I was expected to do. He spoke no word of reproach to me, but he simply bade me do quickly what I had been sent to do. It was done, and I carried the gruesome head into the presence of Herod, who bade me give it to her who had asked it."

Illustration and Application

The events of the lesson, rearranged in their historic order, give us two practical themes: 1. John's Courage. 2. Herod's Remorse. John the Baptist was literally "faithful unto death" in preaching. The incident is worth repeating of the European prison, to which many martyrs to liberty and religion had been committed; where the writer saw, scratched deeply with a nail in the stone wall: "Be thou faithful unto the death, and I will give thee a crown of life." In our times we need to ponder such heroism, for many of us are not faithful even up to the sneering point, or to the freezing point. So far from being faithful when it costs blood, we are not willing to face even water. Not alone preachers, but also teachers, need the story of John the Baptist facing the royal pair who could kill him at a word, and saying to Herod, of his new queen, Herodias, who had been divorced from his brother Philip to marry him, "It is not lawful for thee to have her."

Here it is appropriate to quote the words of Gladstone: "One thing I have against the clergy, both of the country and in town—they do not sufficiently lay upon the souls and consciences of their hearers their moral obligations, and probe their hearts, and bring up their whole lives and actions to the bar of conscience. The class of sermons which I think is most needed is the class which offended Lord Melbourne long ago. He was seen coming from church one day in the country, in a mighty fume. Finding a friend, he exclaimed: 'It is too bad! I have always been a supporter of the church, and I have always upheld the clergy; but it is really too bad to have to listen to a sermon like that we have had this morning. Why, the preacher actually insisted upon applying religion to a man's private life!' But that is also the kind of preaching I like best; the kind of preaching which men most need; but it is the kind of which they get the least."

How shall we make Christians as brave in the daily tests of faithfulness as soldiers usually are in battle, as firemen commonly are, as life-savers are, as even scientists are in their frequent risks of life for the promotion of knowledge? Lord Roberts gives as the bravest deed he ever saw the act of a native British soldier in India, who was charging a fort at the relief of Lucknow. The rebel defenders had just retreated inside, and were closing the great gates behind them. They were almost shut, when this native, Mukarrab Khan, sprang forward at the head of his troop, and thrust his arm through the narrow aperture, to prevent its being fastened, till his comrades could arrive and push it open. Of course he knew what would happen, and it did happen. His arm was hacked to pieces by the foiled garrison. He calmly stood and let them hack away. When that arm was so cut up it could no longer be relied on for preventing the fastening of the gates, he thrust the other between the two gates, knowing it would receive the same treatment. By that time his comrades had arrived, and the gates were opened, and hundreds of beleaguered Europeans were saved, the rebellion shortened, and India restored to order and to the British Queen. The man who did that brave act of self-sacrifice, judging by his name, was a heathen, and many acts, scarcely less brave, have been done by soldiers in all ages. Governor Geary of Pennsylvania once told this story of a battle in the Civil War, where he fought desperately, in the feeling that the life of the nation might turn on the result.

"I went into that battle, sir, with my son. His mother and I thought everything of that fine, handsome boy. You know how a father will feel toward his son who is coming up manly, and brave, and good. Well, the battle opened. Horses and riders bent and twisted and piled up together. It was awful. We quit firing, and took to the point of the bayonet. I didn't feel like myself that day. I had prayed to God for strength for that particular battle, and I went into it feeling that I had in my right arm the strength of ten giants. The battle was desperate, but after awhile we gained a little, and marched on. I turned round to the troops and shouted 'Come on, boys!' and I stepped across a dead soldier, and lo, it was my son. I saw at the first glance he was dead, and yet I didn't dare to stop a minute, for the crisis had come in the battle, so I just got down on my knees, and I threw my arms around him, and I gave him one good kiss, and said, 'Good-by, dear,' and sprang up and shouted, 'Come on, boys!'"

A recent representative case of courage in fires is that of the elevator men in the Masonic Temple of Chicago, who kept the elevators running through smoke and heat till every one in the burning building had been brought safely down. And here is a sample of many heroic deeds in behalf of science, in a telegram that once came from the Weather Bureau Station on Mount Washington, in bleak midwinter:

"9 P.M. Barometer falling fast. Thermometer twenty-two degrees below. Stevens seems to be dying." "12 P.M. Private Stevens is dead. I am alone on the mountain. Wind blowing a hurricane. House creaking fearfully. Instruments working all right."

Often we read in the papers, that even naturally timid women have stopped runaway horses, driven burglars from their homes, rescued drowning men. Such courage is found among Christians in supreme tests of martyrdom, as recently in China. But the problem we are considering is how to develop such courage in "the piping times of peace," in the common tasks of the common day; the courage to speak unwelcome truth in public and in private—the last the harder of the two—the courage to adhere to convictions among those who sneer at them; to do among the Romans as the Romans ought to do.

For one thing, preachers and teachers, by their very illustrations, should prove that they really believe that "peace hath her victories, not less renowned than war," for there can be no doubt that the expected reward of public approval stimulates the soldier and the fire-fighter to daring deeds. We should make the heroes of peace feel that their reward will be not only a "crown" in eternity, but also the grateful appreciation of good men here on earth. This earthly approval, however, should never be counted on by God's heroes, who are often blamed even by the good, whom they outstrip in daring.

We need to get in the habit of living as in God's sight, supremely regardless of his approval. "How can we fear anything with Him looking at us?"

The other chief theme of this story, first in the text but last in the order of events, is Herod's remorse. The guilty king hears of Jesus going about teaching and healing, and cries out to his very servants: "It is John the Baptist, whom I beheaded; he is risen from the dead." History tells us that the head of Cicero was brought to Fulvia, and that she pierced the tongue whose faithful words had often pierced her conscience.

"His head was given to the damsel, and she took it to her mother"

A woman had killed her husband by driving a nail into skull, and so successfully had she covered up the wound that he was buried without any suspicion being cast upon her. After several years, the woman flattered herself that she would never be found out. One day, however, the grave-digger was at work in the cemetery, and threw up this man's skull, and there he saw the nail. I do not know that he suspected the woman, but he took it to her and said, "Lo there!" She threw up her hands and cried, "My God! Found out at last." Our sins will all be found out at last.

Stephen Holcombe, one of the most desperate gamblers on the Mississippi River, one night was at the gaming table and a man accused him of dishonesty at cards; Stephen Holcombe drew his revolver and shot. The bullet went into the man's neck. When he saw what he had done, Stephen Holcombe sprang to the man's side, and tried to stanch the flow from the gaping wound; but the man bled to death. Stephen Holcombe was arrested for murder; he was tried and was acquitted, on the ground that he had shot the man in self defence. But, though acquitted by a human court, he was not acquitted before the bar of God, nor before the bar of his own conscience. He tried every way to find peace. Two years after that awful night, he was in his room alone in misery, his face buried in his hands, and the memory of that day haunting him, and as he knelt there he cried, "God, can anything blot out the awful memory of what I have done and give me peace?" And the strains of the familiar hymn came singing through his heart:

What can wash away my sin?
Nothing but the blood of Jesus

And then there Stephen Holcombe saw Christ on the Cross for his sin. He saw all his sins, the murder and the laid on Christ. Then and there Stephen Holcombe found peace, and from that day he has preached Christ and the atoning blood that gave him peace.

The practical lesson is not alone that the guilty may be saved, but also that in daily life, as has been often said, "Nothing is true pleasure that is not pleasant to remember." There is also another profound lesson of encouragement in the story of John, which Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock embodied in a sermon to Endeavorers, on the text, "We slay with the sword," words that in Hebrews eleventh appear in a list of the victories of faith, reminding us of the victory of those who fail, the prisoners, the martyrs, who were vanquished and yet victors, like their Crucified Master. The last it is not Herodias, but John, that comes off victor.

Glorious it is to wear the crown
Of a deserved and rare success:
He who knows how to fail has won
A crown whose lustre is not less.
Blessed are those who die for God
And earn the martyr's crown of light,
Yet he who lives for God may be A greater conqueror in his sight.

—ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

Even if the cause for which John had died had not won at last, his noble efforts would not have been in vain, for the effect upon his own character would have repaid all his labor and sacrifice.

Aspire, break bounds, I say;
Endeavor to be good, and better still, and best;
Success is naught, endeavor's all.

—BROWNING.

"John said, 'It is not lawful for thee to have her'"

AROUND THE HEARTH

By MARGARET E

SANGSTER

CWARDE TRAYER

When Love Grows Cold

THE young fancy that they, and they only, know anything about love. They scorn the notion that old people, their fathers, mothers, and grandparents may have as deep and yearning need, as anxious a desire to be loved, as ever had youth or maid in the radiant twenties. Of course they understand that family affection is an enduring thing, and that their elders cherish it; but you can hardly convince them that a man or woman of middle age can care at all for love, in their meaning of the word. Yet, no hearts ache as old hearts do when love grows cold. Forty years ago, two persons stood together at God's altar and pledged one another life's long fealty. All death us do part, was the solemn refrain that made undertone, like the tolling of the bell in the midst of the merry marriage peal. Following the wedding day came the bright and buoyant years. The two had their day of small things; they shared poverty together. After while they grew prosperous. The time was paid for. They ranked high in the community. Children had played about their door, and had been educated and trained for usefulness. In due time the sons and daughters were grown up, and one of them had married. It would seem that so much in common of sacrifice, of enjoyment, of accomplishment, of development, might have bound the husband and wife firmly that nothing could cause them to drift apart. But one or the other by degrees becomes cold and indifferent. The wife is bored by crosses that she once valued. The husband ceases to pay little grace-attentions. Both draw into a shell of reserve, that is not hostile but is worse, for it is triply thickened by apathy, ennui, and humiliation. Life in that home has ceased to be sweet and sacred, and is grown tawdry, meretricious, and unhallowed. The outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace is strangely lacking in that marriage.

Being self-respecting people, these unhappy ones do not take the world into their confidence. The husband does not pose as a victim, nor the wife as a martyr. They peer side by side in the pew. They entertain friends as formerly. At the intimates of the family, those who have eyes to see, the children of the house who love both parents loyally, are aware of the creeping foe that has stealthily invaded the domicile. They know that there is deepest reason for regret when love has grown cold.

One such grieving daughter wrote the other day, "What can I do? My heart aches for them both. Either is to blame, but my parents wound and misunderstand one another every day of their lives." Another, a son, said not long ago, "When life is so short, and death may so suddenly end it, how can two people who began as my father and mother did, be so repellent and loving? It decides me never to marry. I want no further disillusionment years hence."

Thank God such homes are in the minority, homes where love has been frost-blighted. But there are some of them, and those who are responsible for the disaster could hasten to put self-esteem and vanity aside, and do what they can to coax love back to his throne.

in hospital work, especially among women and children; they are invaluable in schools and women's colleges, and in certain departments of family practice they compete successfully with men.

Indeed, the question of sex does not often now arise, except in difficult and delicate surgery. A doctor is a doctor, and this is all that is wanted. On the foreign mission field, the woman physician is everywhere wanted and longed for. She does unspeakable good, to body and mind, reaching the women as no others of her profession can. Oriental custom still effectually debar men physicians from treating women patients.

The Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, N. Y., of which the venerable Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler is pastor emeritus, and which has for years past been served by the Rev. Dr. David Gregg, has the honor of starting the first medical college for Chinese women students. It is in the Lafayette Compound, Canton, China, and marks a forward step in the progress of that strange and vast empire, on which European Powers and America also, fix such interested eyes to day.

All testimonies unite in speaking of the acute minds and bright receptivity of Chinese women students. "I have lost my heart to these beautiful Chinese girls," said a missionary lately, writing home her first vivid impressions of a group of

The Worthy Poor

TRIPPINGLY it falls from the lips, this crisp phrase, the worthy poor. Who are they? How shall we discriminate between worthy and unworthy sufferers from poverty when, as recently in our great cities, the temperature has fallen below the zero mark? People who have had every comfort that money can buy; people whose homes are adequately warmed and whose tables are generously spread, have been heard to complain of the cold weather, and have undergone considerable hardship during the rigors of the present season. Their inconveniences and privations should awaken in them a deeper sympathy with the poor, and a swifter impulse of charity. When a fellow-being is starving, it is better, with the Apostle James, to do something for him at once, than to stop and lose time in investigating the case. What says the apostle? "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say to them, 'Depart in peace, be ye warmed and fed;' notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit?" There is no solution except the practical one of sending or giving relief to distress at the earliest possible moment.

Only the hard-hearted and the self-conceited, venture to deny the claim of brotherhood, which the poorest of the race, however low he may have fallen, may assert, in view of common descent from the great first parents in the garden of Eden.

Worthy or unworthy, the saloon in the background offering temptation and reaping the poor man's scanty savings; the lack of thrift eating up his earnings; the sorrow of his condition pressing him down like a heavy weight; worthy or unworthy, we are bound to help our brother when the wolf is at his door. We must do it in our own way and according to our ability; for unless we do it, we shall be responsible to Him who, when on earth, chose the poorest lot as his own, walked up and down the earth, as brother to the poor, and, in his continual acts of kindness, showed as much favor to the beggar by the wayside as to the centurion with soldiers under him. Our Heavenly Father, too, makes no discrimination in his bounty. He sends the rain on the just and on the unjust. What are we, that we should hesitate to help the wandering and erring, even if they are not worthy? Are we so worthy ourselves of God's great goodness?

The Uses of Etiquette

"All fol de rol," stormed old man Emerson, when his daughter sent to the city to buy a book of etiquette.

When the book came, Netta showed it to her mother.

"Keep that silly book out of your father's sight. He'll throw it into the fire," said Mrs. Emerson.

"But Mamma," pleaded Netta, "I'm going to visit Aunt Frances, and I won't know how to behave. I'll be like a sailor at sea without a chart. I'd rather stay at home than go to Aunt's and have her ashamed of me."

"Well, well, child," the mother answered, "say no more. I know our ways are plain. But I think a bright young woman who notices and keeps quiet, and is not too forward, will not go very far astray. Study your book, Netta, if it will console you for your ignorance. But don't talk about it when your Pa's by."

Mrs. Emerson was right. Etiquette seems formidable to the uninitiated, but it is, after everything is said against it, just the art of being agreeable. A code of rules, more or less arbitrary, has been formulated and is found in the books of social usage. These rules are all built on the conveniences of polite society. An ordinarily observant person, with quick perceptions, will commit very few social blunders. One fortnight spent in a household where the rules of good breeding are carefully practiced, will do more for a boy or girl than a library of books on etiquette, though they have their place.

One of the best things a really good school does for the pupils, is to teach good table manners, which are the truest test of good breeding. A person with rude manners at table, shows that his home has been wanting in refinement.

Enjoyed Every Page

I enjoyed every page of How I Worked My Way Around the World, and will take pleasure in showing it to my friends. Your premiums are truly wonderful, and always more than come up to expectations. And THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is just splendid!

MRS. G. W. DRAKE.

TURKISH WOMEN WEAVING RUGS

This useful industry has roused Turkish women from the apathy of ages. As they see the beautiful rugs growing under their deft fingers, they feel themselves in the swift current of the Twentieth Century. The world moves and the Oriental woman has become a wage-earner.

schoolgirls who gathered about her. We are on the verge of a new era in China, and "the cross is in the field" and in the van.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—DORA. Precede your husband down the church aisle and enter the pew first. Follow him out.

—RUBY. Do right. Never mind the comments of outsiders. It is never safe to tamper with one's conscience.

—MARTIN. Keep your hat on in the house, while talking to your mother? No, it would be most improper and impolite.

—PUZZLED HELEN. It is a pity you did not send your letter sooner; but it is all right to do what you asked, and I hope you sent your friend a pretty valentine.

—EZRA. A diamond ring is often given as an engagement ring. But if you cannot afford one, give something else. A turquoise ring is very suitable.

—SUSAN. As the young man is not engaged to you, and has not asked you to marry him, his jealousy is misplaced, and you are free to accept other attentions.

—LOIS. Common sense is at the bottom of conventional rules; also kindness of heart. There is no other basis on which what you call arbitrary rules is built.

—E. D. M. Evil thoughts may come to us from a world of evil spirits, hovering near us. We are not always responsible for them. The best way to drive them away is by resolute right-doing.

The First Medical College for Women in China

To those who remember the days when there was intense opposition to the entrance of women in the medical profession in this country, and who recall perfectly the attitude of conservative people to the first brave women practitioners, there is something beautiful and wonderful in the change at time has wrought. Women doctors are everywhere recognized and honored. They find their opportunity here

A Village Heroine

By FRANCES H. PECK

THE Dorcas Society of the Georgetown Methodist Church, an institution composed of about a dozen of the leading women of the church, met weekly at the home of some member, to sew for the worthy poor of the parish. These meetings were greatly enjoyed by all, for the ladies not only partook of delicious tea and delicate cake, but many a choice morsel of village gossip was here quietly aired, with that un-failing preliminary, "Just between us, you know," which always gives such an added zest to a revelation.

One afternoon the ladies were gathered at the home of Mrs. Judge Liston, the most important woman in the church in her own opinion, as well as in that of her friends. Something of unusual interest was being discussed, and the garments in the process of creation were receiving but scant attention.

"It's awful!" exclaimed Mrs. Walker, "and I, for one, don't believe he'd ever have done it if he hadn't been imposed upon. It's of the devil, that's plain."

Mrs. Judge Liston cleared her throat violently, and the ladies eyed her expectantly. It was very evident that Mrs. Judge Liston had something to say. "Ladies," she began impressively, "I feel, as I know you all do, that we, and the cause we represent, have received an insult. Our pastor, the chosen shepherd of our flock, has united himself for life to a lion tamer," this with withering emphasis, "a low-bred, impertinent hussy, no doubt, whose only thought in snaring Mr. Hensely was that, through him, she might gain a respectable social level. Beg pardon, Mrs. Amlin?" turning a stony gaze upon a quietly dressed little woman, who here ventured to raise her voice.

"I merely remarked, that even a lion tamer was not barred from grace; and I also think, Mrs. Liston, that we are doing wrong to condemn her without even having seen her," replied Mrs. Amlin bravely; "she may have become converted, who knows?"

"She converted?" snorted the judge's wife, "I'm astonished at you, Mrs. Amlin. In all my life I never heard of a circus person being converted, and I don't suppose that she will be an exception. Of course, we may hope for the best," added she, hedging against possibilities.

"Well," remarked Mrs. Hart, folding her work and preparing to enjoy the refreshments, "we'll see her Sunday." After this, the conversation gradually directed itself into other channels.

On the following Sunday the Methodist church was crowded. The people came, ostensibly, to welcome back their pastor; in reality, to take an inventory of the new Mrs. Hensely.

Finally, the minister and his wife walked down the side aisle, and he handed her to a seat in the parsonage pew. A feeling of disappointment settled over the congregation, especially the feminine portion of it, as a slender, girlish figure, neatly gowned in grey, quietly settled into the seat. Utterly unconscious seemed the minister's young wife, of the battery of stares directed at her. That she was beautiful was indisputable, and there was nothing about her to suggest the circus performer. The ladies in the house exchanged rather shamed glances. They had indulged in the absurd fancy that she would make her appearance in circus habiliments.

After the benediction had been pronounced, Mr. Hensely, instead of remaining behind the chancel, as was his wont, to shake hands with the people, took up his position by his wife, introducing her to his parishioners. He himself was welcomed warmly, she was greeted with the most frigid politeness; that is, by the older ones, who, feeling that the responsibility of maintaining the respectability of the church depended upon them, behaved accordingly. The younger members, however, were completely disarmed by her frank graciousness of manner, and her cordial hand-clasps.

Mamie Liston, a bright girl of sixteen, was no sooner at home with her mother, than she took up the cudgels in Mrs. Hensely's defence.

"She looks like she'd be a dear!" she said warmly, in response to some disparaging remark of her mother's, "and I'm going to like her, even if you do treat her badly. So there!"

Mrs. Liston gave her daughter a glance of cold surprise. "Did you ever know your mother to treat anyone badly, Mamie?" she asked. Now Mamie had, on several occasions, known this very thing to happen; but with knowledge born of experience, she discreetly held her tongue.

Mr. Hensely had expected that his bride would be held at arm's length for a season, but he was none the less indignant at the cold reception extended her. True, she had been an animal trainer, and a performer. But why was a lion worse than a dog? Many of the women of his congregation played with dogs. Anyhow, that was in the past. She had been truly converted, had consecrated her life to the Lord, and the minister could see no reason why she should be compelled to suffer persecution at the hands of those who were old professors of religion and advocates of Christian charity. The narrowness and hypocrisy of it all appealed to him forcibly, and he told his wife that night after the evening service, that if the attitude of the people of his church toward her did not change within a reasonable time, he would tender his resignation.

"An insult to you shall be a double one to me. In this case it is, 'love me, love my wife,'" he said, stroking her pretty hair fondly as she sat in a low chair by his side. Mrs. Hensely smiled up into his grave eyes. "No, James," she said, "you must not look at it in that light. Remember what my profession was, and how Methodists regard such things. Yes; I know you are a Methodist, too; but, you see, it is very different with you. You are in love; your parishioners are not. Let us bear with them; overlook their coldness, and I am sure that, in time, I shall be able to convince them that I am what I am. Not Leonie, the lion tamer, but a humble follower of the Christ whom they profess to love."

As the weeks passed, Mrs. Hensely became very popular with the young people. Her bright ways, and her sympathy with them in the various duties and pleasures which engrossed them, endeared her to their hearts. But their elders, particularly the ladies, still viewed her askance. True, they did accept her hospitality, and, in return, asked her to their gatherings; but it was merely from a sense of necessity, and the minister's wife knew it, and it cut her to the quick. She felt that nothing less than a miracle would enable her to win these sourly prejudiced minds.

In the face of all this, therefore, Mr. Hensely was struck with a sense as of utter calamity, when he discovered one morning, in the Georgetown News, the circus announcement, printed in glaring letters. He glanced furtively at his wife. She caught his look and smiled.

"Yes," she said, "I know. I am sorry that they should come here, for, of course, it will start up all the talk again. But I suppose it is for the best. Do not let it worry you, dear."

"But, child, I cannot bear to have you wounded by these unkind criticisms. Will you not go on a visit somewhere until the thing is gone? I wish you would."

Bessie Hensely squared her graceful shoulders proudly. "And play the coward?" she asked, somewhat reproachfully.

If you live in a smoky city you find that the lustre of your furniture is soon lost in a smutty haze, but a thick suds of Ivory Soap in lukewarm water and a soft cloth will make it bright again with small labor. Ivory Soap is so pure that it is fitted for all such special uses requiring a soap that is known to be harmless.

A WORD OF WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all imitations, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

"To Err is Human"— Not to Err—Elgin.

The man who is always right on time is the man who carries the

ELGIN WATCH

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

The "SUN"

SUN INCANDESCENT
HYDRO-CARBON LAMP

At the cost of kerosene. Makes its own gas. Disposes of dirt, grease, smoke, odor. Safe as a candle. 100 candle power. Agents wanted: liberal commission. Branch supply depots in all larger cities.

OUT-SHINES THEM ALL

Indispensable to all whose work requires much use of the eyes. Conforms to insurance underwriters' rules. Write for catalog
SUN VAPOR LIGHT CO.
BOX 700 CANTON, OHIO.
(Licensee of the ground patents for Vapor Lamps)

NEW-SKIN
TRADE MARK WATERPROOF
LIQUID COURT PLASTER.
ANTISEPTIC. ASEPTIC.
WILL HEAL ANY CUT OR SCRAPE.
DOUGLAS MFG CO.
NEW YORK.

IF YOU BARK
YOUR SKIN PAINT ON NEW-SKIN
AND FORGET IT!

GOOD FOR BRUISES
$0.15
NEW-SKIN

Pet Size, 10c ea. Family Size, 25c ea.
2 oz. Bottles, 50c ea.
THE DRUGGISTS, or we will mail a package and here in the United States on receipt of price.
DOUGLAS MFG. CO., Dept. 33
96-102 Church St., New York

A Village Heroine

CONTINUED FROM
PRECEDING PAGE

"No, James, you would never have me do that. These people cannot hurt me more than they have already done. I shall stay where I am, for I am—your wife."

Hensely caught her in his arms. "You are—an angel!" he said.

"I see that a show is advertised for Georgetown," remarked Mrs. Liston, acidly, to her husband that same morning. "I wonder if Mrs. Hensely will give a reception to the members of her craft. I confess, I should not be surprised to hear that she attended the performances. Dear! dear! what was Mr. Hensely thinking of?"

The judge, who was an Episcopalian, and, therefore, quite broad in his views, chewed a toothpick reflectively, but said nothing.

Among the younger non-Methodist residents of Georgetown, the advent of a circus was hailed with delight, and at the first performance a merry, gum-chewing, pop-corn-eating crowd, filled the tent on Barker's Green to overflowing. It was evident that the circus would have a successful stay in Georgetown.

Now, though Mamie Liston, at her mother's command, attended the Methodist church, she was, nevertheless, like her father in the liberality of her views, and had, for a long time, cherished a secret desire to see a circus. Here was the chance of a life time, and, taking advantage of the absence of Mrs. Liston on Saturday afternoon, she wheedled her indulgent father into taking her to the show.

As the performance progressed, it became evident that something was wrong. There was a nervousness apparent among the show people, which both the animals in the rings, and the audience on the seats unconsciously absorbed. The ring-master's face was flushed, and the clown's tongue was thick.

The principal, and most largely advertised feature of the show, was the drill which Senor Morillo was to give with six trained African lions. A heavy netting of steel wire and bars was erected for this purpose in one of the rings, inside of which the great brutes were unloaded from their cages. As they leaped into the enclosure, the judge observed their wild and blood-shot eyes, and heard their angry growlings.

In a moment the lion tamer entered. He was confident and daring. He put the animals through various tricks, striking right and left with a heavy, loaded raw-hide whip. The lions lashed their sides with their tails, the ominous snarls grew louder, and the eyes gleamed wickedly.

Though Mamie had never seen such a performance before, still she instinctively divined that something was wrong, and a vague feeling of discomfort possessed her.

"What's the matter with him, dad?" she asked, turning inquiring eyes from the Senor to her father.

"Drunk!" he replied briefly. "Come, Mamie, I do not care to have you see this." They left the tent. No sooner were they out, however, than wild confusion reigned within. The wretch had used his gad once too often. As the last huge brute was about to leave the enclosure, he brought the raw-hide down upon its flanks with awful and unexpected effect. Quivering with pain, and enraged beyond all endurance, the lion turned, and with one mighty blow felled the brutal Italian to the ground; then, springing over his dead body, rushed past the employees in the tent beyond, and, with snarling mouth and blood-shot eyes, bounded through an opening out onto the common. Shriek after shriek rent the air as the maddened beast was seen coming. A panic overtook the people, and their noise further excited the lion. Judge Liston and his daughter had turned at the first cry.

"Father, father, a lion's loose!" she screamed.

"Yes," answered the judge, his lips whitening. "Oh, God!" for the monster was heading toward them. A sudden, cruel death seemed imminent, but they could not move; they stood rooted to the spot, paralyzed with dread. Suddenly, a strange thing happened. From somewhere in the crowd came a long, shrill whistle, with peculiar vibrations. Ah, see! The lion stopped; looked; listened. Again the whistle. His huge frame trembled. The mob was fascinated: silent. Had God sent an angel to their aid? No, not an angel, but—

A slender, white-robed figure separated itself from the mass and walked toward the quivering beast. It was the minister's wife.

Within about four feet of him she paused, and held out her hand. "King," she called, and the lion, meek now as any lamb, recognized the voice of a loved mistress of former years, and obeying the call, came, and, crouching at her feet, licked her hand. Mrs. Hensely stroked his shaggy mane, then turning, walked to the tents, the lion following her like a dog.

She led him into the tent, inquired to what cage he belonged, and quietly ordered him in. Not a word was uttered until, as she was leaving the tent, a mighty cheer broke forth from the throats of the circus people. It was taken up by the crowds outside, and the air thrilled with her name; but the minister's wife, pale now as death, slipped away, and hurried home. The story of her brave deed had preceded her, however, and her husband met her at the door, his face drawn and white with anxiety. He drew her into the study and closed the door. Then she told him how, as she was passing Barker's Green, she had heard cries, and, upon looking, had seen a lion, which she had instantly recognized as a former pet, tearing across the field.

"It was not by my own power I conquered King," she added, at the close of her narrative, "for he was so enraged that I could never have succeeded alone. It seemed to me that I became suddenly endowed with power from on high."

"I believe you were, my darling; but, oh, what if you had been taken from me?" said Hensely, brokenly, as he strained her to his heart.

"Do not let us think of that now," she answered, gravely. "It is evident that God has given me this chance of winning the hearts of the people. Plainly, it has needed something miraculous. Let us thank him," and together they knelt, to offer a prayer of thanksgiving.

When Mrs. Liston heard the story, she wept bitter tears of repentance. No word of reproach did she utter, and as she folded her child in her arms, she said, with a ring in her voice which Mamie had never heard before, "God bless the minister's wife!"

And Mamie said: "I told you so."

Life's Day

IN the beauty of life's morning,
We watch for noontide ray,
With youthful glances scorning,
The flower-buds 'long the way.

Reaching for golden fruition,
O'erlooking fair blossoms of life,
Ne'er counting costly tuition,
In schools of contest and strife.

At last comes the cool of the even,
When burden and heat of the day
Give place to starflowers of heaven,
That shine to the end of life's way.

MARY SARGENT HOPKINS.

A Hindu Preacher's Appreciation

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—My wife and I are regular readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and are very fond of it too. We find the paper so interesting and instructive that we eagerly look out for it every week, and feel very disappointed if, in any way, it is delayed. My wife has been a "shut in" for some months, owing to her illness, which has prevented her from attending Sunday services; but her constant delight has been in the sermons you publish week by week in your paper, and she feels as if she is actually hearing some preacher. The Picture Art Gallery sent by you is simply charming. We are far away from you in India, and therefore we get it rather late. It is a wonder to us how you can afford to give us such a good paper, and along with it such liberal premiums, in lieu of the small annual subscription.

Bareilly, India.

J. R. CHITAMBUR.
[Indian Preacher.]

Mail Orders Exclusively. No Branches or Agents.

Spring Suits

$8 to $50

MADE TO YOUR ORDER

We Guarantee to Fit You.
Catalogue and Samples Free.

HAVE you thought of your Spring suits and skirts? Our designers have been at work late and in Europe, getting together the newest ideas and the most pleasing effects. The results are shown in our new Spring and Summer Catalogue mailed free on request, together with a splendid selection of samples of the newest and most fashionable fabrics.

We make every garment especially to order—that is the secret of the perfect fit and stylish appearance of our garments. We cater to the requirements of the woman of taste. We study your figure from measurements taken in accordance with our simple measurement diagram, and make a garment that pleases you. We save you time, money and annoyance, and pay express charges to any part of the United States.

Your money refunded if we fail to satisfy you.

Our Spring Catalogue illustrates:

Tailored Suits	$8 to $50
Handsome Skirts	$4 to $20
Etamine Costumes	$10 to $40
Mohair and Brilliantine Suits	$8 to $40
Mohair Skirts	$4 to $15
Spring Jackets	$7 to $30

Walking Suits and Skirts, Rainy-Day Suits, Traveling Dresses, Rain Coats, etc.

Our Catalogue contains explicit directions for taking measurements correctly. We guarantee to fit and please you. If we do not, return the garment promptly and we will refund your money.

Catalogue and a large assortment of samples will be sent free to any part of the United States. Ask for New Spring Catalogue No. 50. In requesting samples mention about the color you desire and we will send a full line of exactly what you wish.

NATIONAL CLOAK AND SUIT COMPANY,
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York.

Established 15 years.

"Standard of Highest Merit."

FISCHER PIANOS.

IN THE NEW SCALE FISCHER the finest Tone-quality is produced. This combined with artistic beauty of case-architecture and durability has won for these pianos

AN ACKNOWLEDGED SUPERIORITY

OUR NEW METHOD of easy payments makes it possible for every home to have the musical delights of this Celebrated Piano. Old Pianos taken as part payment. Pianos delivered to all parts of the United States. Write for catalogue, terms and all particulars.

J. & C. FISCHER,

164 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Learn Piano-Tuning AT HOME

A great demand for piano tuners everywhere. Progress rapid; expense small. Pay as you go. Our graduates are expert tuners. A lucrative profession.

Write for free prospectus, explaining everything.

The MUNROE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF PIANO TUNING, Dept. P., Fall River, Mass.

MUSIC LOVERS

We will send for 10 cts. in stamps

Portrait of Brahms
Piano-Piece by Chopin and a Song by Franz

also a free copy of

The Musician The 42-page (10c. x 12c.) Musical Monthly, containing 24 pages of attractive music.

OLIVER DITSON CO., Dept. 6, Boston

The long looked for hymn book
Just issued.

NORTHFIELD HYMNAL

By GEO. C. STEBBINS

Use in Evangelistic and Church Services, Conventions, Sunday Schools and all Prayer and Social Meetings of the Church and Home.

contains a very large number of most useful and sacred songs, both new and old, among which are MANY of the favorite "Gospel Hymns" and "Sacred Songs." MANY NEW SONGS soon to become FAVORITES. MANY Church Hymns and tunes, new and old, from the best American and English composers. MANY pieces especially useful for Evangelistic and Convention Choirs, and many for Solo, Duet and Quartet purposes.

Substantially bound in cloth, $25.00 per 100.
5c. each per copy extra by mail.

Before deciding on the new hymn book for your church you had better see
NORTHFIELD HYMNAL
returnable copy for examination, sent free to any earnest inquirer on application.

BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

The Stillwell INCANDESCENT GAS BURNER

Does your store or home as bright as day—the most perfect artificial light. Powerful, brilliant and white, without heat, known as exceeding electricity. Very economical, never lights necessary. AGENTS wanted every gas town. Big Money! Every burner sold is money more. Write at once for literature.

THE STILLWELL LIGHT CO., Inc.,
33-325 S. Lawrence St., Philadelphia, Pa.

For Baby

We are raising on our Blue Grass Ranch in the Allegheny mountains, near our mill in the healthiest spot in this country—some of the finest South American Merino sheep that are grown in the world. From the first clipping of the little lambs we are manufacturing the Little Bopeep Baby Blanket

an exquisite conception for baby's comfort and health. The wool from which these little blankets are made is scrupulously cleaned and treated hygienically, making it very soft and fluffy—just right for baby's delicate skin—a beautiful and useful addition to the little one's crib all the year round. We make them in three sizes with red, blue or pink border and bind them with fine white silk ribbon. Price, 36x54 in., $3.50; 42x50 in., $4.00; 48x64 in., $5.00 per pair, express prepaid. We are also making from the wool of the "grown-up" sheep for "grown-up" people, especially appropriate for wedding gifts, in solid red, pink, light blue and gray with attractive borders, and in white with border of red, blue or pink. Price, 60x78 in., $7.00; 70x80 in., $8.50; 80x90 in., $10.00 per pair, express prepaid, as fine blankets as are made in America. All put up in handsome packages and every pair warranted to please, or may be returned at our expense without a question.

Lamsdown

BLANKETS

CHATHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
Proprietors Elkin Woolen Mills, Elkin, N. C.

$2.00

The Acme Bolster Roll is made of very strong but light weight Corrugated Jute-board and when trimmed to match the spread takes the place of matted pillows during the day, and gives the bed that stylish and handsome appearance all good housekeepers admire. Convenient, lasting, easy to handle. Almost every good dealer from Maine to California has them; if your dealer cannot supply you, write us stating width of your bed, enclose express or money order for $2; we will ship an Acme Roll and pay the charges to any express point on or east of the Mississippi River. Money back if you want it. Send for our free book—"Dainty Bedrooms." Your address on a postal will do.

H. & D. Paper Co. 843 Water St., Sandusky, Ohio

Dixon's Pencil Guide

A book indexing various vocations and giving list of pencils best suited to each—is valuable information for pencil users—free.

Saves Pencil Troubles
Write for one today—keep it handy for reference.

Department V
Joseph Dixon Crucible Co.
Jersey City, N. J.

PALMER PENMANSHIP

Taught by Mail. Six months course with individual weekly criticisms, now $5. Catalogue Free. Palmer School Est. 1881 P. O. Box 131, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

